f all present and future holders of the bonds and interest obligations issued and to be issued under and secured by this indenture, and the enforcement of the payment of said bonds and interest obli tions when payable, and the performance of and compliance with covenants and conditions of this indenture without preference, ority, or distinction as to lien or otherwise of any one bond over other bond issued hereunder by reason of priority in the issue or gotiation thereof or otherwise howsoever.

And it is hereby covenanted and declared that all such bonds, the coupons for interest thereon, are to be issued and certified delivered, and that the mortgaged premises are to be held by Trustee, subject to the further covenants, conditions, uses, and tr hereinafter set forth, and it is covenanted between the parties he and for the benefit of the respective holders from time to time bonds issued hereunder, as follows, viz:

399 ARTICLE ONE.

Issue and appropriation of bonds.

SECTION 1. All bonds to be secured hereby from time to time sh be executed and delivered by the Railway Company to the Trus hereunder for certification, and thereupon the said Trustee sh certify and deliver the same as provided in this article, and not oth wise. Any of such bonds from time to time, at the option of t Railway Company, may be executed, certified, and issued original either as coupon bonds or as registered bonds. The aggreg amount of the bonds issued and outstanding under this indent shall never at any one time exceed the principal sum of twenty-f million dollars ($25,000,000).

Only such bonds as shall bear thereon endorsed such certificate the said Trustee by it duly executed under the hand of its preside vice president, or second vice president shall be secured by this i denture or shall be entitled to any lien or benefit hereunder; a every such certificate of the said Trustee upon any bond executed behalf of the Railway Company shall be conclusive evidence that t bond so certified has been duly issued hereunder and is entitled to t benefit of the trust hereby created.

400 Before certifying or delivering any coupon bond here secured the said Trustee shall cut off and cancel all coupo thereof then matured, and the said Trustee shall not certify or d liver any registered bond bearing interest from any date more th six months prior to such certification or delivery.

SEC. 2. All of the bonds authorized to be issued under and secu by this indenture, viz, bonds to the aggregate amount of twenty-f million dollars ($25,000,000), immediately upon the execution a elivery hereof or as soon thereafter as from time to time may be equired by the Railway Company, shall by the said Trustee be certified and delivered to the Railway Company or upon its order in riting under its corporate seal.

SEC. 3. Whenever any coupon bond or bonds issued under and ecured by this indenture, together with all unmatured coupons hereto belonging, shall be surrendered for exchange for registered onds the Railway Company shall issue and the said Trustee shall ertify and deliver in exchange for such coupon bond or bonds a ike amount of registered bonds without coupons. Such registered onds shall be for $1,000, or for such multiples thereof as from time to time the Railway Company may prescribe, and shall bear 01 interest at the same rate as the surrendered coupon bonds and from the date of maturity of the last matured coupon thereof. n every case of such exchange the said Trustee forthwith shall cancel he surrendered bond or bonds and coupons and shall deliver the same o the Railway Company.

Whenever any such registered bond shall be surrendered for transfer, the Railway Company shall issue, and the said Trustee shall certify and deliver to the transferee, upon surrender and cancellation of the bond or bonds transferred, a like amount of new registered bonds for $1,000, or for such multiples of $1,000 as the Railway Company from time to time may authorize, and bearing interest at the same rate as the surrendered registered bond; but no registered bond may be converted into a coupon bond.

For any exchange of coupon bonds for registered bonds, and for any transfer of registered bonds without coupons, the Railway Company, at its option, may make a charge not exceeding one dollar for each new registered bond issued upon such exchange or transfer.

SEC. 4. Upon surrender by the Railway Company to the Trustee for cancellation of any coupon or registered bonds issued here-402 under and secured hereby, with a request that bonds be issued hereunder for the like amount at a reduced rate of interest, the Trustee shall certify and deliver to the Railway Company bonds issued hereunder and secured hereby to the amount at their face value of the bonds so surrendered, and carrying interest at such lower rate of interest than three and one-half per cent per annum, payable semiannually, as the Railway Company may prescribe in that behalf, and the new bonds so certified and delivered shall be entitled to share in the security of these presents with the like effect as if they had been bonds originally issued under this mortgage.

SEC. 5. In case any coupon bond issued hereunder, with the coupons thereto appertaining, or any registered bond without coupons, shall become mutilated or be destroyed, the Railway Company, in its discretion, may issue, and thereupon the said Trustee shall certify and deliver, a new bond of like tenor and date, bearing the same d tinguishing number, in exchange and substitution for, and upon c cellation of, the mutilated coupon bond and its coupons, or mutilated registered bond, or in lieu of, and substitution for, coupon bond and its coupons, or the registered bond so destroy upon receipt of satisfactory evidence of the destruction of s 403 coupon bond and its coupons, or of such registered bond, upon receipt also of satisfactory indemnity.

SEC. 6. Nothing in this article, or in any other article, of t indenture, expressed or implied, is intended, or shall be constru to enlarge the security of the holders of any of said outstandi old bonds, or to create any trust in their favor, or to give any person or corporation, other than the parties hereto and t holders of bonds issued under and secured by this indenture, a legal or equitable right, remedy, or claim, under or in respect of th indenture, or any covenant, condition, or provision herein co tained; all its covenants, conditions, and provisions being intend to be, and being, for the sole and exclusive benefit of the parti hereto and of the holders of the bonds hereby secured.

ARTICLE TWO.

Particular covenants of the Railway Company.

The Railway Company covenants as follows:

SEC. 1. It will duly and punctually pay, or cause to be paid, every holder of any bond issued and secured hereunder the princip and interest accruing thereon at the dates and place and in the ma ner mentioned in such bonds, or in the coupons thereto belongin according to the true intent and meaning thereof, without deducti from either principal or interest for any tax or taxes imposed by th
United States, or any State or county or municipality thereo 404 which the Railway Company may be required to pay or retain therefrom under or by reason of any present or futu law. When, and as paid, all such coupons forthwith shall be ca celled.

SEC. 2. Whenever required by the Trustee, the Railway Compan will grant, convey, confirm, assign, transfer, and set over unto th Trustee the estate, right, title, and interest of the Railway Compan in or to all real and personal estate, corporate rights, and franchis which in any way or manner it shall acquire as appurtenant to o for the use of the railroads hereby mortgaged; and also it will d execute, acknowledge, and deliver, or it will cause to be done, ex cuted, acknowledged, and delivered all and every such further act deeds, transfers, and assurances for the better assuring, conveying nd confirming unto the Trustee all and singular the premises, states, and property hereby conveyed, or intended so to be, as they r either of them shall reasonably require for better accomplishing he provisions and purposes of this indenture and for securing pay- ent of the principal and interest of the bonds intended to be ereby secured.

But nothing in this indenture, expressed or implied, is intended or shall be construed to limit the right or power of the Railway 03 Company, hereby expressly reserved, to own and hold, or to construct, or to acquire, other lines of railroad, or branches or xtensions, or interests therein, or other property free from the lien ereof.

SEC. 3. The Railway Company at an office or agency to be main- ained by it in the city of New York will keep a sufficient register r registers of bonds issued hereunder, which registers at all reason- ble times shall be open to the inspection of the Trustee; and, upon resentation for such purpose, it will, under such reasonable regula- ions as it may prescribe, register therein any coupon bonds and any onds without coupons issued under the provisions hereof.

Upon presentation of any such registered coupon bond bearing a ritten power to transfer the same executed by the registered holder, or the time being, in a form approved by the Railway Company, uch bond shall be transferred upon such register. The registered older of any such registered coupon bond also shall have the right o cause the same to be registered as payable to bearer, in which case ransferability by delivery shall be restored, and thereafter the prin- pal of such bond shall be payable to any person presenting the me; but any such coupon bond registered as payable to bearer may be registered again in the name of the holder with 06 the same effect as a first registration thereof. Successive reg- istrations and transfers as aforesaid may be made from time time as desired; and each registration shall be noted by the bond gistrar on the bond.

Any registered bond without coupons may be transferred by in- rument in writing executed by the registered holder, upon the sur- nder of such bond, and the payment of the charge for such trans- r, in which case new registered bonds for an equivalent amount ill be issued to the transferee or transferees, as provided in section of article one hereof.

As to all bonds so registered, the person in whose name the same all be registered shall, for all purposes of this indenture, be deemed d be regarded as the owner thereof, and thereafter payment of or account of the principal of such bond, if it be a registered coupon nd, and of the principal and interest, if it be a registered bond ithout coupons, shall be made only to or upon the order of such registered holder thereof, but such registration may be changed above provided. All such payments so made shall be valid, a effectual to satisfy and to discharge the liability upon such bonds the extent of the sum or sums so paid.

407 Registration of any coupon bond shall, however, not restr
the negotiability of any coupon thereto belonging, but ev such coupon shall continue to pass by delivery and shall remain p able to bearer.

SEC. 4. The Railway Company will well and truly pay and d charge upon presentation thereof for payment at or after maturi or will acquire and will deposit with the Trustee of said mortg securing said first refunding mortgage bonds, all of the outstandi old bonds of the issues above mentioned; and it will punctually p or cause to be paid, or, upon demand of the Trustee hereunder, v provide to its satisfaction for the payment of the interest on all s outstanding old bonds of said issues not acquired and deposi under said mortgage securing said first refunding mortgage bo as and when such interest shall become due and payable, until bonds of said issues shall have been finally paid and discharged shall have been acquired and deposited under said mortgage se ing said first refunding mortgage bonds, and it will not extend of such outstanding old bonds and will not cause or suffer the s to be extended.

SEC. 5. The Railway Company will not voluntarily creat 408 suffer to be created any lien or charge (except under such m gage securing the Railway Company's first refunding m gage bonds) having priority to or preference over the lien of t presents upon the mortgaged premises, or any part thereof, or u the income thereof; and, within three months after the same s accrue, it will pay or cause to be discharged, or will make adeq provision for the satisfaction or discharge of, all lawful claims demands of mechanics, laborers, and others which, if unpaid, m by law be given precedence to this indenture as a lien or ch upon the mortgaged premises or any part thereof or the inc thereof.

SEC. 6. The Railway Company from time to time will pay discharge all taxes, assessments, and governmental charges lawf imposed upon the lines of railroad and other premises hereby m gaged, or upon any part thereof, or upon the income and pr thereof, the lien of which would be prior to the lien hereof, so the priority of this indenture shall be fully preserved in respe such properties; provided, however, that nothing contained in section shall require the Railway Company to pay any such assessment, or charge so long as the Railway Company in good shall contest the validity thereof.

409 SEC. 7. The Railway Company will not issue, negotiate, sell, or dispose of any bonds hereby secured in any manner other than in accordance with the provisions of this indenture and the agreements in that behalf herein contained.

SEC. 8. So long as any of the bonds issued hereunder or any of the first refunding mortgage bonds of the Railway Company issued under and secured by its mortgage to the Central Trust Company of New York, dated August 1, 1899, or any of the four per cent bonds of the Southern Pacific Company issued under the mortgage of the last-mentioned company to the Union Trust Company of New York, dated August 1, 1899, are outstanding no other new mortgage shall be made of the properties covered by this mortgage or by the mortgage securing such first refunding mortgage bonds (except to refund such first refunding mortgage bonds and the bonds issued under and secured by this mortgage or either of such issues), and no other new mortgage except as aforesaid shall be made except with the assent of the holders of 75 per cent of the preferred stock and a majority of the common stock of the Railway Company at the time outstanding, and there shall be no increase of the preferred or common stock of the Railway Company without the like assent.

410 ARTICLE THREE.

The lands, notes, securities, and moneys described in subdivisions eighth, ninth, and tenth of the granting clause.

The lands, notes, securities, and moneys described in articles eighth, ninth, and tenth of the granting clause hereof and the income and earnings therefrom shall be administered, dealt with, and disposed of as follows:

SECTION 1. While no default exists in respect to principal or interest of the bonds issued hereunder and secured hereby the Railway Company, at its discretion, may at any time or from time to time sell such lands and securities (free of and discharged from the lien hereof) and receive the proceeds thereof and collect the income from such lands and any amounts collectible on or on account of the principal of or interest on such securities or such notes, applying the proceeds thereof and collections therefrom (except so far as the same or any of them may be subject to any other lien or trust) as follows:

(a) The proceeds of the sale of such lands or securities, and of any other securities held on deposit under this mortgage, and collections on or on account of the principal of such securities or such 411 notes, and any moneys held as security for the bonds issued hereunder (other than income from said lands or collections on or on account of interest on such securities or such notes) shall be forthwith applied by the said Railway Company to the purch and cancellation of the bonds issued hereunder, while the same sh be purchasable at not above par and accrued interest; otherwise the purchase and cancellation, at the discretion of the Railway Co pany, either of the bonds issued hereunder, or of the said first funding mortgage bonds of the Railway Company, or of bonds cured by prior lien upon any of its properties, and the Railway Co pany shall forthwith deliver to the Trustee a certificate duly sign by its president or vice president and treasurer showing the app cation made thereof and submit to the inspection of the Trustee bonds so purchased and canceled. Upon default of the Railw Company in its obligation to promptly make such application such proceeds the Railway Company will pay such proceeds to Trustee upon its demand therefor, and the Trustee shall thereup apply the same to the purchase and cancellation of bonds here before prescribed to be made by the Railway Company.

(b) All income from said lands or collections on or 412 account of interest on such securities or such notes shall applied primarily to the payment of the current interest the bonds issued hereunder, and, when all such current interest sh have been paid or provided for, to the payment of any fixed charg secured by a lien prior to the lien of this mortgage upon the prop ties of the Railway Company, or any of them (including interest the promissory notes in favor of the United States, executed issued under the settlement agreement between the United Sta of America, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and Speyer Company, dated February 1, 1899, hereinbefore referred to).

In the case of every application made by the Railway Compa under this section it shall deliver to the trustee a certificate sign by its president or vice president and treasurer stating the facts to the transaction.

SEC. 2. In order to facilitate the sales, collections, and applicati hereinbefore prescribed, the Trustee hereunder shall, while no fault exists in respect to the principal or interest of the bonds iss hereunder—

(a) Release from the lien hereof such of said lands as shall h been sold by said Railway Company, when and as such sa 413 thereof shall have been reported to it by the president vice president and treasurer of the Railway Company, w full particulars as to the price and terms upon which such sales sh have been respectively made.

(b) Deliver (free of and discharged from the lien hereof) s securities to or upon the order of said Railway Company, upon ing advised by the president or vice president and treasurer of s ompany of the sale thereof and the price and terms upon which such ales shall have been made.

(c) Deliver (free of and discharged from the lien hereof) such ecurities, or coupons or interest obligations appertaining thereto, r such notes (if in possession of the Trustee) to or upon the order f said Railway Company, upon the written request of the presi- ent or vice president and treasurer of the Railway Company there- or for collection.

(d) Deliver (free of and discharged from the lien hereof) such oneys to the Railway Company upon the request of the president r vice president and treasurer of the Railway Company therefor and ie promise of said Railway Company, signed by its president or ice president and treasurer, to forthwith apply the proceeds thereof prescribed in section 1 of this article hereof.

SEC. 3. In case default should be made in respect to principal or interest of the bonds issued hereunder or secured hereby, then and in that event all income from said lands, and l collections on or on account of principal of or interest on such curities or such note, and any moneys held as security for the bonds sued hereunder, shall be applied by the Trustee to and for the pur- oses to and for which the same would have been applicable by the ailway Company in case such default had not taken place; but the curities or lands mortgaged hereby shall, while such default exists, sold only under and in pursuance of the provisions of article four this indenture, and while such default exists the power of sale ereof by the Railway Company shall be wholly suspended.

ARTICLE FOUR.

Remedies of trustee and bondholders.

SECTION 1. The Railway Company covenants and agrees that it ll not, directly or indirectly, extend or assent to the extension of e time for payment of any coupon or claim for interest upon any nd secured hereby, and that it will not, directly or indirectly, be a rty to any arrangement therefor by purchasing or funding said cou- ns or claims for interest on registered bonds or in any other manner. case the payment of any such coupon or claim for interest should so extended by or with the consent of the Railway Company, h coupon or claim for interest so extended shall not be entitled in e of default hereunder to the benefit or security of this indenture, cept subject to the prior payment in full of the principal of all nds issued hereunder and outstanding, and of all coupons and claims for interest on such bonds, the payment of which has not been so extended; the intention of this agreement being to prevent any accumulation after maturity of coupons or cla for interest upon registered bonds.

SEC. 2. In case (1) default shall be made in the payment of interest on any bond or bonds secured by this indenture, or in performance of any of the covenants of the Railway Company co tained in section 5 of article two hereof, and any such default sh have continued for a period of six months; or in case (2) defa shall be made in the due and punctual payment of the principal any bond hereby secured; or in case (3) default shall be made the due observance or performance of any other covenant or con tion herein required to be kept or performed by the Railway Co pany, and any such default under clause (3) hereof shall have co tinued for a period of six months after written notice thereof fr the Trustee or from the holders of five per cent in amount of bonds hereby secured, then, and in each and every such case, the Tr tee personally, or by its agents or attorneys, may enter into and up all or any part of the railways, rolling stock, property and premi lands, rights, interest, and franchises hereby conveyed, and each every part thereof, and may exclude the Railway Company, 417 agents and servants, wholly therefrom, and, having and ho ing the same, may use, operate, manage, and control said r ways and other premises, regulate the tolls for the transportation passengers and freight thereon, and conduct the business there either personally or by their superintendents, managers, receiv agents, and servants or attorneys, to the best advantage of the ho ers of the bonds hereby secured; and upon every such entry Trustee, at the expense of the trust estate, from time to time, eit by purchase, repairs, or construction, may maintain and restore, insure or keep insured, the rolling stock, tools, and machinery other property, buildings, bridges, and structures erected or p vided for use in connection with said railways and other premi and whereof they shall become possessed, as aforesaid, in the s manner and to the same extent as is usual with railway compan and likewise from time to time, at the expense of the trust est may make all necessary or proper repairs, renewals, and replacem and useful alterations, additions, betterments, and improvem thereto and thereon as to them may seem judicious; and in case the Trustee shall have the right to manage the mortg 418 premises, and to carry on the business and exercise all ri and powers of the Railway Company (except the power sale of the lands and securities above referred to), either in name of the Railway Company or otherwise, as the Trustee sh deem best; and it shall be entitled to collect and to receive all t earnings, incomes, rents, issues, and profits of the same and ev part thereof; and after deducting the expenses of operating railways and other premises, and of conducting the business thereof, and of all repairs, maintenance, renewals, replacements, alterations, additions, betterments, and improvements, and all payments which may be made for taxes, assessments, insurance, and prior or other proper charges, upon the said premises and property, or any part thereof, as well as just and reasonable compensation for its own services and for all agents, clerks, servants, and other employees by it properly engaged and employed it shall apply the moneys arising as aforesaid as follows:

In case the principal of the bonds hereby secured shall not have become due, to the payment of the interest in default, in the order of the maturity of the installments of such interest, with interest thereon at the rate of three and a half per cent per annum; such payments to be made ratably to the persons entitled thereto, without discrimination or preference,

In case the principal of the bonds hereby secured shall have become due, by declaration or otherwise, first, to the payment of the accrued interest (with interest on the overdue installments thereof at the rate of three and a half per cent per annum) in the order of the maturity of the installments, and then to the payment of the principal of all bonds hereby secured; in every instance such payments to be made ratably to the persons entitled to such payment, without any discrimination or preference,

These provisions, however, not being intended in any wise to modify the provisions of section 1 of this article.

SEC. 3. In case default shall be made in the payment of any interest on any bond or bonds hereby secured, or in the performance of any of the covenants of the Railway Company contained in section 5 of article two hereof, and any such default shall have continued for a period of six months, then and in every case of such continuing default, upon the written request of the holders of a majority in amount of the bonds hereby secured then outstanding, the Trustee, by notice in writing delivered to the Railway Company, shall declare the principal of all bonds hereby secured then outstanding to be due and payable immediately, and upon any such declaration the same shall become and be immediately due and payable, anything in this indenture or in said bonds contained to the contrary notwithstanding. This provision, however, is subject to the condition that, if at any time after the principal of said bonds shall have been so declared due and payable, all arrears of interest upon all such bonds, with interest at the rate of three and a half per cent per annum on overdue installments of interest, and the expenses of the Trustee, shall either be paid by the Railway Company, or be collected out of the mortgaged premises before any sale of the mortgaged premises shall have been made, then and in every such case the holders of a majority in amount the bonds hereby secured then outstanding, by written notice to Railway Company and to the Trustee, may waive such default its consequences; but no such waiver shall extend to or affect subsequent default, or impair any right consequent thereon.

421 In case the Trustee shall have proceeded to enforce right under this indenture, by foreclosure, entry, or oth wise, and such proceedings shall have been discontinued or ab doned because of such waiver, or for any other reason,

422 shall have been determined adversely to the Trustee, then, in every such case, the Railway Company and the Trustee be restored to their former position and rights hereunder in respect the mortgaged premises and all rights, remedies, and powers of Trustee shall continue as though no such proceedings had b taken.

SEC. 4. In case (1) default shall be made in the payment of interest on any bond at any time issued under and secured by indenture or in the performance of any of the covenants of Railway Company contained in section 5 of article two hereof, any such default shall have continued for a period of six mont or in case (2) default shall be made in the due and punctual p ment of the principal of any bond hereby secured; or in case default shall be made in the due observance or performance of other covenant or condition herein required to be kept or perfor
by the Railway Company, and any such default under clause hereof shall have continued for a period of six months after writ notice thereof from the Trustee or from the holders of five per c in amount of the bonds hereby secured, then, and in each and ev such case of default, provided, however, in respect of each of 423 two cases so indicated, that such default shall have contin for six months, as above provided, the Trustee, with or with entry, personally or by attorney, in its discretion (a) may sell to highest and best bidder all and singular the mortgaged property premises, rights, franchises and interests, and appurtenances, other real and personal property of every kind, and all right, and interest, claim and demand therein, and right of redempt thereof, in one lot and as an entirety, except so far as a sale in p cels shall be required under the provisions of section 6 of this art to which extent such sale shall be made in parcels as in said sec provided; which sale or sales shall be made at public auction at place in the city of Ogden, in the State of Utah, or at such o place and at such time and upon such terms as the Trustee may and briefly specify in the notice of sale to be given as herein p vided; or (b) immediately upon the expiration of the six mon in the two cases so indicated, and immediately upon default in p ent of principal in the other case, may proceed to protect and en-rce their rights and the rights of bondholders under this indenture ance of any covenant or agreement contained herein or in aid 24 of the execution of any power herein granted, or for the foreclosure of this indenture, or for the enforcement of any other ppropriate legal or equitable remedy as the Trustee, being advised r counsel learned in the law, shall deem most effectual to protect and force any of their rights or duties hereunder.

Upon the written request of the holders of twenty-five per cent in nount of the bonds hereby secured, in case of any such continuing fault, it shall be the duty of the Trustee, upon being indemnified hereinafter provided, to take all needful steps for the protection d enforcement of their rights and the rights of the holders of the nds hereby secured, and to exercise the powers of entry or sale rein conferred, or both, or to take appropriate judicial proceed-gs by action, suit, or otherwise, as the Trustee, being advised by unsel learned in the law, shall deem most expedient in the interest the holders of the bonds hereby secured.

SEC. 5. Anything in this indenture contained to the contrary not-ithstanding, the holders of seventy-five per cent in amount of the nds hereby secured and then outstanding, from time to time shall ve the right to direct and to control the method and place of conducting any and all proceedings for any sale of the premises 5 hereby conveyed, mortgaged, or pledged, or for the foreclosure of this indenture, or for the appointment of a receiver, or of y other proceedings hereunder.

SEC. 6. In the event of any sale, whether made under the power sale hereby granted and conferred, or under or by virtue of dicial proceedings, or of some judgment or decree of foreclosure d sale, the whole of the property hereby mortgaged (excepting ly the lands, notes, securities, and moneys described in subdivisions ghth, ninth, and tenth of the granting clause hereof) shall be sold one parcel and as an entirety, including all the rights, titles, ates, railroads, equipment, franchises, contracts, and other real d personal property of every name and nature (except as afored), unless the holders of a majority in amount of the bonds hereby ured then outstanding shall in writing request the Trustee to se said premises to be sold in parcels, in which case the sale shall made in such parcels as may be specified in such request or petin, or unless such sale as an entirety is impracticable by reason some statute or other cause; the lands, notes, and securities ex-ted from the foregoing provision are to be sold in such lots or rcels as may be determined by the Trustee hereunder, except that each class of such securities must be sold separately, and this p vision shall bind the parties hereto and each and every of the h ers of the bonds and coupons hereby secured or intended so to be

SEC. 7. Notice of any such sale pursuant to any provis 426 of this indenture shall state the time and place when where the same is to be made, and shall contain a brief g eral description of the property to be sold, and shall be sufficie given if published once in each week for four successive weeks pr to such sale in a newspaper published in the city of New York, in State of New York, and a newspaper published in the city of Og in the State of Utah, and otherwise as may be required by law.

SEC. 8. The Trustee from time to time may adjourn any sale to made by it under the provisions of this indenture by announcem at the time and place appointed for such sale, or for such adjour sale or sales, and without further notice or publication it may m journed.

SEC. 9. Upon the completion of any sale or sales under this denture the Trustee shall execute and deliver to the accepted p chaser or purchasers a good and sufficient deed, or good and s cient deeds, of conveyance of the property and franchises s And the Trustee and its successors are hereby appointed the t and lawful attorneys or attorney, irrevocable, of the Railway C pany, in its name and stead to make all necessary deeds and con ances of property thus sold; and for that purpose they m 427 execute all necessary acts of assignment and transfer, Railway Company hereby ratifying and confirming all that said attorney or attorneys shall lawfully do by virtue hereof.

Any such sale or sales made under or by virtue of this indent whether under the power of sale hereby granted and conferred under or by virtue of judicial proceedings, shall operate to dives right, title, interest, claim, and demand whatsoever, either at or in equity, of the Railway Company of, in, and to the prem sold, and shall be a perpetual bar, both at law and in equity, ag the Railway Company, its successors and assigns, and against and all persons claiming or to claim the premises sold, or any thereof, from, through, or under the Railway Company, its succe or assigns.

The personal property and chattels conveyed, or intended to conveyed, by or pursuant to this indenture (excepting only lands, notes, securities, and moneys described in subdivisions eig ninth, and tenth of the granting clause hereof), shall be real e for all the purposes of this indenture, and shall be held and take be fixtures and appurtenances of the said railroads and part the d are to be used and sold therewith and not separate therefrom, except as herein otherwise provided.

8 SEC. 10. The receipt of the Trustee shall be a sufficient discharge to any purchaser of the property, or any part thereof d as aforesaid, for the purchase money, and no such purchaser, or s representatives, grantees, or assigns, after paying such purchase oney and receiving such receipt, shall be bound to see to the appli- ion of such purchase money upon or for any trust or purpose of is indenture, or in any manner whatsoever be answerable for y loss, misapplication, or nonapplication of any such purchase oney, or any part thereof, or be bound to inquire as to the authori- ion, necessity, expediency, or regularity of any such sale.

SEC. 11. In case of such sale, whether under the power of sale reby granted or pursuant to judicial proceedings, the principal of the bonds hereby secured, if not previously due, immediately there- on shall become and be due and payable, anything in said bonds in this indenture contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 12. The purchase money, proceeds, and avails of any such sale reunder, whether under the power of sale hereby granted or pur- nt to judicial proceedings, together with any other sums which n may be held by the Trustee under any of the provisions of this lenture as part of the trust estate or of the proceeds thereof, shall be applied as follows:

First. To the payment of the costs and expenses of such sale, including a reasonable compensation to the Trustee, its agents, orneys, and counsel, and of all expenses, liabilities, and advances de or incurred by the Trustee in managing and maintaining the operty hereby conveyed, and to the payment of all taxes, assess- nts, or liens prior to the lien of these presents, except any taxes, essments, or other superior liens to which such sales shall have been de subject.

Second. To the payment of the whole amount then owing or unpaid on the bonds hereby secured for principal and interest, with interest the rate of three and a half per cent per annum on the overdue tallments of interest, and in case such proceeds shall be insuffi- nt to pay in full the whole amount so due and unpaid upon the l bonds, then to the payment of such principal and interest, with- preference or priority of principal over interest, or of interest r principal, or of any installment of interest over any other tallment of interest, ratably, to the aggregate of such principal the accrued and unpaid interest, subject, however, to the provi- sions of section 1 of this article.

Third. To the payment of the surplus, if any, to the Rail- way Company, its successors or assigns, or to whomsoever be lawfully entitled to receive the same.

SEC. 13. In case of any sale hereunder any purchaser, for the pu pose of making settlement or payment for the property purchas shall be entitled to turn in any bonds and any matured and unpa coupons hereby secured, in order that there may be credited, as pa thereon, the sums payable out of the net proceeds of such sale to t holder of such bonds and coupons, as his ratable share of such n proceeds, after allowing for the proportion of the total purcha price required to pay the costs and expenses of the sale, or otherwi and such purchaser shall be credited, on account of the purchase pri of the property purchased, with the sums payable out of such n proceeds on the bonds and coupons so turned in; and, at any su sale, any bondholders may bid for and purchase such property, a may make payment on account thereof as aforesaid; and, upon co pliance with the terms of sale, may hold, retain, and dispose of su property without further accountability therefor.

SEC. 14. The Railway Company will not at any time ins 431 upon or plead, or in any manner whatever claim, or take t benefit or advantage of any stay or extension law now or any time hereafter in force in any locality where the mortgag premises, or any part thereof, may or shall be situate, nor will claim, take, or insist on, any benefit or advantage from any law n or hereafter in force, providing for the valuation, or appraisem of the mortgaged premises, or any part thereof, prior to any s or sales thereof to be made pursuant to any provision herein co tained, or to the decree of any court of competent jurisdiction; n after any such sale or sales will it claim or exercise any right un any statute enacted by any State, to redeem the property so sold any part thereof; and it hereby expressly waives all benefit a advantage of any such law or laws; and it covenants that it will n hinder, delay, or impede the execution of any power herein gran and delegated to the Trustee, but that it will suffer and permit t execution of every such power, as though no such law or laws h been made or enacted.

SEC. 15. In case the Railway Company shall make default in a of the respects mentioned in section 3 of article four hereof, and the shall be any judgment outstanding against the Railway Co 432 pany unsecured by bond on appeal; or in case any judicial pr ceeding by any party other than the Trustee, a receiver shall b appointed of the Railway Company, or a judgment or order be e tered for the sequestration of its property, the Trustee shall the upon be entitled forthwith to exercise the right of entry herein co ferred, and also any and all other rights and powers herein conferr and provided to be exercised by the Trustee upon the occurrence a continuance of default as hereinbefore provided, and as mat

f right the Trustee shall thereupon be entitled to the appointment f a receiver of the premises hereby mortgaged, and of the earnings, ncome, revenue, rents, issues, or profits thereof, with such powers s the court making such appointment shall confer.

SEC. 16. The Railway Company, at any time before full payment
f the bonds hereby secured and whenever it shall deem it expedient or the better protection and security of such bonds, although there e then no default entitling the Trustee to enter into possession, with he consent of the Trustee may surrender and deliver to the Trustee ull possession of the whole or any part of the property, premises, nd interests hereby conveyed or intended so to be for any period, fixed or indefinite. Upon such surrender and delivery to the 33 Trustee, with its consent, the Trustee shall enter into and upon the premises so surrendered and delivered and shall take and eceive possession thereof for such period, fixed or indefinite, as foresaid, without prejudice, however, to their right at any time ubsequently, when entitled thereto by any provision hereof, to insist pon and to maintain such possession, though beyond the expiration f any prescribed period. Upon any such voluntary surrender and elivery of said property and premises or of any part thereof the Trustee, from the time of its entry, shall work, maintain, use, mange, control, and employ the same in accordance with the provisions f this indenture, and shall receive and apply the income and reve-ues thereof as provided in section 2 of this article.

SEC. 17. No holder of any bond or coupon hereby secured shall ave any right to institute any suit, action, or proceeding in equity r at law for the foreclosure of this indenture or for the execution of ny trust thereof or for the appointment of a receiver or for any ther remedy hereunder, unless such holder previously shall have iven to the Trustee written notice of such default and of the coninuance thereof, as hereinbefore provided; nor unless, also, the holders of twenty-five per cent in amount of the bonds 34 hereby secured then outstanding shall have made written request upon the Trustee, and shall have afforded to it reason-ble opportunity, either to proceed to exercise the powers hereinefore granted or to institute such action, suit, or proceeding in its wn name; nor unless, also, they shall have offered to the Trustee dequate security and indemnity against the costs, expenses, and abilities to be incurred therein or thereby; and such notification, equest, and offer of indemnity are hereby declared in every such ase, at the option of the Trustee, to be conditions precedent to the xecution of the powers and trusts of this indenture and to any ction or cause of action, for foreclosure or for the appointment of a eceiver or for any other remedy hereunder, it being understood and intended that no one or more holders of bonds and coupons shall h any right in any manner whatever to affect, disturb, or prejudice lien of this indenture by his or their action, or to enforce any ri hereunder, except in the manner herein provided, and that all p ceedings at law or in equity shall be instituted, had, and maintai in the manner herein provided and for the equal benefit of all hold of such outstanding bonds and coupons.

435 SEC. 18. Except as herein expressly provided to the co trary, no remedy herein conferred upon, or reserved to, Trustee or to the holders of bonds hereby secured is intended to exclusive of any other remedy, but each and every such remedy sh be cumulative and shall be in addition to every other remedy gi hereunder, or now or hereafter existing at law or in equity or statute.

SEC. 19. No delay or omission of the Trustee, or of any holder bonds hereby secured, to exercise any right or power accruing up any default continuing as aforesaid shall impair any such right power, or shall be construed to be a waiver of any such default, an acquiescence therein; and every power and remedy given by t article to the Trustee or to the bondholders may be exercised fr time to time and as often as may be deemed expedient by the Tru or by the bondholders severally and respectively.

SEC. 20. Notwithstanding any entry of any trustee or trustees, receiver or receivers, into possession of the properties, rights, fr chises, and premises hereby mortgaged, or any of them, the Uni States shall be entitled to have and enjoy the provisions embod in article sixth of the settlement agreement between the Uni States of America, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, a

436 Messrs. Speyer & Company, dated February 1, 1899, herein fore referred to, whereby it is provided as follows:

"Until the notes to be given by the Central Pacific Railroad Co pany under article second of this agreement shall have been paid full, principal and interest, all amounts due to the Central Pac Railroad Company or its successor company from the United St subsequent to the date of this agreement in respect of services to United States, upon the bond-aided lines from a point about f miles west of Ogden to Sacramento and from Sacramento to S Jose, above referred to, shall, as audited and allowed, be applied the United States pro rata on account of the amounts remain unpaid on such of said notes as shall not have been purchased Messrs. Speyer & Co. hereunder, such application being first m to the payment of accrued interest thereon and thereafter on acco of the principal thereof."

37 ARTICLE FIVE.

Immunity of officers, directors, and stockholders.

No recourse under or upon any obligation, covenant, or agreement f this indenture, or of any bond or coupon hereby secured, shall be ad against any incorporator, stockholder, officer, or director of the Railway Company, or of any successor corporation, either directly r through the Railway Company, by the enforcement of any assess- ent or by any legal or equitable proceeding by virtue of any statute r otherwise, it being expressly agreed and understood that this ortgage and the obligations hereby secured are solely corporate bligations and that no personal liability whatever shall attach to or e incurred by the incorporators, stockholders, officers, or directors f the Railway Company, or of any successor corporation, or any f them, under or by reason of any of the obligations, covenants, or greements contained in this indenture, or in any of the bonds or oupons hereby secured or implied therefrom, and that any and all ersonal liability of every name and nature, either in common law r in equity or by statute or constitution, of every such incorporator, tockholder, officer, or director is hereby expressly waived as a con- ition of and consideration for the execution and issue of this mort- age and such bonds and coupons.

Bondholders' acts, holdings, and apparent authority.

SECTION 1. Any request or other instrument required by this in- enture to be signed and executed by bondholders may be in any umber of concurrent instruments of similar tenor and may be igned or executed by such bondholders in person or by agent ap- ointed in writing. Proof of the execution of any such request or ther instrument or of a writing appointing any such agent and of he holding by any person of coupon bonds transferable by delivery hall be sufficient for any purpose of this indenture if made in the ollowing manner:

SEC. 2. The fact and date of the execution by any person of any uch request or other instrument or writing may be proved by the ertificate of any notary public or other officer authorized to take cknowledgments of deeds to be recorded in New York, that the erson signing such request or other instrument acknowledged to im the execution thereof or by an affidavit of a witness of such exe- ution.

SEC. 3. The amount of coupon bonds transferable by delivery held y any person executing any such request or other instrument as a bond holder, and the amounts and issue numbers of the bo 439 held by such person, and the date of his holding the same, m be proved by a certificate executed by any trust compa bank, bankers, or other depositary (wherever situated) if such c tificate shall be deemed by the Trustee to be satisfactory, show that at the date therein mentioned such person had on deposit w such depositary the bonds therein described. The ownership of r istered coupon bonds or of registered bonds without coupons sh be proved by the registers of such bonds as provided in section 3 article two hereof. Such proof shall be conclusive in favor of Trustee with regard to any action by them taken under such req or other instrument.

SEC. 4. The bearer of any coupon bond hereby secured, which the time shall not be registered as hereinbefore authorized, and t bearer of any coupon for interest on any such bond, whether t same shall be registered or not, may be deemed and treated by t Railway Company and the Trustee as the absolute owner of su bond or coupon, as the case may be, for the purpose of receiving pa ment thereof, and for all other purposes, and no notice to the co trary shall affect the Railway Company or the Trustee.

440 ARTICLE SEVEN.

Releases of mortgaged property.

SEC. 1. Upon the written request of the Railway Company, a proved by resolution of its board of directors or executive co mittee, the Trustee, from time to time while the Railway Compa is in possession of the mortgaged premises, but subject to the co ditions and limitations in this section prescribed, and not otherwi shall release from the lien and operation of this indenture any pa of the mortgaged premises then subject thereto (except the lan notes, securities, and moneys described in subdivisions eighth, nint and tenth of the granting clause hereof, the administration a disposition of which are dealt with in article three hereof); provid
(1) that no part of the lines of track or of the rights of way sh be released, unless the same shall no longer be of use in the operati of any of the mortgaged lines of railway, and no part of such lin of track or rights of way shall be so released if thereby the co tinuity of the lines of railway of the Railway Company betwe the several termini above mentioned shall be broken; and (2) th no partof the mortgaged railways or other property shall released hereunder, unless at the time of such release it shall 441 longer be necessary or expedient to retain the same for t operation, maintenance, or use of such lines of railway or f use in the business of the Railway Company.

No such release shall be made under this section unless the Railway Company shall have sold, or shall have contracted to exchange for other property, or to sell the property so to be released; and unless some other disposition thereof be required by some prior mortgage (and except as provided in article three hereof in respect to the lands, notes, securities, and moneys therein referred to) the proceeds of any and all such sales and all moneys received as compensation for any property subject to this indenture, taken by exercise of the power of eminent domain, shall be set apart and held in trust and applied, with approval of the said Trustee, to the purchase of other property, real or personal, or in betterments of or additions to or rolling stock for any part of the mortgaged premises. Any new property acquired by the Railway Company to take the place of any property released under this section, ipso facto, shall become and be subject to the lien of this indenture as fully as if specifically mortgaged hereby; but, if requested by the said Trustee, the Railway Company will convey the same to the Trustee by 42 appropriate deeds upon the trusts and for the purposes of this indenture.

SEC. 2. The Railway Company, while in possession of the mortgaged premises, shall also have full power, in its discretion from time to time, to dispose of any portion of the machinery, equipment, and implements, at any time held subject to the lien hereof, which may have become unfit for such use, replacing the same by new machinery, equipment, or implements, which shall become subject to this indenture.

SEC. 3. In no event shall any purchaser or purchasers of any property sold or disposed of under any provision of this article be required to see to the application of the purchase money.

SEC. 4. In case the mortgaged premises shall be in the possession of a receiver lawfully appointed, the powers in and by this article conferred upon the Railway Company may be exercised by such receiver with the approval of the Trustee; and if the Trustee shall be in possession of the mortgaged premises under any provision of this indenture, then all the powers by this article conferred upon the Railway Company may be exercised by the Trustee in its discretion.

SEC. 5. The Railway Company from time to time may 43 make changes or alterations in or substitutions of any leases or trackage rights subject to this indenture; but in any such event any modified, altered, or substituted leases or trackage rights forthwith shall become bound by, and be subject to, the terms of this indenture in the same manner as those previously existing.

SEC. 6. A certificate signed by the president, or a vice president, and the chief engineer of the Railway Company may be received by the said Trustee as conclusive evidence of any of the facts mentioned in this article, and shall be full warrant to the said Trustee for action on the faith thereof; but the said Trustee, in its discret may require such further and additional evidence as to it may reasonable.

ARTICLE EIGHT.

Concerning the trustee.

SECTION 1. The Trustee shall not be answerable for the defa or misconduct of any agent or attorney appointed by it in pursua hereof if such agent or attorney shall have been selected with reas able care; or for anything whatever in connection with this tr except willful misconduct or gross negligence. The Trus 444 shall not be personally liable for any debt contracted by it, for damages to persons or property carried or injured, or salaries or nonfulfillment of contracts during any period wher the Trustee shall manage the trust property or premises upon en or voluntary surrender as aforesaid. The Trustee shall not be un any obligation to take any action toward the execution or enfor ment of the trusts hereby created, which, in its opinion, shall likely to involve it in expense or liability, unless one or more of holders of the bonds hereby secured shall, as often as required the Trustee, furnish it reasonable indemnity against such expens liability; nor shall the Trustee be required to take notice of any fault hereunder unless notified in writing of such default by holders of at least five per cent in amount of the bonds hereby secu then outstanding, or to take any action in respect of any defa unless requested to take action in respect thereof by a writing sig by the holders of not less than twenty-five per cent in amount of bonds hereby secured then outstanding, and tendered reasona indemnity as aforesaid, anything herein contained to the contr notwithstanding; but neither any such notice or request nor provision therefor shall affect any discretion herein given 445 the Trustee to determine whether or not it shall take actio respect of such default, or to take action without such requ
The Trustee shall not be responsible for the recording of this denture and shall not be required to file the same as a chattel m gage.

The Railway Company covenants that it will cause record of instrument as a mortgage of real estate to be made with all c venient speed; on request of the Railway Company the Trustee h under may certify and deliver bonds hereunder to the amount within the limit hereinbefore prescribed in advance of registrat or record of this indenture, or delivery of the notes, securities moneys mortgaged or to be mortgaged hereunder.

The Trustee shall be entitled to reasonable compensation for all services rendered by it in the execution of the trusts hereby created.

SEC. 2. The Trustee or any trustee hereafter appointed may resign, and be discharged of the trusts created by this indenture by giving notice thereof to the Railway Company and to the bondholders, by publication, at least twice a week, for four successive weeks, in one newspaper at that time published in the city of New York, 46 in the State of New York, and one newspaper published in the city of Ogden, in the State of Utah, and by due execution of the conveyance herein required.

The Trustee may be removed at any time by an instrument in writing under the hands of three-quarters in amount of the holders of the bonds hereby secured and then outstanding.

SEC. 3. In case at any time the said United States Trust Company of New York, or any trustee hereafter appointed, shall resign or be removed or otherwise become incapable of acting, a successor or successors may be appointed by the holders of a majority in amount of the bonds hereby secured then outstanding, by an instrument or concurrent instruments signed by such bondholders or their attorneys in fact duly authorized: Provided, nevertheless, and it is hereby agreed and declared that, in case at any time there shall be a vacancy in the office of trustee hereunder, the Railway Company, by an instrument executed by order of its board of directors, may appoint a trustee to fill such vacancy until a new trustee shall be appointed by the bondholders as herein authorized. The Railway Company shall thereupon publish notice of such appointment once a week for six successive weeks in a newspaper published in the city of New York, in the State of New York, and a newspaper published 47 in the city of Ogden, in the State of Utah, and any new trustee so appointed by the Railway Company shall immediately and without further act be superseded by a trustee appointed in the manner above provided by the holders of a majority in amount of the bonds hereby secured prior to the expiration of six months after such publication of notice. Every such trustee appointed in place of the United States Trust Company of New York, or its successor in the trust, shall always be a trust company in good standing, doing business in the city of New York, and having a capital and surplus aggregating at least $2,000,000, if there be such a trust company willing and able to accept the trust upon reasonable or customary terms.

Any such new trustee appointed hereunder shall execute, 48 acknowledge, and deliver to the trustee last in office and also to the Railway Company an instrument accepting such appointment hereunder, and thereupon such new trustee without any further act, deed, or conveyance shall become vested with all the estates, properties, rights, powers, and trusts of its predecessor in date under the special conditions and upon the notice there 478 set forth; under the proviso that in either case redempti must be of the total amount of the issue then outstanding.

The Railway Company, ten days before this bond becomes d either according to the tenor thereof or by redemption as above pr vided, and ten days before any interest installment thereon becom due, will deposit with the two French banks herein named, or eith of them, for distribution and payment to the respective holders of such bonds, a sum in French francs at least sufficient to pay as afo said the principal and interest then to become due, and such depo shall, when and as such bonds and interest installments respectiv become due, be deemed payment thereof; all as provided in said i denture.

If this bond be not presented for payment within thirty years any matured interest installment thereon be not demanded with ten years, after this bond or such interest installment, as the case m be, becomes due and payable, the same shall be barred and outla for the benefit of the Railway Company and Southern Pacific Co pany.

All questions concerning the terms, provisions, and effect of sa bonds and coupons and the rights of the holders thereof sha bonds, or other securities then held hereunder (except said st of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company) as shall be reques and indicated by the Company in writing, addressed to the Trus and the French banks: Provided, however, That upon each every withdrawal and substitution the securities offered in s stitution in each instance shall be (1) of a character approved the appraisers appointed hereunder and shall be (2) equal in a praised value at the time of the proposed substitution hereunder he last previously appraised value of the securities to be withdrawn; and also that (3) the securities offered in substitution and hose remaining on deposit (in each instance) shall be equal in value s appraised or reappraised at the time of such proposed substitution o one hundred and twenty per centum (120%) of the amount of bonds hen outstanding hereunder: And provided further, (4) That the ggregate interest and dividends during each of the two years immediately prior to the proposed substitution actually paid 511 upon the securities offered in substitution and upon the other securities remaining on deposit hereunder shall have been qual to at least 120% of the interest payable on the bonds then outstanding hereunder. No reappraisement of the securities remaining on deposit shall be made or required in connection with the withdrawal of securities (not exceeding $5,000,000 in the aggregate of appraised value) requested prior to September 1, 1911.

SEC. 3. In all cases of substitutions, appraisements, and reapraise-ments, anywhere provided for under this indenture, the appraise-ments shall be made by two appraisers, one of whom shall be appointed by the Company and one by the French banks, or in case of the failure of either party to appoint an appraiser within ten days after request, then such appointment shall be promptly made by the Trustee. In case the two appraisers so appointed can not promptly agree upon the appraisement they shall appoint a third impartial appraiser, or failing such appointment within ten days after disagreement, then the Trustee shall promptly appoint the third appraiser; and the appraisement of the two appraisers, or of a majority of the three appraisers, as the case may be, shall be binding and conclusive upon all parties hereto. In case of any request made 512 prior to September 1, 1911, for the withdrawal of securities of appraised value of not more than $5,000,000, the appraisal and approval of the securities to be substituted may be made by joint certificate of the Company and the French banks instead of by appraisers appointed as aforesaid.

SEC. 4. Upon all appraisements, reappraisements, and substitutions under any provision of this indenture the French banks shall be accorded full opportunity to be heard (promptly after notice to them) in person or through agents and counsel before determination thereon; and the appraisers shall take into consideration all facts, circumstances, and conditions then existing in each case, including the probable results or effects of any proposed mortgage or other matter.

SEC. 5. All certificates for shares of stock and all registered bonds, now or hereafter deposited and pledged hereunder, shall be, at the time of the delivery thereof, duly endorsed in blank for transfer or accompanied by irrevocable powers of attorney authorizing transfer of the same, and the Trustee shall from time to time tran into its name as Trustee all such shares of stock and registered bon and the Pacific Companies will pay to the Trustee the amo of any transfer tax necessary to be paid upon or in conn 513 tion with any such transfers. Until and unless default sh be made by the Railway Company and the Company in payment at maturity of the principal or the interest of any of bonds issued hereunder, or until and unless default shall be ma in the due and punctual observance or performance of any other the terms, covenants, conditions, or requirements contained in bonds and this indenture, and any such last-mentioned default sh have continued for the period of three months after notice there by the Trustee to the Company and the Railway Company, the Co pany (a) shall have the right to vote or to consent in respect of and all of the shares of stock now or hereafter deposited or pledg hereunder, and from time to time the Trustee, upon the request of Company, shall execute and deliver, or cause to be executed and d livered, to the Company suitable powers of attorney or proxies f so voting or consenting in respect of said stock; and the Compan

(b) shall be entitled to receive all interest paid in respect of an bonds now or hereafter deposited and pledged hereunder, and a dividends, except stock dividends, on all shares of stock now hereafter deposited and pledged hereunder; and the Trustee sha deliver to the Company from time to time hereafter, upon re 514 quest of the latter, suitable orders in favor of the Company o its nominee for the payment of interest upon any registere bonds and of said dividends upon shares of stock then deposited an pledged hereunder, and shall from time to time upon request of th Company (not more than thirty days prior to the date when such interest shall be payable) deliver to the Company or its nominee an and all coupons upon bonds then held hereunder; and the Truste shall upon demand pay over to the Company any such interest and dividends which may be collected or be received by it. The Compan covenants that such powers to vote or consent in respect of any stock now or hereafter pledged hereunder shall not be used in favor of, or to further the doing of, any act or thing in violation of any of the provisions of this indenture.

The Trustee also is fully empowered to do whatever may be neces sary to maintain, renew, or extend the corporate existence of any company, stock of which may be held at the time hereunder, and may sell and transfer stock necessary to qualify directors.

SEC. 6. In case default shall be made in the payment upon demand of any installment of interest then due upon any bond issued hereunder and then outstanding and such default shall have continued for the period of three months, or in case default ll be made in the payment of the principal of any of said bonds ether upon maturity of said bonds or upon declaration as au- rized by this indenture), then, and in every such case, the Trustee , in its discretion, upon the written request of the holders of nty per cent in amount of the bonds then outstanding, and shall, n the written request of the holders of twenty-five per cent in ount of the bonds then outstanding, proceed, upon thirty days' ice to the Company, and notice by publication at least once a week four successive weeks in a daily newspaper of general circulation lished in the city of New York, to sell at public sale in said city, for the best price that can be obtained therefor, the whole of the rities held by the Trustee at the time of such default, or as much reof as may in the judgment of the Trustee be necessary to pay principal of said bonds, if due, and all overdue coupons and ars of interest thereon, the compensation, advances, liabilities, expenses of the Trustee and all expenses pertaining as well to execution of the trust as to said sale and any other costs and charges incurred in consequence of such sale, as well as any taxes or charges upon said securities in connection with such sale, in such lots or parcels as the Trustee may deem most eficial to the holders of such bonds; and the Trustee is authorized djourn from time to time, in its discretion, the sale of the whole ny part of said securities.

he action of the Trustee, whether with or without demand or uest of the holders of any specified amount of said bonds then tanding, in the exercise of any duties and powers anywhere in indenture provided for, shall at all times be subject to the direc- and control of a majority in amount of the bonds then issued outstanding, whenever such majority shall give direction and rcise such control; provided that any action taken by the Trustee, n this indenture provided, before such majority shall give such ction or exercise any such control shall be sufficient.

pon any sale under this indenture, or under or pursuant to judi- proceedings, of the stocks, bonds, or other securities deposited under, the purchaser or purchasers thereof shall be entitled in ing payment of the purchase price to turn in and apply to the ment of the purchase price any of the said bonds issued hereunder and any matured and unpaid coupons, reckoning such bonds and coupons for that purpose at a sum equal to that which would be payable out of the net proceeds of said sale to the ler of said bonds and coupons so turned in as his or their proper e thereof, after allowing for the compensation, advances, lia- ies and expenses of the Trustee and all expenses pertaining as well to the execution of the trust as to said sale, and any othe and charges incurred in consequence of such sale, as well a taxes or charges upon said securities. Said bonds, if so paid i shall be canceled; but if the amount which would be so payable said net proceeds upon an accounting, apportionment, or distri to the holder of said bonds and coupons so turned in be less th amount for which the Railway Company and the Company be liable on such bonds and coupons, then the receipt endorsed th by the Trustee or its agents for the amount so allowed or cr thereon shall be sufficient as to such payment.

The Trustee, after having received request as aforesaid, sh entitled in its discretion, in lieu of proceeding to sell by it action the securities deposited hereunder, to bring suit befor court in the United States of competent jurisdiction to procur sale by the court in, or in the course of, such suit. The p 518 sions herein made with respect to the payment for any erty sold by the Trustee shall apply mutatis mutandis t sale made by or under the direction of the court in any such su

SEC. 7. If the Company shall at any time present to the T tee for cancellation (and not in exchange for engraved bonds

Trustee shall receive and cancel said temporary or interim bond thereupon the Trustee will surrender, assign, transfer, and d to the Company the stocks, bonds, and other securities dep hereunder, successively in the order of their enumeration in s 1 of this article (securities substituted upon withdrawal deemed to take the place, in the order of such enumeration, of t curities so withdrawn), to an amount which shall be proport at the then appraised value (without reappraisement for the pose) to the amount of bonds so canceled, but in such manne the shares of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company shall n encroached upon until all the other collateral is exhausted; and vided that if bonds to the amount of one hundred and twen million French francs (Fcs. 125,000,000) remain issued and standing hereunder, then in that event no part of the 519 shares of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company sh retired and withdrawn, but all thereof shall remain and tinue under such deposit and pledge, subject to the provisions o indenture; and provided, further, that said order of enume may be varied and altered from time to time with the appro the French banks.

SEC. 8. In case any corporation the stock of which shall be pl hereunder shall hereafter make any distribution of surplus by dend or otherwise which shall be payable in stock, there shall b posited with, or retained by, the Trustee hereunder, for the f urity of the bonds secured hereby, such an amount of stock as ll be so distributed in respect of the shares of stock at the time dged hereunder.

SEC. 9. At any sale made by the Trustee or pursuant to judicial oceedings, of any stocks, bonds or other securities deposited here-der the Trustee, or any bondholder or his agent, may bid for and rchase such stocks, bonds, or other securities, and may make pay-nt therefor as in section 6 hereof provided, and upon compliance th the terms of sale may hold, retain, and dispose of such stocks, bonds, or other securities without further accountability; and any such sale shall divest all the right, title, and interest at law or in equity of the Pacific Companies, or either of them, in, and to the stocks, bonds, or other securities sold and shall a perpetual bar against the Pacific Companies, and each of them, eir successors, and assigns. In case of any such sale, the Pacific mpanies shall join in any deed or other writing which the Trustee the purchaser may reasonably require as necessary or proper to idence such sale or to confirm the title acquired thereat.

ARTICLE FIVE.

Other remedies of Trustee and bondholders.

SECTION 1. In case default shall be made in the payment upon de-nd of any installment of interest then due upon any bond issued reunder and then outstanding, and such default shall have contin-d for the period of three months, or in case default shall be made in e due and punctual observance or performance of any of the terms, venants, conditions, or requirements contained in said bonds and is indenture, and any such last-mentioned default shall have con-nued for the period of three months after notice thereof by the rustee to the Company and the Railway Company—then, and in any and every such case, the Trustee, in its discretion, may, l upon the written request of the holders of twenty per cent in amount of the bonds issued and then outstanding hereunder, d shall, upon the written request of the holders of twenty-five per nt in amount of the bonds issued hereunder and then outstanding, notice in writing delivered to the Railway Company and the Com-ny, declare the principal of all bonds issued hereunder and then tstanding to be due and payable immediately; and upon any such claration the same shall become and be due and payable to the rustee immediately, anything in this indenture or in said bonds to e contrary notwithstanding.

This provision, however, is subject to the condition that (1) if at y time after the principal of said bonds shall have been so declared due and payable for default in the payment of interest thereo arrears of interest upon all such bonds, with interest at the ra four per cent per annum on overdue installments of interest, an expenses of the Trustee, and all other sums which shall have be due and payable by the Pacific Companies hereunder other tha principal of such bonds, shall either be paid by the Pacific C panies or actually be collected by the Trustee out of the ple 522 stocks, bonds, and other securities before any sale of any of said stocks, bonds, or other securities shall have been m or (2) if the principal of said bonds shall have been declared and payable because of one or more of the other defaults in this tion 1 specified, and thereafter such default or defaults shall been cured before any sale of any part of the stocks, bonds, or o securities pledged hereunder shall have been made, then, and every such case, the holders of a majority in amount of the bo issued hereunder and then outstanding, by written notice to Trustee, may waive such default or defaults and its or their sequences and rescind the declaration making the principal of bonds become due; and thereupon the bonds issued hereunder sh again be of their original terms, tenor, and effect. But no waiver shall extend to or affect any subsequent default or impair right or remedy consequent thereon.

SEC. 2. The Pacific Companies severally covenant that in case fault shall be made in the payment upon demand of any installm of interest then due on any bond at any time outstanding under indenture and the same be continued for the period of three mon or in case default shall be made in the payment of the pri 523 pal of any such bond when the same shall become paya whether upon maturity of said bonds or upon declaration authorized by this indenture, then in either and every such c upon demand of the Trustee, the Pacific Companies will pay to Trustee, for the benefit of the holders of the bonds and coup issued hereunder and then outstanding, the whole amount that shall have become due and payable on all such bonds and coup then outstanding for interest or principal, or both, as the case be, with lawful interest upon the overdue principal and installm of interest; and, in addition thereto, such further amount as shal sufficient to cover the costs and expenses of collection, including reasonable compensation of the Trustee, its agents, attorneys, counsel, and any expenses or liabilities incurred by the Trustee h under. The Trustee in its own name and as Trustee of an exp trust shall be entitled and empowered to institute such action or p ceedings at law or in equity as may be advised by counsel for collection of the whole sums so due and unpaid or for any o relief, and may prosecute any such action or proceedings to j nt or final decree, and shall be entitled to recover judgment and l decree for the whole amount due and unpaid in respect of all of said bonds and coupons then outstanding and for deficiencies and for any other appropriate relief.

SEC. 3. The Trustee may, except when expressly restricted the provisions of this indenture, take and prosecute all such asures and remedies at law or in equity, including specific perrmance, as may be afforded by the laws of the United States or y State thereof to enforce any provision of this indenture or said nds or to prevent or restrain or redress any breach of any term, venant, condition, or requirement in this indenture or in said bonds ntained as it may deem conducive to the interests of the holders of h bonds.

All rights of action under this indenture, or under any of said nds or coupons, may be enforced by the Trustee without the pos-sion of any of the bonds or coupons or the production thereof on y trial or other proceedings relative thereto, and any such suit or oceedings instituted by the Trustee shall be brought in its name as ustee, and any recovery of judgment, including any judgments for ficiencies, shall be for the ratable benefit of the holders of said nds and coupons.

Any moneys collected by the Trustee under any provision of this indenture after default (including income from or the proceeds of sale of the securities referred to in article four) ll be applied, at the date fixed by the Trustee for the distribution such moneys and upon presentation of the several bonds and couns and stamping thereon the payment if only partially paid, and on surrender thereof if fully paid, as follows: First, to the pay-nt of costs and expenses, including reasonable compensation to the ustee, its agents, attorneys, and counsel, and of all expenses, liaities, and advances made or incurred by the Trustee, and, second, the principal of the bonds issued and outstanding hereunder shall have become due and payable either by the terms thereof or by claration as hereinbefore provided or otherwise, then to the pay-nt of the whole amount then owing for interest upon the bonds ued and outstanding hereunder, with lawful interest on the over-e installments of interest without preference or priority of any in-llment of interest over any other installment of interest, and, rd, if the principal of the bonds issued and outstanding here-der shall have become due and payable either by the terms thereof by declaration as hereinbefore provided or otherwise, then to the payment of the amount then owing or unpaid upon the bonds issued hereunder for principal and interest, with lawful interest on the overdue principal and installments of interest, without preference or priority of principal over interest, or of i terest over principal, or of any installment of interest over any o installment of interest.

SEC. 4. Neither the Railway Company nor the Company will at time insist upon or plead, or in any manner whatever claim, or t the benefit or advantage of, any stay or extension law now or at time hereafter in force, and each of them hereby expressly waive benefit and advantage of any such law or laws; and they sever covenant that they will not hinder, delay, or impede the execution any power herein granted and delegated to the Trustee (or to bondholder in the cases stated), but that they will suffer and pe the execution of every such power as though no such law or laws been made or enacted.

SEC. 5. No holder of any bond or coupon issued hereunder s have any right to institute any suit, action, or proceeding at la in equity to enforce any covenant or provision of this indenture for the execution of any trust hereunder, or for the appointment o receiver or for any other remedy under this indenture, un 527 the holders of twenty-five per cent in amount of the bo issued hereunder and then outstanding first shall have m written request to the Trustee and shall have afforded to it reasona opportunity to institute such action, suit, or proceeding in its na nor unless also such holders shall have offered to the Trustee adeq security and indemnity against the costs, expenses, and liabilities be incurred therein or thereby, and unless the Trustee shall have fused or neglected to comply with such request; and such notic tion, request, and offer of indemnity are hereby declared in every case, at the option of the Trustee, to be conditions precedent to bringing of any suit, action, or proceeding by any bondholder u this indenture; it being understood and intended that no one or m holders of bonds or coupons shall have any right in any manner w ever to affect, disturb, or prejudice the security of this indenture his or their action, or to enforce any right under this indenture ex in the manner herein provided, and that all proceedings at law o equity under this indenture shall be instituted, had, and maintai in the manner herein provided and for the equal benefit of all hol of such outstanding bonds and coupons.

528 SEC. 6. Except as herein expressly provided to the contr no remedy in this indenture conferred upon or reserved to Trustee or to the bondholders is intended to be exclusive of any o remedy; but every remedy provided in this indenture shall be cu lative and shall be in addition to every other remedy given here or now or hereafter existing at law or in equity or by statute; an particular (but without limiting the application of this section to ier cases) all the rights and remedies in this article mentioned are nulative to the rights and remedies referred to in article four reof, and all the respective remedies in this article and in said icle mentioned may be pursued independently or simultaneously, the Trustee may deem expedient. No delay or omission of the ustee, or of any holders of bonds issued hereunder, to exercise any ht or power accruing upon any default shall impair any such ht or power or shall be construed to be a waiver of any such de- lt or acquiescence therein; and every power and remedy given by s article to the Trustee or to the bondholders may be exercised m time to time and as often as may be deemed expedient by the ustee or by the bondholders, as the case may be. All the obliga- tions, covenants, and conditions on the part of the Pacific Companies, or either of them, herein contained shall be spe- cifically enforceable.

ARTICLE SIX.

Exemption of liability of stockholders, directors, and officers.

o recourse under or upon any obligation, covenant, or agreement ained in this indenture, or in any bond or coupon issued here- er, or because of the creation of any indebtedness hereunder, shall ad against any incorporator, stockholder, officer, or director of Pacific Companies or either of them or of any successor corpora- , either directly or through the Pacific Companies or either of n, by the enforcement of any assessment or by any legal or table proceeding by virtue of any statute or otherwise; it being ressly agreed and understood that this indenture, and the obliga- s issued hereunder, are solely corporate obligations, and that no onal liability whatever shall attach to or is incurred by the in- orators, stockholders, officers, or directors of the Pacific Com- es or either of them, or of any successor corporation, or any of , because of the incurring of the indebtedness hereby author- or under or by reason of any of the obligations, guaranties, cove- nants, or agreements contained in this indenture or in any of the bonds or coupons issued hereunder or implied therefrom; and that any and all personal liability of every name and nature, any and all rights and claims against every such incorporator, holder, officer, or director, whether arising at common law or in y, or created by statute or constitution, are hereby expressly sed and waived as a condition of and as part of the considera- for the execution of this indenture and the issue of the bonds and est obligations hereunder.

ARTICLE SEVEN.

Bondholders' declarations.

SECTION 1. Any request, declaration, or other instrument req by this indenture to be signed and executed by bondholders ma in any number of concurrent writings of similar tenor, and ma signed or executed by such bondholders in person or by agen pointed in writing. Proof of the execution of any such requ other instrument, or of the writing appointing any such agent, of the ownership of bonds, if made in the following manner, sha sufficient for any purpose of this indenture and shall be conclusi favor of the Trustee and the Pacific Companies with regard to action taken under such request or other instrument, na 531 (a) The fact and date of the signing or execution by person of any such writing may be proved by (1) the ce cate of any officer in any jurisdiction who, by the laws thereof power to take acknowledgments within said jurisdiction, that the son signing such writing acknowledged before him the exec thereof, or by (2) an affidavit taken before the like officer or by an officer who has power to administer oaths, of a witness to execution.

(b) The fact of the holding of any bond or coupon hereunde any party, and the amount and issue number of any such bond, the date of his holding the same, may be proved by a certificat cuted by any trust company, bank, bankers, or other depos (wherever situated), showing that at the date therein menti such person had on deposit with such trust company, bank, ban or other depository the bonds described in such certificate; pro that such certificate shall be deemed by the Trustee to be satisfa

SEC. 2. Whenever in this or any other article in this indentu is provided that any action be taken by the holders of twenty cent or any other portion of the bonds then outstanding, said a may be taken by the holders of such portion acting as a 532 or by or through such representative or representatives a be by the holders of such portion thereunto duly authori from time to time.

SEC. 3. The Pacific Companies and the Trustee may deem and treat the bearer of any bond or coupons issued hereunder a absolute owner of such bonds or coupons, as the case may be, fo purpose of receiving payment thereof and for all other purp and neither the Railway Company nor the Company nor the Tr shall be affected by any notice to the contrary.

ARTICLE EIGHT.

Redemption of bonds.

The Railway Company, at its option, may redeem all (but not less an all) of the bonds at any time outstanding hereunder, at the nount of the principal thereof, with accrued interest, on March 1, 21, or thereafter on any interest date, provided that notice of inntion so to redeem shall be given by the Railway Company, by blication in at least one newspaper of general circulation published the city of New York and one newspaper of general circulation blished in the city of Paris, France, at least once in each week for four successive weeks prior to the half-yearly interest date on 3 which such redemption is to be made, the first publication to be not less than six months preceding such redemption date.
ch notice shall state that all the bonds then outstanding will be id off at par and accrued interest at the interest date specified in e notice, at the places and in the manner herein provided with spect to the payment of the bonds at their maturity, and that the terest on the bonds shall cease on and after the interest date so fixed r such redemption.

The Railway Company covenants that after the first publication of ch notice of redemption, and at least ten days before the redemp-n date, it will deposit with the French banks, or either of them, r distribution and payment to the holders of bonds and coupons on e redemption date at the places where the bonds are payable, a m in French francs sufficient to pay, as in said bonds and in this denture provided, the principal amount of all of the bonds and atured coupons then outstanding and the coupons maturing on said demption date, together with such additional sum as may be reired to pay the expenses and compensation of the French banks connection with such distribution and payment. Said deposit shall, as between each of the Pacific Companies and the Trus-4 tee, on the one hand, and the holders of said bonds and coupons, on the other hand, be deemed at such redemption date a pay-nt of such bonds.

Notice of election to redeem having been given as aforesaid, the nds shall become due and payable on the interest date designated r redemption.

If said bonds, with accrued interest to such date, shall be duly id, or if provision for the payment thereof shall be made by de-sit with the French banks, as hereinbefore provided, interest on e bonds shall cease on such redemption date, and all coupons turing after such date shall be null and void. The bonds presented for payment must bear the coupons maturing after the redem date.

On delivery to the Trustee on or before the time fixed for red tion, of proof by affidavit to the satisfaction of the Trustee that tice of redemption has been given by publication in the manner this article provided, and of proof by certificate or certificates executed and acknowledged by the French banks, or either of th before the ambassador of the United States of America to Franc the consul general or vice consul general of the United States France, or of other proof satisfactory to the Trustee, that dep of the cash for the purposes of redemption has been mad 535 in this article provided, and on payment to the Trustee of its costs and expenses, including reasonable compensation the Trustee, its agents, attorneys, and counsel, and of all liabili and advances made or incurred by it, the Trustee shall cancel satisfy this indenture and shall assign, or cause to be assigned, shall deliver to the Company, its successors or assigns, all mon stocks, bonds, and other securities held by the Trustee hereunder.

ARTICLE NINE.

The Trustee.

The Trustee, for itself and its successors, hereby accepts the tr and assumes the duties herein created and imposed upon it, but upon the following terms and conditions, to wit:

SECTION 1. The Trustee shall be protected in acting upon notice, request, consent, certificate, bond, or other paper or docum believed by it to be genuine and to have been signed by the pro party; it may select and employ in and about the execution of trust suitable agents and attorneys, whose reasonable compensa shall be paid to the Trustee by the Railway Company. Save for gross negligence or willful default, it shall not be liable 536 any loss or damage, and it shall be under no obligation or to perform any act hereunder or defend any suit in res hereof, unless reasonably indemnified as herein provided. Trustee may assume that there has been no default under indenture unless and until it shall have been specifically noti thereof in writing by the holders of not less than one per cent amount of the bonds then outstanding hereunder. Excepting herein expressly otherwise provided, the Trustee shall not be bo to recognize any person as a bondholder unless or until his bonds submitted to the Trustee for inspection, if required, and his satisfactorily established, if disputed. The recitals of facts in indenture and in said bonds contained shall be taken as state

y the Pacific Companies, or one of them, and shall not be construed s made by the Trustee, nor does the Trustee make any representa-on as to the validity of this indenture or of the bonds issued here-nder and it shall not incur any responsibility in respect of the remises. It shall not be concerned with or accountable for the use f any of the bonds issued hereunder or for the application of the roceeds thereof; and it shall not be answerable for the default or misconduct of any agent or attorney appointed by it 7 in pursuance hereof, if such agent or attorney shall have been selected with reasonable care, nor for anything whatever in nnection with this trust, except for gross negligence or willful efault.

The Trustee shall be entitled to reasonable compensation for all rvices rendered by it in the execution of the trusts hereby created, nd shall have a first lien upon the property covered by this in-nture and the proceeds thereof for such compensation and for its asonable expenses, liabilities, and counsel fees in such execution.

SEC. 2. The Trustee, or any successor hereafter appointed, may sign by giving written notice of such resignation to the Pacific ompanies and by publication of such notice at least once in each eek for six successive weeks in a daily newspaper published in the y of New York, and for a like number of times in a daily news-per published in the city of Paris, France; and upon the assign-nt, transfer, and delivery of the property by it then held in trust reunder to its successor in the trust (as in sections 4 and 5 of this ticle provided) shall be discharged of the trusts hereby created.

SEC. 3. The Trustee, or any successor, or any trustee 8 hereafter appointed, may be removed at any time by an instrument in writing signed by the holders of not less than ree-fourths in amount of the bonds issued hereunder and then tstanding and by notice thereof to the Pacific Companies.

SEC. 4. In case at any time the Trustee, or any Trustee hereafter pointed, shall resign or shall be removed or otherwise shall become capable of acting, a successor may be appointed in the manner llowing:

The Company shall by resolution of its board of directors appoint new Trustee, which shall be a trust company of the city of New rk in good standing, having a capital and surplus aggregating least two million dollars, if there be such trust company willing d able to accept the trusts upon customary terms, which Trustee ll be subject to the approval of the French banks; and in case disapproval by the French banks of the new Trustee so appointed r of their failure to act), within twenty days after request by the mpany for such approval, then the appointment of the new Trustee hereunder shall be made by a judge of the United States C cuit Court for the Second Circuit, upon reasonable notice 539 the French banks, who shall have full right to be heard there before said judge. The Company shall publish notice of such appointment of a new Trustee once in each week for six

554 DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT NO. 30, APRIL 15, 1915.

(Settlement agreement between the United States and the Cen Pacific Railroad Company, being an extract from pages 378
3804, Volume VIII, Union Pacific merger suit record.)

Agreement made and entered into the first day of February, 1 by and between the United States of America, acting by Honora Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury; Honorable Cornelius
Bliss, Secretary of the Interior; and Honorable John W. Grig
Attorney General, appointed by act of Congress approved July 1898, a commission with full power to settle the indebtedness to United States growing out of the issue of bonds in aid of the c struction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific bond-aided r roads, of the first part; the Central Pacific Railroad Company corporation created, organized, and existing under the laws of te of California and of the United States of America, of the nd part, and Messrs. Speyer & Company, bankers, of the city of v York, of the third part.

Whereas the Central Pacific Railroad Company, as now existing, was formed by the successive consolidations hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:

a) Consolidation of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of ifornia and the Western Pacific Railroad Company into a coration named the Central Pacific Railroad Company, under articles ssociation and consolidation dated June 22, 1870.

b) Consolidation of the last-mentioned Central Pacific Railroad npany, the California and Oregon Railroad Company, the San ncisco, Oakland and Alameda Railroad Company, and the San quin Valley Railroad Company into a corporation named the tral Pacific Railroad Company, under articles of association and solidation dated August 20, 1870.

nd whereas the said Central Pacific Railroad Company, party the second part hereto, is the owner of the following lines of road with their appurtenances, which are known as and called bond-aided lines, viz:

. The line of railroad (about 737.50/100 miles in length) from oint about five miles west of Ogden to Sacramento, to aid in the struction of which bonds were from time to time issued by the ited States to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California to the amount in the aggregate of twenty-five million eight hundred and eighty-five thousand one hundred and twenty dollars ($25,885,120) under and in pursuance of the visions of the act of Congress of the United States, entitled "An to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Governnt the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," roved July 1, 1862, the act to amend the last mentioned act, apved July 2, 1864, and the act to amend the above-mentioned acts, roved March 3, 1865.

. The line of railroad (about 123.14/100 miles in length) from ramento to San Jose, to aid in the construction of which bonds e from time to time issued by the United States to the Western ific Railroad Company to the amount in the aggregate of one lion nine hundred and seventy thousand five hundred and sixty lars ($1,970,560) under and in pursuance of the provisions of the e acts of Congress under which bonds were issued to the Central ific Railroad Company of California, as above stated.

nd whereas the said Central Pacific Railroad Company is also the ner of the following lines of railroad in the State of California, with their appurtenances, which are known as and called the bond-aided lines, viz:

557 C. The line of railroad (about 24.31/100 miles in le from Oakland to Niles.

D. The line of railroad (about 146.8/100 miles in length)
Lathrop to Goshen.

E. The line of railroad (about 296.50/100 miles in length)
Roseville to the Oregon boundary.

And whereas the said bond-aided lines of railroad are covere the following mortgages and liens, viz:

First. The bond-aided line from Sacramento to the eastern dary of California by the first mortgage of the Central Pacific road Company of California to D. O. Mills and William E. Ba trustees, dated July 25, 1865, under which bonds are now outsta to the amount at their face value of six million three hundred seventy-eight thousand dollars ($6,378,000), of which bonds to amount of three million and seven thousand dollars ($3,007,000) now overdue, and bonds to the amount of three million three dred and seventy-one thousand dollars ($3,371,000) will matur cember 1, 1899.

Second. The bond-aided line from the eastern boundary of C fornia to a point about five miles west of Ogden by first mortgage of the Central Pacific Railroad Compan 558 California to D. O. Mills and William E. Barron, tru dated January 1, 1867, under which bonds are now outsta to the amount at their face value of nineteen million five hu and three thousand dollars ($19,503,000), of which bonds to amount of eighty thousand dollars ($80,000) are now overdue bonds to the amount of three million nine hundred and eightythousand dollars ($3,988,000) will mature June 1, 1900, and to the amount of fifteen million four hundred and thirty-five sand dollars ($15,435,000) will mature June 1, 1901.

Third. The bond-aided line from Sacramento to San Jose by first mortgage of the Western Pacific Railroad Company to D Mills and William E. Barron, trustees, dated October 28, 186 der which bonds are now outstanding to the amount at their value of one million nine hundred and seventy thousand do ($1,970,000), and will mature July 1, 1899.

Fourth. The bond-aided line from a point about five miles of Ogden to Sacramento by the statutory lien in favor of the U States under the acts of Congress approved July 1, 1862, Ju 1864, and March 3, 1865, above mentioned, securing the 559 ance of the indebtedness to the United States (amountin of the date of this agreement to the sum of $53,389,03

ulting from the issue of bonds to the Central Pacific Railroad mpany of California, as aforesaid, to aid in the construction of l bond-aided line, such statutory lien being by said acts subordie to the liens of the first mortgages of the Central Pacific Raild Company of California, described in the preceding subdivins first and second of this recital.

Fifth. The bond-aided line from Sacramento to San Jose by the utory lien in favor of the United States under the acts of Conss approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and March 3, 1865, above ntioned, securing the balance of the indebtedness to the United tes (amounting as of the date of this agreement to the sum of 423,662.74), resulting from the issue of bonds to the Western ific Railroad Company, as aforesaid, to aid in the construction aid bond-aided line, such statutory lien being by said act subordie to the lien of the first mortgage of the Western Pacific Raild Company described in the preceding subdivision third of this ital.

And whereas the said nonbond-aided lines of railroad are covered by the following mortgages and liens, viz:

First. The nonbond-aided line from Oakland to Niles by first mortgage from the Western Pacific Railroad Company to O. Mills and William E. Barron, trustees, dated October 28, 1869, der which bonds are now outstanding to the amount at their face ue of seven hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars ($765,000) l will mature July 1, 1899.

Second. The nonbond-aided line from Lathrop to Goshen by first rtgage from the Central Pacific Railroad Company to D. O. Mills l W. C. Ralston, trustees, dated October 1, 1870, under which nds are now outstanding to the amount at their face value of six llion and eighty thousand dollars ($6,080,000) and will mature tober 1, 1900.

Third. The nonbond-aided line from Roseville to the Oregon undary by first mortgage from the California and Oregon Raild Company to David S. Dodge and Eugene Kelly, trustees, dated nuary 1, 1868, and the supplemental mortgage from the Central cific Railroad Company as successor of the California and Oregon ilroad Company (by consolidation as aforesaid) to Eugene Kelly d Philo C. Calhoun, trustees, dated January 1, 1872, under which t-mentioned mortgages bonds are now outstanding to the amount at their face value of ten million three hundred and forty thou- sand dollars ($10,340,000), the date of maturity of such last- mentioned bonds having been extended to January 1, 1918, by tue of extension agreements dated September 27, 1887, and Sepnber 25, 1891, respectively;

And whereas all the said bond-aided and nonbond-aided above referred to are further covered by mortgage from the C Pacific Railroad Company to the Metropolitan Trust Compa the city of New York, trustee, dated April 1, 1889, under which are now outstanding fifty-year five per cent bonds of said C Pacific Railroad Company maturing April 1, 1939, to the amo their face value of twelve million two hundred and eighty-three sand dollars ($12,283,000), of which bonds to the amont at their value of $2,038,000 are now held by the Metropolitan Trust C pany of the city of New York as security for the outstanding bonds hereinafter mentioned;

And whereas it is claimed by the United States, but not con by the other parties hereto, that under and by virtue of the p sions of an act entitled "An act to alter and amend the act en
'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to sec 562 the Government the use of the same for postal, military, other purposes,' approved July first, eighteen hundred sixty-two," and also to alter and amend the act of Congress proved July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, in amend of said first-named act, approved May 7, 1878, the balances of in edness to the United States hereinbefore referred to, amounting the aggregate as of the date of this agreement to the sum $58,812,715.48, are also secured by lien declared in said last-ment act upon all the railroad lines above mentioned whether aid nonaided;

And whereas the lands granted to the Central Pacific Rail Company of California, by the act of Congress of July 1, 1862, a mentioned, and the lands granted to the California and O Railroad Company by act of Congress approved July 25, 1866, the exceptions and reservations mentioned in the mortgage inafter mentioned, were mortgaged by the Central Pacific Rail Company to Charles Crocker and Silas W. Sanderson, by mort dated October 1, 1870, to secure an issue of land bonds of the tral Pacific Railroad Company which matured October 1, 18 part of which were by extension agreement dated September 1890, extended to October 1, 1900, and of which there 563 now outstanding bonds to the amount at their face valu $2,134,000;

And whereas by act of Congress entitled "An act making ap priations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the year ending June 30th, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, and prior years and for other purposes," approved July 7, 1898, it among other things provided as follows, viz: "That the Secr

the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney neral, and their successors in office, be, and they are hereby, ap- nted a commission with full power to settle the indebtedness to Government growing out of the issue of bonds in aid of the con- uction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific bond-aided roads, upon such terms and in such manner as may be agreed n by them, or by a majority of them, and the owners of said rail- ds: Provided, That any and all settlements thus made shall be mitted in writing to the President for his approval or disap- val, and unless approved by him shall not be binding.

That said commission shall not agree to accept a less sum in lement of the amount due the United States than the full amount of the principal and interest and all amounts necessary to reimburse the United States for moneys paid for interest or otherwise: And also provided, That said com- sion are hereby empowered to grant such time or times of pay- nt by installment, and at such rates of interest, to be not less n three per centum per annum, payable semiannually, and with h security as to said commission may seem expedient: Provided, ever, That in any settlement that may be made the final payment full discharge of said indebtedness shall not be postponed to ed ten years, and the whole amount, principal and interest, ll be paid in equal semiannual installments within the period so ited, and in any settlement made it shall be provided that if de- lt shall be made in any payment of either principal or interest ny part thereof then the whole sum and all installments, prin- l and interest, shall immediately become due and payable, not- hstanding any other stipulation of said settlement: Provided ther, That unless the settlement herein authorized be perfected hin one year after the passage of this act, the President of the ited States shall at once proceed to foreclose all liens now held the United States against said railroad companies and to collect the indebtedness herein sought to be settled, and nothing in this act contained shall be held to waive or release any right, lien, or cause of action already held by the United States.

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treas- not otherwise appropriated, the sum of twenty thousand dol- to defray the expenses of said commission in making the said lement."

nd whereas it has been agreed by and between the commission ointed by said act and the owners of the railroads above described the indebtedness to the United States growing out of the issue onds in aid of the construction of the Central Pacific and West- Pacific bond-aided railroads shall be settled upon the terms and in the manner hereinafter agreed to, subject to the approval of President of the United States, as provided in said last-mentioned act;

And whereas Messrs. Speyer & Company from time to time negotiated the sale of large amounts of the bonds secured by mortgages upon the railroads of the Central Pacific Railroad Company above mentioned and are desirous of cooperating in a settlement of matters relating to or affecting the indebtedness of said company and the adjustment of its affairs;

And whereas of the first mortgage bonds of the Central 566 Pacific Railroad Company of California secured upon the bond-aided lines above mentioned, and amounting in the aggregate at their face value to twenty-five million eight hundred and eighty-one thousand dollars ($25,881,000), there have been already deposited and still remain on deposit subject to the order of Messrs. Speyer & Company bonds to the amount at their face value of twenty-five million six hundred and thirteen thousand dollars ($25,613,000) under a bondholders' agreement, dated August 14, 1897, a copy whereof has been furnished to the party of the first part hereto;

And whereas of the Central Pacific Railroad Company's fifty-year five per cent bonds, issued under the mortgage to the Metropolitan Trust Company of the city of New York, dated April 1, 1889, above mentioned, amounting in the aggregate (after deducting said bonds so as aforesaid held as security for the said land bonds) to the sum of ten million two hundred and forty-five thousand dollars ($10,245,000), there have been deposited and still remain on deposit subject to the order of Messrs. Speyer & Company bonds to the amount at their face value, of eight million six hundred and eighty-six thousand dollars ($8,686,000) under a bondholders' agreement 567 dated October 1, 1897, a copy whereof has been furnished to the party of the first part hereto;

And whereas the owners of the bonds deposited under each of the aforesaid agreements of August 14, 1897, and October 1, 1897, have thereby authorized Messrs. Speyer & Company, in their behalf, to negotiate with any other committees or representatives of holders of other securities of said Railroad Company, or with the Government of the United States, or otherwise, for participation in the deposit of the deposited bonds in any plan of readjustment or reorganization or otherwise;

And whereas there have been deposited with committees consisting of F. G. Banbury, M. P., John B. Akroyd, Lord Alwyne Compton, M. P., Daniel Marks, and Joseph Price, in London, and August Belmont, Hon. John G. Carlisle, and George Coppell, in New York, under agreements, copies of which have been furnished to the

the first part, certificates of the capital stock of the Central Pacific ilroad Company to the amount, at their face value, of at least rty-eight million four hundred and one thousand eight hundred llars ($38,401,800) out of a total outstanding capital stock of said company, amounting, at its par value, to sixty-seven million 8 two hundred and seventy-five thousand five hundred dollars ($67,275,500), and the said committees have authorized and uested the said Speyer & Company to negotiate on their behalf th the commission appointed by the act of Congress of July 7, 98, above referred to, the basis of a settlement under and in pur- ance of the said act of the indebtedness to the United States grow- out of the issue of bonds in aid of the construction of said Cen- l Pacific and Western Pacific bond-aided railroads above men- ned;

Now, therefore, this agreement witnesseth, that in consideration of premises the parties hereto have undertaken, covenanted, and reed, and do hereby undertake, covenant, and agree to and with h other as follows, that is to say:

That the indebtedness to the United States growing out of the ue of bonds in aid of the construction of the Central Pacific and stern Pacific bond-aided railroads shall be, and it hereby is, set- d upon the terms and in the manner following, that is to say:

First.—The amount due the United States, being the full amount of the principal and interest, and all amounts necessary to reim- burse the United States for moneys paid for interest or other- wise, is hereby found and agreed to be, on the day of the date this agreement, the sum of fifty-eight million eight hundred and lve thousand seven hundred and fifteen dollars and forty-eight ts ($58,812,715.48).

Second.—Within thirty days after this settlement shall become ding, by the submission thereof in writing to the President, and approval thereof, the Central Pacific Railroad Company shall iver to the Treasurer of the United States its twenty promissory es, bearing even date herewith, payable respectively on or before expiration of each successive six months for ten years, counting m the date of this agreement, each note being for one-twentieth the foregoing sum of $58,812,715.48, and bearing interest at the e of three per cent per annum, payable semiannually.

Provided, however, that if default shall be made in any payment either principal or interest of any of said notes or any part thereof, n all of said notes then outstanding, principal and interest, shall mediately become due and payable, nothwithstanding any other pulation of this agreement of settlement.

570 Each of the said notes shall be in the following form, $2,940,635.78.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., February 1, 19

On or before ———— the Central Pacific Railroad Com will pay to the order of the United States of America two mil nine hundred and forty thousand six hundred and thirty-five 78 dollars, with interest meantime at the rate of three per cent per num, payable semiannually, for value received.

This is one of a series of twenty notes given by said railroad c pany to the United States of America, each for the same princi sum and bearing interest at the same rate but maturing at diffe dates, that is to say, on or before the expiration of each succes six months for ten years counting from the date hereof. If defa shall be made in any payment of either principal or interest of of said notes or any part thereof, then all of said notes then standing, principal and interest, shall immediately become due payable.

571 said notes and of the indebtedness represented thereby, s be secured by the pledge of $58,820,000, face value, first funding mortgage four per cent gold bonds issued by the Cen Pacific Railroad Company, or its successor company having title the aforesaid railroads, such bonds to be part of an issue hereinaf described not exceeding $100,000,000 in all, one-twentieth part such pledged bonds to be held as security for each of said notes.

Fourth.—The said refunding bonds so to be pledged as secu for the payment of the said notes and interest shall be delivered the Treasurer of the United States within a reasonable time after settlement becomes binding, for obtaining the deposit of securi the assent of security owners, and the carrying out of such plan reorganization or readjustment as may be necessary to enable Central Pacific Railroad Company, or its successor company, to i said refunding bonds and make the mortgage to secure the s a valid lien upon the railroads aforesaid in accordance with requirements herein expressed. A period of ten months from delivery of said notes is hereby declared to be prima facie

572 reasonable time, but the Central Pacific Railroad Comp agrees to use its best efforts to perfect such mortgage deliver such bonds before the expiration of that time; and, on other hand, should such reorganization or readjustment be delay by the pendency of judicial proceedings for the purpose of enabli the company which is to make the new mortgage to execute deliver refunding bonds secured as provided herein or be delayed adverse litigation, such period is to be correspondingly extend provided, however, that such period shall not be extended for use whatever for more than three years from the date of this agreement, except with the written approval of the President of the United States.

If default shall be made in the delivery of the said bonds so to be pledged within the period hereinabove prescribed for such delivery thereof, including any extension which there may have been under the foregoing provisions, then the whole amount of the said notes then outstanding, principal and interest, shall immediately become due and payable.

The said first refunding mortgage four per cent gold bonds referred to in article third and this article of this agreement are to run for at least forty-five years, and to bear interest at the rate of four per cent per annum, payable semianually, and are to be payable, principal and interest, in gold coin of the United States, and are to be a part of an issue not exceeding one hundred million dollars face value secured by mortgage upon all the railroads, equipment, and terminals now owned by the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Such mortgage shall be the first lien upon the said railroads, equipment, and terminals, or shall be secured by deposit as collateral security therefor of at least ninety per cent of the now outstanding first mortgage bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and Western Pacific Railroad Company referred to in paragraphs first, second, and third in the recitals to this agreement describing the mortgages and liens on bond-aided lines, and of at least seventy-five per cent of the aggregate of all now outstanding bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and of the now outstanding bonds of the divisional companies by the consolidation whereof it was formed, including such first mortgage bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and Western Pacific Railroad Company. In making such computation as to the amount of deposited bonds, it is agreed that the $2,038,000 fifty-year five per cent bonds held as security for the outstanding land bonds, as above stated, shall not be counted as outstanding bonds. If any of the mortgages now securing any of the outstanding bonds aforesaid (other than the mortgage securing the land bonds, dated October 1, 1870, above referred to) shall be satisfied and discharged, such satisfaction and discharge thereof shall be deemed to be the equivalent of the deposit of all outstanding bonds now secured thereby as security for the said refunding bonds. The satisfaction and discharge of the said mortgage securing the land bonds, dated October 1, 1870, shall be deemed to be the equivalent of the deposit as security for said refunding bonds of all bonds now secured by that mortgage; provided that the $2,038,000 fifty-year five per cent bonds held as security for such land bonds shall either be cancelled or deposited as security for such refunding bonds.

The mortgage securing such refunding bonds shall be prior in to any lease of the railroads of said Central Pacific Railroad C pany or their appurtenances or any portion thereof, and shall b the form agreed upon by the parties hereto and now identified by signature of the Attorney General of the United States, unless form thereof should be hereafter modified with the con 574 of the Attorney General of the United States and the p of the second part, or its successor company, and the party the third part hereto.

Upon the satisfaction of record of any existing mortgage securities or funds held in any sinking fund created or existing or under any such mortgage shall be surrendered to the Railr Company or its successor company.

The lands granted to the Central Pacific Railroad Company California and to the California and Oregon Railroad Company above stated are not to be covered by the mortgage securing s refunding bonds. Until the delivery to the Treasurer of the Un States of the refunding bonds to be pledged to it under article th hereof, secured as aforesaid, all rights of the United States in resp to said granted lands shall remain in full force and effect, but sh not be enforced unless the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or successor company, shall make default under this agreement; a upon such delivery of said refunding bonds secured as aforesaid rights, interest and claims of the United States in, to, and in resp to such lands shall cease and determine.

From time to time, as the principal or any part of 576 principal of said notes shall be paid, the United States other holders of said notes shall return to said Railroad C pany or its successors an equal amount, at their face value, of the refunding bonds with all unmatured coupons appertaining there and, as interest shall be paid upon said notes, the United States other holders of said notes shall detach and return to said Railr Company or its successors the coupons appertaining to said bo representing interest thereon to the date to which interest shall h been paid upon said notes, which coupons shall thereupon be for with canceled.

Fifth.—Until the refunding bonds hereinbefore provided f secured as aforesaid, shall have been delivered to the Treasurer of United States as security for the said notes, the lien in favor of t United States, reserved in the acts of Congress above mentioned secure the repayment to the United States of the above-mentio indebtedness, as such lien now exists, shall remain in full force a effect to the extent of such indebtedness as security for the no representing such indebtedness; and nothing herein contained sh be deemed to prevent the United States from intervening for protection of its said lien in any legal proceedings brought to foreclose any lien on said railroads or any part thereof or herwise.

When the Central Pacific Railroad Company or its successor company shall have delivered to the Treasurer of the United States said funding bonds secured as aforesaid, then the lien in favor of the nited States above referred to as then existing shall immediately st in, and it is hereby, upon the happening of that event, transrred to, the Trustee of the mortgage securing such refunding bonds security for the entire issue of such bonds.

Sixth.—Until the notes to be given by the Central Pacific Railroad mpany under article second of this agreement shall have been paid full, principal and interest, all amounts due to the Central Pacific ilroad Company or its successor company from the United States bsequent to the date of this agreement in respect of services to the nited States upon the bond-aided lines from a point about five miles st of Ogden to Sacramento and from Sacramento to San Jose, ove referred to, shall, as audited and allowed, be applied by the United States pro rata on account of the amounts remaining unpaid on such of said notes as shall not have been purchased by Messrs. Speyer & Co. hereunder, such application being st made to the payment of accrued interest thereon and thereafter account of the principal thereof.

Seventh.—Messrs. Speyer & Company, within one month after the livery to the United States of the notes referred to in article second reof, will, against delivery to them of the four earliest maturing tes endorsed to their order by the Secretary of the Treasury on half of the United States without recourse to it, pay to the United ates the face value of such notes, viz: Eleven million seven hun-ed and sixty-two thousand five hundred and forty-three dollars d twelve cents ($11,762,543.12), with accrued interest thereon to te of payment. From and after the time when such payment all have been made by Messrs. Speyer & Company they shall, until delivery of such refunding bonds, be entitled to share pro rata th the United States in the lien and all proceeds of the lien in vor of the United States to secure the indebtedness above referred Upon delivery of the said refunding bonds Messrs. Speyer & Company shall be entitled to receive such bonds to the amount at their face value of the principal of said notes then remaining unpaid which are then held by said Speyer & Company.

Within ten days after the maturity of each of said notes held by essrs. Speyer & Company the said Speyer & Company shall notify e Secretary of the Treasury of the United States whether such tured note and the matured interest on all the notes held by them ve been paid to them or not.

Until the refunding bonds hereinbefore provided for secure aforesaid shall have been delivered to the Treasurer of the U States as security for the said notes, all rights of the United S in or to or in respect of the said lien, and in or to or in respect o lands granted as aforesaid, shall remain unaffected by the tra of the said notes to Speyer & Company, and all right and title o United States in the said lien, and in respect of the said lands, s be deemed to continue in the United States as fully as if the notes remained in its possession and ownership, save only that said right and title shall be deemed to be held by the United S for the pro rata benefit of itself and said Speyer & Company, the United States may bring and maintain any and all actions, s and proceedings which it might have brought or maintai 580 and may do any and all acts and things which it might h done had all the said notes remained in its possession ownership, provided that all recoveries, benefits, and advantages rived or obtained through or by means of such actions, suits, ceedings, and acts for the enforcement of such lien and rights s inure to the pro rata benefit of the United States and said Speyer Company. In case of any default in payment of the principa interest of any of said notes, the United States will thereupon p ceed for the enforcement of the said lien.

In witness whereof, this agreement has been executed on behalf the United States of America by Honorable Lyman J. Gage, Se tary of the Treasury, Honorable Cornelius N. Bliss, Secretary of Interior, and Honorable John W. Griggs, Attorney General, pointed by the act of Congress a commission as hereabove stated; the Central Pacific Railroad Company by its president and under corporate seal attested by its secretary; and by Messrs. Speyer Company under their hands the day and year first above writ Executed in triplicate.

[Seal United States Senate.] JAMES M. BAKER,
Secretary of the Senate of the United State

S. 2894.

In the Senate of the United States.

April 17, 1896.

. Gear, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, reported the following bill, which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent:

BILL To amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a ailroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and o secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and ther purposes," approved July first, eighteen hundred and sixty-two; also o amend an act approved July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and lso an act approved May seventh, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, both n amendment of said first-mentioned act and other acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and to provide for the settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain railroads, and to secure the payment of all indebtedness to the United tates of certain companies therein mentioned.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the nited States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ertain the amounts of the respective indebtedness of the Union cific Railroad Company and the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, which the subsidy bonds of the United States were advanced in of the construction of the Pacific railroads and branches as of first day of January, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, upon same principle as if the whole sum of said bonds and interest id and to be paid by the United States thereon, and not thereto- re repaid by credits on account thereof, were to be paid to the ited States in cash on said day; and the said sum shall be computed l ascertained as follows:

First. To the whole of the principal of said subsidy bonds at- butable to each of said companies shall be added the interest paid to be paid by the United States upon the same, so as to ascertain the total amounts that would have been due the United States for principal and interest paid on the bonds issued to each of said companies at their maturity if no payments or reimburse- nts had been made thereon by the companies.

Second. From said amounts so ascertained shall be deducted any yments or reimbursements made by or on behalf of either of said mpanies upon their indebtedness at any time before the first day of January, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, as shall appear in bond and interest accounts of the said companies, respectively, the United States.

Third. Compute the present worths of the amounts so found of the first day of January, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, the basis that money is worth two per centum per annum dur
the period between the date of average maturity of the said bo and the first day of January, eighteen hundred and ninety-se
From the sums so ascertained there shall be deducted the amo in the sinking fund applicable to the said companies, respectiv computing the value of any bonds in the said sinking fund at t market value at the time of such computation, as estimated by Secretary of the Treasury; and said sinking fund shall thereupo applied as a payment upon the debt of such company to the Un States. The aggregate amounts so arrived at shall 592 deemed the sums that would be required to be paid on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, said companies for the purpose of completely discharging their e debts to the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Union Pacific Railway Company, successor
the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Kansas Pacific R way Company, be, and it is hereby, authorized to make, issue, deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is hereby author and directed to receive the same, its certain indenture of mortg which shall bear date the first day of January, eighteen hund and ninety-seven, covering and embracing all the lines of railw rights of way, terminals, terminal properties, bridges, rolling st lines of telegraph, and all the then unsold land grant and o lands, and all the then outstanding land and town lot contracts, all property appurtenant thereto embraced in and covered by e ing mortgages of the Union Pacific Railway Company, including its unsubsidized as well as subsidized lines of railway and branches and spurs connected therewith now owned by the U Pacific Railway Company, the mail lines whereof extend from C cil Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, to a point about five m 593 west of Ogden, in the State of Utah, and from Kansas C in the State of Missouri, to Denver, in the State of Colora and from Denver to Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, and f Leavenworth to Lawrence, in the State of Kansas, together with appurtenances thereto belonging, and all rights, franchises and pr leges owned by the Union Pacific Railway Company in connec therewith or with the operation thereof. Said mortgage shall c stitute a lien upon said properties, junior and subject only to new first mortgage hereinafter provided for, and shall cover embrace all the lines of railway, property, franchises, and ri

braced in and covered by the said first mortgage. A proper and mplete description and inventory of all the property affected by ch mortgage shall be prepared under the direction of the Secretary the Treasury, which, when approved by him, shall be filed in his ice; and such mortgage on the property therein described shall be ld as security for the payment of the principal and interest of the nds issued thereunder and authorized by this act; but this section such mortgage shall not be construed to prevent the said company om using or disposing of any of its property or assets, in the ordinary, proper, and lawful course of its current business, in good faith and for valuable consideration, and said company may sell and convey for valuable consideration any lands included its land grant and apply the proceeds thereof as required by the ovisions of the new first mortgage hereinafter provided for: Provided, That every such disposition of any stocks, bonds, securities, other property owned by said company, whether by sale, pledge, otherwise, shall be reported to the Secretary of the Treasury within irty days after such disposition has been made, and that the bonds, cks, obligations, or other property acquired, with the proceeds of e property so disposed of, shall, except as hereinbefore provided, like manner and with the same power to dispose of the same, be bject to the lien of the said mortgage, and that true and proper scriptions and lists of the same shall be from time to time prepared d filed with the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 3. That the said Union Pacific Railway Company is hereby thorized to make, execute, and issue, under its mortgage aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States its bonds in an nount equal to the said aggregate amount arrived at as above provided, each of which bonds shall be for the principal sum of one thousand dollars and shall be payable as provided for in this act. Said bonds shall be dated on January first, eighteen ndred and ninety-seven, and shall bear interest at the rate of two r centum per annum, payable semiannually on the first days of ly and January in each year, beginning on the first day of July, ghteen hundred and ninety-seven, and continuing until said bonds all be paid. The said bonds shall at the time of the execution and livery of the said mortgage be delivered to the Secretary of the reasury, and shall be received by and on behalf of the United States provisional payment of said aggregate amounts of indebtedness rived at, as provided in section one of this act.

SEC. 4. That the Union Pacific Railway Company shall execute d deliver its mortgage and bonds to the United States for the debts the Union Pacific Railroad Company and of the Kansas Pacific ilway Company to the United States, and the said bonds shall be mbered consecutively from one to a number which will include the whole amount thereof, and shall be payable in lawful money of United States. Said company shall, on the first day of Januar each year, for a period of ten years, commencing on the day of January, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, pay 596 the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, in a tion to the interest which shall then be due on its said b so to be issued and delivered to him, the sum of three hundred sixty-five thousand dollars per annum; and for ten years commen on the first day of January, nineteen hundred and eight, shall pa the Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to the interest which then be due on its said bonds, the sum of five hundred and fifty t sand dollars per annum; and thereafter, commencing on the firs of January, nineteen hundred and eighteen, said company shall to the Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to the interest w shall then be due on its said bonds, the sum of seven hundred fifty thousand dollars per annum until the whole amount of bonds shall have been fully paid. The payments of principal be applied in payment of the bonds of said company to an amo equal to such payment and in the order of the number of such bo beginning with the highest unpaid number. Each of said bonds spectively, when paid, shall thereupon be canceled and surrend to the company, and no other bonds under said mortgage shal issued by said company in lieu thereof. When the said bonds mortgage securing the same shall be delivered to the Secre 597 of the Treasury, then, in case the lien thereof is subject to the lien securing the new first-mortgage bonds referred t clause one of section five hereof, the lien of the United States upon of the railroad and property embraced in said mortgage and all cl or claim of the United States upon any part of the revenues of property under or by virtue of any existing laws shall cease and termine. When the bonds issued under section three of this act have been paid in full as herein provided, the indebtedness re sented thereby shall be wholly discharged and the Secretary of Treasury shall cancel and discharge the mortgage given to secure same under this act.

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of refunding its mortgage indeb ness upon such terms as it may be able to agree upon with its secu holders and as will enable it to effect the settlement of its indeb ness to the United States as herein provided, the said Union Pa Railway Company is hereby authorized and empowered to issue new mortgage bonds and stock within the limitations defined in section: Provided, however, That out of the use or proceeds of of the new securities hereby authorized to be made and issued otherwise, all existing bonds secured by mortgages upon place where the annual meetings of the stockholders of the U Pacific Railway Company are held, and shall elect officers of new company under the same conditions and requirements a procedure and character of official organization as are prescribe law and the by-laws of the Union Pacific Railway Company, in spect of a meeting of the directors of said last-named company for like purpose.

Said new corporation shall have the power to acquire all or part of the railways and properties of the Union Pacific Rail Company and to provide for the said indebtedness of the said named company to the United States by the issue to the Secreta the Treasury of the United States of bonds of the same char and amount as those herein authorized to be made by the Un Pacific Railway Company, secured by mortgage of the same na extent, and relative lien as that authorized to be made by it in sa two hereof, and shall have and be entitled to enjoy and exercise rig powers, privileges, franchises, and immunities equal in d 602 acter, extent, and duration to those which the Union Pa Railway Company would have had and enjoyed had it cepted and carried out the provisions of this act as herein empow to do, and shall have power to make, issue, negotiate, and deliv bonds, mortgages, and stock corresponding in character and exte the like securities which, in such event, the Union Pacific Rail Company would have been entitled to retain in existence and to m and issue, and in all its relations and duties to the Government an the public and in the regulation and management of its corpo affairs it shall be substituted to and governed by the provisio which would in such event have been applicable to the Union cific Railway Company.

SEC. 7. A BILL To amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July first, eighteen hundred and sixty-two; also to amend an act approved July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and also an act approved May seventh, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act and other acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and to provide for the settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain railroads, and to secure the payment of all indebtedness to the United States of certain companies therein mentioned.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain the amounts of the respective indebtedness of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, to which the subsidy bonds of the United States were advanced in aid of the construction of the Pacific railroads and branches, as of the first day of ~~January~~ July, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, upon the same principle as if the whole sum of said bonds and interest paid and to be paid by the United States thereon, and not theretofore repaid by credits on account thereof, were to be paid to the United States in cash on said and the said sum shall be computed and ascertained as follows:

First. To the whole of the principal of said subsidy bonds utable to each of said companies shall be added the interest or to be paid by the United States upon the same, so as to tain the total amounts that would have been due the United S for principal and interest paid on the bonds issued to each of companies at their maturity if no payments or reimbursements been made thereon by the companies.

Second. From said amounts so ascertained shall be deducted payments or reimbursements made by or on behalf of either said companies upon their indebtedness at any time before first day of ~~January~~ July, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, shall appear in the bond and interest accounts of the 629 companies, respectively, with the United States and amounts heretofore forming part of the sinking fund ap cable to the said companies, which shall have been applied to payment or satisfaction of such subsidy bonds or reimbursement the United States of amounts paid in respect thereof.

Third. Compute the present worths of the amounts so found the first day of ~~January~~ July, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, the basis that money is worth two per centum per annum during period between the date of average maturity of the said bonds and first day of ~~January~~ July, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven. F the sums so ascertained there shall be deducted the amounts in sinking fund applicable to the said companies, respectively, com ing the value of any bonds in the said sinking fund at their ma value at the time of such computation, as estimated by the Secre of the Treasury; and said sinking fund shall thereupon be applie a payment upon the debt of such company to the United States.
aggregate amounts so arrived at shall be deemed the sums that w be required to be paid on the said first day of ~~January~~ July, eigh hundred and ninety-seven, by said companies for the purpo completely discharging their entire debts to the U 630 States.

SEC. 2. That the Union Pacific Railway Company, succe to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Kansas Pacific way Company, be, and it is hereby, authorized to make, issue, deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is hereby author and directed to receive the same, its certain indenture of mort which shall bear date the first day of ~~January~~ July, eighteen dred and ninety-seven, covering and embracing all the lines of way, rights of way, terminals, terminal properties, bridges, ro stock, lines of telegraph, and all the then unsold land grant and nds, and all the then outstanding land and town-lot contracts, and property appurtenant thereto embraced in and covered by existing rtgages of the Union Pacific Railway Company, including all its subsidized as well as subsidized lines of railway and the branches d spurs connected therewith now owned by the Union Pacific Rail-y Company, the main lines whereof extend from Council Bluffs, in e State of Iowa, to a point about five miles west of Ogden, in the ate of Utah, and from Kansas City, in the State of Missouri, to nver, in the State of Colorado, and from Denver to Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, and from Leavenworth to Lawrence, in the State of Kansas, together with all appurtenances thereto belonging, and all rights, franchises, and privileges ned by the Union Pacific Railway Company in connection there-th or with the operation thereof. Said mortgage shall constitute a n upon said properties junior and subject only to the new first rtgage hereinafter provided for, and shall cover and embrace all e lines of railway, property, franchises, and rights embraced in and vered by the said first mortgage. A proper and complete descrip-n and inventory of all the property affected by such mortgage shall prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, ich, when approved by him, shall be filed in his office; and such rtgage on the property therein described shall be held as security r the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds issued reunder and authorized by this act; but this section or such mort-ge shall not be construed to prevent the said company from using disposing of any of its property or assets, in the ordinary, proper, l lawful course of its current business, in good faith and for valule consideration, and said company may sell and convey, for valule consideration, any lands included in its land grant and apply the proceeds thereof as required by the provisions of the new first mortgage hereinafter provided for: Provided, That every such disposition of any stocks, bonds, securities, or other prop-y owned by said company, whether by sale, pledge, or otherwise, ll be reported to the Secretary of the Treasury within thirty days er such disposition has been made, and that the bonds, stocks, ob-ations, or other property acquired, with the proceeds of the prop-y so disposed of, shall, except as hereinbefore provided, in like nner and with the same power to dispose of the same, be subject to e lien of the said mortgage, and that true and proper descriptions l lists of the same shall be from time to time prepared and filed h the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 3. That the said Union Pacific Railway Company is hereby horized to make, execute, and issue, under its mortgage afored, to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, its bonds n amount equal to the said aggregate amount arrived at as above provided, each of which bonds shall be for the principal sum o thousand dollars, and shall be payable as provided for in this Said bonds shall be dated on ~~January~~ July first, eighteen hun and ninety-seven, and shall bear interest at the rate of two 633 centum per annum, payable semiannually on the first day

July and January in each year, beginning on the first da ~~July, eighteen hundred and ninety seven,~~ January, eighteen hun and ninety-eight, and continuing until said bonds shall be paid.
said bonds shall at the time of the execution and delivery of the mortgage be delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury, and shal received by and on behalf of the United States as provisional ment of said aggregate amounts of indebtedness arrived at, as vided in section one of this act.

SEC. 4. That the Union Pacific Railway Company shall exe and deliver its mortgage and bonds to the United States for debts of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and of the Kansas cific Railway Company to the United States, and the said bo shall be numbered consecutively from one to a number which include the whole amount thereof, and shall be payable in law money of the United States. Said company shall, on the first of ~~January~~ July of each year, for a period of ten years, commen on the first day of ~~January~~ July, eighteen hundred and nin eight, pay to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United State addition to the interest which shall then be due on its mortgage aforesaid its bonds in an amount equal to the aggregate amount arrived at as above provided, each of which bonds shall be for the principal sum of one thousand dollars and shall be payable as provided in this act. Said bonds shall bear interest at the rate of two per centum per annum, payable semiannually on the first days of January and July in each year, beginning with the first day of ~~July, eighteen hundred and ninety seven~~ January, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, and continuing until said bonds shall be paid. The said bonds shall, at the time of execution and delivery of the said mortgage, be delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be received by and on behalf of the United States as provisional payment of said aggregate amounts arrived at as provided in section seven of this act, and the corporate charter of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and its franchises derived from the United States shall continue until the bonds authorized to be issued under this act shall have been fully paid.

SEC. 11. That the Central Pacific Railroad Company shall execute and deliver its mortgage and bonds to the United States to pay 647 the debts of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the Western Pacific Railroad Company to the United States, and the said bonds shall be numbered consecutively from one to a number which will include the whole amount thereof and shall be payable in lawful money of the United States. Said company shall, on the first day of ~~January~~ July of each year, for the period of ten years commencing on the first day of ~~January~~ July, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, pay to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, in addition to the interest which shall then be due on its indebtedness, the sum of three hundred and sixty thousand dollars of principal per annum, and for ten years commencing on the first day of ~~January~~ July, nineteen hundred and eight, said company shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to the interest which shall then be due on its indebtedness, the sum of five hundred and fifty thousand dollars of principal per annum, and thereafter, commencing on the first day of ~~January~~ July, nineteen hundred and eighteen, said company shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to the interest which shall then be due on its indebtedness, the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars of principal per annum until the whole amount of 648 bonds shall have been fully paid. The said payments of principal shall be applied in payment of the bonds of said company to an amount equal to such payment and in the order of the numbers of such bonds, beginning with the highest unpaid number. Bonds of said bonds, respectively, when paid, shall thereupon be canceled and surrendered to the company, and no other bonds under said re shall be issued by said company in lieu thereof. When such ds shall have been paid in full as herein provided, the indebted-s of the said companies hereinbefore referred to shall be wholly charged, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall cancel and disrge the mortgage given to secure the same under this act.

EC. 12. That the statutory lien created and subsisting under and virtue of the act of Congress approved July first, eighteen hund and sixty-two, and the act of July second, eighteen hundred sixty-four, and the act of May seventh, eighteen hundred and enty-eight, to secure the payment of said subsidy bonds issued to Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the Western ific Railroad Company, and the interest thereon, as set forth in l acts, and upon all the property subject to said statutory lien, shall be and remain in full force for security for the debts owing by each of said companies to the United States until all the liens on the property affected by the said mortgage and ting at the time of its delivery and which were created subsequent he said statutory lien shall have been paid, satisfied, and disrged of record.

ited States it shall be deemed necessary to the protection of the rests and the preservation of the security of the United States espect of its lien, mortgage, or other interest in any of the prop-of the several companies named in this act upon which a lien, rtgage, or other incumbrance paramount to the right, title, or rest of the United States in the same property or any part of the e may exist and be then lawfully liable to be enforced, the Secretary he Treasury shall, under the direction of the President, redeem or erwise clear off such paramount lien, mortgage, or other incumnce by paying the sums lawfully due in respect thereof out of the asury, and the United States shall thereupon become and be subro-ed to all rights and securities theretofore pertaining to the debt, rtgage, lien, or other incumbrance in respect of which such payment shall have been made: Provided, That whenever it shall become necessary for the United States to pay off any part of such paramount incumbrance as aforesaid, the Secretary of the asury may require the repayment of all money paid for such pur-
, with costs, expenses, and interest, and upon the failure of the pany for whom such payment shall have been made to make repayment, with all costs, expenses, and interest thereon, within year after being notified so to do, the whole indebtedness of said pany to the United States shall, at the discretion and option of President of the United States, become due and payable at any thereafter, and all the rights of the United States shall there-be enforced.

S. 119.

In the Senate of the United States.

March 16, 1897.

Mr. Gear introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

March 18, 1897.

Reported by Mr. Gear, without amendment.

A BILL To amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July first, eighteen hundred and sixty-two; also to amend an act approved July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-four and also an act approved May seventh, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act and other acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and to provide for the settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroads.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General, and their successors in office, be, and they are hereby, appointed a commission with full power to settle the indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds in aid of the construction of the Central Pacific and bond-aided railroads, upon such terms and in such manner as may be agreed upon by them, or by a majority of them, and the owners of said railroads: Provided, That any and all settlements thus made shall be submitted in writing to the President, for his approval or disapproval, and unless approved by him shall not be binding.

SEC. 2. That said commission, or any member of the same, is hereby authorized and empowered to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance and take the testimony of witnesses, and to be produced all papers and documents needed in the course of negotiations.

670 SEC. 3. That the said commission shall, within sixty after the assembling of any session of Congress, report action to it.

SEC. 4. That in any such settlement made by the said commi with the owners of the said bond-aided Pacific railroads it sha the duty of the said commission to require the owners of the bond-aided railroads, as a condition of the settlement, to accept following as part of the settlement:

That each of the companies accepting the provisions of thi shall keep its bond-aided railroad and telegraph lines in repair use, and shall at all times transmit dispatches over said telegr line and transport mail, troops, and munitions of war, supplies, public stores upon said railroad for the Government, whenever quired to do so by any department thereof, and that the Goverm shall at all times have the preference in the use of the same for the purposes aforesaid, at fair and reasonable rates of compensati not to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same li of service; and that said companies hereinbefore mentioned, th successors, lessees, and assigns, shall cooperate in making tra

671 connections with all railroads of other companies now or h after built to points of junction with their bond-aided ro and at any point where two or more railroads shall connect with th bond-aided roads, or either of them, they, and their successors, les and assigns, shall afford to all such connecting roads equal ti terms, rates, and facilities for the interchange of traffic, both p senger and freight, between such connecting roads and their resp tive roads, and every part thereof. And any contract, arrangem or device, by sale, lease, consolidation, through-car service, or oth wise, intended for or resulting in any preference or advantage wh soever to any such railroad so connecting at any such common po to any prejudice or disadvantage whatsoever, is hereby declared be unlawful. That said commissioners, in making any settlem under this act, shall reserve to Congress any and all right now ex ing to regulate or prescribe the rates of tolls or charges for t transportation of freights or passengers to be charged on any or of said railroads and all other rights and powers, in respect of s railroads and railroad companies, as they now exist.

SEC. 5. That the sum of twenty thousand dollars, or so m

672 thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropria out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropri defray the expenses of said commission in carrying out the prosions of this act.

Transportation of the Army and Its Supplies.

(Letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of deficiency appropriation for transportation of the Army and supplies. February 7, 1910, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.)

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 4, 1910.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, of the 29th ultimo, submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for transportation of the Army and its supplies, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1909, amounting to $396,317.46.

Respectfully,

CHARLES D. HILLES,
Acting Secretary.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 29, 1910.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for transmission to Congress, a deficiency estimate of an appropriation of $396,317.46 required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1909, for "Transportation of the Army and its supplies."

Very respectfully,

J. M. DICKINSON,
Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

* * * * * * * *

The deficiency is due to the following causes:

1. Cash payments for transportation over the Southern Pacific es from July 1, 1908, to January 31, 1909, not anticipated when the imate for this appropriation for the fiscal year 1909 was prepared, 15,445.48.

Prior to July 1, 1908, no cash payments were made for transporta- n over the lines of the Southern Pacific, but all charges for such vices were reported to the Treasury and credited on the debt of t road to the Government. Final settlement of that debt was e February 12, 1909, and this office included in its estimates for ransportation of the Army and its supplies" for the fiscal year 9 the sum of $230,000, to pay transportation charges over those s from February 1, 1909, to the close of the fiscal year, June 30, 9.

The Southern Pacific Company, however, settled its indebtedness July, 1908, in advance of the date when due, necessitating payment ash of all charges for transportation over its lines for the entire al year. Transportation charges paid and remaining due the thern Pacific Company for the fiscal year 1909 aggregate

681 $445,445.48, or $215,445.48 in excess of the sum it was estim would be required to make cash payments.

The transportation charges for the period from July 1, 190
January 31, 1909, which this office anticipated would be credite the company's indebtedness to the Government, aggregated $ 747.16. Had these charges been credited, as was naturally an pated, instead of having to be paid in cash, the deficiency now e ing would be that amount less. This is, therefore, simply ma available to this department the sum of $270,747.16 in cash, w the department estimated, and under the law had a right to estim that it had available on credit to apply on the debt of this comp
In other words, of the amount here estimated the foregoing su not a real deficiency, but reappropriating in cash an amount w would have been available in credit had conditions remained when the estimate for the fiscal year 1909 was prepared, and deficiency would have been $125,570.30.

Together with such branches and extensions of said railroad or railroads, or any part thereof, as the company hereby formed may from time to time be authorized by law to construct, operate, acquire, and maintain.

ART. 7. The corporation hereby formed shall be vested with and entitled to exercise and enjoy all the powers, rights, privileges, and franchises which at the time of the acquisition of the said railroads by the corporation hereby formed, or at the time of the sale thereof, belonged to, or were vested in, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or in the corporation or corporations last owning the said railroads and properties, as well as all the rights, privileges, and franchises of railroad corporations organized under the laws of the State of Utah, including the aforesaid act of the Legislature of the State of Utah, approved January 22, 1897, and said other laws of the State of Utah; and said corporation shall also possess in each State or Territory, as respects its railroads, or any branches or extensions thereof situate therein, all of the powers, rights, privileges, 1905 and franchises of railroad corporations organized under the laws of such State or Territory or of the United States.

ART. 8. The corporation hereby formed may construct or acquire by lease, purchase, consolidation, ownership of capital stock, or otherwise, branches, extensions, and connecting lines, within or without this State, and for such purposes or any of them, as well as the purchase or acquisition of the railroads described in article 6 hereof, may from time to time create and issue its stock, common or preferred, or both, and execute bonds and mortgages, for such sum or sums, and payable at such times and places, and drawing such rate of interest as the directors may deem proper; and may use such stock and bonds or any part thereof in payment of property to be purchased by such corporation, or the improvement or extension thereof, upon such terms as the directors may deem expedient; may gua the bonds or obligations of extensions, branches, or connecti auxiliary lines of railroad; and in exercising its corporate p it may make such leases, purchases, contracts, conveyances, and solidations, and do such acts as the directors may deem necessa expedient, not inconsistent with these articles or with the 706 stitution and laws of the State of Utah. The company h formed may also consolidate with or merge itself into other railway company or companies in this or other States or ritories pursuant to law; it may also from time to time amend articles of association by filing amended articles of associatio creasing the capital stock, or otherwise, agreeably with law, en ing or changing the powers of the corporation hereby formed.

ART. 9. The board of directors of said corporation may from to time adopt and change by-laws not inconsistent with the visions of these articles or the constitution and laws of the Sta Utah. Said by-laws shall provide for annual elections of dire by the stockholders and for the election by the directors of a presi and vice president and for the election or appointment of such o vice presidents or other officers as shall be prescribed in such by-l Shareholders' or other corporate meetings may be held at such or places in the United States as the by-laws may prescribe.

ART. 10. Stockholders shall not be individually liable for the d of the corporation.

728 notes and securities and moneys hereby granted, bargained, sold, conveyed, assigned, transferred or set over, or intended so to be, unto the party of the second part and to its successors and assigns forever, but subject to the liens thereon hereinbefore mentioned and referred to.

And in further consideration hereof, and in order to provide for the readjustment of the present funded indebtedness of the party of the first part (subject to which the properties of said party of the first part are hereby conveyed), and for the purpose of securing the payment of the amounts becoming due on the notes given by said party of the first part to the United States under said settlement agreement, dated February 1, 1899, as in said settlement agreement prescribed, the party of the second part has assumed and hereby assumes the payment of all the indebtedness and guaranties of said party of the first part, and has undertaken, covenanted, and agreed, and hereby undertakes, covenants, and agrees to and with the party of the first part that it will issue stocks and securities and execute mortgages as prescribed in the Central Pacific readjustment plan and agreement dated February 8, 1899, issued by Speyer & Co., 729 Speyer Brothers, Laz Speyer Ellissen, Teixeira de Mattos Brothers, and the Deutsche Bank of Berlin, as readjustment managers, or as the same may be modified under the terms hereof and with the assent of the party of the second part, and in certain agreement bearing date the 20th day of February, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, by and between F. G. Banbury, Esq., M. P., John B. Akroyd, Esq., Lord Alwyne Compton, M. P., Daniel Marks, Esq., and Joseph Price, Esq., as the London committee of Central Pacific shareholders, Messrs. Speyer & Company of New York, Messrs. Speyer Brothers of London, Mr. Laz Speyer Ellissen of Frankfort-on-the-Main, Messrs. Teixeira de Mattos Brothers of Amsterdam, and the Deutsche Bank of Berlin, as readjustment managers as therein stated, and the Southern Pacific Company, and in a certain other agreement bearing date the 1st day of March, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, by and between August Belmont, Esq., Hon. John G. Carlisle, and George Coppell, Esq., as the American committee of Central Pacific shareholders, the said readjustment managers and the Southern Pacific Company, and under arrangements made or to be made with said readjustment managers will carry out such readjustment plan and said agreements.

In witness whereof, the parties hereto have caused these presents to be signed on their behalf respectively by their respective presidents, and their respective corporate seals to be hereunto affixed and attested by their respective secretaries the day and year first above written.

reference thereto being had, will more fully appear; and

Whereas the properties covered by said mortgage have heretof been and still are in possession of the party of the first part as les thereof; and

Whereas, in consideration of the benefits and advantages to derived by said party of the first part from the carrying out of agreement between the United States of America, the Central P cific Railroad Company, and Messrs Speyer & Co., dated February 1899, in reference to the settlement of the indebtedness to the Uni States growing out of the issue of bonds in aid of the construc of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific, bond-aided railroads, party of the first part hereto has agreed to subordinate its right lessee of said railroads to the lien of the said mortgage securing first refunding mortgage gold bonds;

Now, therefore, this indenture witnesseth, that in consider of the premises and of the sum of one dollar by the party of second part to the party of the first part in hand paid, the rec whereof is hereby acknowledged, the said party of the 733 part has undertaken, covenanted, and agreed and hereby undertake, covenant, and agree that the said mortg from the Central Pacific Railway Company to the party of second part, dated August 1, 1899, securing the said first refund mortgage gold bonds of said Central Pacific Railway Compa shall be, and shall be deemed and held to be, prior in lien to lease of the railroads formerly of the Central Pacific Railroad C pany (but now transferred to the said Central Pacific Rail Company), or their appurtenances or any portion thereof, and the lease of said railroads and their appurtenaces to the party of first part be, and the same is hereby, subordinated in lien to the mortgage of the said Central Pacific Railway Company to the p of the second part securing such first refunding mortgage gold bo

In witness whereof the said party of the first part hereto caused its corporate seal to be hereunto affixed and attested by ecretary or assistant secretary, and has caused these presents to be igned on its behalf by its president or one of its vice presidents, the lay and year first above written.

738 DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT NO. 49, APRIL 16, 1915.

(Extract from Volume VIII of Union Pacific Merger record, pages 3855 to 3857.)

Southern Pacific Company to United States Trust Company, trustee.

Indenture subordinating lease to lien of Central Pacific Railway Company's three and one-half per cent mortgage, dated August 1st, 1899.

An indenture made the 1st day of August, 1899, by and between the Southern Pacific Company, a corporation of the State of Kentucky, party of the first part, and the United States Trust Company of New York, a corporation of the State of New York, party of the second part.

Whereas the Central Pacific Railway Company (a corporation of the State of Utah) has, under even date herewith, executed an indenture to the party of the second part to secure the issue of three and one-half per cent mortgage gold bonds of the said Central Pacific Railway Company, issued and to be issued for an aggregate principal sum not exceeding twenty-five million dollars ($25,- 739 000,000) at any one time outstanding, as by said mortgage, reference thereto being had, will more fully appear; and

Whereas the railroads and their appurtenances covered by said mortgage have heretofore been and still are in possession of the party of the first part as lessee thereof; and

Whereas in consideration of the benefits and advantages to be derived therefrom the party of the first part hereto has agreed to subordinate its rights as lessee of said railroads to the lien of the said mortgage securing such three and one-half per cent mortgage gold bonds:

Now, therefore this indenture witnesseth that in consideration of the premises and of the sum of one dollar by the party of the second part to the party of the first part in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the said party of the first part has undertaken, covenanted, and agreed, and does hereby undertake, covenant, and agree, that the said mortgage from the Central Pacific Railway Company to the party of the second part, dated August 1, 1899, securing the said three and one-half per cent mortgage gold bonds of said Central Pacific Railway Company shall be, and shall be deemed and be held to be, prior in lien to any lease of the railroads formerly of the Central Pacific Railroad Company (but 740 now transferred to the said Central Pacific Railway Company), or their appurtenances or any portion thereof, and that the lease of said railroads and their appurtenances to the party of the first part be, and the same is hereby, subordinated to the lien to the said mortgage of the said Central Pacific Railway Company to the party of the second part securing such three and one half per cent mortgage gold bonds.

In witness whereof the said party of the first part hereto has caused its corporate seal to be hereunto affixed and attested by its secretary or assistant secretary and has caused these presents to be signed on its behalf by its president or one of its vice presidents the day and year first above written.

Petition.

To the judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Utah.

Now comes the United States of America, by Hiram E. Booth, the United States attorney for the district of Utah, acting under 750 direction of the Attorney General of the United States, and brings this its proceeding by way of petition against the Union Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Utah;

The Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Utah;

The Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Oregon;

The San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Utah;

The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Kansas;

The Southern Pacific Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Kentucky;

The Northern Pacific Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Wisconsin;

The Great Northern Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota;

The Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York;

751 Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, James Stillman, Henry H. Rogers, citizens of the State of New York and residents of New York City;

Henry C. Frick, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania and resident at Pittsburg, in said State; and

William A. Clark, a citizen of the State of Montana and resident at Butte, in said State, and complains and says:

I. The defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, and Great Northern Railway Company were, at the times hereinafter mentioned, and now are, common carriers employed in the transportation of freight and passengers among the several States of the United States and between such States and foreign nations, and as such carriers so employed were and are engaged in trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations.

II. That from and after January 1, 1901, the defendants Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, and James 752 Stillman, with certain other persons who have joined with them from time to time, including the defendants Henry H. Rogers and Henry C. Frick, have owned or controlled a majority of the capital stock of the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company;

That during all of said time the said defendant Edward H. Harriman has been, and still is, the chairman of the executive committee of the board of directors of said company, and since October, 1903, he has likewise been, and still is, the president of said corporation;

That the said Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, and James Stillman were, from a time prior to said January 1, 1901, and until the year 1906, directors of said corporation;

That said James Stillman has continued to be a director thereof, and that during all of said period and until the year 1906 the said Otto H. Kahn and said Stillman were members of the said executive committee of said corporation, and said Stillman is still a member thereof;

That during all of said time the said Jacob H. Schiff and Otto H. Kahn were, and still are, members of a banking firm of the city of New York, doing business under the firm name and style of 753 Kuhn, Loeb & Co., which said banking house is, and during all the times above stated has been, the fiscal agent of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, through which agent substantially all the purchases and sales of stocks and bonds hereinafter mentioned have been made;

That said defendant Henry H. Rogers has been a director of said corporation since the year 1902, and that said defendant Henry C. Frick has been a director of said corporation since the year 1904, and both said parties are still members of said board of directors;

That during all the times above mentioned, by by-laws of said company to that end enacted, the directors of said corporation have delegated their power to manage and direct the business and affairs of the said company to an executive committee of five members to act in such manner as such committee should deem best for the company's interest in all cases in which specific directions shall not have been given by the board; and it is and has been also provided by said by-laws that the chairman of said executive committee is authorized to represent that committee when it is not in session;

That pursuant to such by-laws the said defendant Harriman has, with the concurrence and assistance of said individual defend-754 ants, other than defendant Clark, who were members of the executive committee or directors of said company, dominated the affairs and controlled the management of said defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company.

III. The defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company is, and during all of said times has been, the owner of lines of railway extending from Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Ogden, Utah; from Julesburg, a point on said line, to Denver, Colo.; from Denver to Cheyenne, Wyo.; and a line from Kansas City, Mo., to Denver;

That the predecessor of the said Union Pacific Railroad Company was organized under the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862 (12 Stat., 489). Its charter was thereafter amended by the acts of July

2, 1864 (13 Stat., 356), February 24, 1871 (16 Stat., 430), and other acts. It constructed a line of railway from a point in Council Bluffs, Iowa, through Cheyenne, Wyo., to Ogden, Utah, with a branch from Julesburg to Denver, Colo.;

That the Kansas Pacific Railway Company was previously incorporated by special act of Congress as the Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Company (subsequently the Union Pacific 735 Railroad Company, eastern division), and constructed a line of railway from Kansas City, Mo., to Denver;

That the Denver Pacific Railway & Telegraph Company was incorporated under the laws of Colorado, and constructed the line of railroad from Denver to Cheyenne;

That these railways were consolidated under the said act of Congress of 1862 into the Union Pacific Railway Company;

That the Central Pacific Railroad Company was organized under the laws of California, and constructed a line of railroad from Sacramento, Cal., to Ogden, Utah;

That the Western Pacific Railroad Company was organized also under the laws of California, and constructed a line of railroad from San Francisco to Sacramento, Cal., and that these two latter corporations were afterwards consolidated into and became the Central Pacific Railroad Company, which was for many years engaged in the operation of said line of railroad from San Francisco to Ogden, at which point it connected with the main line of said Union Pacific Railroad Company;

That these lines of railroad were constructed by Government aid, consisting of land grants of 10 sections per mile of road, and Government bonds secured by a second mortgage upon the rail-736 ways in the sum of $16,000 per mile in open country, $48,000 per mile for 300 miles of the railroad most mountainous and difficult of construction, and $32,000 per mile for the balance of the mountainous railroad;

That by the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, the said lines of railway receiving said aid, to wit, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the Western Pacific Railroad Company, the Union Pacific Railway Company, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, and the Denver Pacific Railway & Telegraph Company, constituting all of the said lines from Council Bluffs and from Kansas City, through Denver, Cheyenne, Ogden, and Sacramento, to San Francisco, were required to operate their lines as one continuous line, without discrimination against or in favor of any or either of said companies;

That in and by section 15 of said act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, it was, among other things, provided "That the several companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads are hereby required to operate and use said roads and telegraph for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, and in such operation and use to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, 757 without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others";

That by the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874 (18 Stat., 111), this provision was in substance reenacted, and any officer or agent of the companies refusing to operate and use the said railroads for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, without discrimination as aforesaid, was declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment; and any party injured was authorized to sue for damages or to procure an injunction to enforce its provisions;

That the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company is, and during all of said times has been, the owner of a line of railway extending from a junction with said main line of the Union Pacific at Granger, Wyo., to Huntington, Oreg.; also a line from Salt Lake City, Utah, to Butte, Mont.;

That the defendant Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company is, and during all of said times has been, the owner of a line of railroad from said Huntington, Oreg., to Portland, Oreg.;

758 That all three of said lines of railway are the owners of important branch lines in various States; that substantially all the stock of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company is, and during all said times has been, owned by said Union Pacific Railroad Company, and that substantially all the stock of said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company is, and during all of said times has been, owned by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and said Union Pacific Railroad Company, and that by means of such stock ownership said Union Pacific Railroad Company has at all times controlled and managed the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, and the lines of said three corporations have composed and still compose through main lines of track from Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Kansas City, Mo., upon the Missouri River, to said city of Portland, Oreg.;

That in the year 1901 said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company was the owner of a line of steamships plying between said Portland, Oreg., and San Francisco, Cal., by way of the Willamette and Columbia Rivers and the Pacific Ocean; and through the ownership of the stock of a corporation to which said steamship line has been conveyed still owns the same; and also was and still is the owner of the stock of a corporation known as the Portland & Asiatic Steamship

759 Company, which was running and still runs a line of steamships from said Portland to Japan, China, and other points of the Orient, and the said lines of steamships constitute, with said railway lines, through routes for the transportation of property and persons both among the several States and with foreign nations;

That the Southern Pacific Company was on said January 1, 1901, and still is the owner and in control by and through its ownership of the stock of various connecting lines of a line of railway extending from New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, through said State and the State of Texas, the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and the States of California and Oregon, to said Portland;

That said Southern Pacific Company also owned and still owns a line connecting with said through lines ending at Galveston, Tex., upon the Gulf of Mexico, and in connection with its lines of railroad so reaching New Orleans and Galveston it owned and operated and still owns and operates a line of steamships running from said ports to Habana, Cuba, and to the city of New York;

That then and now the said Southern Pacific Company was and is also the owner of all the capital stock of the Central 760 Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of California, which succeeded to the ownership of the line of railway from Ogden to San Francisco theretofore owned by the corporation of the same name, to wit, Central Pacific Railroad Company, hereinbefore particularly described; and by virtue of such ownership of all said capital stock said Southern Pacific Company then and now in all respects controls the operation and management of the affairs and business of said Central Pacific Railroad Company;

And was and still is also the owner of a majority of the stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which latter company operates a line of steamships from San Francisco to the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands, China, Japan, and other oriental ports, and also a line of steamers from San Francisco to Panama, which, with the lines of the Panama Railroad Company crossing the Isthmus, and ships running in connection therewith, constitutes a through line from New York to San Francisco;

That the said rail lines of the said Southern Pacific Company from the Mississippi River to Portland, Oreg., by way of San Francisco and Los Angeles, were in active competition with said lines of 761 railroad of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for the transportation of vast quantities of freight from points in the Mississippi Valley and in the Eastern States, both to and from the Pacific coast and points in Colorado and other interior States; and said steamship line of said Southern Pacific Company from New York to New Orleans and Galveston, together with its rail lines run in connection therewith, was in active competition with the lines said Union Pacific Railroad Company for a large amount of traf originating in the Atlantic coast and Central States;

That the rail line of said Southern Pacific Company from S Francisco to Portland was in active competition with the ships plyi between San Francisco and Portland and owned by said Oreg Railroad & Navigation Company, as hereinbefore alleged;

That the said ships of the Portland and Asiatic Steamship Co
pany, in connection with the rail lines of said Union Pacific Railro Company and its subsidiary companies, as hereinbefore alleged, ru ning from Portland, Oreg., to the East, were in active competiti with the ships of said Pacific Mail Steamship Company and the ra of said Southern Pacific Company running to the East from S Francisco;

That the line of railroad composed of the tracks of sa 762 Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and said Oregon Ra road & Navigation Company between Ogden, Utah, and Por land, Oreg., were in active competition with the lines of said Sout ern Pacific Company between said points;

*That the rail lines of the said Southern Pacific Company were active competition with the ships and rail lines of the said Oreg
Railroad & Navigation Company for a large amount of traffic betwe
San Francisco and points in Montana, Idaho, and other States.*[1]

That the competition hereinbefore alleged between the system railroads and steamships owned and controlled by said Union Paci Railroad Company and the system of railroads and steamships own and controlled by said Southern Pacific Company was substanti and included a large volume of traffic, both freight and passenger;

That the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company has be for a period of more than eight years last past the owner and in co trol, by direct ownership and by the ownership of the stock 763 railway companies owning a portion of said lines and by lea of a line of railway reaching from Chicago, in the State Illinois, through the States of Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Colorad the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and the State of Californi to the city of San Francisco and to tidewater at San Diego, Cal that said line of railway touches the Union Pacific at Kansas Cit Mo., and is and during all said times has been competitive with sa Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Southern Pacific Co pany for a large traffic to and from the Pacific coast and the Orie to and from various points in the East and the Mississippi Valley and in the State of Colorado and other interior States;

[1] Italicized paragraph inserted by amendment under order of court, with the provi that the said allegation should be considered denied by all of the defendants with amendment to the several answers.

That the tracks of said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company cross the continent between those of the Southern Pacific Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and until the construction of the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad, hereinafter referred to, constituted the only outlet to the East by rail from all the territory along the Pacific coast south of Portland, Oreg., to the Mexican border, other than the lines of said Union Pacific Railway Company and said Southern Pacific Company.

That the said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Com-
764 pany was for a number of years engaged in operating a line of steamships to oriental ports from said port of San Diego, Cal., and said line of ships, with its rail connections by way of the tracks of said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, was in active competition with the steamship and rail lines of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company hereinbefore described;

That the traffic that was so competitive between said Southern Pacific and Union Pacific and said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe was and is of great volume, both passenger and freight;

That the Northern Pacific Railway Company and the Great Northern Railway Company are each the owners of lines of railway extending from ports upon Lake Superior in the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, and from the city of St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, through and across the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington, and Oregon, and said railroad corporations are the joint owners of substantially all the stock and are in control of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, a corporation which is the owner of a vast system of rail lines connecting with 765 the lines of the Northern Pacific Railway Company at Billings, Mont., and at St. Paul, and with the lines of the Great Northern Railway Company at St. Paul, running thence to the cities of Chicago, St. Louis, Mo., Kansas City, Denver, and Omaha, Nebr., and crossing portions of the States of Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, and Wyoming, and the lines of said Northern Pacific Railway Company and said Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company are and have, by the Supreme Court of the United States, been held to be competitive with the lines of the said Union Pacific Railroad Company for a large amount of traffic, both passenger and freight.

That as to an extensive traffic between various points in the Eastern and Central States and the Pacific coast and the Orient the said Northern Pacific and Great Northern Railway Companies, together with their connections and the steamship lines controlled by them, are and at all times have been competitors for business with s Union Pacific Railroad Company and its connections so owned by

That the said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Co pany is the owner of a line of railroad extending from San Ped a port on the Pacific Ocean in the State of California, thro 766 by way of Los Angeles through the States of Californi
Nevada, and Utah to the city of Salt Lake in said State Utah.

That a large part of said line is controlled by said corporation direct ownership and a small portion thereof in southern Californ by lease, but the same constitutes a continuous line between s points, and the same would have been but for the suppression of co petition hereinafter alleged at all times since its construction reason of its location and its connection with said Oregon Short Li Railroad Company at Salt Lake City and its connection with t lines of the Denver & Rio Grande Railway Company at the sa place, which latter company owns a line of railway from Salt La City to Denver, a competitor with said Southern Pacific Compa and said Union Pacific Railroad Company.

IV. That in the spring of 1901 the said defendants Edward H
Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, James Stillman, and t defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, contriving and inten ing unlawfully to restrain the trade and commerce among the seve States and between said States and foreign countries carried on said Union Pacific Railroad Company, said Southern Paci 767 Company and said other competing lines of railway and ships as hereinbefore alleged and contriving and intendi unlawfully to monopolize and attempt to monopolize such trade a commerce, and contriving and intending unlawfully to restrain a prevent competition among said railway systems and steamship li in respect to such interstate and foreign trade and commerce, a contriving and intending unlawfully to deprive the public of the b cilities and advantages in the carrying on of such interstate a foreign trade and commerce theretofore enjoyed through the ind pendent competition of said railway systems and steamship lin unlawfully entered into a combination or conspiracy to effec virtual or substantial consolidation of said Union Pacific Railro Company and said other transcontinental railway companies and a steamship lines, and to place restraint upon all competitive int state and foreign trade and commerce carried on by them and monopolize and attempt to monopolize the same and to suppress competition theretofore existing between the same in said interst and foreign trade and commerce through their instrumentality a by the means following, to wit:

That said firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., acting through said defendants Schiff and Kahn, and with the assistance of said
768 defendant Harriman, acquired 750,000 shares of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company, of the par value of $75,000,000, out of a total issue then outstanding of $197,847,788, which said stock was acquired for the purpose of turning the same over to said Union Pacific Railroad Company, so that the same might be held in the treasury of said company and voted by it, for the purpose and with the intention of controlling the election of the board of directors and officers of the said Southern Pacific Company and eliminating the competition that had theretofore existed between said Union Pacific system and said Southern Pacific system;

That said stock was, on or about March 4, 1901, duly delivered to said Union Pacific Company, pursuant to said conspiracy, and said company either by itself or by its subsidiary company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, has since been in possession and ownership thereof, and has voted the said shares of stock at all the stockholders' meetings of said Southern Pacific Company;

That thereafter, with the like purpose of suppressing competition and placing restraint upon all competitive interstate and foreign trade and commerce, and monopolizing and attempting to 769 monopolize the same, and for the purpose of rendering more certain and secure the efforts theretofore made, as above stated, by the acquisition of the said 750,000 shares of said stock, said conspirators further acquired for, and said Union Pacific Railroad Company obtained, an additional 150,000 shares of stock of said Southern Pacific Company, which were likewise placed in the treasury of said company, making an aggregate of 900,000 shares of stock of said Southern Pacific Company so acquired for the purpose and in the manner above stated;

That all of the said stock has since been voted by said Union Pacific Railroad Company, or under its direction, at all meetings of stockholders of said Southern Pacific Company, with the end and for the purpose of restraining trade and commerce and eliminating competition and monopolizing and attempting to monopolize such interstate and foreign commerce, as hereinbefore averred;

That thereafter the said defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, and Stillman and said Union Pacific Railroad Company caused to be issued by said Southern Pacific Company $39,563,300 par value of preferred capital stock of said Southern Pacific Company, which was subscribed for by the various stockholders of said South-770 ern Pacific Company in proportion to their holdings of common stock;

That said Union Pacific Railroad Company, for the purpose above stated, and with intent to insure the success of said attempt to restrain interstate and foreign commerce and monopolize the same subscribed for, took, and now has in its possession the proportion or percentage of such preferred stock to which the said 900,000 shares of common stock was entitled under said plan, to wit, $18,000,000 par value thereof, and has since its said issue at all times voted the same at all meetings of said Southern Pacific Company;

That the said 750,000 shares of Southern Pacific common stock was, in the first instance, acquired directly by said Union Pacific Railroad Company, but for convenience in financing, or other reasons unknown to complainant, the said stock was in form turned over to the said defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and the said additional common stock and the said eighteen millions of preferred stock are now in form in the treasury of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, but, as hereinbefore averred, are controlled and voted as directed by said Union Pacific Railroad Company

771 which owns the stock of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and controls the management, operation, and business affairs thereof, and the said stock and all of the same is now in form so voted by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company but at the dictation and instance of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, the said Harriman, Stillman, Schiff, and Kahn, for the purpose of choosing boards of directors who will act in subservience to the management of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, to the end that competition in interstate and foreign commerce may be restrained and such business be monopolized and attempted to be monopolized, as hereinbefore set forth;

That the balance of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company is scattered among a large number of stockholders, the exact number being unknown to complainant, but that by reason of the fact that such stock is so scattered in small blocks the full amount of such stock is not and never has been at any meeting, and, according to ordinary business usage and experience, never will be, voted at any such meeting, for which reason the said stock so controlled by said Union Pacific Railroad Company has constituted a majority of the stock present at each and every meeting of the stockholders of said

Southern Pacific Company since the year 1902, and will con-

772 tinue to constitute such majority if said stock remains the property of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, by and through said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, has controlled the said meetings and has elected such boards of directors as have been selected by said railroad company and said Harriman, Stillman, Kahn, and Schiff;

That said conspirators, after the acquisition of such control of said Southern Pacific Company, at all times caused to be elected such essive boards of directors of said company, a majority of whom were lso directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company; that said Harriman was made the chairman of the executive committee of said outhern Pacific Company and still fills such office;

That said Southern Pacific Company has conferred upon such xecutive committee and upon the chairman thereof the same powers s the like committee and the like officer enjoy in the case of the nion Pacific Railroad Company as hereinbefore set forth; that the id Harriman was by said conspirators caused to be elected and he ill is the president of said Southern Pacific Company;

That the said Union Pacific Railroad Company and Southern 73 Pacific Company have and for several years last past have had common traffic officials, operating officials, purchasing agents, nd commercial agents, and in all respects the said lines of railway ontrolled by said corporations, respectively, as hereinbefore set forth, re operated and have since the year 1901 been operated as one single ntire system;

That the management of the said steamship lines has been amal-amated and that the competition formerly existing between the said wo railway systems, with their steamships, as hereinbefore set forth, as been destroyed, and the said interstate and foreign commerce hich was originally and prior to the acts herein complained of the ubject of competition has been monopolized in the hands and under he control of the said Union Pacific Railroad Company and its sub-idiary corporations and its officials;

That each and every of the acts hereinbefore complained of ere done and performed by the said Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Still-an, and Union Pacific Railroad Company for the purpose and with he intent and result of monopolizing trade and commerce both mong the States and with foreign nations and with the intent and esult of suppressing and eliminating all competition between said companies.

74 V. Complainant further avers that, pursuant to the said conspiracy so formed to restrain trade and commerce among he several States and with foreign nations and of monopolizing and ttempting to monopolize the same, and to suppress the competition heretofore existing between the various railway systems and water ines hereinbefore described, and for the purpose of further effectu-ting such restraint and creating such monopoly, the said defendants, Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, the Union Pacific Railroad Com-any, and other parties to complainant unknown, did, in the spring f 1901, also cause the said Union Pacific Railroad Company to equire a majority of the stock of said Northern Pacific Railway ompany, meaning and intending thereby to destroy the competition theretofore existing between said Northern Pacific Railway syst and said Union Pacific Railroad system and also between the lat and the lines of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Compa hereinbefore described;

That the said purchase of stock was made in form by said Oreg Short Line Railroad Company, but said company acted at the in stance of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said oth 775 parties, and the money employed in said purchase was fu nished by the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, and sa purchase was made solely for the purpose of suppressing compe tion, restraining trade, and creating monopoly pursuant to the co spiracy hereinbefore alleged;

That after the acquisition of said stock of the said Northern Paci Railway Company there was formed under the laws of the State
New Jersey a corporation called the Northern Securities Compa which latter corporation was organized for the purpose, among oth things, of taking over as a holding company a majority or all t stock of said Northern Pacific Railway Company and said Gre Northern Railway Company;

That, acting in unison and harmony with the parties promoti said Northern Securities Company, the defendants, Harriman, Schi Kahn, Stillman, and the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the associates, caused said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company to s to said Northern Securities Company all of the stock in said Nort ern Pacific Railway Company so acquired, amounting to $37,023,0 par value of the common stock and $41,085,000 par value of the p ferred stock out of a total issue of $155,000,000 par value, a 776 said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company received from s Northern Securities Company for said stock so transferred it, in addition to a certain amount of cash, shares of said North Securities Company aggregating $82,491,871 par value, which s shares were issued in the name of the defendant Harriman and Winslow S. Pierce, who was the counsel for the said Union Pac Railroad Company, who, however, had no personal interest in t said shares, but held the same for the benefit and on account of t said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and pursuant to the co spiracy above averred;

That the said preferred stock of the Northern Pacific Rail Company was, pursuant to the charter and terms upon which s stock was issued, duly retired and an additional issue of comm stock in the same amount was made, so that the par value of the st of said Northern Pacific Railway Company remained at $155,000,0 but the same was all in one class, to wit, common stock;

That thereafter an action was duly brought by the complain United States of America, against the said Northern Securities C

any and others in the United States circuit court for the district of Minnesota, in which said cause a decree was duly entered, adjudging that the said holding of the stocks of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and the Great Northern Railway Company was illegal, as in restraint of trade and in violation of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled, "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," which said decree was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States (193 U. S., 197);

That thereafter the board of directors of said Northern Securities Company adopted resolutions for the distribution of the shares of the capital stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and of the Great Northern Railway Company among the shareholders of it, the said Northern Securities Company, pro rata, but that the said defendants and their associates who had so caused the shares of said Northern Pacific Railway Company to be acquired for the purposes above stated, opposed and protested against the said proposed distribution among the shareholders of said Northern Securities Company, and the said defendants, Harriman and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and the said Winslow S. Pierce, in whose name jointly with said Harriman the said shares had been registered, together with the Equitable Trust Company, a corporation of New York, with whom said shares had been deposited as trustee to secure obligations of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, exhibited a bill of complaint against said Northern Securities Company in the circuit court of the United States for the district of New Jersey, praying for an injunction to restrain the said pro rata distribution and a decree that they were entitled to the return and transfer to them by said Northern Securities Company of the shares of common stock of said Northern Pacific Railway Company, which were so delivered to said securities company by said Harriman and Pierce, and the shares of common stock into which the preferred stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company delivered by them were converted in exchange for the certificates of stock of the Northern Securities Company so issued to and held by the complainants in such suit;

That in said action a decree was entered by the said circuit court granting the injunction prayed (132 Fed. Rep., 464); from this order an appeal was prosecuted to the circuit court of appeals for the third circuit, which in all things reversed the decree of the court below, (134 Fed. Rep., 331); thereupon the said cause was removed to the Supreme Court of the United States by certiorari, and the decree of the circuit court of appeals was affirmed and the cause was remanded to the circuit court with directions to dismiss the bill of complaint;

That the decision by the Supreme Court of the United States, that the said parties were not entitled to relief, was in part placed upon the ground that the said Northern Pacific system, in connection with the system of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company, above referred to, was competitive with the Union Pacific Railroad system, and the delivery to the complainants in said cause of a majority of the total Northern Pacific Railway Company stock would be in violation of said act of July 2, 1890 (197 U. S., 244, 297);

That the said defendants, Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, Union Pacific Railroad Company, and their associates, caused the said action last above described to be prosecuted for the sole purpose of effectuating the said conspiracy so originally entered into to restrain trade and commerce, smother competition, and monopolize such trade and commerce among the several States, and with foreign nations, as hereinbefore more fully set forth;

That after the said decision of the Supreme Court of the United States the said Northern Securities Company proceeded with 780 the distribution of the shares of said Northern Pacific Railway Company and said Great Northern Railway Company, as proposed, and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company received many million dollars, par value, of the shares of said Northern Pacific Railway Company and said Great Northern Railway Company;

That a certain amount of the said stocks have been since disposed of by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, but that it is still the owner of large amounts of the same, as complainant is informed and believes, which said shares, and each and all of them are illegally held by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company as the agent and representative of said conspirators, and are held pursuant to the said conspiracy and not otherwise.

VI. Complainant further avers that prior to the year 1902 the defendant, William A. Clark, together with certain associates, caused to be incorporated the said defendant San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company for the purpose of acquiring and constructing an independent competing line of railway from tide water at San Pedro, Cal., through Los Angeles, and across the States of California and Nevada and a portion of Utah to the city of Salt Lake;

781 That the said corporation acquired a line of railway from San Pedro to Los Angeles, and was engaged in the construction of the balance of its line when the said defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, for the sole purpose of restraining trade and commerce among the States and with foreign nations and monopolizing the same as hereinbefore more particularly set forth and of preventing competition between said railway so the process of construction, and said Union Pacific Railroad system, including the said Southern Pacific system, brought suits of various kinds in the courts for the purpose of harassing and injuring the said railway company and preventing the acquisition of the necessary right of way for the same, put large gangs of men at work to interfere with and prevent construction of the said line, and threatened said Clark, his associates, and said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad, that if said line was completed, the same would be paralleled by said Oregon Short Line, its value would be destroyed, and its ability to secure business or operate at a profit would be taken away, which said threats, litigations, and other interferences were continued for a period of many months, as the result of which 782 the said defendant Clark and his associates were induced to desist from and abandon their proposed independent competing line, and said Harriman and his associates hereinbefore named and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company on the one part, and the said Clark and his associates upon the other part, combined and confederated together to suppress such proposed competition; and to maintain, continue, and extend the restraint of trade and monopoly heretofore built up and attempted to be built up by said Harriman and his associates, as hereinbefore averred, said Clark joined in said conspiracy to suppress competition in all said territory as hereinbefore set forth, and pursuant to such alliance with said conspirators the said Clark entered into a certain agreement with the defendant Harriman, under date of July 9, 1902, a true and correct copy of which is hereto annexed, marked "Exhibit A," and made a part of this bill as fully as though set forth herein at length;

That pursuant to the said contract made between said defendants Clark and Harriman, certain supplemental deeds, contracts, and agreements in writing were made between the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the defendant Union Pacific 783 Railroad Company, the defendant Southern Pacific Company, and said defendant San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, in and by which contracts and agreements certain lines of railroad controlled by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company in southern Utah and the eastern part of Nevada were conveyed to the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company desisted from its work of constructing a line of railway parallel with the said proposed line of the said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, and withdrew all opposition to the construction of the latter;

That said defendant Harriman secured to said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company the use of certain of the tracks owned or controlled by said defendant Southern Pacific Company and said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company in southern California, and the balance of the said line of the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company between Los Angeles and the tracks of the Southern Pacific Company near Riverside, Cal., between the terminus of and the tracks of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company so leased to it near the Cajon Pass, in eastern California, and the terminus of the said line so acquired from the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company

784 in eastern Nevada were at once constructed by said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, which, by means of said tracks so constructed, leased, and acquired is now engaged in operating a through line from San Pedro to Salt Lake;

That as provided by said contract Exhibit A, and for the purpose of maintaining, extending, and preserving the restraint of trade and commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and monopolizing the same and destroying competition with relation thereto, pursuant to the conspiracy hereinbefore alleged, certain traffic arrangements and contracts were caused by said conspirators Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, William A. Clark, and their associates, to be made between said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, and said Southern Pacific Company, by which it was agreed that upon all local competitive business the said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company should adopt the tariffs and schedules of said Southern Pacific Company, and that the same should not be at any time changed without the consent of both parties to said agreement during the period of ninety-

785 nine years thereafter; and certain other contracts were made by which said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, respectively, bound themselves for a like period of ninety-nine years that they would not build or assist in building any lines of railway in the respective territories served by said companies; that is to say, that the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company would not construct any lines of railway north of the parallel of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Oregon Short Line Railway Company would not construct any lines south of the parallel of Salt Lake City, Utah, except by common consent; it was further agreed between said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company that the said Union Pacific Railroad Company should have the right to make and establish through rates on all joint business between points reached over the lines of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and points in Utah on the said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company; and in many and divers other ways the said San Pedro, Los Angeles & S

Lake Railroad Company surrendered the control of said company and the management of its affairs to the said Harriman and his 86 associates, including said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company.

That the said conspirators caused a total issue of $25,000,000 par value of stock of said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company to be made, and the same was divided in equal parts between the said Clark, representing himself and his associates, and the said Harriman, representing said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company; and said stock was, with the exception of the shares necessary to qualify the directors of said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, placed in the names of said defendants Harriman and Clark, respectively, and by them transferred to and deposited with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, a corporation of the State of New York, as trustee, under an agreement by which said trust company should hold and vote the same at all stockholders' meetings for a long term of years, in such manner as said company might be directed by said Clark and Harriman, a true and correct copy of which agreement is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit B," and made a part hereof, as fully as though herein set forth at length;

That each and all of the acts hereinbefore last described were done pursuant to said original conspiracy to suppress competition 87 and procure a monopoly of the transportation business throughout the territory hereinbefore described, in which conspiracy the said Clark joined, and to which he united himself as above set forth;

That in pursuance of the said combination, confederation, and conspiracy the said lines of railroad so owned and operated by said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company are in all respects managed, operated, and controlled by the said conspirators; and there is not, and can not be, while such control continues, any competition whatsoever between the said San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company and said Southern Pacific Company, or the other lines of railway owned or controlled by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Harriman and his associates, as hereinbefore alleged.

VII. Complainant further avers that, pursuant to the said conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, and to monopolize and attempt to monopolize such trade and commerce, and to unlawfully restrain and prevent competition among said railway systems, the said defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, Rogers, and Frick did, in or 88 about the early part of the year 1904, make large purchases of stock of the said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, aggregating, as complainant is informed and believes, at least $30,000,000 par value of said stock, and after making said purchase the said defendants Schiff, Harriman, and Frick demanded of the officials of the said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company who held the proxies of the holders of a majority of the stock of said company, that certain of said parties so engaged in said conspiracy should be chosen and elected as directors of said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company; that pursuant to said demand, and by reason of the fact that under the cumulative system of voting which was provided for in the charter of said railway company, the holders of the amount of stock so controlled by said defendants Schiff, Harriman, Kahn, Stillman, Rogers, and Frick would have been able to elect two directors of said company, the said officials consented and agreed that said defendants Rogers and Frick, who had united themselves with the said conspiracy so originally made by said Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, and Stillman, and the various railway companies here-inbefore mentioned, might be elected as directors of said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, and during the said 789 year 1904 the said defendants Frick and Rogers were so elected as directors of said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, and have since served and are still serving as such directors, and that by means thereof the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, of which said Rogers and Frick are, and during all of said times have been, directors, and in which they are largely interested, has had knowledge of the affairs and business of said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company;

That in the summer of 1906, for the purpose of making more certain and effective the restraint of trade and elimination of competition and the monopolization of commerce hereinbefore referred to, the said Harriman and his co-conspirators, including said Union Pacific Railroad Company, caused to be purchased by said Union Pacific Railroad Company $10,000,000 par value of the stock of said
Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, and said Union Pacific Railroad Company is still the owner and holder thereof, as complainant is informed and believes;

That pursuant to said partial control of said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company so obtained by said Harriman and his associates, including said Union Pacific Railroad Company, 790 competition between the system of railways so controlled by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company has to a large extent been eliminated; that the said conspirators have caused the said Southern Pacific Company to abandon certain extensions, improvements, and additions to their said interstate railway in the State of California, and the said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company has been in the same manner caused and induced to abandon extensions and additions to its said interstate railway lines in said State of California, and said extensions so projected and partially completed have been amalgamated, and the title to the said property placed in the name of a new corporation known as the "Northwestern Pacific Railway Company," the stock of which is owned in equal parts by said Southern Pacific Company and said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company under a contract by which the control of said lines, additions, and extensions is to be in alternate years exercised by said two companies, respectively, but for the common benefit of said two corporations; and the lines of railway of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, said Southern Pacific Company, and said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company are operated in harmony with each other under agreements and understandings 791 as to rates and divisions of business.

That all of the said acts hereinbefore enumerated have been done pursuant to the said conspiracy so originally formed by certain of the defendants, as fully set forth in this bill, and in which said conspiracy and confederation said other defendants joined from time to time, as above alleged.

VIII. In consideration whereof, and inasmuch as adequate relief in the premises can only be obtained in this court, the United States of America prays your honors to order, adjudge, and decree that the combination and conspiracy hereinbefore described is unlawful and that all acts done or to be done to carry it out are in derogation of the common rights of all the people of the United States and in violation of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and that the defendants, and each and every one of them, and their officers, directors, stockholders, agents, and servants, and each and every one of them, be perpetually enjoined from doing any action in pursuance of or for the purpose of carrying out the same, and in addition that the several defendants be respectively enjoined as follows:

792 1. That the defendants, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, and their respective officers, directors, executive committees, and their respective agents and servants, and each and every one of them, be perpetually enjoined from purchasing, acquiring, receiving, holding, voting (whether by proxy or otherwise), or in any manner acting as the owner of any of the shares of the capital stock of either the Northern Pacific Railway Company, the Great Northern Railway Company, the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, and the Southern Pacific Company.

2. That the defendant Northern Pacific Railway Company, its stockholders, officers, directors, agents, and servants, and each and every one of them, be perpetually enjoined from in any manner recognizing or accepting the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, or any person or corporation whatsoever, in their interest or in the interest of any one of them, as the owner or holder of any shares of its capital stock, and from permitting said companies, or any person or corporation in their 793 interest or acting for them, to vote such stock, whether by proxy or otherwise, and be further enjoined from paying any dividends upon such stock to either of said companies, or any person or corporation acting for them, or any assigns of said companies, or any person or corporation acting for them, unless authorized by this court, and from recognizing as valid any transfer, mortgage, pledge, or assignment by said companies, or any of them, or any person or corporation in their interest, of such stock unless authorized by this court.

3. That the defendant Great Northern Railway Company, its stockholders, officers, directors, agents, and servants, and each and every one of them, be perpetually enjoined from in any manner recognizing or accepting the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, or any person or corporation whatsoever, in their interest or in the interest of any one of them, as the owner or holder of any shares of its capital stock, and from permitting said companies or any person or corporation in their interest or acting for them to vote such stock, whether by proxy or otherwise, and be further enjoined from paying any dividends upon such stock to either of 794 said companies, or any person or corporation acting for them, or any assigns of said companies, or any person or corporation acting for them, unless authorized by this court, and from recognizing as valid any transfer, mortgage, pledge, or assignment by said companies, or any of them, or any person or corporation in their interest of such stock, unless authorized by this court.

4. Exhibit A.

Clark-Harriman agreement, July 9, 1902.

This agreement made and entered into this ninth day of July 1902, by and between William A. Clark, hereinafter designated as Clark, trustee, for his own account and upon account of his associates, who are, with himself, owners of approximately seventy per cent of the capital stock of the California Improvement Company hereinafter called the California Company, and of the capital stock of the Empire Construction Company, hereinafter called the Empire Company, and who own or control, through stock or otherwise, the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, hereinafter called the San Pedro Company, and Los Angeles Terminal Land Company, and Los Angeles Terminal Railway Company, as party of the first part, and Edward H. Harriman, hereinafter designated as Harriman, trustee, as trustee for the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, hereinafter called the Short Line Company, or such company or companies as he may declare parties to said trust, party of the second part, witnesseth:

Whereas said California Company is a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, having an issued capital stock of $2,599,000, but no funded or other debt, and is the owner of all the capital stock of the said Los Angeles Terminal Land Company in the amount of $300,000, and is also the owner of all the capital stock of the said Los Angeles Terminal Railway Company in the amount of $3,000,000, all of which capital stock of said two last-named companies is now in the treasury of said California Company; and the said California Company also owns 25,000 shares of the capital stock of the San Pedro Company in the aggregate amount of $2,500,000 par value, which stock of said San Pedro Company is now issued and held by William A. Clark and R. C. Kerens in trust for the stockholders of said California Company, as their interests may appear; said capital stock of all said companies being divided into shares of $100 each; and also owns and claims the right to receive and obtain from said San Pedro Company, to be delivered to W. A. Clark and R. C. Kerens, as trustees for its stockholders as their interests may appear, $2,500,000 par value of the first mortgage bonds of said San Pedro Company when the same shall be hereafter issued; and

Whereas all of the railroad, franchises, rights of way, terminal facilities, and railroad property, and all other property, real, personal, and mixed, acquired by the Los Angeles Terminal Railway Company has been by said company sold and conveyed to the San Pedro Company; and

Whereas the Empire Construction Company is a corporation of e State of Utah organized for the purpose of providing for the nancing, construction, and equipment of the railroad of said San edro Company, with a capital stock of $1,000,000, divided into shares
f $100 each par value, all of which capital stock has been subscribed r and has been fully paid up and issued; and

Whereas said William A. Clark for himself and his said associes, in whose behalf he now owns or directly controls approximately seventy per cent of the capital stock of the California Com-04 pany, the Empire Construction Company, and the San Pedro Company, and the remainder of said capital stock, being aproximately thirty per cent of said capital stock of said companies, owned, held, or controlled by others not directly represented by id Clark; and

Whereas the assets of said Empire Company consist of its claims gainst and contracts with the said San Pedro Company for money dvanced, work done, and material furnished on account of the imrovement and acquirement of railroad property for said San Pedro ompany; and

Whereas the San Pedro Company is the owner of the railroad, uipment, rolling stock, terminal properties, station grounds, and l real, personal, and mixed property formerly owned by the Los ngeles Terminal Railway Company, and also owns certain other ilroads, railroad properties, franchises, rights of way, roadbeds, ations, station grounds, water stations, equipment, rolling stock, ols, machines, machinery, supplies, and other property procured r and intended to be used as a part of the railroad property of the id San Pedro Company and situated in the States of California, tah, and Nevada, all of which property is free and clear of any debts, incumbrance, or charges except the indebtedness to the 05 said Empire Company, and its promise to execute and deliver, when issued, its said first-mortgage bonds in the aggregate ar amount of $2,500,000 to William A. Clark and R. C. Kerens, rustees for said stockholders of said California Company, as aforeid; and

Whereas the said Los Angeles Terminal Land Company is the wner of certain real estate situated in Los Angeles County, Cali-ornia, including a tract of real estate situated on or near the harbor f San Pedro, in said county and State, all of which property of said os Angeles Terminal Land Company is free and clear of all incum-rances, liens, and claims of every kind; and

Whereas said Short Line Company is the owner of and controls and perates a system of railroads generally described as follows:

A line of railroad extending from Granger, Wyoming, to the estern boundary of said State, thence across the State of Idaho and to a terminus at the town of Huntington, Oregon, with branch lines connecting therewith;

Also a line of railroad extending from Salt Lake City, Utah, northerly through Ogden, Utah, to the northern boundary of the State of Utah, and thence north across the State of Idaho to a termi-806 nus at Silver Bow, Butte, and Garrison, in the State of Montana, with branch lines connecting therewith; the line between McCammon and Pocatello being common to both said lines;

Also a line of railroad extending from Salt Lake City, Utah, southerly through Juab to Milford and Frisco, Utah, together with a branch line extending from Lehi Junction into the Tintic mining district and the branch lines connecting therewith, and also a branch line known as the terminus line, together with various controlled, owned, and auxiliary lines of railroad in the above-named States and the States of Nevada and California.

The Short Line Company, through ownership of capital stock, also owns and controls the railroads of the Utah & Pacific Railway Company, the Utah, Nevada & California Railroad Company (in Nevada), and the Utah, Nevada & California Railroad Company in California, and the new East Tintic Railway Company; and

Whereas the said railroads of the Short Line Company are operated in harmony with and as connections of the railroads of the Union Pacific Railroad Company extending from its terminus near Ogden, Utah, easterly through the States of Utah, Wyoming, 807 Colorado, and Nebraska to a terminus at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and extending from Cheyenne, Wyoming, to Denver, Colorado, and thence easterly through the State of Kansas to a terminus at Kansas City, Missouri, with branch and auxiliary lines in the States of Utah, Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska; and said lines of railroad of the Short Line Company are also operated in connection with a certain line of railroad of the Southern Pacific Company commencing at Ogden, Utah, and extending westwardly through Utah and Nevada and into California and beyond; and

Whereas the San Pedro Company and the Short Line Company and its auxiliary companies under their respective charters each have power to construct a line of railroad between Salt Lake City and San Pedro Harbor in southern California, via Los Angeles; and

Whereas the parties hereto desire to provide for the establishment, construction, ownership, and operation of a line and system of railroad between said termini by using therefor a part of the lines of railroad now owned or controlled by the Short Line Company, and all the railroads and properties of the San Pedro Company now owned by it or owned in its interest or for its use, and by connec-

ing said several lines, either by the construction of a new line 308 or by securing leasehold or trackage rights over other lines of railroad to so connect said lines, and by means thereof to make one connected through line of railroad between said termini, to the end that the same may constitute a new through transportation line for the use of the business of said San Pedro Company and said Short Line Company and their connections, and for the carriage of business which may originate on or be destined to points on or beyond their respective lines, or which may be delivered to them, or either of them, by connecting railroads, and for the carriage of business between stations on their respective lines and between all points on or beyond their respective lines, as well as to all points on or beyond the lines of railroad owned or operated by the connections of said Short Line Company or said San Pedro Company, as aforesaid, upon through tariffs to be jointly made and lawfully published, and upon just and fair divisions of through rates and charges upon interchanged business;

Now, therefore, for the purposes aforesaid and to accomplish the same the parties hereto have covenanted and do hereby mutually covenant and agree to and with each other as follows:

309 Article first.

SECTION 1. The said William A. Clark, for himself and as trustee for his said associates, in consideration of the premises and of the undertakings of said Edward H. Harriman, as trustee as aforesaid, hereby covenants and agrees to and with the said Edward H. Harriman, as trustee as aforesaid, as follows:

That he will sell at the prices defined in section 2 hereof, and within six months after the date hereof cause to be assigned and delivered to said Harriman as such trustee, or otherwise as provided by section 4 of this article, an equal undivided half interest in approximately seventy per cent of the capital stock of each of the companies below named, that is to say:

(a) An undivided half interest in said approximately seventy per cent of the capital stock of the California Improvement Company held by said Clark and his associates as aforesaid, and through the medium of said stock an undivided half interest in said approximately seventy per cent of $2,500,000 par value of the first mortgage bonds of the said San Pedro Company by it agreed to be issued and delivered to said William A. Clark and R. C. Kerens, trustees as aforesaid.

310 (b) An equal undivided half interest in said approximately seventy per cent of the outstanding capital stock of said San Pedro company owned by said Clark and his associates but held in the names of Clark and Kerens, trustees, and one-half of the outstanding qualifying shares issued to the names of the present stockholders of said company, about sixteen in number.

(c) An equal undivided half interest in said approximately seventy per cent of the said capital stock of the Empire Construction Company.

(d) An undivided half interest in said approximately seventy per cent of the capital stock of the Los Angeles Terminal Railway Company.

(e) An equal undivided half interest in said approximately seventy per cent of the said capital stock of the Los Angeles Terminal Land Company;

And that he will endeavor to secure all of the remainder of the stock of said several companies to and for himself and his associates as to one undivided half thereof and to and for said Harriman, trustee, as to the other undivided half thereof, and at prices satisfactory to the parties hereto as hereinafter provided.

811 SECTION 2. In consideration of the foregoing the said Harriman as trustee as aforesaid undertakes to buy an undivided half of said approximately seventy per cent of said outstanding capital stock of each said California company and said Empire Company, and to pay therefor amounts to be determined as follows: For such of said stock as is sold to him by said Clark individually he shall pay, and said Clark shall receive payment at the amount and rate which the same cost the said Clark, with four per cent interest thereon from the time he acquired the same, less any amounts which the said Clark shall have received directly or indirectly as dividends or profits from said companies or in connection with said stock; provided, however, that if no dividends or profits have been so received the entire earnings of said properties since the purchase of the stocks thereof by said Clark shall have been applied or used in the operation, betterments, or extensions of the said properties, or shall now be in the treasury of the said companies; and that as to the stock the undivided half of which is so purchased by said Harriman, as trustee, from the associates of said Clark, the prices and conditions of sale shall be the same as above

812 provided for the purchase of the said Clark's individual stock as above provided, unless the parties hereto shall hereafter otherwise agree.

SECTION 3. The said Harriman, as trustee, further covenants and agrees that he will join with said Clark, trustee, in the purchase at prices satisfactory to both parties hereto, of the remaining outstanding approximately thirty per cent of said stocks, and that the same when so purchased for joint account of said Clark and himself as such trustees shall be transferred and assigned to and held jointly in the names of himself and said Clark as hereinafter provided, or to and held in the name of a trust company as trustee as in section 4 hereof provided, it being the intention of this agreement that the said Clark and his associates, and the said Harriman, as trustee as aforesaid, as such trustee, shall own each an equal undivided half of all of the capital stocks of all of the above-named companies.

SECTION 4. It is hereby agreed that all of said capital stock in which an undivided half interest as aforesaid shall be purchased by said Harriman, trustee, under the provision of said sections 1, 2, and 3, hereof shall be transferred upon the books of said several companies either to "William A. Clark, trustee for himself and 813 his associates, and Edward H. Harriman, as trustee," and that all of the capital stock of the San Pedro Company now outstanding, so to be held by joint title as above provided, shall, unless the parties hereto otherwise agree, be in like manner transferred to and stand upon the books of said companies in the names of said Clark and Harriman, trustees, together with all of the stock of the San Pedro Company which shall be hereafter issued, and as the same shall be issued, and shall be represented by certificates in the joint names of "William A. Clark, as trustee for himself and his associates, and Edward H. Harriman, as trustee," and each of the parties hereto shall have the possession and custody of certificates representing one-half in number and par value of said stock when so transferred to the parties hereto as aforesaid, and neither party hereto shall in any manner dispose of said holdings of the said capital stock of the said California Company, or said Empire Company, or of said San Pedro Company, or any part thereof, or any interest therein, for the full period of ten years after the opening for business of said through line of said San Pedro Company as in this agreement provided, without first obtaining the consent of the other party hereto, nor at any time without giving said other party hereto the right to pur-814 chase such holdings, or interest therein, so offered for sale, on as favorable terms as the same are offered for sale or agreed to be sold to any other person or company. At the end of said period of ten years the said then jointly held stock and the certificates thereof may be, and shall be at the request of either party hereto, divided between said Harriman and Clark, as trustees, according to their respective interests; provided, however, that if the parties hereto shall agree upon a trust company to be the holder of said certificate of stock, as trustee for the said "William A. Clark, trustee, for himself and his associates, and Edward H. Harriman, as trustee," all of the said several shares of stock and certificates representing the same referred to in this section shall be transferred upon the books of the said several corporations to said trust company as trustee, and certificates duly issued to it therefor as trustee, to be held by it in trust for the parties hereto, in accordance with and subject to terms of an agreement to be executed between the parties hereto the said trust company concerning the holding of said shares.

The said last-named agreement shall, among other thi 815 provide, first, that said trust company shall issue to the par hereto certificates of interest running to the said "William Clark, trustee, for himself and his associates, and Edward H. Ha man, trustee," jointly, each party hereto to have possession of cer cates representing one-half in number of the shares and one-half par value thereof, which may be deposited with the said trustee; a second, that said trust company will, from time to time, when join requested by the said "William A. Clark, trustee, for himself his associates, and Edward H. Harriman, trustee," give and is to such person or persons as said parties hereto may direct a pro or proxies authorizing the person or persons named in said proxy proxies to vote any and all of said stock at any meeting of stockholders of said several companies; and, third, that said tr company shall pay over to the parties hereto, or such persons as th shall jointly direct, any and all individuals, whether of stocks, bon moneys, or property of any sort belonging to any of said seve corporations, and which may be paid to or received by said tr company in any manner by reason of its holdings of any of s capital stock as aforesaid, together with such other provisions may be hereafter agreed upon touching instructions wh 816 may, from time to time, be given to said trustees jointly the parties hereto, said certificates of interest above named be held and possessed by the parties hereto, but neither party sh in any manner dispose of said certificates of interest, or any p thereof, or of any interest therein, before the full period of ten ye after the opening for business of said through line of said San Pe Company, as in this agreement provided, without first obtaining t consent of the other party hereto to such transfer, nor at any ti without giving such other party hereto the right to purchase su holdings or certificates offered for sale on as favorable terms as t same are offered for sale or agreed to be sold to any other perso company. At the end of said period of ten years said certific of interest may be surrendered by the parties hereto, or by the hold thereof, to said trust company, which shall thereupon assign a deliver the said stock certificates so held by it to the said holders said certificates of interest in number and par value of shares nam in such surrendered certificates of interest, and said shares of sto may then be transferred upon the corporate books of said seve companies accordingly. At any time thereafter said certi 817 cates of stock issued jointly to said "Clark, trustee, and Har man, trustee," may upon demand of either party hereto

ivided between them according to their respective interest, yet ubject, however, to the right of either party hereto to purchase said tock from the other party hereto at the price and on the terms in his section hereinbefore provided.

SECTION 5. It is agreed by the parties hereto that pending the arrying out of this agreement no further stock of the California ompany or of the San Pedro Company shall be issued.

SECTION 6. Upon the completion of the sale and purchase of the id one undivided one-half of the capital stock of said companies, ow owned by said Clark, trustee, will, whenever requested by said Harriman, trustee, cause one-half of the membership of the direc-orate of each of the several companies to be vacated, and will cause irectors to be nominated and named by the said Harriman, trustee, o be elected to the directorate to fill such vacancies in each and every f said several companies, but said Harriman, trustee, appreciating he advantage to be obtained by preserving the independent character of the San Pedro Company, and to that end distrurbing as 18 little as may be the present organization of said company until the through line of said San Pedro Company in this greement mentioned is completed and in operation, will not exercise he right herein given him to name one-half of the said boards of irectors unless he shall deem the exercise of such right necessary o the protection of the interests which he represents.

SECTION 7. The contract relations between the said Empire Con-truction Company and the San Pedro Company not having been efinitely agreed to, it is mutually covenanted and agreed between he parties hereto that within six months from the date hereof a ontract shall be entered into between the said Empire company and he said San Pedro company which shall be in terms satisfactory to he parties hereto.

SECTION 8. It is mutually agreed that in all matters pertaining o the construction, opening for business, and operation of the rail-oad of the San Pedro Company, including the purchase of equip-ent, the making of contracts for construction, and the purchase of aterial therefor, and any and all contracts establishing relations f trackage or traffic with other railway companies, the parties shall act jointly, and no such contracts or arrangements, or any of 19 them, shall be made, or any corporate action taken by said San Pedro Company, the California Company, or the Empire ompany without the approval of both parties hereto, and that in ll such matters each of the parties hereto may be represented by n agent or agents to be appointed by them respectively with power o act for and in the names of their respective principals, and the id parties shall also act jointly in naming and prescribing the ccounting and other officers and agents to be engaged in the operation of said companies, and each of them, and the auditor of said Empire Company shall be a person selected by the said Harriman trustee, and upon the request of either party hereto any of said officers or agents shall be removed.

SECTION 9. It is understood that pending the carrying out of the terms of this agreement said Harriman, trustee, may by his agent or agents inspect and examine the corporate records, books, accounts, rights, and franchises of each of said several companies.

Article second.

SECTION 1. In consideration of the covenants of the said Clark trustee, for himself and his associates, and also on behalf of the San Pedro Company, in this agreement written, the said Harriman, trustee, as aforesaid, covenants and agrees with said Clark, as trustee, that he will in the time hereinafter stated negotiate with said Short Line Company, and obtain from said Short Line Company the sale and lease to said San Pedro Company of the property hereinafter mentioned, as follows:

(Parcel 1.) A conveyance from said Short Line Company to said San Pedro Company, by good and sufficient deed, free and clear of incumbrance, of all of the following described property: The line of railroad known as the Terminus Branch of the Short Line Railroad from a point or points beginning at the connection of said branch with the yards of the Short Line Company to be agreed upon when said yards are defined as hereinafter provided, in Salt Lake City, county of Salt Lake, State of Utah, and extending in a generally westwardly and southerly direction to a point near Terminus in the county of Tooele, State of Utah, together with a branch line of railroad extending from Saltair Junction to the salt works, in Salt Lake County, State of Utah, except that part of said line the right of way for which is to be surrendered to the United States, and also the partially completed railroad and right of way, surveys, and maps thereof, and railroad property, other than equipment, 821 acquired by the Short Line Company for or used in connection with the construction of its proposed new line of railroad now under construction extending from a point of junction with said Terminus line above named southerly to a point known as Leamington Junction, upon payment therefor by said San Pedro Company as hereinafter provided.

(Parcel 2.) extensions and betterments, and the cost, rental, and use thereof, an rules governing the operation of said yard shall be agreed to by th operating officials of said Short Line Company and said San Pedr Company, subject to the approval of the parties hereto, and whic shall then be incorporated in said contract of lease, together with a formal provisions usual to such contracts.

The said property, the use of which for its own separate busine is let to the San Pedro Company, shall be managed and controll by the Short Line Company, provided, however, that for cause upo demand of the San Pedro Company, after thirty days' written no tice, to be given to the general manager of the Short Line Compa by the San Pedro Company, a competent superintendent for the sa shall be jointly chosen by the respective presidents of the San Pedr Company and the Short Line Company, who shall be charged wi the care, management, and operation of said property, to the e that the rights and privileges of the said parties thereto under th agreement shall be fully secured and preserved. Said superintende shall be removed or discharged upon reasonable notice upo 825 the written demand of either party to said lease given to t other party.

(Parcel 4.) The Short Line Company is the owner of all of th capital stock and first-mortgage bonds of the Utah & Pacific Ra way Company, which owns a line of railroad extending from M ford, Utah, to the Nevada-Utah State line at a point known Uvada, and said Short Line Company owns all of the capital sto of the Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company, a co poration of the State of Nevada, which owns a railroad extendi from the Utah-Nevada State line, at the point aforesaid, southe to Calientes, in Lincoln County, Nevada, and a right of way a partially constructed roadbed for a line of railroad extending fr said Calientes to a point near Pioche, in said Lincoln County, a also a right of way and partially constructed roadbed for a line road extending from said Calientes southwesterly across the So of Nevada to the Nevada-California State line; and said Short L Company also owns all of the capital stock of the Utah, Nevada California Railroad Company in California, a corporation of t
State of California, which claims or owns a right of way extendi from the Nevada-California State line to a point on the railroad the Santa Fe Company near Ludlow, Cal., and other railroad 926 properties; said Short Line Company also owns all of the capital stock of the New East Tintic Railway Company, which ast-named company owns a line of railroad in the Tintic district.

The said Harriman, trustee, undertakes and agrees to procure from he Short Line Company an agreement to sell to the San Pedro Com- any, upon payment of prices to be fixed as hereinafter provided, all f the capital stock and first-mortgage bonds of each of the follow- ng-named companies: The said Utah & Pacific Railway Company, he said Utah, Nevada & California Railroad Company, the said Utah, Nevada & California Railroad Company in California, and he said New East Tintic Railway Company, and an agreement from he Short Line Company that it will, upon the request of the San Pedro Company, if necessary, act with the said San Pedro Company n procuring from each of the said several companies lastly above amed a cancellation of the first-mortgage bonds and the release and atisfaction of the said first mortgages, and also in procuring con- eyances to said San Pedro Company from each of said four com- anies above named of all the railroad, franchises, and other property wned by said companies, respectively, so as to vest the said San Pedro Company with the full title to and ownership in all of 927 said railroads, franchises, and other property in this paragraph mentioned.

(Parcel 5.) The said Harriman, trustee, as aforesaid, undertakes nd agrees that said Short Line Company will sell and convey to he San Pedro Company such a proportion of its equipment appro- riate and proper for use upon and heretofore assigned to use upon s lines of railroad south of Salt Lake City above referred to as may etermine between the chief operating officers of said companies, pon being paid therefor, the value of said equipment as the same hall be found and determined by the joint action of the superintend- nt of motive power of the parties hereto, and said Clark, as trustee, ndertakes that said San Pedro Company will buy said equipment nd pay for the same on the delivery thereof at the price so found nd determined.

SECTION 2. The said Clark, trustee as aforesaid, in consideration f the covenants and agreements of the said Harriman, as trustee as foresaid, as written in this article, hereby undertakes and agrees hat he will negotiate with and obtain from said San Pedro Company covenant and agreement on its part that it will buy from the said hort Line Company and pay for all of the properties referred to and described in this article as parcels 1, 2, 4, 5, and that the 928 value of the said railroads and properties to be conveyed by the Short Line Company described in said parcels shall be as- rtained and determined, except as to said equipment, in the following manner: By a fair estimate of the value thereof, to be agreed upon by the parties hereto, based upon the cost, which is to be the minimum factor, and upon the earning power of the said railroads, franchises, and properties, capitalized at four per cent per annum, respectively described in said several parcels in this article, and that the aggregate value of all of said several properties referred to in said several parcels shall constitute the purchase price thereof to be paid by the San Pedro Company to the Short Line Company upon making the conveyance, transfers, and assignments as aforesaid.

Said agreements shall provide that said San Pedro Company will and shall assume all the obligations of the Short Line Company to contractors and others in respect to the location, relocation, construction, and reconstruction upon the premises described in parcel 1 hereof, and will carry out, fulfill, and perform all of the said Short Line Company's obligations in respect to said work, and will use the said new work when completed as part of the San Pedro 829 Company's main line of railroad, and that said San Pedro Company will accept said lease for the property described in parcel 3 on the terms above written.

All said conveyances, assignments, and transfers and said lease to be made and delivered, and considerations therefor paid contemporaneously with the exchange of stock and the execution of the agreement hereinafter mentioned are to be accomplished within six months from the date hereof.

Article third.

SECTION 1. The said Harriman, as trustee, further covenants and agrees that he will negotiate with the Southern Pacific Company, and if possible, obtain from said company the right for the San Pedro Company to use the tracks of the Southern Pacific Company from the point of its junction with the tracks of the Southern California Company at or near Colton to the point of junction with the tracks of the San Pedro Company at or near Riverside, at a rental that will not exceed four per cent per annum on one-half the valuation of the property of the Southern Pacific Company so used, and a share of the cost of maintenance thereof, including taxes, in proportion to the use of said tracks and property on a wheelage basis.

830 SECTION 2. The said Harriman, as trustee, further covenants and agrees that he will negotiate with the Southern California Railroad Company, and if possible obtain from said company the right for the San Pedro Company to use the tracks of the Southern California Company from the point of its junction with the tracks of the Southern Pacific Company at or near Colton to the point of junction of its tracks with the tracks of the Santa Fe Pacific Company at or near Barstow, at a rental not exceeding four per cent per annum on one-half the valuation of the property of the Southern California Company so used, and a share of the cost of maintenance thereof, including the taxes, in proportion to the use of said tracks and property on a wheelage basis.

SECTION 3. Said Harriman, as trustee, further covenants and agrees that he will negotiate with the Santa Fe Pacific Railway Company, and if possible obtain from said company the right for the San Pedro Company to use the tracks of the said Santa Fe Pacific Company between Barstow and Ludlow, California, or other point of connection of junction with the proposed line of railroad of the San Pedro Company, at a rental which shall not exceed four per cent per annum on one-half the valuation of the property of the said Santa Fe 331 Pacific Company so used, and a share of the cost of maintenance thereof, including taxes, apportioned upon the use of said tracks and property upon a wheelage basis.

SECTION 4. Each of the several trackage contracts referred to in this article may also contain provisions requiring the San Pedro Company to pay to each of said lessors for water, fuel, and other supplies, labor or material furnished to and for the sole use of the San Pedro Company while upon the tracks of said several companies, and also the usual conditions and agreements for payment by the San Pedro Company to said several lessors for losses and damages to persons or property arising from the negligence or wrongdoing of its sole employees.

Article fourth.

The parties hereto, as trustees aforesaid, hereby covenant and agree to and with each other that the said San Pedro Company and the said Short Line Company shall and will, on or before the date named in section 2 of article second hereof, enter into an agreement, and agreement for a term of ninety-nine years, with each other concerning the new line of transportation and traffic substantially to the effect following:

332 (a) The said new transportation line shall consist of the line of railroad to be created, secured, constructed, and operated under the charter and franchises of the San Pedro Company. Its main line shall commence at the city of Salt Lake, Utah, and run southerly via Garfield, Leamington, Milford, Calientes, and thence through the States of Nevada and California to a junction with the line of railroad of the Santa Fe Pacific Company, and thence by trackage arrangements over the lines of the Santa Fe Pacific Company, the Southern California Company, and the Southern Pacific Company to a connection with the San Pedro Company's line in California at Riverside, and thence via Los Angeles to San Pedro Harbor.

(b) But if for any reason any of said trackage arrangements referred to in article fourth cannot be obtained, then upon and along a line of railroad to be otherwise acquired or to be constructed by the San Pedro Company in lieu thereof, making and constituting a through line of railroad from the city of Salt Lake to San Pedro Harbor via Los Angeles in California.

(c) The branch lines of said new through transportation line shall be the lines of railroad heretofore operated by the Short Line
833 Company and described in parcel 2 above mentioned and the branch lines of the San Pedro Company in southern California, and such other branch lines as may be constructed or acquired hereafter by said San Pedro Company, it being understood that the San Pedro Company shall not hereafter extend its main line of railroad as herein defined, or any branch lines of railroad, or construct or build any line of railroad, or aid any other company or companies in the construction or building of any line or lines of railroad, nor assist or advise in building or constructing any other line of railroad northward or into the territory northward of the parallel of Salt Lake City, Utah.

(d) Said agreement shall further provide that should conditions develop hereafter which require the construction of branch lines connecting with the said San Pedro Company's road south of Salt Lake City the construction of such lines shall be subject to agreement before the commencement thereof, providing, however, that if either party objects to the construction the other may build said branches and connect the same with the main line of said San Pedro Company and be entitled to an interchange of traffic with it upon reasonable terms, it being understood that said branch lines shall not directly or indirectly invade the territory of the Short Line
834 Company north of Salt Lake City, nor be built for the purpose of diverting business naturally tributary to the Short Line Company's road north of Salt Lake City. On the other hand it is agreed and understood that the Short Line Company shall not build branch lines which will invade the territory of the San Pedro Company South of Salt Lake City or divert business which would be naturally tributary to the San Pedro Company's road south of Salt Lake City.

SECTION 2. The San Pedro Company will in said contract agree to construct the railroad from a junction on the line of the Santa Fe Pacific Company's road above mentioned, near Ludlow, or some other agreed point on said line in California, to a connection with the Short Line Company's present road at Calientes, Nevada, and that all of the line of railroad constructed, reconstructed, or to be constructed by the San Pedro Company, and which is to become a portion of the main line thereof, shall be constructed with not less than seventy-five pound rail and shall be completed and equipped as first class in every respect, the construction and equipment to be of a standard equal at least to that already adopted by the San Pedro Company upon that portion of its road heretofore constructed in southern California.

835 SECTION 3. The Short Line Company will in said contract undertake for itself and its connections, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the roads of the Southern Pacific Company, to join with the San Pedro Company in forming through lines of service necessary for the interchange of any and all business which can be carried over said Short Line and its connections in conjunction with said San Pedro Company's road to and from all points which may be reached via Salt Lake City on as favorable terms and conditions as are offered by any carriers competing for the same business.

SECTION 4. In said contract provision shall be made by the parties thereto for the adoption of classifications governing through or interchanged traffic, for the making of through and joint tariffs and rates, and the maintenance thereof, and the publication thereof, as required by law, and provision shall also be made for just and equitable divisions of all such agreed through rates and charges respecting all interchanged business.

SECTION 5. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

836 "It is agreed that the interchange of traffic by and between the San Pedro road, on the one hand, and the Short Line Company and the Union Pacific Company, on the other hand, as against any competitor of said Short Line Company or said Union Pacific Company, shall be preferential, but not exclusive, except as hereinafter provided, in favor of said Union Pacific Company; and, in like manner, that the interchange of traffic by and between said Short Line Company and said Union Pacific Company, on the other hand, and the San Pedro Company, on the other hand, as against any competitor of the said San Pedro Company, shall be preferential, but not exclusive, except as hereinafter provided, in favor of the San Pedro Company;

"That is to say,

"Whereas the value of the Short Line Company of its lines in Utah south of Salt Lake City, the transfer of which to the San Pedro Company is hereinbefore provided, consists largely of their relation as feeders of said Short Line Company and said Union Pacific Company, and, whereas it is not practicable to capitalize the value to said Short Line and said Union Pacific Company of said lines south of Salt Lake City as feeders of traffic, or in any other manner to compensate said Short Line Company and said Union

Pacific Company for the loss which would result from the 837 diversion to other carriers of the traffic moving to and from points on said lines in Utah south of Salt Lake City.

"Now, therefore, it is mutually agreed and understood that all traffic which is either taken up or laid down on the lines of the San Pedro Company in Utah for transportation to or from any and all points which can be reached with reasonable expedition by way of the lines of said Short Line and said Union Pacific Company and their respective connections shall be forwarded exclusively, in so far as that may lawfully be done, by way of and over the lines of said Short Line and said Union Pacific Company. In consideration whereof said Short Line and said Union Pacific Company undertake and are bound hereby to solicit the transportation of traffic to or from points in Utah reached by the roads of said San Pedro Company exclusively in connection with said San Pedro Company against any and all said San Pedro Company's competitors.

"Whereas the owners of said Short Line and said Union Pacific Company had projected and proposed to build a railroad from Calientes, Nevada, to Los Angeles, Cal., or to a connection with a railroad already constructed which would give entrance to 838 Los Angeles and other points in southern California; and whereas the value to said Short Line and said Union Pacific Company of said projected line from Calientes to southern California consisted largely in the profit to be derived from the carriage over the line or lines of road north of Calientes, Nevada, and east of Ogden, Utah, now owned and controlled by said Short Line and said Union Pacific Company, or by persons or companies friendly to said Short Line and said Union Pacific Company, of the traffic interchanged by points on the line of, or to be reached by way of, the line of said projected line between Calientes, Nevada, and Los Angeles, California, with points north of Calientes, Nevada, and Ogden, Utah, reached by or by way of the roads owned or controlled by said Short Line and said Union Pacific Company, or by companies friendly to them; and whereas, by the sale of or by the transfer by lease or purchase to the said San Pedro Company of the line of said Short Line Company south of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Utah, Nevada & California Railroad between Calientes, Nevada and Uvada, and the Utah & Pacific Railway between Uvada and Milford, Utah, and the abandonment of its projected line between Calientes, Nevada, and Los Angeles, California, in favor of 839 the line proposed to be built by the San Pedro Company, the said Short Line and said Union Pacific Company are deprived of the profit to be derived from the ownership and control of a railroad line from Salt Lake City, Utah, to Los Angeles, California which might be lawfully conducted in the interest of said Short Line and said Union Pacific Company.

"Now, therefore, it is covenanted and agreed, in part consideration of the transfer to said San Pedro Company of the ownership or control of the lines of the Short Line Company south of Salt Lake City, in Utah, and of said Utah, Nevada & California Railroad between Calientes, Nevada, and Uvada, and the Utah and Pacific Railway between Uvada and Milford, Utah, and the abandonment of its purpose to build said projected line from Calientes, Nevada, to Los Angeles, California, or to said point of connection with a railroad which would give it entrance to Los Angeles, Cal., as follows:

"To unite the roads now owned by said San Pedro Company, or transferred to it by this instrument, or hereafter constructed by it, to form a connected line of railroad between Salt Lake City, Utah, and Los Angeles, California, and other points in California 340 and the roads of the Short Line and Union Pacific Company, so as to form a through line of transportation service between points in California on the said San Pedro Company's roads and points east of Ogden, Utah, on or to be reached by way of the Union Pacific Company's lines and its connecting railroad lines. It is further understood and agreed that in so far as it may lawfully be done and profitably that said through line shall be operated and worked as a unit with respect to all traffic which is, in whole or in part, the subject of competition by other carriers. To this end it is understood and agreed that each of the parties hereto will work, in so far as they lawfully may, to promote the interests of said through line against any other line competing in whole or in part for the same traffic, and each party to said through line is bound in good faith in every lawful way to preferentially promote the interest of said through line in the conduct of all traffic which may be lawfully, reasonably, and profitably conducted by said through line against any and all competitors of said through line.

"But this obligation of preference is not to be understood or to be construed as requiring either party hereto to refuse or neglect to receive and properly forward any of the traffic referred to in 341 this subdivision which shall be offered for transportation by other connecting carriers, nor so as to require either party hereto to refuse or neglect to receive and duly forward in accordance with shipper's instructions any traffic for which the shipper thereof shall have given or tendered written instructions, directing that said traffic be delivered for forwarding to destination to a connecting carrier other than a party hereto; provided, however, that the through rates and the subdivisions of said through rates for traffic thus provided to be interchanged with carriers other than parties hereto shall not be less than those which at the same time are offered and in effect by or by way of the said through line, and each of the parties hereto is bound to the other party and agrees not to join any connection in through rates which are lower than those which are at the same time in effect or obtainable by the use of said through line, nor to engage with any carrier in any device or practice whatsoever designed to, or which shall have the effect of giving said connection an advantage or preference over said through line or any part thereof in soliciting or carrying the business properly subject to carriage by said through line."

SECTION 6. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

842 "No arrangement, contract, covenant, or agreement for shipment or carriage of persons or property shall be made, permitted, or suffered by either party hereto with any other transportation company or carrier by means whereof any such carrier or transportation company shall have or enjoy directly or indirectly any better rates or have any better divisions of through rates or better transportation facilities or service than are had or enjoyed by either of the parties hereto with the other party."

SECTION 7. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"Nothing contained herein shall be construed as limiting the rights or privileges of the Union Pacific Railroad Company or of the Southern Pacific Company or of the Short Line Company in respect to interchange of traffic each with the other."

SECTION 8. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"Said Short Line Company is bound for itself and undertakes to secure a like obligation upon the part of the Union Pacific 843 Company and the roads of said Southern Pacific Company to deal with said San Pedro Company in the matter of interchange of traffic in respect to rates of charge for all traffic and the divisions of said rates and in respect to class and quality of service as they, respectively, deal with each other or with the most favored connection, and not to discriminate in any respect in favor of each other or of any connecting line to the prejudice and disadvantage of said San Pedro Company."

SECTION 9. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"It is covenanted and agreed that said Short Line Company and its connection, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and each of them, shall have the right to name and make the through rates between points (that is, in both directions) on or reached via their respective lines, and points on the line of said San Pedro Company in Utah, for business which said Short Line Company or said Union Pacific Company might give to or receive from said San Pedro Company in competition with any and all other connections of said San Pedro Company; provided, however, that on demand said Short Line Company and said Union Pacific Company shall join said San Pedro Company in any through rates necessary to meet 844 the rates offered by any competing through line for such business."

SECTION 10. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"Each party hereto hereby covenants and agrees with the other party that it will not discriminate in any manner whatever against the other party hereto, or any of said other party's connections, in favor of any of the competitors of either of said parties, or in favor of any other connecting carrier in respect of the class or quality of its service, or in any other respect whatever affecting rates or service."

SECTION 11. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"Neither party hereto shall or will agree with or make any convention with a competitor of the other party hereto in any respect designed to or which shall have the effect of excluding such other party from the full and free opportunity to meet any rate or grant any facility offered by such competitor for any and all traffic of every sort, and that the rates and facilities necessary to meet the offers of such competitor shall be held to be common to both parties hereto, subject to established divisions."

845 SECTION 12. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"Said San Pedro Company hereby covenants and grees that it will not now or hereafter interchange traffic with any carrier connecting with it at a point in Utah south of Salt Lake City or in Nevada upon more favorable terms as to character or quality of service, nor at any lower rate of charge or lower divisions of rates, nor in any respect whatever than those governing the interchange of the same or similar traffic with the Short Line Company at Salt Lake City."

SECTION 13. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"Said Short Line Company hereby further undertakes and agrees to negotiate with and secure, if possible, from said Southern Pacific Company an undertaking and agreement on its part for the interchange of traffic in southern California with said San Pedro Company in like manner and upon as favorable terms and conditions as said Southern Pacific Company has for the interchange of traffic with the Southern California Railroad Company.

"The San Pedro Company covenants and agrees that it will 846 make a covenant or agreement with the Southern Pacific Company for its (said San Pedro Company's) performance of an undertaking that it will in the first instance adopt all lawful rates, tariffs, and charges used by said Southern Pacific Company for the handling of local traffic by said San Pedro Company which is or may be subject to competition between said Southern Pacific Company and said San Pedro Company, and that thereafter neither party shall change said rates without the consent of the other party unless it may be made necessary so to do to meet the rates, charges or tariffs of another competing line of railroad."

SECTION 14. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"The parties hereto mutually covenant and agree to establish a daily through passenger train service, consisting of not less than one train each way, over their respective lines, and over the lines of railroad of the Union Pacific Company to its terminus at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and thence via its connections, if it can accomplish the same, between Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Chicago, Illinois, through to Los Angeles, California. Such joint through passenger service shall be so established and put in operation whenever 847 either party hereto shall give to the other written notice of its desire so to do. When so established the trains necessary therefore shall be made up of such cars as the managing officials of the parties hereto shall determine. The equipment of such trains shall be of the latest modern design and in all respects the equal of superior of that of competing lines. Each party shall furnish its just quota in proportion to length of haul of such equipment. The time schedules for such joint passenger train shall be no greater in point of time than the shortest time of the trains of competing lines between the same points, and the time established shall be divided pro rata per mile, reasonable allowance to be made for difference in physical conditions, unless otherwise specifically agreed. Either party hereto shall receive the through passenger trains of the other party upon delivery, and dispatch the same regularly, without any delay other than the ordinary station service required by through trains of like class, to their respective destinations. Each party hereto shall maintain all equipment used in such joint passenger service upon its own lines, and car mileage at usual rates shall be paid for all cars of either party used upon the lines of the other in the joint business."

848 SECTION 15. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"It is further covenanted and agreed by and between the parties hereto that for the performance of the joint through freight service over said through line each of the parties hereto shall furnish its proportion of the cars necessary or convenient for use in the transportation of through freight, and that each party shall pay to the other the usual rates allowed for car service; that all joint through freight rates for competitive business shall be divided between the parties hereto and their respective connections, the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, pro rata per mile in proportion to the length of the haul performed by each, but all arbitrary rates, including the customary Missouri River bridge arbitraries, shall be first deducted and the remainder of the joint or through revenue then divided upon said basis: Provided, That neither party shall be required to perform any service other than switching service in connection with the other party for less than one dollar per ton, except as may be mutually agreed upon from time to time. Joint through rates for business other than that which is subject to the competition of rival carriers 849 shall be divided pro rata per rate; that is to say, each party shall receive of such through rate a share equal to the proportion its separate local rate for identical service separately performed bears to the sum of said local rates of both parties."

SECTION 16. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"Each party shall be liable for all damages to persons or property in its possession or under its charge for the purpose of transportation or storage. When the injury for which damages are claimed can not be located or arises from concealed or unknown causes the damages shall be jointly paid by the parties hereto in the proportion in which the through rates are divided, as hereinafter provided. Cars of each of the parties hereto received on the lines of the other shall be promptly returned, preference being always given to loaded cars. All carload freight shall be sent over the lines of the parties hereto without transfer, when the cars so loaded are in good condition."

SECTION 17. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"It is further mutually covenanted and agreed by and be-850 tween the parties hereto that all joint through passenger rates shall be divided in the following proportions:

"1. When the joint passenger rate is made of the sum of the published local rates of the parties each party shall receive its local rate.

"2. If the through passenger rate shall be less than the sum of the two or more local rates, made less to meet competition or to promote the public interest, each party shall receive its local rate reduced in the precise proportion that the through rate is less than the rate made by the sum of the locals, and neither party shall in any division receive more than its published local tariffs."

SECTION 18. Said agreement shall also contain the following provision:

"Any difference that shall hereafter arise as to the meaning or the proper construction of this agreement or any part thereof, or as to the performance of any of the covenants and agreements herein contained by either party, shall first be referred to the two presidents of the said parties for settlement, and to that end the party complaining shall deliver to the said presidents a concise written statement of the matter regarding which complaint is made. If 851 the two presidents within thirty days after receiving such complaint are unable to settle such differences so submitted, then the same shall, within thirty days thereafter, be referred to a committee of the two boards of directors to be created as provided in this article. Notice of the time and place of hearing thereof by said committee shall be given by them to the parties hereto at least ten days before the same shall be heard. Each party may submit such evidence and statements as it may think proper for the consideration of such committee at such hearing, and the decision of such committee when reduced to writing and signed by them or a majority of them shall be binding upon the parties hereto, and such written decision shall thereafter be taken and held to be a part of this agreement."

Article fifth.

It is further agreed between the parties hereto that all contracts necessary to carry out the provisions of this agreement shall be formulated and entered into by the parties appropriate to such contracts, whether hereinabove expressly provided for or not.

It is understood and agreed that the execution of this agree-852 ment by the party of the second part is subject to ratification and approval by the executive committee of the Short Line Company, and that the party of the first part shall be furnished with evidence of such approval when the same shall have been given.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands the day and year first above written.

WILLIAM A. CLARK,
In Trust for Himself and His Associates.

EDWARD H. HARRIMAN,
As Trustee, as in Above Instrument Recited.

Exhibit B.

The parties of the first and second parts, in considera-on of the sum of one dollar to each of them in hand paid, the re-ipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and in further consideration f the acceptance by the trustee of the trust hereby created, do jointly nd severally sell, assign, deliver, and set over unto said trustee under he terms of this instrument, and to the successor in trust, if any, of id trustee, all and singular the following certificates of capital stock nd the stock interest therein or thereby represented, viz:

1. Twenty-five thousand nine hundred and ninety shares of the pital stock of the California Improvement Company;

2. Ten thousand shares of the capital stock of the Empire Con-ruction Company;

3. Three thousand shares of the capital stock of the Los Angeles erminal Land Company;

4. Two hundred and fifty thousand shares of the capital 54 stock of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company (including those held by the directors of said railroad mpany), subject to the pledge and deposit of all the foregoing ares with Kuhn, Loeb & Co., duly assigned in blank, as part of the llateral for a loan of $25,000,000 made by said Kuhn, Loeb & Co. to id railroad company, and in order to secure the transfer of which reunder the said parties of the first and second parts have executed order to said Kuhn, Loeb & Co. as follows:

NEW YORK, ——, 190

To Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb & Co.:

There have heretofore been deposited and pledged with you under the terms of a certain agreement dated June 3, 1903, between yourselves and the San Pedro, Los Angeles, and Salt Lake Railroad Company, as part of the collateral security for the loan therein provided for, two hundred and fifty thousand shares of the capital stock of the said San Pedro, Los Angeles, and Salt Lake Railroad Company, all except directors' shares being owned by William A. Clark and Edward H. Harriman.

This is to authorize and direct you, upon the payment of the loan described in said agreement with the interest thereon, and 855 upon the satisfaction of the obligations therein contained, to deliver all of the said shares of stock to The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, of the city of New York, to be held by said trust company under the terms of a certain stock-trust agreement dated June 7, 1903.

If hereafter you decline to make the additional loan described in said first-mentioned agreement, and are called upon to surrender the two-sevenths in par amount of said shares of stock as provided in said agreement, this directs you to deliver the stock so to be surrendered to or upon the joint order of William A. Clark and Edward H. Harriman, their executors and administrators.

San Pedro, Los Angeles, and Salt Lake Railroad Company, by ——— ———, president, and ——— ———, secretary.

WILLIAM A. CLARK.
EDWARD H. HARRIMAN.

Notice of above direction accepted:

KUHN, LOEB & CO.

So soon as the said shares of stock so transferred hereunder shall be received by the trustee, the same shall at once be transferred 856 upon the books of said respective corporations into the name of the trustee, and all of the terms and conditions of this instrument shall at once attach thereto and all property in the said stock shall be deemed vested in the trustee as fully and to the same extent, and with the same force and effect, as if actual transfer and delivery of said shares of stock had been, at the time of the execution of this instrument, duly made to the trustee hereunder.

In case Kuhn, Loeb & Co. shall hereafter decline to make the additional loan of $10,000,000 provided for in their agreement with the San Pedro Company, dated June 3, 1903, and shall surrender to the parties of the first and second parts two-sevenths in par amount of the capital stock of the San Pedro Company, the said parties of the first and second parts hereby covenant with each other that they

e same or so much thereof as may be necessary as part of the colteral security to be given to some other lender who shall make a an of not exceeding $10,000,000 to said San Pedro Company, and at, upon making said loan by said other lender, the parties of the st and second parts will execute and deliver to said lender an order r the delivery of said shares of stock by said lender to the trustee, in like form as said order hereinbefore set forth, requiring 7 said lender, upon the payment or other satisfaction of the loan and lien under which said shares may be pledged to him, to liver said stock to said trustee for said account of said parties of e first and second parts as such trustees; and that in all other re-ects any shares of stock so surredered to them by said Kuhn, Loeb
Co. shall be deemed sold, transferred, and delivered to the trustee, d shall be subject to and bound by all of the terms of this agree-ent.

SECTION 2. The parties of the first and second parts further covent and agree to and with each other, and to and with the trustee, at from time to time, and when, individually or as trustee, they all or may hereafter jointly secure by purchase or otherwise any ditional shares of the capital stock of either or any of said several mpanies named in section 1 of this article, whether such stock be w issued or hereafter may be issued, they will immediately sell, sign, deliver, and set over to the trustee any and all such shares of ock, subject to all the terms and trusts of this agreement.

SECTION 3. The parties of the first and second parts further severally covenant and agree to and with each other, and to and 8 with the trustee, that in case either of the parties of the first or second parts or their respective cestuis que trust shall here-ter secure, by purchase or otherwise, any further or additional ares of capital stock of any of the said companies mentioned in ction 1 hereof, and not theretofore deposited with the trustee, hether such capital stock be now issued or at any time hereafter be sued by any of said companies, such acquisition, however made, all be for and upon their joint account, at joint cost, and for the ual benefit and ownership of the parties of the first and second rts and their respective cestui que trust, and that the same shall , whether it be stock now issued or stock which may be at any time reafter issued by any of the said companies, if and when the cost ereof shall be borne or paid jointly by the parties of the first and cond parts hereto, in like manner immediately assigned, transrred, and delivered to the trustee, and shall be and become subject the terms hereof. But if the other of said first party or said second rty shall not, on demand of the party who made such acquisition, for whom such acquisition was made, pay one-half of the cost thereof to the party acquiring the same, then such party who acquired the same, may, but not otherwise, hold and own 859 additional shares as his own, and free from the terms of agreement, and free from any claim of interest therein by other party hereto.

SECTION 4. The parties of the first and second parts further co nant to and with each other, and to and with the trustee, that in they or either of them shall in any manner or at any time hereaf secure or acquire any of said additional shares of said capital stock any of said companies, which is now issued or may hereafter be is by any of said companies, he or they will immediately inform and vise each of the other parties hereto of the time, manner, terms, price at which such stock was secured or acquired, with an offer subject the same to the terms of this agreement, and also that th will at once cause the trustee to be fully informed of any increas capital stock of any of said companies which may at any time he after be authorized or made, and of the terms and conditions u which the same is provided to be issued or is issued.

SECTION 5. The trustee shall have and hold all of the said shares said capital stock of each of the companies mentioned in section 1 this article, and the certificates representing the same, and which on the execution hereof, delivered to said trustee, as well a 860 as any and all such shares of capital stock mentioned in s tions 2 and 3 of this article, which may hereafter be deliv to the trustee, its successors or assigns, upon the trusts hereina specified, from and after the execution hereof and for the term years from the day when the railroad of the San Pedro, Los Ange and Salt Lake Railroad Company, or its successor, shall be opened business from Salt Lake City, Utah, to San Pedro, California.

Article II.

Directors' qualifying shares.

Enough shares of capital stock in each of the said companies m tioned in Article I hereof to qualify the directorate in each of th shall be reserved from the disposition of said shares of capital st hereinafter provided, and the same shall be assigned and transfer by the trustee to the names of the persons selected to be or who sh be from time to time elected to such directorate. Such directo qualifying certificates of shares, however, shall be at once assig in blank by said directors and be delivered to and held in t custody of the trustee, to be used for said purpose, but subject to terms of this instrument.

Article III.

The trustee, its successors and assigns, shall cause all of the said ares of capital stock (except those necessary to qualify the directors aforesaid), and all the certificates thereof mentioned in Article I reof, as well as all other shares of capital stock which may at any me hereafter be delivered to the trustee under this instrument, to be mediately and from time to time transferred to it as trustee, upon e respective transfer books of the said several companies, and there- ter the trustee shall be possessed of and hold all of the said stock d certificates as trustee under this instrument, with full power to ld the same as the owner of the legal title thereto, but subject as tween the parties to this instrument and their assigns to all the usts in this instrument declared.

Article IV.

SECTION 1. The trustee shall issue "certificates of interest" against l of said shares of capital stock, and the certificates of capital stock hich may now be, or which may hereafter be at any time issued by y of said several companies, and by or for the parties of the first and second parts deposited with and assigned to the trustee to be and to become subject to the terms of this instrument, which said certificates of interest shall be issued by it to and the names of "William A. Clark, trustee, and Edward H. Harriman, trustee," duly certified and issued under the hand of its proper ficers and entered upon correct books of record which shall be kept the trustee, showing the details of the issuance and transfers of ch certificates in the usual manner and form of well organized corrations dealing with such matters.

SECTION 2. Said certificates may be in substantially the following rm:

The Farmers Loan and Trust Company,

in

o. ——. ——— shares.

This certificate of interest is issued to ——— ———, pursuant to e provisions of a certain stock trust agreement, dated June 7, 1903, ade by and between William A. Clark, contracting for himself and trustee for his associates, as party of the first part; Edward H.

Harriman, as trustee, as party of the second part, and 863 undersigned, as party of the third part, and reference to agreement, an original of which has been lodged with the signed, is hereby made.

This certificate of interest is based upon ——— ——— shares the capital stock of the ——— ——— of the par value of one hu dred dollars each, which have been sold, assigned, delivered, a transferred to the undersigned as trustee under said agreement.

This certificate is not negotiable and not transferable, except the written consent of William A. Clark, trustee, and Edward Harriman, trustee, in the form of transfer and consent endorsed this certificate, nor until this certificate shall be surrendered to undersigned for cancellation, as provided by said agreement.

The holder or holders of this certificate of interest is and are titled to receive the net proceeds (after paying the cost of col ing and disbursing the same, including the trustee's fees) of dividend or dividends declared or to be declared and of any which may come into the possession of the undersigned as the or owner of any of the shares of capital stock of the said — ——— Company in respect of which this certificate is 864 At the end of the full term of ten years from the da which the railroad of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt L Railroad Company shall be opened for business from Salt Lake C
Utah, to San Pedro, California, the registered holder of this cer cate may surrender the same to the undersigned, and upon pay of any sums due or to become due to the trustee under the ter said agreement shall be entitled to receive from the trustee cer cates in the name of such holder for the shares of capital stock respect of which this certificate was issued.

By the acceptance of this certificate the holder thereof shall bound by all the terms and provisions of said agreement, dated J 7, 1903, as fully and to the same extent as if such holder were a p thereto and had duly executed an agreement to abide thereby; no holder thereof, other than "William A. Clark, trustee, and ward H. Harriman, trustee," whether the cestui que trust of Clark or of said Harriman, nor any other persons, shall have interest, legal or equitable, in this certificate or in the shares of ital stock upon which the same is issued, unless or until the Clark, trustee, and said Harriman, trustee, shall have each in w consented thereto.

865 When so assigned, this certificate shall be transferred upon surrender thereof to the trustee and upon the exec

y the transferee of an agreement in the form prescribed by the said tock trust agreement.

THE FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY,
Trustee.

By ——— ———.

Attest:

Secretary.

There shall be endorsed upon said certificates of interest a form f assignment substantially in the following form:

Assignment.

For value received, —— hereby sell, assign, and transfer unto —— ——— the within certificate of interest based upon ——— — shares of the capital stock of the ——— ———, and all of — interest therein, and do hereby irrevocably appoint ——— — attorney to transfer said certificate upon the books of The armers' Loan and Trust Company, with full power of substitution n the premises.

Dated ———.

No such assignment shall become effectual to pass any title to or right or interest in the said certificate, or in the shares f capital stock upon which the same is based, until there shall have een endorsed in writing thereon a consent substantially in the fol- owing form:

"Consent is hereby given to the above assignment of this certifi- ate, and to the transfer thereof, to ——— ———.

"WILLIAM A. CLARK, Trustee.
"EDWARD H. HARRIMAN, Trustee.

"In presence of:

Nor shall such assignment or consent be received from any in- ended transferee by the trustee for any purpose until such intended ransferee shall have executed and delivered to the trustee, by en- orsing the same upon such certificate so to be transferred, an under- aking in the following form:

"The undersigned accept this certificate, subject to all the terms nd conditions of the agreement dated June 3, 1903, therein men- ioned, by which the undersigned agree to be fully bound as if a arty thereto, and agree ——— ——— to hold all interest acquired hereby, and by any new certificate of interest, if any, issued in re- pect thereof under and subject to the terms of said agreement."

867 Upon the due execution of all of which and the presentation thereof to the trustee, it may, but not otherwise, cause such transfers to be made and entered of record.

SECTION 3. Said certificates of interest as to the shares of stock in each of said several companies shall be issued and delivered to the parties of the first and second parts in their joint names, in equal amount, so that each of the parties of the first and second parts shall respectively receive from the trustee each one-half in number and one-half in par value of the capital stock in each of said companies now or from time to time transferred or delivered to the trustee and in respect of which said certificates of interest may be issued.

SECTION 4. No transfer of any of such certificates of interest shall be made by the trustee upon its books or otherwise, unless such certificates shall be first surrendered and returned to the trustee for cancellation and shall have been by it canceled; nor unless the same shall each bear endorsed thereon the written consent to such transfer signed by each of said parties of the first and second parts, nor until such proposed transferee shall in writing consent to all the terms of 868 this instrument and agree to be bound thereby as if a party thereto, and to be bound and limited by the terms and conditions written in and endorsed upon said certificates of interest.

SECTION 5. The trustee may from time to time make such reasonable rules respecting the making and issuance of certificates of interest, and the transfer thereof, as it may find necessary; and, upon the written request of all the holders of outstanding certificates of interest, it shall make, adopt, and enforce any rule or regulation concerning the assignment or transfer of such certificates of interest which all of said holders of outstanding certificates of interest may so request.

Article V.

SECTION 1. The trustee may collect any dividends paid or payable declared or to be declared, by any of said companies, and any funds due to any of them from any source whatever, in respect of the said shares of capital stock so held by the trustee, and shall immediately upon such receipt and collection of any such dividends or funds, pay over any such dividends or funds to the parties of the first and second parts, or their successors or assigns, ratably and according 869 to their respective holdings of said certificates of interest representing the stock upon which such dividends or funds have been paid as appears by the records of the trustee, and may also pay over the like ratable proportion of any such dividends or funds to any registered holder of such certificates of interest, whose holding thereof was acquired by any assignment of such certificates of interest, with and upon the written consent of the parties of the first and second parts, and upon the said transfers, consent, and undertaking, as provided by section 4 of Article IV of this agreement.

SECTION 2. The trustee will at any time, upon the written request of the parties of the first and second parts, or the successor in trust of either of them, issue to the persons jointly named by said parties of the first and second parts, or said successor, its proxy or proxies upon all of the shares of capital stock of each of said several companies then held by it and registered in its name, to be voted at any annual, special, adjourned, or called meeting, of the stockholders of any of the said companies.

SECTION 3. At least sixty days before the day of the annual meeting of the stockholders of any of the said companies, the parties of the first and second parts shall, in writing, either jointly or 870 separately, notify the trustee of the names of the persons to whom the trustee shall issue the proxy or proxies mentioned in section 2 of this article. If the names so notified to the trustee are not identical, the trustee shall transmit to each of the parties a copy of the said notice of the other party, and unless thirty days before the day of such annual meeting the parties of the first and second parts shall have lodged with the trustee an agreement or consent to the names of the same persons to whom said proxies shall issue, it shall then be the duty of the trustee, not less than twenty days before the day of such meeting of the stockholders, to call, in writing, upon each of the parties of the first and second parts to each nominate a number of persons, not more than one-half of the number of persons to be elected as directors at such meeting, and thereupon the trustee shall issue its proxy or proxies to such person or attorney as it may select to appear at such annual meeting, and there to vote all the shares of capital stock in such company so held by said trustee, for directors thereof, one-half of the number of directors to be the persons so nominated to it for such purpose by each of the said parties of the first and second parts, respectively. Any communication provided to be made hereby may be made between the parties 871 or their duly appointed attorney by letter or by telegrams sent at the expense of the trust. In case the number of directors to be chosen for any such company shall be an odd number, then the president of the trustee shall be elected as one of said directors, unless said parties of the first and second parts shall jointly nominate another person to be so elected, and the remaining directors shall be elected, one-half from the persons nominated for such office by the party of the first part, and one-half from the persons nominated for such office by the party of the second part.

SECTION 4. If the said parties shall include in their said nominations of persons to be voted for as directors by the trustee, as provided for in section 3 of this article, the names of the same person or persons, the trustee shall, by letter or by telegram, notify each of said parties of the first and second parts of the fact of such double nomination, and in such case either of said parties may withdraw the name of the person so twice nominated and substitute the name of another person to be voted for by the trustee or its attorney in fact; but in case either of said parties of the first or second parts shall fail to nominate some person in lieu of the person so nomi-872 nated by both parties, then the president of the trustee shall select some managing officer of the trustee to be voted for as such director in lieu of one of said double nominations by one of said parties.

SECTION 5. In case it shall happen at any time while the capital stock of the said several companies, or any of them, remains deposited with the trustee, that the stockholders in any of said companies shall be called at any regular or special meeting to act upon any question other than the election of directors, the trustee shall issue its proxy upon said capital stock to the person or persons whom the said parties of the first and second parts may jointly request. In case the said parties shall not agree as to the person so to be appointed, the trustee shall select some discreet and proper person to vote upon such question in such meeting in the manner and as the parties hereto may in writing request; and in case no such request shall be jointly made by said parties, then the trustee shall vote upon such question upon the stock so held by it in the manner and as the president of the trustee shall determine.

SECTION 6. The initiative in all matters in this article provided shall be taken by the parties of the first and second parts 873 hereto, and the trustee shall not be charged with any duty except as in this article provided, in case of a failure of the said parties of the first and second parts to agree in direction to the trustee as in this instrument provided.

Article VI.

SECTION 1. None of the stock held by the trustee under the terms of this agreement and none of the certificates of interest issued thereunder shall, until the end of the full term of the ten years hereinafter created, be in any manner or for any purpose sold, assigned or transferred, or otherwise disposed of, or shall any interest therein or right thereto, legal or equitable, be sold, transferred, or assigned or otherwise disposed of by either the party of the first or the party of the second part hereto except upon the consent in writing of the other of said parties first had and obtained and lodged with the trustee; nor unless the party hereto desiring to effect such sale, assignment, or transfer, or other disposition shall have first offered the other of said parties hereto the right and opportunity to purchase the same stock certificates, interest, legal or equitable, or right, on as favorable terms, and such party shall neglect to avail himself 874 of such opportunity for the space of thirty days.

SECTION 2. Nothing in this article, however, shall be construed to prohibit either of the said parties of the first and second parts, respectively, from making and delivering to himself or to his cestuis que trust or associates receipts or other instruments, in form negotiable or otherwise, hereinafter termed "certificates of interest," in respect of the number of shares of stock in each of said companies which he has or which such associates or cestuis que trust have deposited under said trust or with their said respective personal trustees under some agreement satisfactory to such personal trustee and to the owners of such capital stock so deposited with the said personal trustee; but such agreement or arrangement shall be so made as to provide that none of the owners of such certificates of interest so issued by either one of the said personal trustees shall, by virtue of such ownership or otherwise, in any manner interfere with the control, ownership, use, custody, and possession of said third party of the capital stock so deposited by said personal trustee with the trustee under this agreement, nor shall any such arrangement or agreement charge the trustee under this agreement 875 with any duty to any holder of any such personal trustee certificate, nor shall the party of the third part be required to recognize any such personal trustee certificate in any manner or for any purpose whatever.

SECTION 3. At the end of the term hereby created the parties of the first and second parts covenant to and with each other and to and with the trustee to surrender to the said trustee any and all certificates of interest issued by the trustee and respectively held by them, or either of them, and thereupon the trustee may, and it hereby covenants and agrees to and with each of the other parties hereto that it will, upon the request of either of said other parties, assign the capital stock or capital-stock certificates represented by said surrendered certificates of interest jointly to and in the names of the parties of the first and second parts, and shall deliver to each of the said parties of the first and second parts the certificates of capital stock in any of said several companies which are represented by the certificates of interest issued against the said capital stock by the trustee, and which shall be surrendered to the trustee by said respective parties, or it may, upon a like surrender by the holders thereof, assign into the names of such holders of its certificates of 876 interest and deliver to such holder or holders of its said certificates of interest the number of shares of capital stock in any of said companies, and in the par value in respect of which the trustee had issued its said certificates of interest, provided that such holder or holders of said certificates took and held the same under the terms and upon the written consents of the said parties of the first and second parts, and upon the other conditions provided for by this instrument; and upon such assignment and delivery the said capital stock may be transferred upon the books of the said several companies into the names of such assignees. Upon any such assignment and delivery of said shares of capital stock by the trustees to the holders of any certificate of interest issued by the trustee, the trustee shall not thereafter be charged with any duty of liability in respect of any of said capital stock or certificate of interest.

SECTION 4. Each of the parties of the first and second parts covenants with the other that any and all shares of stock and stock certificates received by him, under the terms of section 3 of this article, will not be sold or offered for sale at any time after receiving the same, until the other of said parties shall have been given 877 the right to purchase such shares of capital stock on as favorable terms as the same or any part thereof are offered for sale or agreed to be sold, or sold to any other person, firm, or company, it being the intention of each of the parties hereto to give to the other a preferential right to purchase any of said shares of capital stock upon any sale or other disposition thereof.

Article VII.

SECTION 1. In case the parties of the first and second parts, respectively, may desire to wind up the business, distribute the assets, or otherwise bring about a dissolution of the said California Improvement Company, the Empire Construction Company and the Los Angeles Terminal Land Company, or some of them, or for any other purpose to withdraw the shares of stock of any of said companies from the trust hereby created, then upon the surrender of the certificates of interest issued by the trustee in respect of the shares of the capital stock of any such company, the trustee may, and upon the joint request of the parties of the first and second parts shall, assign the said stock certificate and deliver the same to such person or persons as may be named in such request; and thereupon the 878 trustee shall not be further charged in respect to any stock in or business of such company and this agreement shall no longer affect the same.

Article VIII.

SECTION 1. The provisions of this agreement shall be binding and in full force and effect from the date hereof and for the further full term of ten years from the day on which the railroad of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company shall be opened for business between Salt Lake City, Utah, and San Pedro, California; and the parties of the first and second parts covenant and agree that they will cause the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company to certify to the trustee the date at which it is so open for business, and that the said certificate shall be conclusive as to the fact so stated.

SECTION 2. It is nevertheless agreed by all the parties hereto that this agreement may at any time be modified, changed, or abrogated, in whole or in part, upon the consent of all of the holders of record of the said certificates of interest issued by the trustee if and when the same is approved in writing by the trustee.

Article IX.

879 SECTION 1. The parties of the first and second parts jointly and severally covenant and agree to and with each other and with the trustee to indemnify it and to save and keep it harmless from any loss, charges, or damages which the trustee may incur by reason of its holding the legal title to or the ownership in and custody of the said several shares of capital stock in any of said several companies.

SECTION 2. They also covenant and agree to pay each one-half of the reasonable compensation to be paid to the trustee for itself and for its agents, servants, or attorneys, for anything done or to be done by them or any of them in the performance of the duties of the trustee under the terms of this instrument, and any costs, damages, or expenses incurred by the trustee in any suit or action which may be brought or conducted by any person having or claiming to have an interest in the subject-matter of the trust estate and in which the trustee may be sued or, if it elect, in which it may voluntarily appear.

Article X.

SECTION 1. In case the said William A. Clark shall at any time die or resign as trustee for his said cestui que trust, or if he shall for any reason be unable to discharge the duties of his trust, then the 880 holder or holders of certificates of interest, issued by said William A. Clark to himself and to the persons who deposited any of said capital stock with said Clark may, by a majority vote of all shares represented in said certificates, select some other person to be trustee in lieu and in place of said William A. Clark; and upon said selection being certified to said trustee by the written certificate of the said holders of said certificates, the cestuis que trust making such selection, the said person so selected in place of said Clark may execute the copy of said agreement in the custody of the party of the third part, and thereafter shall in all respects, rights, duties, privileges, conditions, and matters be substituted for said Clark to all intents and purposes, as if such person had been originally the party to this instrument instead of said Clark.

SECTION 2. In case the said Edward H. Harriman shall at any time die or resign as trustee for his said cestuis que trust, or if he shall for any reason be unable to discharge the duties of his trust, then the holder or holders of certificates of interest issued by said Edward H. Harriman in respect of said capital stock may, by a majority vote of all of said certificates of interest, select some other person to be trustee in lieu and in place of said Edward H.
881 Harriman; and upon said selection being certified to said trustee by the written certificate of the said holders of said certificates, the cestuis que trust making such selection, the said person so selected in place of said Harriman may execute the copy of said agreement in the custody of the party of the third part, and thereafter shall in all respects, rights, duties, privileges, conditions, and matters be substituted for said Harriman to all intents and purposes as if such person had been originally the party to this instrument instead of said Harriman.

In testimony whereof the said party of the first part and the said party of the second part have hereunto subscribed their names and affixed their seals; and the said party of the third part, for the purpose of signifying its acceptance of the trust herein and hereby created, has caused these presents to be signed by its president, sealed with its corporate seal, and attested by its secretary, the day and year first above written.

Signed in triplicate.

883 No. 993. United States Circuit Court, District of Utah.

In equity.

The United States of America, complainant, v. Union Pacific Railroad Company et al., defendants. Answer of the defendant, Edward H. Harriman. (Filed April 6, 1908.)

884 United States Circuit Court, District of Utah. No. 993. In equity.

The United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, The Great Northern Railway Company, The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, James Stillman, Henry H. Rogers, Henry C. Frick, and William A. Clark, defendants.

885 Separate answer of the defendant, Edward H. Harriman, to the original petition of the United States of America.

This defendant now and at all times hereafter saving to himself all manner of benefit and advantage of exception which can or may be taken to the many errors, uncertainties, and other imperfections in the complainant's petition contained, or to so much and such parts thereof as he may be advised it is material or necessary for him to make answer unto, answering, says:

I. He admits that all the corporations mentioned in Subdivision I of the petition were at the times alleged in the petition and are now common carriers employed in the transportation of freight and passengers within and among those States and Territories of the United States in and through which the transportation lines owned by them respectively are located, and not further or otherwise, but were and are to that extent engaged in trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations.

II. (1) He denies that from January 1, 1901, or at any time he and the defendants, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, and 886 James Stillman, with certain other persons, including the defendants, Henry H. Rogers and Henry C. Frick, have owned or controlled a majority of the capital stock of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(2) He admits that on the 23d day of May, 1898, he became and ever since has been and still is the chairman of the executive committee of the board of directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company; and that on the 7th day of January, 1904, he became and ever since has been and still is president of said corporation.

(3) He admits that the said Jacob H. Schiff became a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 1st day of March, 1898, and continued to be a director of said company until the 10th day of April, 1906, when he resigned.

(4) He admits that the said Otto H. Kahn became a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 1st day of July, 1897, and continued to be a director of said company until the 10th day of April, 1906, when he resigned.

(5) He admits that the said James Stillman became a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 6th day of December, 1897, and continued to be a director of said company until the 887 13th day of February, 1908, when he resigned.

(6) He admits that the said James Stillman was a member of the executive committee of the board of directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company from the 8th day of December, 1897, until the 13th day of February, 1908, and that the said Otto H. Kahn was a member of said committee from the 8th day of December, 1897, until the 10th day of April, 1906.

(7) He admits that during all of said time the said Jacob H. Schiff and Otto H. Kahn were and still are members of a banking firm of the city of New York, doing business under the name and style of "Kuhn, Loeb & Co," but denies that said banking house has been or is the "fiscal agent" of the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company; and he admits that some of the stocks referred to in the petition were bought by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, respectively, from time to time through said banking house, and that some of the bonds issued by said companies were sold to said firm.

(8) He admits that defendant Henry H. Rogers became a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 8th day of October, 1901, and that defendant Henry C. Frick became a director of 888 said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 11th day of October, 1904, and that both the said Rogers and the said Frick have ever since been and still are members of said board of directors.

(9) Except as herein admitted he denies each and every allegation of Subdivision II of the petition.

III. (1) He admits that defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company owns a line of railroad extending from Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Ogden, Utah, which it acquired in 1897 at a sale made under decrees foreclosing the lien of the Government of the United States thereon arising under the acts of Congress mentioned in Subdivision III of the petition and foreclosing mortgages securing bonds issued by the company incorporated under said act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, to construct said railroad, and has ever since owned said line.

(2) He admits that defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company owns a line of railroad from Kansas City, Missouri, to Denver, Colorado, which it acquired in 1898 under decrees foreclosing the lien of the Government of the United States thereon arising under the acts of Congress mentioned in said subdivision of the petition and foreclosing mortgages securing bonds issued by the "Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division," and the "Kansas Pacific Railway Company," and has ever since owned said line.

(3) He admits that defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company owns a line of railroad extending from Denver to Cheyenne, Wyoming, which it acquired at a sale under foreclosure decrees in 1898, and has ever since owned said line; and that said defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company also owns a line of railroad from Julesburg to La Salle, Colorado, which it acquired by purchase from the owners thereof in 1899, and which it has ever since owned.

(4) He admits the consolidation of "The Union Pacific Railroad Company," incorporated under the act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, the "Kansas Pacific Railway Company," and the "Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company" into and under the name, style, and title of "The Union Pacific Railway Company," and avers that such consolidation occurred on or about January 24, 1880.

(5) He admits that the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California was organized under the laws of the State of California, and he admits that the Western Pacific Railroad Company was also organized under the laws of said State. He admits that the said Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the said Western Pacific Railroad Company were consolidated into and under the name, style, and title of "Central Pacific Railroad Company." He admits that said Western Pacific Railroad Company constructed a line of railroad from San Francisco to Sacramento, California, and that said Central Pacific Railroad Company commenced the construction, and after the consolidation aforesaid the company formed by such consolidation completed the said railroad from Sacramento to Ogden, Utah, where it connects with the main line of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(6) He refers to the said acts of Congress approved July 1, 1862 (12 Stat., 489), July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 356), and June 20, 1874 (18 Stat., 111), for answer to the allegations of the petitions respecting the aid granted in bonds and land to, and the duties and responsibilities imposed by said acts upon, the corporations aided and authorized by said acts to construct the railroads therein mentioned and provided for and to the several acts and joint resolutions of Congress amendatory of and supplementary to the aforesaid acts. (7) He admits that since 1897 the Oregon Short Line Railr
pany each has owned lines of railroad as alleged in Subdivision of the petition.

(8) He admits that defendants Union Pacific Railroad Compa
Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and the Oregon Railro and Navigation Company each owns and operates important bra lines of railroad.

(9) He admits that prior to January 1, 1901, the Union Pac Railroad Company acquired and has ever since owned and still o substantially all the capital stock of defendant Oregon Short L Railroad Company, and that prior to said date the Oregon Sh Line Railroad Company acquired and has ever since owned and s owns substantially all the capital stock of defendant the Oreg Railroad and Navigation Company.

(10) He admits that by means of such stock ownership the Un Pacific Railroad Company has since its acquisition been a 892 to elect, by voting upon such stock through its proxies, directors of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, a that the latter, by voting upon said stock through its proxies, h elected the directors of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Co pany, but he avers that the railroads and other property of t Oregon Short Line Railroad Company have at all times been co trolled, managed, and operated by said Oregon Short Line Railr Company, in its own name and by its own officers and agents: a that the railroads and other property of the Oregon Railroad a Navigation Company have at all times been controlled, managed, a operated by the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company in own name and by its own officers and agents.

(11) He admits that prior to and at all times since the 1st day
January, 1901, the lines of railroad owned by defendant Un Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Compa and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, respectiv have been operated as one system, and that said lines, extending fr Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Kansas City, Missouri, to Ogden, and S Lake City, Utah, Butte, Montana, and Portland, Oregon, have co posed and still compose continuous through lines, operated h moniously and, so far as affecting the shipping and travel 893 public, practically as if owned and operated by a single co
pany.

(12) He admits that in the year 1901 the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company owned three steamships averaging about 1,350 net tons each, plying between Portland and San Francisco, by way of the Willamette and Columbia Rivers and the Pacific Ocean; and he avers that in the year 1904, the San Francisco and Portland Steamship Company, a corporation of the State of California, was organized, that all of its stock was acquired by the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company and two of said steamships were transferred by charter to said San Francisco and Portland Steamship Company, and said San Francisco and Portland Steamship Company has since operated and now regularly operates two steamships, one of 2,317 tons and one of 1,836 tons, between San Francisco and Portland, via the Pacific Ocean and the Willamette and Columbia Rivers.

(13) He denies that the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company ever operated a line of steamships or any steamships between Portland, Oregon, and Japan and China or other Asiatic ports.

(14) He admits that on or about the 14th day of January, 1901, the Portland and Asiatic Steamship Company was incorporated under the laws of the State of Oregon with a capital of $100,000, and that all of its capital stock was acquired and has ever since been and still is owned by said the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company; and he admits that said Portland and Asiatic Steamship Company has sometimes operated steamships between Portland, Oregon, and Asiatic ports under charter; but he denies that said steamship company has ever owned or now owns any steamships or has ever operated or now operates any regular line of steamships.

(15) He denies that it has been or ever was practicable for the said steamships operated by the Portland and Asiatic Steamship Company to compete to any considerable or substantial extent with lines of steamships operated between San Francisco and Asiatic ports and Puget Sound and Asiatic ports for traffic originating in the interior of the United States or on the Atlantic seaboard.

(16) He admits that the Southern Pacific Company was, on January 1, 1901, and still is, the owner of a large majority of the capital stock of corporations which separately own and operate connecting links of a line of railroad extending from New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, and Galveston, in the State of Texas, and through the States of Louisiana and Texas and the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the States of California and Oregon to Los Angeles and San Francisco and other points in California, and to Portland, Oregon.

(17) He admits that said Southern Pacific Company, in 190 owned and operated and has ever since owned and operated and now owns and operates lines of steamships between New York and New Orleans and New York and Galveston and between New Orleans and Havana which connect at New Orleans and Galveston with said rail lines.

(18) He admits that on the 1st day of January, 1901, the Southern Pacific Company owned, has ever since owned, and now owns all the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, which he avers is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Utah, and which acquired and now owns and operates all the railroads and other property formerly owned and operated by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, the corporations referred to in the aforesaid acts of Congress and by the California corporation into which they were merged by consolidation; and he also avers that said Southern Pacific Company on and prior to the 1st day of January, 190 and ever since that date has held, possessed, and operated

896 and still holds, possesses, and operates the railroads of said Central Pacific Railway Company, with their appurtenances under and by virtue of instruments of lease theretofore made and entered into.

(19) He admits that on January 1, 1901, said Southern Pacific Company owned, has ever since owned, and still owns 100,500 shares out of a total of 200,000 shares, of the capital stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and that said Pacific Mail Steamship Company during all said period has operated a line of steamships between San Francisco, the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippine Islands and Chinese and Japanese ports; and also a line of steamships between San Francisco and Panama; but he denies that the said lines of steamships, with the railroad of the Panama Railroad Company and steamships operating on the Atlantic Ocean, form a through line between New York and San Francisco via the Isthmus of Panama.

(20) He denies that the said rail lines from the Mississippi River to Portland, Oregon, by way of Los Angeles and San Francisco were at any time in competition with the said lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for the transportation of freight

897 between points in the Mississippi Valley and in the Eastern States or elsewhere and the Pacific Coast and points in Colorado and other interior States.

(21) He denies that the steamship lines of the Southern Pacific Company between New York and New Orleans and New York and Galveston, together with the rail lines in connection therewith, w n active competition with the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for a large amount of traffic originating on the Atlantic oast and in the Central States.

(22) He avers, on the contrary, that in the transcontinental lines f railroad reaching the Pacific coast south of Portland, Oregon, he Union Pacific Railroad was but a link about 1,000 miles in ength, and the Union Pacific Railroad Company merely an inter- ediate carrier without any power to make rates upon such traffic, nd that the defendant Southern Pacific Company, through its pos- ession and operation of the Central Pacific Railroad and its owner- hip of all of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, ontrolled that portion of such transcontinental line extending from Ogden, Utah, to the Pacific Ocean at San Francisco and other points n California, and no rate between the Missouri River or points east thereof and the Pacific coast south of Portland or Asiatic 98 ports could be made by the Union Pacific Railroad Company except with the consent of and by agreement with said South- rn Pacific Company; and while the said Union Pacific Railroad Company and its constituent companies, to wit, The Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, separately owned connecting lines of railroad operated s a single system as aforesaid, extending from the Missouri River to Portland, Oregon, and operated certain small steamships between Portland and San Francisco, as hereinbefore alleged, yet he avers hat such route via Portland was not only an impracticable route as competitor of said Southern Pacific Company, but any attempt of aid Union Pacific Railroad Company to use it as such competitor would have greatly injured the said Union Pacific Railroad Com- pany, because said Southern Pacific Company would thereupon have preferred the rivals of said Union Pacific Railroad Company in outing and interchanging traffic at Ogden, and the business in ton- nage and revenue which the said Union Pacific Railroad Company would thereby have lost would have greatly exceeded the total vol- me of business it could have secured over such impracticable route n competition with said Southern Pacific Company; so that the interest of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and the 99 companies formerly owning its lines always prevented it and them from using or attempting to use the said route via Port- and in competition with said Southern Pacific Company upon any usiness to or from the Pacific coast south of Portland or to or from Asiatic ports.

(23) He denies that the rail line of said Southern Pacific Com- pany between San Francisco and Portland was in active competition with the ships of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company plying between San Francisco and Portland, and avers that competition between said lines was never practicable.

(24) He denies that ships operated by the Portland and Asiatic Steamship Company between Portland, Oregon, and Asiatic ports, in connection with the rail lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or otherwise, were ever in competition with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

(25) He denies that the line of railroad composed of the tracks of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company between Ogden, Utah, and Portland, Oregon, were ever in competition with the lines of said Southern Pacific Company between said points or that such competition was ever practicable.

900 (26) He denies that any competition between the system of railroads and steamships owned and controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the system of railroads and steamships owned and controlled by the Southern Pacific Company, if any such competition ever existed, was substantial or that it included a large volume of traffic of any kind.

(27) He admits that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company has been for a period of more than eight years the owner and in control of lines of railroad as alleged in subdivision III of the petition, and admits that the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, in connection with the lines of the Central Pacific Railway Company, operated by the said Southern Pacific Company, have been during such period and still are competitors of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company for a large volume of traffic to and from the Pacific coast.

(28) He admits that the lines of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, since the completion of the same to San Francisco, California, about the year 1900, constituted the only line of transportation by rail from the Pacific coast, south of Portland, Oregon, to the Mississippi Valley and the East, except the lines

901 of the Southern Pacific Company to the Gulf of Mexico and the lines of the Central Pacific Railway Company operated by the Southern Pacific Company, in connection with the Union Pacific Railroad, until the completion of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad in the year 1905.

(29) He has no knowledge respecting the operation by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company of a line of steamships between San Diego, California, and Asiatic ports; but he denies that the traffic handled by any such steamship line, if any such line was ever operated, competitive between said Southern Pacific Company and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company and that Union Pacific Railroad Company, was of great volume and embraced both passengers and freight.

(30) He admits that the Northern Pacific Railway Company, the Great Northern Railway Company, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company each owns and operates lines of railroad substantially as alleged in said petition; but he denies that the lines of said Northern Pacific Railway Company in and of themselves are competitive with the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company; and he admits that the lines of the Chicago, Burlington 92 and Quincy Railroad Company are competitive with the lines owned and operated by the Union Pacific Railroad Company to a limited extent and between certain points.

(31) He denies that the traffic between the Pacific coast, Asiatic ports, and points on and east of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers is competitive between the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and connections owned by it and the lines of said Northern Pacific Railway Company and Great Northern Railway Company and connections and steamship lines controlled by them.

(32) He admits that the defendant, The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company is the owner of a line of railroad extending from San Pedro, on the Pacific Ocean, in the State of California, by way of Los Angeles, through the States of California and Nevada and into Utah, to Salt Lake City, and that most of said line is directly owned by said corporation, and the remainder of it is operated under lease or trackage contracts, and that the same constitutes a continuous line between San Pedro and Salt Lake City, Utah; and he denies that by said contract or otherwise there ever was any suppression or restriction of competition by said line with the lines of any defendant herein.

93 (33) He admits that the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company owns a line of railroad from Salt Lake City, Utah, to Denver, Colorado, and that it is a competitor of defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, but not of defendant Southern Pacific Company.

IV. (1) He denies that in the spring of 1901 or at any other time he and the defendants Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, and Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any of them, conspired to restrain trade and commerce among the several States and foreign countries carried on by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Southern Pacific Company or any other company, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any such trade and commerce, or to restrain or prevent competition among said railway systems or any other railway systems and said steamship lines or any other steamship lines in respect to any such commerce, or to deprive the public of the facilities and advantages in the carrying on of such trade and com merce through the independent competition, if any there was, o said railway systems and steamship lines or other railway syste or steamship lines; or that he and the said defendants or a 904 of them ever entered into a combination or conspiracy t effect a virtual or substantial consolidation of said Unio Pacific Railroad Company and any other transcontinental railw companies or steamship companies, or to place restraint upon a competitive commerce, if any such there was, carried on by such co panies, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the same, or t suppress any competition existing between any of said companies o lines by the means alleged in the petition or otherwise.

(2) He admits that on or about the 20th day of February, 19 defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company acquired by purcha from said firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. 750,000 shares of the capi stock of said Southern Pacific Company of the aggregate par val of $75,000,000 out of 1,978,399 shares of the aggregate par value $197,839,900 then issued and outstanding, but he denies that the sa stock was purchased or acquired in pursuance of any conspiracy o combination or for any of the purposes alleged in said petition.

(3) He admits that thereafter, to wit, on or about the 26th day
February, 1902, defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company sol and delivered the said 750,000 shares of the stock of said Southe Pacific Company to defendant Oregon Short Line Railro
905 Company, which has ever since owned and still owns the sa

(4) He admits that thereafter, to wit, on or about the 3d day of May, 1902, defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Compa acquired by purchase from said Kuhn, Loeb & Co. 150,000 additio shares of stock of said Southern Pacific Company, which said Oreg Short Line Railroad Company has ever since owned and still own but he denies that the said additional shares were purchased o acquired in pursuance of any conspiracy or combination or for a of the purposes alleged in the petition.

(5) He admits that thereafter, when in 1904 defendant Southe Pacific Company created an issue of preferred stock which it offer to its stockholders for subscription pro rata at par, said Oreg
Short Line Railroad Company as the owner of 900,000 shares o the common stock of said Southern Pacific Company exercised i right and subscribed for and received and has ever since owned a still owns 180,000 shares of the preferred stock of said Southe Pacific Company; and that thereafter, in 1907, when said Southe Pacific Company increased its said preferred stock by an additio issue thereof which it offered to the holders of its outstandi 906 stock for subscription pro rata at par, said Oregon Short Li

Railroad Company as the owner of 1,080,000 shares of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company exercised its right and subscribed for and received 162,000 additional shares of the preferred stock of said Southern Pacific Company, and it has ever since owned and still owns the same, so that said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company now owns 900,000 shares of common stock and 342,000 shares of preferred stock, making a total of 1,242,000 shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pacific Company out of a total of 2,726,498 shares issued and outstanding.

(6) He denies that the stock of the Southern Pacific Company so acquired and owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company is voted at the dictation and instance of the defendants Harriman, Stillman, Schiff, and Kahn, and that the directors of said company have been selected by the said Harriman, Stillman, Schiff, and Kahn.

(7) He denies that the Union Pacific Railroad Company or the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company controls or has ever controlled the management, operation, or business affairs of said Southern Pacific Company or exercised any control whatsoever over it, except such as may result from the voting upon the stock of 907 said Southern Pacific Company owned by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company at meetings of the stockholders for the election of directors of said Southern Pacific Company.

(8) He denies that the said preferred stock was issued by said Southern Pacific Company, or that any of the common stock of said company was acquired by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, or the Union Pacific Railroad Company, in pursuance of any combination or conspiracy or for any of the purposes or with the intent alleged in said petition.

(9) He admits that at the annual meetings of the stockholders of the Southern Pacific Company since the stock was so acquired and owned by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company such stock has constituted a majority of the shares represented at such meetings; and he admits that by voting upon the said shares, through its duly authorized agents and proxies, aided by the votes upon other shares owned by various other stockholders of said Southern Pacific Company, the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company has been able to elect the directors of said Southern Pacific Company; but he avers that at no such meeting have any votes ever been cast by any stockholder against the persons so elected.

(10) He admits that since April 3, 1901, a majority of 908 the persons who have been directors of said Southern Pacific Company were at the same time directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(11) He admits that the stock of said Southern Pacific Compa not owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company i owned by a large number of individuals, firms, and corporatio residing in many different places; but he denies that said stockholde are or will be unable to elect the directors of said Southern Paci Company, if they should deem it to their interest to do so, in op position to those voted for by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Com pany; and he avers that the reason why said stockholders have n heretofore elected the directors of said company is that they ha been satisfied with the directors nominated and elected by the agen and proxies of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company in co junction with the agents and proxies of other stockholders.

(12) He admits that on the 3d day of April, 1901, he beca chairman of the executive committee, and on the 26th day of Se tember, 1901, he became the president of said Southern Pacific Co pany, and ever since has been and still is such chairman a president.

909 (13) He admits that the same person is the chief traf officer, the same person the chief operating officer, and t same person the chief accounting officer of both companies, and th said companies have jointly employed numerous commercial a other agents; but he avers that a very large majority of the agen officers, and employees of said companies are separate.

(14) He admits that since about the 26th day of October, 1904, t Pacific Mail Steamship Company, the Portland and Asiatic Stea ship Company, and the San Francisco and Portland Steamship Co pany have had the same officers and agents, but denies that there e was any competition between any of said steamship companies or a railroad or steamship lines.

(15) He denies each and every allegation of Subdivision IV of t petition, respecting the said Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, Union Pac Railroad Company, and this defendant, and any conspiracy or co bination among them for any of the purposes or with any of t intents alleged; and he denies each and every allegation of said S division IV of said petition not herein expressly admitted.

V. (1) He denies that he and the said Schiff, Kahn, Sti

910 man, Union Pacific Railroad, or any of them, in the spring 1901, or at any other time, caused the Union Pacific Railro Company to acquire a majority of the stock of the Northern Pac Railway Company pursuant to any conspiracy to restrain trade a commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, or t monopolize or attempt to monopolize such trade and commerce, or suppress any competition; and he denies all the allegations of S division V of the petition respecting any conspiracy or combinat r that or any other purpose between any of the defendants to this it.

(2) He admits that in the year 1901 said Oregon Short Line Rail-ad Company purchased $37,023,000 par value of the common stock d $41,085,000 par value of the preferred stock of the Northern Pa-ic Railway Company, and that at the time of such purchase the tal stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company issued and tstanding was of the aggregate par value of $155,000,000; but he nies that such purchase was in pursuance of any conspiracy or mbination or for any of the purposes alleged in the petition.

(3) He admits the incorporation of the Northern Securities Company, and also the retirement of the preferred stock by an additional issue of common stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, as alleged in said petition.

(4) He admits the sale and transfer of said stock to the Northern curities Company, and the receipt by said Oregon Short Line Rail-ad Company of $82,491,841 par value of the stock of said Northern curities Company represented by certificates issued in his name, d in the name of Winslow S. Pierce, who was at that time general unsel of defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company; and he ad-its that neither he nor the said Pierce had any personal interest in id shares.

(5) He admits the commencement of a suit by the United States America against said Northern Securities Company and others, d the decision of said suit as alleged in the petition.

(6) He admits the commencement thereafter of a suit by him and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, Winslow S. Pierce, d the Equitable Trust Company of New York, as alleged in the tition; and he admits that the relief sought by the complainants in id suit was denied by the decrees entered therein. But he avers at the said courts by said decrees approved the distribution by the Northern Securities Company of the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and the Great Northern Railway Company complained of by defendant Oregon Short Line Rail-ad Company and its codefendants in said suit; and that as a re-lt of said distribution and of the approval of the same in said suit, e defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company during the year 04 received from the Northern Securities Company, as the interest d share of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company of the assets distributed, 281,828 shares, being 18.18 per cent of the capital stock the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and 216,520 shares, being 82 per cent of the capital stock of the Great Northern Railway mpany; and that no doubt as to the right of said Oregon Short ne Railroad Company to so receive and hold the said shares was imated by any of the courts in such suit.

(7) He avers that defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company upon the final decision of said suit proceeded from time to time to sell the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and of the Great Northern Railway Company, so received by it, as sales could be advantageously effected; and that by such sales the amount of such stock so held has been steadily reduced, so that at the date of the commencement of this suit the said Oregon Short Line
913 Railroad Company had sold all but 1,128 shares of the aggregate par value of $112,800 of the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and all but 4,041 shares of the aggregate par value of $404,100 of the stock of the Great Northern Railway Company which it had received from such distribution of the assets of said Northern Securities Company; and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, at the date of the commencement of this suit also owned 32,516 partially paid shares of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and 38,745 partially paid shares of the Great Northern Railway Company, for which it had subscribed upon increases of the stock of said companies since said distribution was made.

(8) He denies that he and the said Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, and Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any other persons associated with them, caused the said suit of Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, Winslow S. Pierce, the Equitable Trust Company of New York, and this defendant against Northern Securities Company to be prosecuted for the purpose of effectuating any conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce or to smother competition or monopolize any trade as in said petition alleged.

(9) He denies each and every allegation of said Subdivision V not herein expressly admitted.

VI. (1) He admits that prior to the year 1902 defendant William A. Clark, together with others, caused to be incorporated the defendant the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, but denies that it was for the purposes alleged in the petition, and refers to the articles of incorporation of the company for the purposes of its incorporation.

(2) He admits that on or about the 9th day of July, 1902, he entered into and executed with defendant William A. Clark an agreement in writing and that "Exhibit A" to the petition is a true copy of such agreement; but denies that said agreement was entered into for any of the purposes alleged in subdivision VI of the petition, or for any purpose not set forth or mentioned in said "Exhibit A," and he avers that in entering into and executing said contract he was acting for defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and for no other corporation or person.

(3) He admits that pursuant to the said contract, "Exhibit A," other contracts between him and the said Clark and between 915 the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company were made and entered into in June and July, 1903, but denies that any of such other contracts were of the character or for any of the purposes alleged in said subdivision VI of the petition.

(4) He admits that on or about the 7th day of June, 1903, a contract in writing bearing that date was made and entered into between him, as trustee for the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and William A. Clark, individually and as trustee for his associates, and defendant The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, of which "Exhibit B" annexed to the petition is a true copy, and that the stock of the defendant The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company was deposited with and is still held by the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, defendant, as stipulated and provided in and by said contract "Exhibit B."

(5) He denies each and every allegation of a conspiracy or combination by and between himself and the defendants Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, Clark, Union Pacific Railroad Company, and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, or any of them, for any of the objects or purposes mentioned in Subdivision VI of the petition, or 916 for any other purpose; and he denies each and every allegation in Subdivision VI of the petition not herein in this subdivision expressly admitted; and he avers the facts to be as follows, viz:

(a) As early as 1888 the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company, the corporation which formerly owned the lines of railroad now owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, resolved to construct a line of railroad from Salt Lake City, Utah, to Los Angeles, California, with various branches; and in 1890 it had constructed and put into operation the said line from Salt Like City, via Sandy, Provo, Juab, and Leamington, to Milford, a distance of 221.9 miles, and various branches, all of which are more particularly described as "Parcel I" and "Parcel II" of article second in the contract "Exhibit A" to the petition herein. It had complied with all the laws of the Territory of Utah and the State of Nevada, necessary to entitle it to construct said line and had surveyed and located the said line and under due corporate action had prepared and filed maps and profiles of the same in the proper land offices in Utah and Nevada to entitle it to, and it had acquired the right of way for, said line across the lands of the United States in a general southwesterly direction from Milford 917 through Utah and across the State of Nevada to the boundary line between the States of Nevada and California. The said maps had been approved under the rules of the Department of the Interior, and the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company had graded and completed the roadbed of said line ready for the rails from Milford to the boundary line between Utah and Nevada; and had practically completed the grading of said line from said boundary line southwesterly to Calientes, Nevada, a distance of 339 miles from Salt Lake City; and had completed the grading of a branch of said line from Calientes to Pioche, Nevada.

(b) On account of its inability at that time to procure the money necessary to complete the said line, said The Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company discontinued and suspended the work of constructing said line in 1891. The company last named continued in such financial difficulty that on or about the 13th day of October, 1893, all of its railroad and other assets were placed in the hands of receivers, who administered the same until the sale thereof under decrees of the circuit courts of the United States for the districts of Utah and Idaho, on or about the 9th day of January, 918 1897, when they were bought by or for defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company.

(c) The defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company after its acquisition of the railroads and other assets of the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company, upon the foreclosure sale thereof as aforesaid, was until 1901 financially unable actively to resume the construction of said line from Milford to Los Angeles; and in its endeavor to provide for the completion of said line of railroad it conveyed that portion of said line, including the completed grade from Milford to the boundary line between the States of Utah and Nevada, to the Utah and Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation of the State of Utah, all the capital stock of which was owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and conveyed that portion of said line from the boundary line between Utah and Nevada to the boundary line between Nevada and California, including the partially constructed grade of the main line from the Utah boundary line to Calientes, and of the branch line from Calientes to Pioche, to the Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company, a corporation of the State of Nevada, all of the capital stock of which was owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company; and to construct, complete, and own that portion 919 of said line that was to be situated in the State of California. The defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company caused to be incorporated and acquired all the capital stock of the Utah, Nevada & California Railroad Company in California.

(d) Early in 1901 said Utah & Pacific Railroad Company and said Utah, Nevada & California Railroad Company, aided and assisted by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, actively resumed the construction of the said line of railroad from Milford to Los Angeles, and to that end put a large force of men at work laying track upon and repairing where necessary the grades which had been constructed as aforesaid from Milford to Calientes, and in doing other work necessary in the construction of the said line to Los Angeles.

(e) On or about the date when the construction of said line was resumed in 1901, as aforesaid, defendant The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company was incorporated under the laws of the State of Utah with power to build or acquire railroads in that State, but it did not acquire under the laws of Nevada the right to build or acquire railroads in that State or acquire the right under the laws of California to build or acquire any railroad north or east of Riverside until long after that date. It had acquired a line of railroad of inferior character extending from San Pedro to Los Angeles, a distance of twenty-four miles, and branches from Los Angeles to Pasadena and Glendale, a distance of about twenty miles, which were the only railroads owned or controlled by said The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company when the construction of the said line from Milford to Los Angeles was resumed by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and the companies controlled by it as aforesaid. Said The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company at that time controlled, through the ownership of stock or otherwise, the Utah and California Railway Company, a corporation of the State of Utah, authorized to build a railroad in the State of Utah, but not in the States of Nevada or California.

(f) Said The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company had not at said time located any line of railroad or acquired any rights of way or done any work of constructing a railroad easterly or northerly of Riverside, California, a distance of sixty miles from Los Angeles, and said Utah and California Railway Company had not at said time located any line of railroad or acquired any rights of way or done any work of constructing a railway.

(g) Soon after the incorporation of said The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, it attempted to seize and appropriate to its own use the right of way across the State of Nevada and the partially completed grade between Calientes and the Utah boundary line, and between Calientes and Pioche, and, to that end, located and constructed by the Utah Northern and Oregon Short Line Railway Company, as hereinbefore alleged, and then owned by the Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company, and, to that end, said The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company caused the said line to be surveyed, and prepared maps and profiles adopting the same as its own, and attempted to file the same in the local land office of the United States in Nevada for the purpose of securing the right of way, and also acquired a pretended tax title thereto from Lincoln County, Nevada, and also attempted by its laborers and other employees to take forcible possession of the same.

(h) Thereupon and in order to protect its possession of and title to said grade and right of way across the State of Nevada, said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company commenced in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Nevada a suit 922 against said The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company and said Utah and California Railroad Company and others, and, upon the hearing of said cause, an injunction was issued restraining and enjoining the said defendants from interfering with the possession and rights of said complainant, and said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company in a suit against said The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company and others in Lincoln County, Nevada, procured a decree canceling and setting aside the said pretended tax titles of the defendant The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company; and the contests in the land offices of the United States between said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company and said Utah and California Railway Company involving the said right of way was finally decided by the Secretary of the Interior in favor of the said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company.

(i) As a result of such decision rendered prior to the execution of "Exhibit A" to the petition herein on July 9, 1902, the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and the said Utah and Pacific Railroad Company and said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company, controlled by it through the ownership of stock 923 established their right to the partially completed railroad and the located line and right of way therefor from Salt Lake City, Utah, to the boundary line between the States of Nevada and California, and were rapidly proceeding with the completion of said line to Los Angeles; while the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company had in operation only the aforesaid line from San Pedro to Los Angeles and branches from Los Angeles to Pasadena and Glendale, and had partially constructed an extension eastwardly for a distance of about sixty miles.

(j) And this defendant is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief avers, that defendant The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company would never have under-aken the construction of a line of railroad from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City except for its expectation and belief, and the expectation and belief of the defendant Clark, that it could acquire, without compensation, the right of way and partially constructed line located and constructed as aforesaid by the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company from Milford through Utah and across the State of Nevada to the California boundary line; and that defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company would not extend the said line by construction from Milford to Los Angeles; and 24 that when it appeared from the contests, suits, and decisions aforesaid that the said right of way and partially completed rade could not thus be acquired, and that said Oregon Short Line Railrod Company would construct and extend its own line from Milford, Utah, to Los Angeles, California, said The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company and the said Clark would ave abandoned the previously conceived purposes and intention o construct and establish a line of railroad from Los Angeles, California, to Salt Lake City, Utah, but for their ability to negotiate and xecute the contract, "Exhibit A" to the petition herein, providing or the construction and establishment of such a line under the erms and conditions in said contract set forth.

(6) He denies that the said "Exhibit A" to the petition, or that nything done in executing and carrying out the same, has suppressed, restrained, or in any manner restricted any commerce among e several States or with foreign countries.

(7) He denies that the aforesaid act of Congress approved July 2, 890, or any other law of the United States, was intended to or could nstitutionally prohibit the making or carrying out of such agreement and contract, and avers that the construction of rail-
5 roads in the States of Utah, Nevada, and California by the corporations of said States, respectively, or by corporations of her States authorized by the said States to exercise their corporate wers therein, and all agreements relating to the construction or andonment of the construction of such railroads, are matters olly to be dealt with by the laws of the States, respectively, and y law of Congress intended or construed to prohibit or regulate in any manner interfere with such contracts, corporate powers, d matters is in excess of the powers of Congress under the Contution of the United States and is therefore void.

He avers that although prosecuted diligently after the making of d contract, "Exhibit A" to the petition, the work of constructing said railroad from Milford to Los Angeles was not completed d the said line opened for business until the first day of May, 1905; d the defendants avers that on the 9th day of July, 1902, when the said agreement was made and entered into, there was not the and, from the nature of the work to be done, there could not for se eral years be, any competition of any sort between the parties to th said agreement in transportation, to be suppressed or in any wa restrained; and the possibility or probability of any suc 926 competition and of any restraint or restriction thereon was to remote and contingent to be prohibited by or to come within the provisions of the said act of Congress, approved July 2, 1890.

VII. (1) He denies that, pursuant to any conspiracy to restrai trade and commerce among the several States or with foreign na tions, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any such trade an commerce, or to restrain or prevent competition among any of sai railway systems, he and the defendants, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman Rogers, and Frick, or any of them, in the year 1904, or at any othe time, made large purchases of stock of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, aggregating $30,000,000 par value o said stock or any other amount; and he denies that he or any of th other defendants at any time demanded of any officials of the said
The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company that any o the defendants herein should be elected directors of the Atchison Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

(2) He admits that in the year 1904 the defendants, Frick and Rogers, were elected directors of the Atchison, Topeka and 927 Santa Fe Railway Company, and have since served and are still serving as such directors; but he denies that they were elected for any of the reasons alleged in Subdivision VII of the petition herein, and denies that by means of such election the de fendant Union Pacific Railroad Company has had knowledge of the affairs and business of said The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

(3) He admits that in July, 1906, defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company purchased, and has ever since owned, $10,000,00 par value of the capital stock of said The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company out of a total issue of preferred and common stock of said company outstanding of the aggregate par value of $216,199,530, but he denies that such purchase was for any of the purposes alleged in said petition.

(4) He denies that he or any associates of his or defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, or all of them, have any control, partial or otherwise, of said The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

(5) He denies that competition between the systems of railway controlled by defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company and by said The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company has to any extent been eliminated.

(6) He denies that he or any other persons alleged in said petition to be "conspirators" have caused defendant Southern Pacific Company or the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company to abandon any extensions, improvements, and additions to their lines in California or elsewhere.

(7) He admits that certain lines of railroad surveyed and partially constructed within the State of California formerly owned by corporations whose stock was owned by the Southern Pacific Company, and that certain other lines of railroad surveyed and partially constructed within the State of California formerly owned by corporations whose capital stock was owned by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company were conveyed to a company incorporated under the laws of the State of California under the name, style, and title of "Northwestern Pacific Railway Company," and that one-half of the capital stock of the last-named corporation is owned by the Southern Pacific Company and the other half by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company; but he avers that all of the corporations which owned and conveyed said lines, and the said Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company itself, were incorporated under the laws of the State of California, and that all such sales and consolidations were made and effected under and by authority of the laws of said State.

(8) He denies that the lines of railroad of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company are operated in harmony with the lines of said Union Pacific Railroad Company or said Southern Pacific Company under agreements and understandings as to rates and divisions of business and that competition between such lines has been eliminated or in any wise restricted.

(9) He denies that any of the acts or transactions alleged in said petition were committed or occurred in pursuance of any conspiracy, combination, or contract to restrain trade or commerce among the several States and with foreign countries; or in pursuance of any conspiracy or combination for any purpose.

VIII. And this defendant denies all and all manner of unlawful combination and confederacy wherewith he is by the said petition charged, without this, that if there is any other matter, cause, or thing in the petition contained material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, and avoided or denied, the same is not true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant; all of which matters and things this defendant is ready and willing to aver, maintain, and prove as this honorable court shall direct, and humbly prays to be hence dismissed with his reasonable costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

EDWARD H. HARRIMAN,
Defendant.

931 No. 993. United States Circuit Court, District of Utah. In equity.

The United States of America, complainant,
v.
Union Pacific Railroad Company et al., defendants.

932 United States Circuit Court, District of Utah. No. 993. In equity.

The United States of America, complainant, against Union Pacific Railroad Company; Oregon Short Line Railroad Company; The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company; The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company; The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company; Southern Pacific Company; Northern Pacific Railway Company; The Great Northern Railway Company; The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company; Edward H. Harriman; Jacob H. Schiff; Otto H. Kahn; James Stillman; Henry H. Rogers; Henry C. Frick; and William A. Clark, defendants.

933 The separate answer of the defendant Southern Pacific Company to the original petition of the United States of America.

This defendant now, and at all times hereafter, saving to itself all manner of benefit and advantage of exception which can or may be taken to the many errors, uncertainties, and other imperfections in the complainant's petition contained, or to so much and such parts thereof as this defendant is advised, it is material or necessary for it to make answer unto, answering, says:

(1) It admits that it and the other corporations mentioned in Subdivision I of the petition were at the times alleged in said petition and are now common carriers employed in the transportation freight and passengers within and among those States and Territories of the United States in and through which the transportation lines owned and operated by them, respectively, are located, and not further or otherwise, but were and are to that extent engaged in trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign countries.

(2) It has no knowledge respecting the matters alleged in Subdivision II of the petition.

(3) It admits that defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company since January 1, 1901, has owned and operated and now owns and operates lines of railroad extending from Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Ogden, Utah; from Kansas City, Missouri, to Denver, Colorado; from Denver to Cheyenne, Wyoming; and from Julesburg to La Salle, Colorado; and it admits that said lines of railroad, except the line from Julesburg to La Salle, were constructed by the corporations named in the petition with the aid in lands and bonds of the United States granted by the acts of Congress approved July 1, 1862 (12 Stat., 479), and July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 356), and the acts amendatory of and supplementary to the said acts.

(4) It is without knowledge of the consolidation of the corporations formerly owning the above-named lines into "The Union Pacific Railway Company," but is informed and believes that such consolidation was effected on January 24, 1880.

(5) It admits that the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California was organized under the laws of the State of California, and admits that the Western Pacific Railroad Company was also organized under the laws of said State. It admits that the said Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the said Western Pacific Railroad Company were consolidated into and under the name, style, and title of "Central Pacific Railroad Company." It admits that said Western Pacific Railroad Company constructed a line of railroad from San Francisco to Sacramento, California, and that said Central Pacific Railroad Company of California commenced the construction, and after the consolidation aforesaid the corporation formed by such consolidation completed the said railroad from Sacramento, California, to Ogden, Utah, where it connects with the main line of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(6) It refers to the said acts of Congress approved July 1, 1862 (12 Stat., 489), July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 356), and June 20, 1874 (18 Stat., 111), for answer to the allegations of the petition respecting the aid granted in bonds and land to, and the duties and responsibilities imposed by said acts upon, the corporations aided and authorized by said acts to construct the railroads therein mentioned and provided for, and to the several acts and joint resolutions of Congress amendatory of and supplementary to the aforesaid acts (

Stat., 538; 13 Stat., 504; 13 Stat., 573; 14 Stat., 355; 14 Stat., 14 Stat., 79; 14 Stat., 290; 15 Stat., 39; 15 Stat., 79; 15 St.
936 324; 15 Stat., 348; 16 Stat., 56; 16 Stat., 121; 16 Stat.,
169; 24 Stat., 488; 25 Stat., 382; 25 Stat., 439.)

(7) It admits that the defendants Oregon Short Line Railr Company and The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company o and operate the lines of railroad alleged in said petition; and it mits that they and said Union Pacific Railroad Company, resp tively, operate important branch lines of railroad.

(8) It is without knowledge respecting the control of the Ore
Short Line Railroad Company and the Oregon Railroad and Na gation Company by the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(9) It is without knowledge of the ownership by the Oregon R road and Navigation Company in 1901 or at any other time of steamships, or of the ownership of stock of the Portland and Asi Steamship Company, as alleged in the petition.

(10) It admits that it was on January 1, 1901, and still is owner of a large majority of the capital stock of corporations wh separately own and operate connecting links of a line of r 937 road extending from New Orleans, in the State of Louisi and Galveston, in the State of Texas, and through the St of Louisiana and Texas and the Territories of New Mexico and A zona, and the States of California and Oregon to Los Angeles
San Francisco and other points in California, and to Portl Oregon.

(11) It admits that in 1901 it also owned and operated, has since owned and operated and now owns and operates lines of st ships between New York and New Orleans, New York and Gal ton, and between New Orleans and Havana, which connect at N Orleans and Galveston with the said rail lines.

(12) It admits that on January 1, 1901, it owned, has ever owned and now owns all the capital stock of the Central Pa Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under laws of the State of Utah, and avers that said Central Pacific R way Company succeeded to the ownership of and now owns the road from San Francisco to Ogden with the branch lines forme owned by the Central Pacific Railroad Company as originally e ing and as constituted by the consolidation aforesaid with the Western Pacific Railroad Company; but it avers that this defend on and prior to the 1st day of January, 1901, and ever since date has held, possessed, and operated, and still ho 938 possesses, and operates all the railroads of said Central ific Railway Company with their appurtenances under and by virtue f instruments of lease theretofore made and entered into.

(13) It avers that said Central Pacific Railroad Company, as riginally existing and as constituted by the consolidation aforesaid ith the Western Pacific Railroad Company, was unable to pay its ndebtedness to the Government of the United States, arising from he issue of Government bonds under the provisions of the aforesaid cts of Congress to aid in the construction of said railroad from San rancisco to Ogden, at the maturity of said indebetdness, and was lso unable to pay its indebtedness evidenced by its own bonds, ag- regating large amounts, as such indebtedness matured during and rior to the year 1899.

(14) It avers that the said Central Pacific Railway Company, organ- ed as aforesaid under the laws of the State of Utah, acquired by pur- hase from said Central Pacific Railroad Company, on or about the 0th day of July, 1899, the railroad constructed as aforesaid from San rancisco to a connection with the Union Pacific Railroad at Ogden, with its various branches; and that the power of said Central Pacific Railroad Company to make such sale, and of the said Central Pacific Railway Company to make such purchase, as conferred upon the said corporations, respectively, by the laws f the States of Utah, Nevada, and California.

(15) It avers that such purchase and sale was made for the pur- se of paying the indebtedness of said Central Pacific Railroad ompany of the United States of America and to the holders of its wn bonds; that all such indebtedness was thereby paid and dis- harged in full, and that the incorporation and organization of said entral Pacific Railway Company and the said purchase and ale and the payment of all such indebtedness were caused and rought about by this defendant, and that the means for paying nd satisfying all such indebtedness and rehabilitating the railroads f the said Central Pacific Railway Company were provided and rocured by or at the instance of this defendant.

(16) It admits that on January 1, 1901, it owned, has ever since wned, and still owns 100,500 shares out of a total of 200,000 shares f the capital stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and hat said Pacific Mail Steamship Company, during all said period, has operated a line of steamships between San Francisco, the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippine Islands, and Chinese and Japanese ports, and also a line of steamships between San rancisco and Panama; but it denies that the said line of steam- hips, with the Panama Railroad Company and steamships oper- ting in the Atlantic Ocean, forms a through line between New ork and San Francisco via the Isthmus of Panama.

(17) It denies that the said rail lines from the Mississippi River to Portland, Oregon, by way of Los Angeles and San Francisco, were at any time in competition with the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for the transportation of freight from points in the Mississippi Valley and in the Eastern States or elsewhere to Pacific coast points and points in Colorado and other interior States; and it denies that the steamship lines of this defendant between New York and New Orleans and between New York and Galveston, together with rail lines in connection therewith, were in active competition with the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for a large amount of traffic originating on the Atlantic coast and in the Central States.

941 the Union Pacific Railroad was but a link about 1,000 miles in length, and the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company merely an intermediate carrier, without any power to make rates upon such traffic; and that this defendant through its possession and operation of the Central Pacific Railroad, under lease as aforesaid, and by its ownership of all the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, controlled that portion of such transcontinental line about 850 miles in length extending from Ogden, Utah, to the Pacific Ocean at San Francisco and other points in California, and no rate between the Missouri River or points east thereof and the Pacific coast south of Portland, or Asiatic ports, could be made by defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, except with the consent of and by agreement with this defendant; and while the defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company separately owned connecting lines of railroad operated as a single system extending from the Missouri River to Portland, Oregon, and operated certain small steamships between Portland and San Francisco, yet this defendant avers that such route via Portland was not only an impracticable route as a competitor of this defendant, but any attempt of said
942 defendants to use it as such competitor would have greatly injured defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, because this defendant would thereupon have preferred the rivals of said Union Pacific Railroad Company in routing and interchanging traffic at Ogden, and the business in tonnage and revenue which defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company would thereby have lost would have greatly exceeded the total volume of any business it could have secured over such impracticable route in competition with this defendant, so that the interest of defendant Union Pacific Railroad Compay and the companies formerly owning its lines always prevented it and them from using or attempting to use it said route via Portland in competition with this defendant upon any business to or from Pacific coast points south of Portland or to or from Asiatic ports.

(19) It denies that its rail line between San Francisco and Portland was in active competition with any ships of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company between San Francisco and Portland, and avers that competition between said lines was never practicable.

(20) It denies that the ships operated by the Portland and Asiatic Steamship Company in connection with the rail lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or otherwise, between Portland, Oregon, and Asiatic ports, were ever in competition with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

(21) It denies that the line of railroad composed of the tracks of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company between Ogden and Portland were ever in active competition with the lines of this defendant between said points.

(22) It denies that any competition between the system of railroads and steamships owned and controlled by this defendant and the system of railroads and any steamships owned or controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, if any such competition ever existed, was substantial or that it included a large volume of traffic of any kind.

(23) It admits that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company for a period of more than eight years has been the owner and in control of the lines of railroad alleged in the petition, and that during such period it has been, and still is, competing with said Union Pacific Railroad Company and this defendant for a large volume of traffic to and from the Pacific coast and the Orient, and has been competing with the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company between the Missouri River and various points in Kansas, Colorado, and other States.

(24) It admits that the line of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, since the completion of the same to San Francisco about the year 1900, constituted the only line of transportation by rail from the Pacific coast south of Portland, Oregon, to the Mississippi Valley and the East, except the lines of this defendant to the Gulf and the lines of the Central Pacific Railway Company operated by this defendant in connection with the Union Pacific Railroad Company until the completion of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company in the year 1905.

(25) It has no knowledge of the operation by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company of a line of steamships between San Diego, California, and Asiatic ports, but it denies that the traffic handled by any such steamship line, if any such line was ever operated, competitive between this defendant and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company was of great volume and embraced both passengers and freight.

(26) It admits that the Northern Pacific Railway Company, the Great Northern Railway Company, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company is each the owner of the lines of railroad described in the petition, but it has no knowledge of the ownership of the stock of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company or of any competition between any of said lines and the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(27) It admits that the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company operates a line of railroad extending from San Pedro on the Pacific Ocean in the State of California by way of Los Angeles through the States of California, Nevada, and Utah to Salt Lake City, Utah, but it is without knowledge of the character of the title of said company to said railroad, and it admits that said company as the owner of said railroad with its connections is a competitor of this defendant between certain points in southern California.

(28) This defendant admits that on or about the 20th day of February, 1901, defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company acquired 750,000 shares of the capital stock of this defendant of the aggregate par value of $75,000,000 out of a total of 1,978,399 shares of the aggregate par value of $197,839,900 then issued and outstanding, and it admits that thereafter and on or about the 26th day of February, 1902, said Union Pacific Railroad Company sold said 750,000 shares to defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, which has ever since owned and still owns the same.

(29) It admits that thereafter on or about the 31st day of May, 1902, defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company acquired 150,000 additional shares of stock of this defendant, which it has ever since owned and still owns.

(30) It admits that when in 1904 this defendant created an issue of preferred stock which it offered to its stockholders for subscription pro rata at par, said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, as the owner of 900,000 shares of the common stock of this defendant exercised its right and subscribed for and received and has ever since owned and still owns 180,000 shares of the preferred stock of this defendant; and that thereafter when in 1907 this defendant increased its preferred stock by an additional issue thereof which it offered to the holders of its outstanding stock for subscription pro rata at par, said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, as the owner of 1,080,000 shares of the stock of this defendant, exercised its right and subscribed and received 162,000 additional shares of the preferred stock

f this defendant, and has ever since owned and still owns the same, so that said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company now owns 47 900,000 shares of the common stock, and 342,000 shares of the preferred stock, making a total of 1,242,000 shares out of a otal of 2,726,498 shares of the capital stock of this defendant issued nd outstanding.

(31) It denies that defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, r Union Pacific Railroad Company caused the said preferred stock be issued by this defendant.

(32) It admits that the stock of this defendant not owned by said regon Short Line Railroad Company is owned by a large number f individuals, firms, and corporations residing in many different laces, but it denies that such stockholders, other than defendant regon Short Line Railroad Company, are or will be unable to elect e directors of this defendant if they should deem it to their interest do so in opposition to those voted for by said Oregon Short Line ailroad Company.

(33) It admits that at the annual meetings of this defendant, held nce the stock was so acquired and owned by said Oregon Short Line ailroad Company, such stock has constituted a majority of the ares represented at such meetings, and that by voting upon the said shares through its duly authorized agents and proxies, 8 aided by the votes upon other shares owned by various other stockholders of this defendant, said Oregon Short Line Rail- ad Company, has been able to elect the directors of this defendant, t at no such meetings have any votes ever been cast by any such ckholder against the persons so elected.

(34) It denies that the Union Pacific Railroad Company or the regon Short Line Railroad Company controls or has ever controlled e management, operation, or business affairs of this defendant, or ercised any control whatsoever over it, except such as may result m the voting upon the stock of this defendant owned by said Ore- n Short Line Railroad Company, as aforesaid, at meetings for the ction of directors of this defendant.

(35) It admits that since April 3, 1901, a majority of the persons o have been elected directors of this defendant, have been at the ne time directors of the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Com- ny.

(36) It admits that defendant Harriman on April 3, 1901, became airman of the executive committee and on the 26th day of Septem- , 1901, became the president of this defendant and ever since has been and still is such chairman and president.

) (37) It admits that the same person is the chief traffic officer, the same person the chief operating officer, and the ne person the chief accounting officer of both companies; and that said companies have jointly employed numerous commercial and other agents, but it avers that a large majority of the officers, agents, and employees of said companies are separate.

(38) It denies that through the purchase and ownership of said stock by the Union Pacific Railroad Company or by the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, or from any other cause, there has been any suppression or restraint of competition in the transportation of commerce among the several States or with foreign countries, or any monopoly in the transportation of any such commerce; and it denies any knowledge of any conspiracy, combination, or contract in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or between said States and foreign countries, or to suppress or restrain competition therein, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize transportation of any such commerce.

(39) It is without knowledge respecting any of the other matters alleged in Subdivision IV of the said petition.

(40) It is also without knowledge of any of the matters
950 alleged in Subdivision V of the petition.

(41) It admits that there is a competition between the San Pedro, Los Angeles, and Salt Lake Railroad Company and this defendant between certain points in California.

(42) It is without knowledge of any of the other matters alleged in Subdivision VI of the petition.

(43) This defendant admits that, pursuant to an agreement with the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, a corporation was organized under the laws of the State of California under the name, style, and title of the "Northwestern Pacific Railway Company," and that certain other corporations of the State of California whose capital stock was owned by this defendant and certain other corporations of the State of California whose capital stock was owned by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company were consolidated with and merged into said Northwestern Pacific Railway Company under the name, style, and title of "Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company," and that the capital stock of said Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company is owned equally by this defendant and by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company; but it avers that all of the said corporations merged and con-
951 solidated as aforesaid were incorporated under the laws of the State of California; and the said lines of railroad were situated wholly within the State of California, and the said consolidation and merger was and is authorized and provided for by the laws of said State.

(44) It denies all of the allegations of Subdivision VII of the petition in reference to any conspiracy, combination, or contract to restrain commerce among the several States or with foreign countries or to restrain competition in any such commerce or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize transportation in any such commerce.

(45) This defendant is without knowledge of any of the other matters alleged in Subdivision VII of the petition.

(46) And this defendant denies all and all manner of unlawful combination and confederacy wherewith they are by the said petition charged, without this, that if there is any other matter, cause, or thing in the petition contained material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, and avoided or denied, the same is not true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant; all of which matters and things this defendant is ready and willing to aver, maintain, and prove as this honorable court shall direct,

952 and humbly prays to be hence dismissed with its reasonable costs and charges in its behalf most wrongfully sustained.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY,
By P. L. WILLIAMS, Its Solicitor.

ROBERT S. LOVETT, Of Counsel.

953 No. 993. United States Circuit Court, District of Utah.
In equity.

The United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company et al., defendants.

The joint and several answer of defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company. (Filed April 6, 1908.)

954 United States Circuit Court, District of Utah. No. 993.
In equity.

The United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, The Great Northern Railway Company, The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, James Stillman, Henry H. Rogers, Henry C. Frick, and William A. Clark, defendants.

955 The joint and several answer of the defendants, Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company to the original petition of the United States of America.

These defendants, now and at all times hereafter saving to themselves all manner of benefit and advantage of exception which can or may be taken to the many errors, uncertainties, and other imperfections in the complainant's petition contained or to so much and such parts thereof as these defendants are advised it is material or necessary for them to make answer unto, answering say:

I. They admit that the defendants, The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, The Great Northern Railway Company, and these defendants were at the times alleged in the petition and are now common carriers employed in the transportation of freight and passengers within and among those States and Territories of the United States in and through which the transportation lines owned and operated by them, respectively, are located, and not further or otherwise, and were and are to that extent, but to that extent only, engaged in trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations.

II. (1) They deny that from January 1, 1901, or at any time, the defendants, Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn and James Stillman, with certain other persons who have joined with them from time to time, including the defendants, Henry H. Rogers and Henry C. Frick, have owned or controlled a majority of the capital stock of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(2) They admit that the defendant Edward H. Harriman on the 23d day of May, 1898, became and ever since has been and still is the chairman of the executive committee of the board of directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company; and that on the 7th day of January, 1904, and not before, he became and ever since has been and still is president of said corporation.

(3) They admit that the said Jacob H. Schiff became a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 1st day of March, 1898, and continued to be a director of said company until the 10th day of April, 1906, when he resigned.

(4) They admit that the said Otto H. Kahn became a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 1st day of July, 1897, and continued to be a director of said company until the 10th day of April, 1906, when he resigned.

(5) They admit that the said James Stillman became a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 6th day of December, 1897, and continued to be a director of said company until the 13th day of February, 1908, when he resigned.

(6) They admit that the said James Stillman was a member of the executive committee of the board of directors from the 8th day of December, 1897, until the 13th day of February, 1908, and that said Otto H. Kahn was a member of said committee from the 8th day of December, 1897, until the 10th day of April, 1906.

(7) They admit that during all of said time the said Jacob H. Schiff and Otto H. Kahn were and still are members of a banking firm of the city of New York, doing business under the firm name and style of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., but deny that said banking house has been or is the "fiscal agent" of the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company; and they admit that some of the stocks re-
958 ferred to in the petition were bought by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, respectively, from time to time through said banking house and that some of the bonds issued by said companies were sold to said firm.

(8) They admit that defendant Henry H. Rogers became a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 8th day of October, 1901, and that defendant Henry C. Frick became a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 11th day of October, 1904, and that both the said Rogers and the said Frick have ever since been and still are members of said board of directors.

(9) Except as herein admitted, they deny each and every allegation of subdivision II of the petition.

III. (1) They admit that defendant, Union Pacific Railroad Company, in 1897, acquired and ever since has been and still is the owner of lines of railroad extending from Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Ogden, Utah; from Kansas City, Missouri, to Denver, Colorado; and from Denver, Colorado, to Cheyenne, Wyoming.

(2) They admit that the said line of railroad extending from 959 Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Ogden, Utah, was constructed by a company incorporated by an act of Congress, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862 (12 Stat., 489), under the name, style, and title of "The Union Pacific Railroad Company"; and they admit that the said line of railroad, extending from Kansas City, Missouri, to Denver, Colorado, was constructed by a company originally incorporated by the Territory of Kansas as the "Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Company," which afterwards assumed the name, style, and title of "Union Pacific Railroad Company, Eastern Division," and subsequently by authority of a joint resolution of Congress approved March 3, 1869 (15 Stat., 348), changed its name to "Kansas Pacific Railway Company"; and they also admit that the said line of railroad, extending from Denver, Colorado, to Cheyenne, Wyoming, was constructed by the "Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company," a corporation organized under the laws of the Territory of Colorado.

(3) They deny that the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the company incorporated by the aforesaid act of Congress
960 approved July 1, 1862, constructed a line of railroad from Julesburg to Denver, but aver that the said branch line of railroad extends from Julesburg to La Salle, Colorado, where it connects with the aforesaid line extending from Denver to Cheyenne, and that it was constructed by the Colorado Central Railroad Company, a corporation of the State of Colorado, which was subsequently consolidated with and merged into the Union Pacific, Denver and Gulf Railway Company, and thereafter was sold under foreclosure decrees against the last-named company, and the purchasers at such foreclosure sale afterward and on or about the 6th day of February, 1899, sold and conveyed the same to defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, and that the said Union Pacific Railroad Company ever since has been and still is the owner thereof.

(4) They aver that the said lines of railroad owned by defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company and extending as aforesaid from Council Bluffs to Ogden, from Kansas City to Denver, and from Denver to Cheyenne, were located, laid out, constructed, connected, consolidated, and put into use and operation as a system of railroads under and pursuant to the aforesaid act of Congress approved 961 July 1, 1862, and an act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862" (13 Stat., 356), and the several acts and joint resolutions of Congress amendatory of and supplementary to the aforesaid acts (12 Stat., 538; 13 Stat., 504; 13 Stat., 573; 14 Stat., 355; 14 Stat., 356; 14 Stat., 79; 14 Stat., 292; 15 Stat., 39; 15 Stat., 79; 15 Stat., 324; 15 Stat., 348; 16 Stat., 56; 16 Stat., 121; 16 Stat., 430; 17 Stat., 508; 18 Stat., 111; 18 Stat., 200; 18 Stat., 4; 20 Stat., 56; 20 Stat., 169; 24 Stat., 488; 25 Stat., 382; 25 Stat., 439); and they refer to the said acts and joint resolutions themselves for the provisions, purposes, and effect thereof.

(5) They admit that the said the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the said Kansas Pacific Railway Company, and the said Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company were consolidated under and by virtue of the aforesaid acts of Congress, and that the corporation formed by such consolidation became and assumed the name, style, and title of "The Union Pacific Railway Com-962 pany"; and they aver that such consolidation occurred on or about January 24, 1880.

(6) They aver that under and pursuant to the provisions of decrees of the Circuit Courts of the United States for the District

braska, the Southern District of Iowa, the District of Wyoming, District of Colorado, and the District of Utah, rendered in 1897, certain suits in equity commenced by F. Gordon Dexter and Oliver nes, second, against the Union Pacific Railway Company and others the foreclosure of the first mortgage of the Union Pacific Rail- d Company upon the said line of railroad, with its appurtenances said decrees described; and under the provisions of decrees ren- ed, respectively, by the same courts on the same dates in certain its in equity, commenced by the United States of America as com- inant against said the Union Pacific Railway Company and others the foreclosure of the lien created by or arising under the afore- d acts of Congress to secure the indebtedness to the United States America for its bonds issued under the provisions of said acts the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the said railroad extending m Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Ogden, Utah, with its appurtenances, was sold, and upon confirmation of the said sale and full com- pliance with all the terms and provisions of the decrees of the said courts in said causes the special master of the said rts duly conveyed the said railroad, with its appurtenances, so d to Union Pacific Railroad Company, defendant herein, by eds dated the 22d day of January, 1898, whereupon the possession said railroads and other property so sold was surrendered and de- ered by the receivers appointed in said suits to Union Pacific Rail- d Company, defendant herein, which has ever since held and pos- sed and now hold and possess the same.

(7) They aver that under and pursuant to the provisions of de- es of the Circuit Courts of the United States for the District of nsas and the Western District of Missouri, rendered on the 30th y of July, 1897, in certain suits in equity commenced by the United tes of America, as complainant, against said the Union Pacific ilway Company and others for the foreclosure of the lien created or arising under the aforesaid acts of Congress to secure the lebtedness to the United States of America for its bonds issued der the provisions of said acts to the Kansas Pacific Railway Com- ny; and under and pursuant to the provisions of other decrees of the same courts and of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado in suits in equity commenced by various parties to foreclose numerous mortgages executed by d Kansas Pacific Railway Company under its different corporate mes, the said line of railroad extending from Kansas City, Mis- ri, to Denver, Colorado, with its appurtenances in said decrees scribed, was sold, and upon confirmation of the said sale and full mpliance with all the terms and provisions of the decrees of said rts in said causes, the special master of said courts duly con- yed the said railroad, with its appurtenances, to Union Pacific

about the 19th day of April, 1898, whereupon the possession of sai railroad and other property so sold was surrendered and delivere by the receivers appointed in said suits to Union Pacific Railroa Company, defendant herein, which has ever since held and possesse and now holds and possesses the same.

(8) They aver that under and pursuant to the provisions of de crees of the Circuit Courts of the United States for the Districts o Colorado and Wyoming, rendered on the 31st day of July, 1897, i certain suits in equity to foreclose the first mortgage of the Denv Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company, the said line of rai 965 road extending from Denver, Colorado, to Cheyenne, Wy oming, with its appurtenances in said decrees described, w sold and upon confirmation of the said sale and full compliance with all the terms and provisions of said decrees of said courts i said causes the special master of said courts duly conveyed the sa railroad, with its appurtenances, to Union Pacific Railroad Com pany, defendant herein, by deeds dated on or about the 22d day o March, 1898, whereupon the possession of said railroad, with i appurtenances and other property so sold, was surrendered and deli ered by the receivers appointed in said suits to Union Pacific Rai road Company, defendant herein, which has ever since held and po sessed and now holds and possesses the same.

(9) They admit that the Central Pacific Railroad Company California was organized under the laws of the State of California and they admit that the Western Pacific Railroad Company w also organized under the laws of said State. They admit that t said Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the s Western Pacific Railroad Company were consolidated into and un
the name, style, and title of "Central Pacific Railroad Compan
They admit that said Western Pacific Railroad Company c 966 structed a line of railroad from San Francisco to Sacramen California, and that said Central Pacific Railroad Compa of California commenced the construction, and after the consoli
tion aforesaid the company formed by such consolidation compl the said railroad from Sacramento, California, to Ogden, Ut where it connects with the main line of the Union Pacific Railr Company.

(10) They refer to the said acts of Congress approved July 1862 (12 Stat., 489), July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 356), and June 20, 1 (18 Stat., 111), for answer to the allegations of the petition resp ing the aid granted in bonds and land to, and the duties and resp sibilities imposed by said acts upon, the corporations aided authorized by said acts to construct the railroads therein mentio and provided for.

(11) They admit that defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company is now and since about the 16th day of March, 1897, continuously has been the owner of lines of railroad extending from the junction with the main line of the Union Pacific Railroad at Granger, Wyoming, to Huntington, Oregon, and of another line of railroad extending from Salt Lake City, Utah, to Butte, Montana—the track in the State of Idaho between Pocatello and McCammon being common to both of said lines. They admit that defendant The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company is and since about the 18th day of August, 1896, continuously has been the owner of a line of railroad extending from a connection with the line of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company at Huntington, Oregon, to Portland, Oregon.

(13) They admit that long prior to the date alleged in the petition the Union Pacific Railroad Company acquired and has ever since owned and still owns substantially all of the capital stock of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company. They admit that long prior to the date alleged in the petition the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company acquired and has ever since owned and still owns substantially all of the capital stock of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company.

(14) They admit that by means of such stock ownership the Union Pacific Railroad Company has since its acquisition been able to elect, by voting upon such stock through its proxies, the directors of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and that the latter, by voting upon said stock through its proxies, has elected the directors of The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company; but they aver that the railroads and other property of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company have at all times been controlled, managed, and operated by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company in its own name and by its own officers and agents, and that the railroads and other property of The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company have at all times been controlled, managed, and operated by The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company in its own name and by its own officers and agents.

(15) They admit that the lines of railroad owned by these defendants, respectively, have been and are operated as one system and that said lines extending from Kansas City, Missouri, and Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah, Butte, Montana, and Portland, Oregon, have composed and still compose con-969 tinuous through lines operated harmoniously and, so far as affecting the shipping and traveling public, practically as if owned and operated by a single company.

(16) They aver that long prior to July 2, 1890, when the so-called "antitrust act" of Congress was approved, the Union Pacific Railway Company, the consolidated corporation organized and existing under the acts of Congress, as hereinbefore alleged, acquired a large majority of the stock of the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company, which constructed the lines of railroad now owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, as well as a portion of the lines now owned by the defendant San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, and that long prior to said July 2, 1890, said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company acquired a large majority of the capital stock of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, the corporation which constructed and formerly owned the line of railroad now owned by defendant The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, extending from Huntington to Portland, Oregon, with various branches, and long prior to July 2, 1890, the said lines of railroad extending from Kansas City, Missouri, and Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Salt 970 Lake City and Ogden, Utah, Butte, Montana, and Portland, Oregon, were and ever since have been operated harmoniously as one system and as continuous lines and, so far as affecting the shipping and traveling public, practically as if owned and operated by a single corporation.

(17) They aver that the said lines of railroad and all other property of said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company were sold under decrees of the circuit courts of the United States for the districts of Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana foreclosing mortgages thereon on or about the 9th day of January, 1897, and that the purchasers at such sale caused to be incorporated the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and conveyed to it the railroads and properties so sold. They aver that the said line of railroad extending from Huntington to Portland, Oregon, and all other property of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company were sold under decrees of the circuit courts of the United States for the district of Oregon, foreclosing mortgages thereon on or about the 9th day of July, 1896, and the purchasers at such sale caused to be incorporated the defendant, the Oregon Railroad and Navigation mpany, and conveyed to it the railroads and properties so sold.

1 (18) They admit that in the year 1901 the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company owned three steamships averaging out 1,350 net tons each, plying between Portland and San Fran-co, by way of the Willamette and Columbia Rivers and the Pacific ean; and they aver that in the year 1904 the San Francisco and ortland Steamship Company, a corporation of the State of Cali-rnia, was organized; that all its stock was acquired by the Oregon ilroad and Navigation Company, and that two of said steamships re transferred by charter to said San Francisco and Portland eamship Company, and that said San Francisco and Portland eamship Company has since operated and now regularly operates o steamships—one of 2,317 tons and one of 1,836 tons—between n Francisco and Portland, via the Pacific Ocean and the Willam-te and Columbia Rivers.

(19) They deny that the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Com-ny ever operated a line of steamships or any steamships between ortland, Oregon, and Japan, and China, or other Asiatic ports. hey admit that on or about the 14th day of January, 1901, the Port-nd and Asiatic Steamship Company was incorporated under the laws of the State of Oregon with a capital of $100,000, and

2 that all of its capital stock was acquired and has ever since been and still is owned by said the Oregon Railroad and Navi-ation Company; and they admit that said Portland and Asiatic eamship Company has sometimes operated steamships between ortland, Oregon, and Asiatic ports under charter, but they deny at said steamship company has ever owned, or now owns, any eamships, or has ever operated, or now operates, any regular line f steamships.

(20) They aver that the said Portland and Asiatic Steamship Com-ny was incorporated and that the ships chartered and operated by were chartered and operated for the benefit of the traffic of the rail-ad lines of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company—that is ay, to afford an outlet by way of Portland and the Columbia River r the grain and flour grown and milled on the line of the Oregon ailroad and Navigation Company in eastern Oregon and the State f Washington which otherwise would have moved via the rails of the orthern Pacific Railway Company and Great Northern Railway ompany to Puget Sound and the traffic would have been lost to the regon Railroad and Navigation Company, and they aver that the operation of the steamships of said Portland and Asiatic

73 Steamship Company has of itself been unprofitable and re-sulted in a large loss to said company every year, except one during the war between Japan and Russia, and that it was inaugurated and is maintained only because, in the judgment of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, the losses sustained in the operation of said steamships are more than compensated by retaining for the rails of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company and for the mills and merchants on its lines the grain and flour traffic which otherwise would have moved to Puget Sound and been lost to said company and to them.

(21) They deny that it has been or ever was practicable for the said steamships operated by the Portland and Asiatic Steamship Company to compete to any considerable or substantial extent with lines of steamers operated between San Francisco and Asiatic ports and Puget Sound and Asiatic ports for traffic originating in the interior of the United States or on the Atlantic seaboard.

(22) They admit that the Southern Pacific Company was, on January 1, 1901, and still is the owner of a large majority of the capital stock of corporations which separately own and operate connecting links of a line of railroad extending from New Orleans
974 in the State of Louisiana, and Galveston, in the State of Texas, and through the States of Louisiana and Texas and the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the States of California and Oregon to Los Angeles and San Francisco and other points in California and to Portland, Oregon.

(23) They admit that said Southern Pacific Company in 190 owned and operated and has ever since owned and operated and now owns and operates lines of steamships between New York and New Orleans and between New York and Galveston and between New Orleans and Havana, which connect at New Orleans and Galveston with the rail lines controlled by it.

(24) They aver that the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the corporation formed by the consolidation of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and which constructed and formerly operated the said railroad from San Francisco to a connection with the Union Pacific Railroad Company at Ogden, was unable to pay its indebtedness to the Government of the United States, arising from the issue to it of Government bonds as aforesaid at the maturity of said indebtedness, and was also unable to pay its indebtedness evidenced by its own bonds, aggregating a large amount, as such indebtedness
975 matured during and prior to the year 1899; that the "Central Pacific Railway Company" was organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Utah, and acquired by purchase from the said consolidated Central Pacific Railroad Company, on or about the 29th day of July, 1899, the said railroads so constructed rom San Francisco to a connection with the main line of the Union acific Railroad Company at Ogden, Utah, with its various branches; nd that the power of said Central Pacific Railroad Company to ake such sale and of the Central Pacific Railway Company to make uch purchase was expressly conferred upon and existed in them, re-pectively, by the laws of the States of Utah, Nevada, and California.

(25) They aver that such purchase and sale were made for the urpose of paying the indebtedness of said Central Pacific Railroad ompany to the United States of America and to the holders of its wn bonds; that all such indebtedness was thereby paid and dis-harged in full; and that the incorporation and organization of the aid Central Pacific Railway Company and the said purchase and ale and the payment of all such indebtedness were caused and rought about by the defendant Southern Pacific Company; and that the means for paying and satisfying all such indebted-976 ness were provided and procured by or at the instance of the said Southern Pacific Company.

(26) They admit that on January 1, 1901, said Southern Pacific ompany owned, has ever since owned, and still owns 100,500 shares ut of a total of 200,000 shares of the capital stock of the Pacific Iail Steamship Company, and that said Pacific Mail Steamship ompany during all said period has operated a line of steamships etween San Francisco, the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippine Islands, nd Chinese and Japanese ports, and also a line of steamships be-ween San Francisco and Panama. But they deny that the said line f steamships, with the railroad of the Panama Railroad Company nd steamships operating in the Atlantic Ocean, forms a through ine between New York and San Francisco via the Isthmus of anama.

(27) They deny that the said rail lines of the Southern Pacific ompany from the Mississippi River to Portland, Oregon, by way f Los Angeles and San Francisco, were at any time in competition ith the said lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for the ransportation of freight from points in the Mississippi Valley and in the Eastern States or elsewhere to the Pacific coast and 977 points in Colorado and other interior States; and they deny that the steamship lines of the Southern Pacific Company be-tween New York and New Orleans and New York and Galveston, together with the rail lines of said company in connection therewith, were in active competition with the lines of the Union Pacific Rail-road Company for a large amount of traffic originating on the At-lantic coast and in the Central States.

the Union Pacific Railroad was but a link, about 1,000 miles in length, and the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company merely an intermediate carrier without any power to make rates upon such traffic, and that the defendant Southern Pacific Company, through its possession and operation of the Central Pacific Railroad and its ownership of all the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, controlled that portion of such transcontinental line, about 850 miles in length, extending from Ogden, Utah, to the Pacific Ocean at San Francisco and other points in California, and no rate between the Missouri River or points east thereof and the Pacific coast south of Portland or Asiatic ports could be made 978 by these defendants except with the consent of and by agreement with said Southern Pacific Company; and while these defendants separately owned connecting lines of railroad, operated as a single system as aforesaid, extending from the Missouri River to Portland, Oregon, and operated certain small steamships between Portland and San Francisco, as aforesaid, yet they aver that such route via Portland was not only an impracticable route as a competitor of said Southern Pacific Company, but any attempt of these defendants to use it as such competitor would have greatly injured defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, because said Southern Pacific Company would thereupon have preferred the rivals of said Union Pacific Railroad Company in routing and interchanging traffic at Ogden, and the business in tonnage and revenue which defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company would thereby have lost would have greatly exceeded the total volume of any business it could have secured over such impracticable route in competition with said Southern Pacific Company, so that the interest of defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company and the companies formerly owning its lines always prevented it and them from using or attempting to use the said route via Portland in competition with said Southern Pacific Company upon any business to or from 979 the Pacific coast south of Portland or to or from Asiatic ports.

(29) They deny that the rail line of said Southern Pacific Company between San Francisco and Portland was in active competition with the ships of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company plying between San Francisco and Portland, and aver that competition between said lines was never practicable.

(30) They deny that ships operated by the Portland and Asiatic Steamship Company between Portland, Oregon, and Asiatic ports in connection with the rail lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or otherwise, were ever in competition with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and the rails of the Southern Pacific Company.

(31) They deny that the lines of railroad of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company between Ogden, Utah, and Portland, Oregon, were ever in competition with the lines of said Southern Pacific Company between said points, and aver that such competition was never practicable.

(32) They deny that any competition between the system of railroads and steamships owned and controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the system of railroads and steamships owned and controlled by the Southern Pacific Company, if any such competition ever existed, was substantial or that it included a large volume of traffic of any kind.

(33) They admit that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company has been for a period of more than eight years the owner and in control of lines of railroad, as alleged in Subdivision III of the petition, and admit that the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, in connection with the line of the Central Pacific Railway Company, operated by the Southern Pacific Company, have been during such period and still are competitors of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company for a large volume of traffic to and from the Pacific coast, and that the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company have been and are competitive between various points in Kansas, Colorado, and other States.

(34) They admit that the lines of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, since the completion of the same to San Francisco, California, in the year 1900, constituted the only line of transportation by rail from the Pacific coast south of Portland to the Mississippi Valley and the East except the lines of the Southern Pacific Company to the Gulf of Mexico and the lines of the Central Pacific Railway Company operated by the Southern Pacific Company in connection with the Union Pacific Railroad until the completion of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad in the year 1905.

(35) They have no knowledge of the operation by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company of a line of steamships between San Diego, California, and Asiatic ports, as alleged in the petition, but they deny that the traffic handled by any such steamship line, if any such line was ever operated, competitive between said Southern Pacific Company and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company, was of great volume, and embraced both passengers and freight.

(36) They admit that the Northern Pacific Railway Company, the Great Northern Railway Company, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company each owns and operates lines of railroad substantially as alleged in said petition; but they deny that the lines of said Northern Pacific Railway Company in and of themselves are competitive with the lines of these defendants, and they admit that the lines of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy 982 Railroad Company are competitive with the lines owned and operated by the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company to a limited extent and between certain points.

(37) They deny that traffic between the Pacific coast and Asiatic ports and points on and east of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers is competitive between the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and connections owned by it, and the lines of said Northern Pacific Railway Company and The Great Northern Railway Company and connections and steamship lines controlled by them.

(38) They admit that the defendant The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company is the owner of a line of railroad extending from San Pedro on the Pacific Ocean, in the State of California, by way of Los Angeles, through the States of California, Nevada, and into Utah to Salt Lake City, and that most of said line is directly owned by said corporation, and the remainder of it is operated under lease or trackage contracts, and that the same constitutes a continuous line between San Pedro and Salt Lake City; but they deny that by said contract or otherwise there ever was any suppression or restriction of competition by said line with the lines of any defendant herein.

983 (39) They admit that the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company owns a line of railroad from Salt Lake City, Utah, to Denver, Colorado, and that it is a competitor of defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, but not of defendant Southern Pacific Company.

(40) Except as herein admitted they deny each and every allegation of Subdivision III of the petition.

IV. (1) They deny that in the spring of 1901, or at any other time, the defendants, Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, and Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any of them, conspired to restrain trade and commerce among the several States and between said States and foreign countries carried on by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Southern Pacific Company, or any other company or any steamship lines, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any such trade and commerce, or to restrain or prevent competition among said railway systems, or any other railway systems, and said steamship lines, or any other steamship lines, in respect to any such commerce, or to deprive the public of the facilities and advantages of the carrying on of such trade and commerce through the inde-984 pendent competition, if any there was, of said railway systems and steamship lines or other railway systems or steamship lines, or that said defendants, or any of them, ever entered into combination or conspiracy to effect a virtual or substantial consolidation of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and any other transcontinental railway companies or steamship companies, or to place restraint upon any competitive commerce carried on by such companies, if any such there was, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the same, or to suppress any competition existing between any of said companies or lines by the means alleged in the petition or otherwise.

(2) They admit that on or about the 20th day of February, 1901, defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company acquired by purchase from said firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Company 750,000 shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pacific Company of the aggregate par value of $75,000,000 out of 1,978,399 shares of the aggregate value of $197,839,900 then issued and outstanding; but they deny that the said stock was purchased or acquired in pursuance of any conspiracy or combination or for any of the purposes alleged in said petition.

(3) They admit that thereafter, to wit, on or about the 26th
985 day of February, 1902, defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company sold and delivered the said 750,000 shares of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company to defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, which has ever since owned and still owns the same.

(4) They admit that thereafter, to wit, on or about the 31st day of May, 1902, defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company acquired by purchase from said Kuhn, Loeb & Company, 150,000 additional shares of stock of said Southern Pacific Company, which said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company has ever since owned, and still owns; but they deny that the said additional shares were purchased or acquired in pursuance of any conspiracy or combination, or for any of the purposes alleged in said petition.

(5) They admit that thereafter, when, in 1904, defendant Southern Pacific Company created an issue of preferred stock, which it offered to its stockholders for subscription pro rata at par, said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, as the owner of 900,000 shares of the common stock of said Southern Pacific Company, exercised its right, and subscribed for and received and has ever since owned and still owns 180,000 shares of the preferred stock of 986 said Southern Pacific Company; and they aver that thereafter in 1907, when said Southern Pacific Company increased its said preferred stock by an additional issue thereof, which it offered to the holders of its outstanding stock for subscription pro rata at par, said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, as the owner of 1,080,000 shares of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company, exercised its right, and subscribed for and received 162,000 additional shares of the preferred stock of said Southern Pacific Company, and it has ever since owned and still owns the same; so that said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company now owns 900,000 shares of common stock and 342,000 shares of preferred stock making a total of 1,242,000 shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pacific Company, out of a total of 2,726,498 shares issued and outstanding; but they deny that the defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, and Union Pacific Railroad Company caused said Southern Pacific Company to issue said preferred stock; and deny that it was acquired by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company or the Union Pacific Railroad Company in pursuance of any conspiracy or for any of the purposes or with the intent alleged in said petition.

987 road Company is voted at the dictation and instance of the defendants Harriman, Stillman, Schiff, and Kahn, and that the directors of said company have been selected by the said Harriman, Stillman, Schiff, and Kahn.

(7) They deny that the Union Pacific Railroad Company or the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company controls or has ever controlled the management, operation, or business affairs of said Southern Pacific Company or exercised any control whatsoever over it, except such as may result from the voting upon the stock of said Southern Pacific Company owned by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company at meetings of the stockholders for the election of directors of said Southern Pacific Company.

(8) They admit that at the annual meetings of the stockholders of the Southern Pacific Company held since the stock was so acquired and owned by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company such stock has constituted a majority of the shares represented at such meetings; and they admit that by voting upon the said shares, through its duly authorized agents and proxies, aided by the votes upon other shares owned by various other stockholders of said Southern Pacific Company, the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad
988 Company has been able to elect the directors of said Southern Pacific Company, but they aver that at no such meeting have any votes ever been cast by any stockholder against the persons so elected.

(9) They admit that since April 3, 1901, a majority of the persons who have been directors of said Southern Pacific Company were at the same time directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(10) They admit that the stock of said Southern Pacific Company not owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company is owned by a large number of individuals, firms, and corporations residing in many different places; but they deny that said stock

lers are or will be unable to elect the directors of said Southern ific Company, if they should deem it to their interest to do so, in osition to those voted for by said Oregon Short Line Railroad npany; and they aver that the reason why said stockholders have heretofore elected the directors of said company is that they e been satisfied with the directors nominated and elected by the nts and proxies of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company in junction with the agents and proxies of other stockholders.

(11) They admit that defendant Harriman on the 3d day of April, 1901, became chairman of the executive committee, and on the 26th day of September, 1901, became the president aid Southern Pacific Company and ever since has been and still uch chairman and president.

12) They admit that the same person is the chief traffic officer, same person the chief operating officer, and the same person chief accounting officer of both companies, and that said com-ies have jointly employed numerous commercial and other agents; they aver that a very large majority of the agents, officers, and loyees of said companies are separate.

13) They admit that since about the 26th day of August, 1904, Pacific Mail Steamship Company, the Portland and Asiatic amship Company, and the San Francisco and Portland Steam-p Company have had the same officers and agents; but they deny t there ever was any competition between any of said steamship panies or said railroad or steamship lines or that such commerce been monopolized.

14) They aver that although the railroad of the Union Pacific lroad Company and the said Central Pacific Railroad physically formed a continuous line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, yet almost one-half the length of said line, to wit, from Ogden to San Francisco, with many branches, was ned by the Central Pacific Railway Company and was controlled l operated by the Southern Pacific Company, and no rate for transportation of passengers or property over the said line be-een the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean could be made hout the concurrence of both the Union Pacific Railroad Com-ny and the Southern Pacific Company; and the only means by ich the Union Pacific Railroad Company could secure control of said Central Pacific Railroad was to secure control of the said uthern Pacific Company, which owned every share of the stock said Central Pacific Railway Company. That the lines of rail-ad now owned by defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company d been greatly improved while in the hands of receivers in the reclosure proceedings hereinbefore mentioned, and prior to Janu-y 1, 1901, it recognized the necessity, in the interest of the public as well as of itself, of further improving, and it had determined to further improve, the said railroads, particularly the line between Council Bluffs and Ogden, in order to be able to develop its traffic and serve and accomplish the object of its construction, and to handle such traffic efficiently and economically. Unless the 991 line of the Central Pacific Railway Company, extending from Ogden to the Pacific Ocean, was likewise improved and put and maintained in condition to handle promptly and efficiently the transcontinental traffic passing over the Union Pacific Railroad, the improvement of the latter as contemplated would be practically futile. The said Central Pacific Railroad had been mortgaged for large amounts, and the Central Pacific Railway Company was without means or credit to procure the means necessary to bring by improvements its said line of railroad up to anything approximating the condition and efficiency of said Union Pacific Railroad; and the Southern Pacific Company was also without such means or credit, as practically all of its assets and the assets of the various corporations controlled by it were mortgaged or otherwise pledged. The stock of defendant Southern Pacific Company formerly owned by Collis P. Huntington, who died in August, 1900, together with other stock amounting to nearly one-half of the shares of said company, was for sale, and if the same had been acquired by an interest adverse to defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company its plans, efforts, and object to improve its line of railroad between Council Bluffs and Ogden and the substantial object of the 992 aforesaid acts of Congress providing for a continuous line and system from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean would have been defeated and rendered futile, and defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company would furthermore have been deprived of an opportunity to become, and rival lines would have become, the preferred connection of said Southern Pacific Company and Central Pacific Railway Company at Ogden, Utah, and the value of its lines of railroad and the credit of the Union Pacific Railroad Company would have been greatly and permanently depreciated and impaired. For the purpose of procuring the improvement of said Central Pacific Railroad and to bring it up to the standard and degree of efficiency approximately of the line of the Union Pacific Railroad, and in order that said Union Pacific Railroad Company should become and securely remain the preferred connection of said Southern Pacific Company and Central Pacific Railway Company at Ogden, and thereby secure the unrouted traffic of said companies interchanged at Ogden, and in order to protect itself against the acquisition and control of said Central Pacific Railway Company by adverse interests to these defendants, and with any intent or purpose in any wise to suppress or restrain any petition in interstate or foreign commerce, the said 900,000 shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pacific Company were purchased and acquired as hereinbefore alleged by defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and are now so held by the company last named.

(15) They aver that such acquisition greatly increased and strengthened the credit not only of said Southern Pacific Company, but also of these defendants, and enabled them to procure means for improving the said railroads and increasing the efficiency of the same in the public interest upon much better terms and more readily than otherwise would have been possible. Immediately after such acquisition of the said stock, the improvement of the lines of the said Central Pacific Railway between Ogden and the Pacific Ocean, as well as the lines of these defendants, was commenced, and ever since has been actively prosecuted, so that between the 1st day of January, 1901, and the 1st day of January, 1908, there has been expended (in addition to ordinary expenditures for maintenance) for betterments and improvements of the line of the said Central Pacific Railway Company between Ogden and San Francisco alone about $24,000,000, being approximately $30,000 per mile; the great "cut-off" across Salt Lake, Utah, has been constructed and completed, the grades and curves have been greatly reduced, and the said line has been shortened about 51 miles. And these defendants aver that such improvements would not and could not have been made except for the improvement of the credit of both companies resulting from the acquisition by defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company of the stock of the Southern Pacific Company as aforesaid, thereby securing for the Union Pacific Railroad Company an adequate and permanent outlet and establishing upon uniform standards a continuous line and railroad system from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, as contemplated by said acts of Congress.

(16) They aver that the reports of defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company and Southern Pacific Company, returned under oath to the Interstate Commerce Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for every fiscal year since that date, have shown that a majority of the directors of the Southern Pacific Company were at the same time directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company; that since the 1st day of July, 1901, the records of said commission have shown that the same person was chief traffic officer of said Southern Pacific Company and of these defendants; that the purchase in 1901 of 750,000 shares and in 1902 of 150,000 additional shares of said Southern Pacific Company by Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company became known to said Interstate Commerce Commission and to the public at large soon after said purchases were made; that the fact that said Southern Pacific Company and these defendants had many common officers and agents, and the relations existing between said Southern Pacific Company and these defendants in all their details became known as they occurred to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to the public at large, and have been published constantly throughout the United States, not only in the news press but by advertisements of these defendants and of said Southern Pacific Company, and have never been denied or in any way concealed. They aver that the acquisition by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company of said 750,000 shares of the stock of the Southern Pacific Company in 1901, and of said additional 150,000 shares of such stock in 1902 by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, were actual purchases of said stock made in good faith, and were completed and fully executed by the delivery of the certificates for said 750,000 shares in 996 1901 and of said 150,000 shares in 1902 and by the payment of the price therefor at the time of such delivery. That the election of directors of said Southern Pacific Company and the election and appointment of all the officers and agents of said Southern Pacific Company and all other matters and things complained of in the petition herein, so far as they have occurred, were merely the natural and necessary consequences and results of said purchase of the said stock. That the acquisition of the preferred stock of said Southern Pacific Company by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company as aforesaid by the exercise of subscription rights did not change and has not changed the relative voting strength or position of the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company from what it was upon the completion of the purchase of said two blocks aggregating 900,000 shares of the common stock of the Southern Pacific Company as aforesaid. And these defendants aver that by reason of the premises, the right to maintain this suit and all rights of action or prosecution by the Government of the United States for or on account of the acquisition or ownership by either of these defendants of stock of said Southern Pacific Company accrued, if at all, more than three years and more than five years next before the commencement of this suit, and is therefore barred 997 by the statutes of the United States in such cases made and provided.

(17) They deny each and every allegation of Subdivision IV of the petition respecting any combination or conspiracy between the defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, and Union Pacific Railroad Company, for any of the purposes or with any of the intents alleged; and deny each and every allegation of said Subdivision IV of said petition not herein expressly admitted.

. (1) They deny that the defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, lman, and Union Pacific Railroad Company in the spring of 1, or at any other time, caused the Union Pacific Railroad Com- y to acquire a majority of the stock of the Northern Pacific lway Company pursuant to any conspiracy to restrain trade and merce among the several States and with foreign nations, to nopolize, or attempt to monopolize, such trade and commerce, or suppress any competition; and they deny all the allegations of division V of the petition respecting any conspiracy or combi- ion for that or any other purpose between any of the defendants his suit.

2) They admit that in the year 1901 said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company purchased $37,023,000 par value of the common stock, and $41,085,000 par value of the preferred stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and that at time of such purchase the total stock of the Northern Pacific lway Company issued and outstanding was of the aggregate par ue of $155,000,000, but deny that such purchase was in pursuance ny conspiracy or combination or for any of the purposes alleged he petition.

3) They admit the incorporation of the Northern Securities npany, and also the retirement of the preferred stock by an addi- al issue of common stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Com- y as alleged in said petition.

4) They admit the sale and transfer of said stock to the Northern urities Company, and the receipt by said Oregon Short Line ilroad Company of $82,491,871 par value of the stock of said rthern Securities Company represented by certificates issued in name of Edward H. Harriman and Winslow S. Pierce, who was that time general counsel of defendant Union Pacific Railroad mpany; and they admit that neither the said Harriman nor the d Pierce had any personal interest in said shares.

5) They admit the commencement of a suit by the United States of America against said Northern Securities Company) and others, and the decision of said suit as alleged in the petition.

(6) They admit the commencement thereafter of a suit by said egon Short Line Railroad Company, Edward H. Harriman, Wins- S. Pierce, and The Equitable Trust Company of New York, as ged in the petition; and they admit that the relief sought by the plainants in said suit was denied by the decrees entered therein. t they aver that the said courts by said decrees approved the dis- bution by the Northern Securities Company of the stock of the rthern Pacific Railway Company and the Great Northern Rail- y Company complained of by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and its codefendants in said suit; and that as a result of said distribution and of the approval of the same in said suit the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, during the year 1904, received from the Northern Securities Company, as the interest and share of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company of the assets so distributed, 281,828 shares (being 18.18 per cent) of the capital stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and 216,520 shares (being 17.32 per cent) of the capital stock of The Great Northern Railway Company; and that no doubt as to the right of said

1000 Oregon Short Line Railroad Company to so receive and hold the said shares was intimated by any of the courts in such suit.

(7) They aver that defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company upon the final decision of said suit proceeded from time to time to sell the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and of the Great Northern Railway Company, so received by it, as such sales could be advantageously affected; and that by such sales the amount of such stock so held has been steadily reduced, so that at the date of the commencement of this suit the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company had sold all but 1,128 shares of the aggregate par value of $112,800 of the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and all but 4,041 shares of the aggregate par value of $404,100 of the stock of the Great Northern Railway Company, which it had received from such distribution of the assets of said Northern Securities Company; and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, at the date of the commencement of this suit, also owned 32,516 partially paid shares of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and 38,700 partially paid shares of the Great Northern Railway Company, for which it had subscribed upon increases of the stock of said companies since said distribution was made.

1001 (8) They deny that the defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, and Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any other persons associated with them, caused the said suit of Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, Edward H. Harriman, Winslow S. Pierce and the Equitable Trust Company of New York against Northern Securities Company to be prosecuted for the purpose of effectuating any conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce or to smother competition or to monopolize any trade and commerce as in said petition alleged.

(9) They deny each and every allegation of said Subdivision not herein expressly admitted.

VI. (1) They admit that prior to the year 1902 defendant William A. Clark, together with others, caused to be incorporated the defendant The San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, but deny that it was for the purposes alleged in the petition;

fer to the articles of incorporation of said company for the purposes its incorporation.

(2) They admit that defendants Harriman and Clark, on or about e 9th day of July, 1902, entered into and executed an agreement in writing, and that "Exhibit A" to the petition is a true copy 02 of such agreement; but they deny that said agreement was entered into for any of the purposes alleged in Subdivision VI
f the petition, or for any purpose not set forth or mentioned in said Exhibit A"; and they aver that the said Harriman in entering into d executing said contract was acting for defendant Oregon Short ine Railroad Company and for no other corporation or person.

(3) They admit that, pursuant to said contract, "Exhibit A," other ntracts between the said Harriman and the said Clark and between e Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and the San Pedro, Los ngeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company were made and entered to in June and July, 1903, but deny that any of such other con-acts were of the character or for any of the purposes alleged in id Subdivision VI of the petition.

(4) They admit that on or about the 7th day of June, 1903, a con-act in writing bearing that date was made and entered into between illiam A. Clark, individually and as trustee for his associates, and e defendant Edward H. Harriman, as trustee for the defendant regon Short Line Railroad Company, and defendant The Farmers' oan and Trust Company, of which "Exhibit B" annexed to the petition is a true copy, and that stock of the defendant The 03 San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company was deposited with and is still held by said The Farmers' Loan d Trust Company, as stipulated and provided in and by said con-act "Exhibit B."

(5) They deny each and every allegation of a conspiracy or com-nation by and between defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Still-an, Clark, Union Pacific Railroad Company, and Oregon Short ine Railroad Company, or any of them, for any of the objects or rposes mentioned in Subdivision VI of the petition, or for any her purpose; and they deny each and every allegation in Subdision VI of the petition not herein in this subdivision expressly aditted; and they aver the facts to be as follows, viz:

(a) The Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Com-ny, the corporation which formerly owned the lines of railroad w owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, re-ived prior to the year 1890 to construct a line of railroad from lt Lake City, Utah, to Los Angeles, California, with various anches; and in 1890 it had constructed and put in operation the id line from Salt Lake City, via Sandy, Provo, Juab, and Leamington to Milford, Utah, a distance of 221.9 miles, and various 1004 branches, all of which are more particularly described as "(Parcel 1)" and "(Parcel 2)" of article second in the contract, "Exhibit A," to the petition herein. It had complied with all the laws of the Territory of Utah and the State of Nevada necessary to entitle it to construct said line and had surveyed and located the said line; and under due corporate action it had prepared and filed maps and profiles of the same in the proper land offices in Utah and Nevada to entitle it to and it had acquired the right of way for said line across the lands of the United States in a general southwesterly direction from Milford through Utah and across the State of Nevada to the boundary line between the States of Nevada and California. The said maps had been approved under the rules of the Department of the Interior, and the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company had graded and completed the roadbed of said line ready for the rails from Milford to the boundary line between Utah and Nevada, and had practically completed the grading of said line from said boundary line southwesterly to Calientes, Nevada, a distance of about 339 miles from Salt Lake City; and had graded a branch of said line from Calientes to Pioche, Nevada.

(b) On account of its inability at that time to procure 1005 the money necessary to complete the said line said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company discontinued and suspended the work of constructing said line in 1891. The said company continued in such financial difficulty that on or about the 13th day of October, 1893, all its railroads and other assets were placed in the hands of receivers, who administered the same until the sale thereof under the decrees of the Circuit Courts of the United States for the District of Utah, Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho on or about the 9th day of January, 1897, when they were bought by for defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company as hereinbefore alleged.

(c) The defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company after its acquisition of the railroads and other assets of the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company upon the foreclosure sale thereof as aforesaid until 1901 was financially unable actively to resume the construction of said line from Milford to Los Angeles and in its endeavor to provide for the completion of said line of railroad it conveyed that portion of said line, including the completed grade from Milford to the boundary line between the State of Utah and Nevada, to the "Utah and Pacific Railroad Company," a corporation of the State of Utah, all the capital stock 1006 of which was owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and conveyed that portion of said line from the boundary line between Utah and Nevada to the boundary

etween Nevada and California, including the partially constructed rade of the main line from the Utah boundary line to Calientes nd of the branch line from Calientes to Pioche to the "Utah, Neada and California Railroad Company," a corporation of the State f Nevada, all of the capital stock of which was owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company; and to construct, complete, nd own that portion of said line which was to be situated in the tate of California the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Comany caused to be incorporated and acquired all the capital stock f the "Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company in Calirnia."

(d) Early in 1901 said Utah and Pacific Railroad Company and id Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company, aided and sisted by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, actively sumed the construction of the said line of railroad from Milford Los Angeles, and to that end put a large force of men at work ying track upon and repairing, where necessary, the grade which had been constructed as aforesaid from Milford to Calientes 007 and in doing other work necessary in the construction of the said line to Los Angeles.

(e) On or about the date when the construction of said line as resumed in 1901 as aforesaid defendant, the San Pedro, Los ngeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company was incorporated under e laws of the State of Utah, with power to build or acquire railads in that State, but it did not acquire, under the laws of Nevada, e right to build or acquire railroads in that State, or acquire the ght under the laws of California to build or acquire any railroad rth or east of Riverside until long after that date. It had acired a line of railroad of inferior character extending from San edro to Los Angeles, a distance of twenty-four miles, and branches om Los Angeles to Pasadena and Glendale, a distance of about enty miles, which were the only railroads owned or controlled by id the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company hen the construction of the said line from Milford to Los Angeles as resumed by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company d the companies controlled by it as aforesaid.

(f) The said the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company at that time controlled, through the ownership of 008 stock or otherwise, the Utah and California Railway Company, a corporation of the State of Utah, authorized to build railroad in the State of Utah, but not in the States of Nevada or lifornia.

(g) The said the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad mpany had not at said time located any line of railroad or acired any rights of way or done any work of constructing a railroad easterly or northerly of Riverside, California, a distance of [illegible] miles from Los Angeles, and said Utah and California Railway Company had not at said time located any line of railroad or acquired any rights of way or done any work of constructing a railroad.

(h) Soon after the incorporation of said the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company it attempted to seize and appropriate to its own use the right of way across the State of Nevada and the partially completed grade between Calientes and Pioche, located and constructed by the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company as hereinbefore alleged, and then owned by the Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company; and to that end said the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company ran surveys over the said lines and prepared maps and profiles adopting the same as its own and attempted to file the same in 1009 the local land office of the United States in Nevada for the purpose of securing the right of way and also acquired a pretended tax title thereto from Lincoln County, Nevada, and also attempted by its laborers and other employees to seize and take forcible possession of the same.

(i) Thereupon and in order to protect its possession of and title to said grade and right of way across the State of Nevada, said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company commenced in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nevada a suit against said the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company and said Utah and California Railway Company and others, and upon the hearing of said cause an injunction was issued restraining and enjoining the said defendants from interfering with the possession and rights of said complainant; and said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company in a suit against said the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company and others in Lincoln County, Nevada, procured a decree canceling and setting aside the said pretended tax title of the defendant the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company; and the contests in the land offices of the United States between said Utah, Nevada 1010 and California Railroad Company and said the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company and said Utah and California Railway Company involving the said right of way were finally decided by the Secretary of the Interior in favor of the said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company.

(j) As a result of such decisions, rendered prior to the execution of the contract, "Exhibit A" to the petition, herein on July 9, 1[illegible] the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and said Union and Pacific Railroad Company and said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company, controlled by it, established their right to the partially completed railroad and the located line and right ray therefor from Salt Lake City, Utah, to the boundary lines between the States of Nevada and California and were rapidly proceeding with the completion of said line to Los Angeles, while the said the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company had in operation only the aforesaid line from San Pedro to Los Angeles and branches from Los Angeles to Pasadena and Glendale.

(k) And these defendants are informed and believe, and upon such information and belief allege, that defendant the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company would 1011 never have undertaken the construction of a line of railroad from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City, except for its expectation and belief, and the expectation and belief of the defendant Clark, that it could acquire without compensation the right of way and partially constructed line located and constructed as aforesaid by the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company from Milford through Utah and across the State of Nevada to the California boundary line, and that defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company would not extend the said line by construction from Milford to Los Angeles; and that when it appeared from the contests, suits, and decisions aforesaid that the said right of way and partially completed grade could not thus be acquired, and that defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company would construct and extend its own line from Milford to Los Angeles, the said the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company and the said Clark would have abandoned the previously conceived purposes and intention to construct and establish a line of railroad from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City, but for the ability to negotiate and execute the contract "Exhibit A" to the petition herein providing for the construction and establishment of such a line under the terms and 1012 conditions in said contract set forth.

(6) They deny that the said "Exhibit A" to the petition or that anything done in executing and carrying out the same has suppressed, restrained, or in any manner restricted any commerce among the several States or with foreign countries.

(7) They deny that the aforesaid act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, or any other law of the United States, was intended to or could constitutionally prohibit the making or carrying out of such agreement and contract, and aver that the construction of railroads in the States of Utah, Nevada, and California by the corporations of said States, respectively, or by corporations of other States authorized by the said States to exercise their corporate powers therein, and all agreements relating to the construction or the abandonment of the construction of such railroads are matters wholly to be dealt with by the laws of the said States respectively; and any act of Congress intended or construed to prohibit or regulate or in any manner interfere with such contracts, corporate powers, and matters in in excess of the powers of Congress under the Constitution of the United States, and is therefore void.

(8) They aver that although prosecuted diligently after 1013 the making of said contract, "Exhibit A" to the petition, the work of constructing the said railroad from Milford to Los Angeles was not completed and the said line opened for business until the first day of May, 1905; and these defendants aver that on the 9th day of July, 1902, when the said agreement was made and entered into, there was not then and from the nature of the work to be done there could not for several years be any competition of any kind between the parties to the said agreement in the transportation of commerce; and the possibility or probability of any such competition and of any restraint or restriction thereon was too remote and contingent to be prohibited by or to come within the provisions of the said act of Congress approved July 2, 1890.

(9) They aver that the said contract, "Exhibit A" to the petition, was made and entered into on the 9th day of July, 1902, and not afterward, and they aver that by reason of the premises the right to maintain this suit and all right of action or prosecution by the Government of the United States for or on account of said contract or for or on account of any of the matters and things alleged in Subdivision VI of the petition, accrued, if at all, more than three years and more than five years next before the commencement of this 1014 suit and is therefore barred by the statutes of the United States in such cases made and provided, and all right of the petitioner to relief herein is barred by the said statutes.

VII. (1) These defendants are without any knowledge respecting the purchase of shares of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company by defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, Rogers, and Frick, or any of them, and of any conspiracy or combination between the defendants last mentioned for the purchase of such stock or for any other purpose, and of the election of defendants Frick and Rogers as directors of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, and of the reasons for such election.

(2) They admit that during the year 1906 defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company purchased $10,000,000 par value of the preferred stock of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, which it still owns, and they aver that neither of the defendants has ever owned any other stock of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company; and they also aver that the capital stock of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company outstanding at the time of such purchase was, and still is, of the 1015 aggregate par value of $216,199,530.

(3) They deny that in the purchase of said stock or otherwise these defendants, or either of them, conspired or combined, or have ever conspired or combined, with the defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, Rogers, and Frick, or any of them, for the purchase of stock of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, or to restrain trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, or to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, such trade and commerce, or to restrain and prevent competition among any railroad systems, or for any other purpose alleged or mentioned in the petition herein.

(4) They deny that the lines of railroad of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company are operated in harmony with the lines of defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company and of the Southern Pacific Company under agreements and understandings as to rates and divisions of business, and that competition between such lines has been eliminated or in anywise restricted.

(5) They are without knowledge of any agreements between the Southern Pacific Company and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company respecting the extension or abandon-1016 ment of the extension of their lines in California, and are without knowledge of the incorporation of the "Northwestern Pacific Railway Company" and of the ownership of its stock.

(6) They deny all the other allegations of Subdivision VII of the petition.

VIII. And these defendants deny all and all manner of unlawful combination and confederacy wherewith they are by the said petition charged without this, that if there is any other matter, cause, or thing in the petition contained material or necessary for these defendants to make answer unto and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, and avoided or denied the same is not true to the knowledge or belief of these defendants, all of which matters and things these defendants are ready and willing to aver, maintain, and prove as this honorable court shall direct and humbly pray to be hence dismissed with their reasonable costs and charges in their behalf most wrongfully sustained.

1018 The joint and separate answer of the defendants, William A. Clark and of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, to the original bill of the United States of America filed herein. (Filed April 6, 1908.)

1019 In the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Utah. No. 933. In equity.

The United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company; Oregon Short Line Railroad Company; the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company; The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company; The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company; Southern Pacific Company; Northern Pacific Railway Company; Great Northern Railway Company; Farmers' Loan and Trust Company; Edward H. Harriman; Jacob H. Schiff; Otto H. Kahn; James Stillman; Henry H. Rogers; Henry C. Frick, and William A. Clark, defendants.

1020 The joint and separate answer of the defendants, William A. Clark and of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, to the original bill of the United States of America filed herein.

These defendants, now and at all times hereafter saving to themselves all manner of benefit and advantage of exception which can or may be taken to the errors, uncertainties, and other imperfections in the complainant's bill contained, or to so much and such parts thereof as these defendants are advised it is material or necessary for them to make answer unto, answering, say:

I. They admit that the defendant, the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, is now and since about the first day of May, 1905, has been a common carrier engaged in the transportation of freight and passengers within the States of California, Nevada, and Utah, and between the termini of its railroad at San Pedro, in the State of California, and at Salt Lake City, in the State of Utah; and since that time has participated in the transportation of freight and passengers under joint and through tariffs made effective therefor according to law, over the lines of railroad 1021 owned by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, Denver and Rio Grande Railroad Company, and to a limited extent in southern California with the Southern Pacific Company and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, and among the several States of the United States into and through which the transportation lines owned and operated by said companies, respectively, and not further or other rise, and to that extent the defendant San Pedro, Los Angeles nd Salt Lake Railroad Company is now and since about May 1st, 905, has been engaged in trade and commerce among the several tates and with foreign nations.

II. For answer to the second paragraph of complainant's bill, hese defendants say that they have no knowledge, information, or elief in respect to said several matters in said second paragraph lleged except the statements and allegations of the complainant ontained in said paragraph; wherefore these defendants neither admit nor deny the same, but leave the complainant to make such proof s it may see proper or be advised.

III. For answer to the third paragraph of complainant's
022 bill, or to so much thereof as these defendants are advised it is material or necessary for them to make answer to, they admit hat the defendant San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company is now the owner of or operates a line of railroad extending from East San Pedro, a port on the Pacific Ocean, in the State of California, and thence by way of Los Angeles through the States of California and Nevada and into the State of Utah to the city of Salt Lake, in said State of Utah; that the said company is also the owner of certain branch lines of railroad extending from Los Angeles, in California, to Glendale and Pasadena; that that part of its said line of railroad lying between Riverside Junction and Colton and San Bernardino is used and operated under a lease whereby the right to use the tracks of said Southern Pacific Company between said points is conferred upon defendant, San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company; and that a portion of the track of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company extending from Colton through San Bernardino and Barstow to Daggett, in California, is operated upon by the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company by virtue of a certain lease whereby the joint use of that portion of the tracks of said Atchison, To-1023 peka and Santa Fe Railway Company is granted for a term of years to the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company. They admit that the remainder of the line of railroad from San Pedro to Salt Lake City aforesaid is owned by the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, and that the entire line constitutes a continuous line of railroad between said points. They admit and aver that the line of railroad of the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company was completed between its said termini on or about the first day of May, 1905, and also admit and aver that it has been at all times since its completion, through its connection with the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company at Salt Lake City and also by and through a connection which it has and maintains with the Denver and Rio Grande

Railroad Company at Salt Lake and at Provo, in Utah, a competing with the Southern Pacific Company.

They deny that there is or has been for any reason or by any cause any suppression of competition by any act or thing done or suffered to be done by the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company in its relation to any traffic having origin or destination upon or beyond the lines of railroad owned and operated 1024 by the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company or any other traffic.

IV. For answer to the fourth paragraph of complainant's bill these defendants say that they have no knowledge, information, or advice save that contained in the several allegations of said Paragraph IV of complainant's bill, and for want of such information or knowledge these defendants are unable specifically to admit or deny the several allegations therein contained, and leave the complainant to make such proofs as it may be advised.

V. For answer to the fifth paragraph of complainant's bill, these defendants say that they have no knowledge, information, or advice save that contained in the several allegations of said Paragraph V of complainant's bill, and for want of such information or knowledge these defendants are unable specifically to admit or deny the several allegations therein contained, and leave the complainant to make such proofs as it may be advised.

VI. For anwser to the sixth paragraph of complainant's bill these defendants aver that prior to the twentieth day of 1025 March, 1901, there existed in the State of California a certain railroad corporation known as the Los Angeles Terminal Railway Company, which owned and operated a line of railroad extending from East San Pedro, bordering upon the harbor of San Pedro in California, to Los Angeles, California, with a branch line extending from Los Angeles to Pasadena, and with another branch line extending from a point on the last-named branch to a terminus at Verdugo in California, in all about 45 miles of railroad; and

That there also existed a corporation known as the Los Angeles Terminal Land Company, which owned certain lands at and near the terminus of said railroad at San Pedro, California;

That there also existed at the same time a corporation known as the California Improvement Company, the same being a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, which was the owner of the stocks of the first two mentioned corporations; and

That within a few months prior to said March 20th, 1901, the stock and interests in said corporations were owned by defendant Clark and certain other persons;

That said persons, owners of the stock of the said several 1026 corporations above named, about March 12th, 1901, caused articles of association to be made for the creation of a corporation to be known as the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, which articles of association were duly executed; and on March 20th, 1901, filed in the proper offices in the State of Utah, whereby the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company became on March 20th, 1901, legally incorporated under the laws of the State of Utah;

That in compliance with the laws of the State of Nevada, and to enable it to own and acquire a railroad in the State of Nevada, the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, on April 8th, 1901, filed its articles of incorporation, duly certified, in the proper offices in the said State of Nevada; and

That on the thirteenth day of April, 1901, in order to comply with the laws of the State of California, the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company filed duly certified copies of its articles of incorporation in the office of the secretary of state of the State of California, and that it filed its articles of incorporation in the county of Los Angeles, in said State, on the fifteenth day 1027 of April; in the county of San Bernardino, on the tenth day of December, 1901; and in Riverside County in California on the tenth day of April, 1902.

These defendants allege that the purpose of said incorporators who created the said corporation was duly expressed by them in the articles of incorporation of said company; and that the corporate powers and the business and purposes of said corporation were duly expressed in the said articles of incorporation under which the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, among other things, was given power "to own and operate a main line of railroad from Salt Lake City, in the State of Utah, through the following counties in the said State: Salt Lake, Utah, Tooele, Juab, Millard, Beaver, and Iron; also through Lincoln County in Nevada, and also through the counties of San Bernardino, Riverside, Orange, and Los Angeles, in California, to a terminal point on the harbor of San Pedro, in Los Angeles County, California"; and it also thereby had power to construct, own, and operate certain branch lines of railroad particularly described in its said articles; and thereby it also had power "to buy, own, maintain, operate, and further extend" the railroad rights, properties, and franchises in the 1028 State of Utah, which are so located as to be conveniently appropriated as a part of the main line of its said railroad, or as branch lines thereof; and to purchase like properties in the State of Nevada and the State of California; and particularly to purchase the railroad properties and franchises of the Los Angeles Terminal Railroad Company; and to build and operate certain extensions and branches more particularly described in said articles; and to acquire real estate for the operation of wharves on navigable waters; and also to operate a telegraph line and own and hold water rights, lands, and materials necessary for the purposes of the corporation. It also had power "to purchase or otherwise acquire and own" the capital stock or securities, or any part of the capital stock or securities, of any other railroad corporation or corporations.

These defendants submit that the purpose for which the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company was organized and created is fully and particularly specified and set forth in its said articles of incorporation, reference to which is hereby made and prayed to be considered herein, specifically set forth, and the same will be shown and exhibited upon the hearing of this cause; and

These defendants expressly deny that the alleged purpose
1029 set forth in the first clause of the sixth paragraph of complainant's bill was or is a true statement of the purpose of the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company or of its incorporators, and alleges that its only purpose was that expressed in its said articles of incorporation.

These defendants admit that the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company acquired a line of railway from San Pedro to Los Angeles, which, defendants aver, was by and through a conveyance of the properties of the Los Angeles Terminal Railway Company, which conveyance was delivered to and accepted by the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company on March 21st, 1901, under which the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company became the owner of a line of railroad extending from East San Pedro aforesaid through Los Angeles to Pasadena and Glendale, as above mentioned.

In respect to the allegation of said bill that the defendant San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company was "engaged in the construction of the balance of its line when the defendants Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, for the sole 1030 purpose of restraining trade and commerce among the States and with foreign nations and monopolizing same, as hereinbefore more particularly set forth, and of preventing competition between said railways then in process of construction; and the said Union Pacific Railroad system, including said Southern Pacific system, brought suits of various kinds in the courts for the purpose of harassing and injuring the said railway company and preventing the acquisition of the necessary right of way for the same; put large gangs of men at work to interfere with and prevent construction of the said line; threatened said Clark and his associates in the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company that if said line was completed the same would be paralleled by the Oregon

Short Line, its value would be destroyed, and its ability to secure business or operate at a profit would be taken away, which said threats, litigation, and other interference were continued for a period of many months"; these defendants deny the said several allegations and each of them, and aver the truth to be, in respect of said several allegations, that a controversy did arise about April 1st, 1901, between the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company and the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, 1031 and one of its auxiliary and subsidiary companies known as the Utah, California and Nevada Railroad Company. The said controversies were with respect to the conflicting rights and claims of said companies to a certain right of way for a railroad extending from the eastern boundary of the State of Nevada, beginning at a point known as Uvada, in Lincoln County, in said State; thence in a southwesterly course across the State of Nevada to the southwestern boundary thereof; and also a branch line of the railroad right of way extending from a point upon the line above described, designated and known as Clover Valley Junction, said point being distant about forty miles southwesterly from said Uvada, the point of beginning of the above-described line, and extending thence in a northerly or northwesterly direction to the town of Pioche, in Lincoln County, in the said State, a distance of about thirty miles.

The contention and claim of the said Oregon Short Line and its said auxiliary company was based upon and grew out of a certain law in the United States entitled, "An act granting to railroads the right of way across the public land of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, the title and claim of the said Short Line Company being substantially as follows:

1032 The Nevada Pacific Railway Company was a corporation created in the year 1889, existing under the laws of the State of Nevada, and its franchise authorized it to construct a railroad connecting with the railroad of the Utah Central Railway Company's railroad at a point on the eastern boundary of the State of Nevada, now known as Uvada, near Pioche in Lincoln County, Nevada, and extending thence in a southwesterly course across the said State of Nevada to the western boundary line of the said State, with two branch lines thence extending into the counties of White Pine and Nye.

That on the twenty-seventh day of July, 1889, the said Nevada Pacific Railway Company, together with the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the Utah and Northern Railway Company, and other railroad corporations of the States of Utah, Idaho, and of the United States, pursuant to lawful authority, made and entered into certain articles of consolidation and agreements, whereby said several corporations agreed to and with each other to unite and consolidate and to unite, form, and consolidate their respective organizations, capital stock railroads and franchises of every nature and description into one company, to continue in existence for a period of fifty years, and to be called and known as "Oregon 1033 Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company."

For a more particular and complete statement of the terms and conditions of the said articles of consolidation, reference is hereby made to the same, which will be exhibited to this honorable court in due course.

That in the years 1889 and 1890 said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company resolved to construct its railroad upon its right of way from Milford, in the State of Utah, to a point now known as Uvada, on said line, and thence into Lincoln County, Nevada, upon the line authorized under the charter privileges prior to the execution of said agreement of consolidation and owned and enjoyed by the said Nevada Pacific Railway Company.

That in pursuance of said determination the said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company adopted its line of railroad and located the same, caused a copy of its articles of incorporation and due proof of its organization under the same and maps and profiles showing its line of railroad as located and adopted by it to be filed with the local land offices of the United States in Nevada and Utah and to be forwarded therefrom to the Secretary of the Interior, and also caused maps and profiles of the line of its 1034 railroad from Milford, Utah, to the Utah-Nevada State line at the point now known as Uvada, and also from the said last-named point southwesterly, through the State of Nevada, to the southwestern boundary thereof, and also extending from a point upon said line then known as and called Clover Valley Junction, but now Caliente, and extending thence in a northerly or northwesterly direction to the town of Pioche, in Lincoln County, in the said State, a distance of about thirty miles, to be duly prepared and submitted to the proper officers of the Land Department of the United States, and thereupon said maps and profiles were by said officers and by the Secretary of the Interior of the United States duly approved, all in conformity with the terms and provisions of the aforesaid act of Congress of the United States and pursuant to the regulations and requirements of the Secretary of the Interior of the United States; and that thereby the said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company claimed to have become fully possessed of the ownership of the said railway shown and indicated upon said maps and profiles between the eastern boundary of the State of Nevada and southwesterly boundary of the said State, and also upon said branch line from Clover Valley Junction to Pioche aforesaid and 1035 shown upon said maps and profiles of said railroad and as approved by the Secretary of the Interior of the United States.

That the right, title, and interest so acquired by the said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company had not been forfeited by the United States or by any act of Congress thereof, nor by any proceedings under the direction of Secretary of the Interior or by quo warranto nor any other proceeding whatsoever, nor in any way or manner; but the same was claimed as a valid subsisting vested right, title, and ownership in the said right of way, and the grade thereon constructed by said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company and its assigns.

That during the year 1890 the said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company entered upon the construction of its said line of railway from Milford, in the State of Utah, to the Nevada State line, and from said State line into and through Lincoln County, Nevada, including the said branch line from Clover Valley Junction to Pioche, and expended in constructing the roadbed and embankments, including bridges, tunnels, and work within and upon said right of way, in all about the sum of one million dollars, of which sum about six hundred and ninety thousand 1036 dollars was expended upon that portion of the right of way in Lincoln County, Nevada, in the construction of grade, embankments, cuts, tunnels, and work in and upon said right of way from Uvada aforesaid southwesterly along the main line of said railway to Clover Valley Junction, a distance of about forty miles, and from said last-named point northerly or northwesterly upon said branch line to or near the said town of Pioche, a distance of about thirty miles.

That in the year 1891, after expending said sums of money, the said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company became embarrassed financially and was unable to prosecute said work to completion, and for said reason suspended the prosecution of said work.

That all the properties of the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company, including the properties above mentioned and described, about August 1st, 1889, were mortgaged by the said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company to the American Loan and Trust Company of Boston.

That in the 1895 the said company, being in default in the payment of its indebtedness, secured by said mortgage and other mortgages upon its property, the American Loan and Trust Com-

1037 pany, trustee of the said consolidated mortgage, brought its bill to foreclose the same in the Circuit Courts of the United States; and thereafter in said suit such proceedings were had that a decree of foreclosure and sale was duly entered thereon, and the said property embraced in the said mortgage was duly sold by proceedings under said decree of foreclosure and thereafter duly conveyed to the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company by the master under the terms and directions of said decree; and that in making execution and delivery of the conveyance of said properties the said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company duly joined, and the purchaser at said foreclosure sale was duly let into the possession thereof, under the terms of said decree of foreclosure and sale, on or about March 15th, 1897.

The said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the purchaser of the property of the said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company, was a corporation of the State of Utah, organized as such on the ninth day of February, 1897, and had power to acquire, own, operate, enjoy, maintain, and further extend all of the lines of the railroad right of way and property formerly owned and enjoyed by the said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company.

That in the year 1896, pending the foreclosure proceed-1038 ings above mentioned, there was formed in the State of Utah a corporation known as the Utah and California Railway Company, which had power by its original articles of incorporation to construct, own, and operate a railroad from Salt Lake City, in the State of Utah, to St. George, in the State of Utah; and that by an amendment to the said articles the said company was empowered to construct a branch line from a point at or near Milford, Beaver County, Utah, a station on the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company, as then constructed, and continuing to the Utah-Nevada State line at a point now known as Uvada.

Said Utah and California company caused maps of its proposed railroad to be prepared and submitted to the proper land officers of the United States for its line of railroad, as shown upon said maps extending from Milford station to Uvada, in the State of Utah, which said line of its railroad was identical with the constructed roadbed and right of way line of said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company; and

The said Utah and California company caused to be prepared maps and profiles of a proposed railroad line extending from the 1039 boundary line between the said States of Utah and Nevada from Uvada into and through Lincoln County, in the State of Nevada, for a distance of about forty miles, to a point known as called Clover Valley Junction; and also northerly from said point for a distance of about thirty miles to Pioche, which said maps and profiles were for a right of way identical with and laid upon the right of way and railroad grade and embankments and embraced in the maps and profiles and right of way of said Oregon Short Line as Utah Northern Railway Company hereinbefore described; and it caused said maps and profiles covering the said line within the State of Nevada to be deposited with the said land office of the United States for the district of Nevada for approval by the Secretary of the Interior.

That none of the said maps and profiles so filed by the Utah and California Railway Company over the said line within the States of Utah and Nevada were ever approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and that no title to the said right of way shown upon such maps was ever acquired by the Utah and California Railway Company.

That the said articles of incorporation and corporation franchise of the said Utah and California Company did not at the time 1040 aforesaid embrace any right, franchise, or power to construct, maintain, or operate a railroad for any distance whatsoever, or at all, within the State of Nevada.

And the said Utah and California Railway Company had not at the time of making and depositing its said maps and profiles upon the said line in the State of Nevada any right, franchise, or power whatsoever under which it could make, construct, or operate a railroad in the State of Nevada, nor under which it could, according to the laws of the said State of Nevada, acquire any right to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad in said State.

That in the year 1898 the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company made a certain agreement with one McCune and his associates providing that they should organize a company to be known as Utah and Pacific Railroad Company, to build, construct, maintain, and operate a railroad from Milford station, on the line of the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company in Beaver County, Utah, to Nevada, on the Nevada State line.

In said agreement the Short Line Company reserved to itself the option to purchase and take over from said McCune and others the majority of the capital stock and securities of the said Utah and Pacific Company.

1041 That pursuant to said agreement a corporation of the State of Utah was organized by the name last aforesaid, and the line of the railroad from Milford to Uvada was by it constructed.

That the Utah and California Railway Company waived its preferred rights under its said filing of maps and profiles in favor of the said Utah and Pacific Railroad Company, and consented that the Utah and Pacific Railroad Company should construct, maintain, and operate its railroad upon said right of way; and

That the said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company assigned and transferred their rights to said right of way and railroad grade betwe said points to said Utah and Pacific Railroad Company, and the sa railroad of the Utah and Pacific Railroad Company was construc and operated from Milford to Uvada aforesaid upon a right of w duly approved to it by the United States and identical with the orig

nal right of way approved by the United States to said Oregon Sho Line and Utah Northern Railway Company.

That said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company acquired all th stock, bonds, and securities of said Utah and Pacific Railro 1042 Company and was possessed thereof and operated said ra road to Uvada as aforesaid.

That at the time said controversies arose the line of the railroad the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company operated by it, includi the said Utah and Pacific Company, extended from Salt Lake Ci in the State of Utah, continuously to said Uvada, a distance of miles, and at Uvada connected with the railway right of way f merly owned by the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railw Company and extended into and through Lincoln County, Nevada, a it was engaged in collecting material for and in preparation for co tinuing the construction of a railroad upon the said line of right way into and through Lincoln County, Nevada, including said bra line to Pioche.

On the second day of February, 1898, the Utah, Nevada and C fornia Railroad Company was organized in and under the laws the State of Nevada as an auxiliary company of the Oregon Sh Line Railroad Company for the purpose of constructing a railr from the eastern boundary of the State of Nevada, from a point n Uvada aforesaid, southwesterly across the State of Nevada to southwestern boundary of said State, with a branch line extend from a point on the aforesaid main line of railroad, ea 1043 Clover Valley Junction, and about forty miles southwes from the said boundary line between the State of Utah Nevada, and extending thence in a northerly and northwesterly di tion a distance of about thirty miles to the town of Pioche, in Lin County, Nevada, and for the purpose of utilizing, using, and occ ing the line of right of way and railroad grade of the said Or Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company hereinbefore ferred to, but to so occupy the same with the consent of the Or Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company aforesaid, an assignee, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company.

That all of the capital stock of said Utah, Nevada and Calif Railroad Company was owned by said Oregon Short Line Rail
Company.

That after its organization the said Utah, Nevada and Calif
Railroad Company duly adopted and located its line of railroa caused to be prepared maps and profiles of its said line of railroad showing the line thereof across the public lands of the United States from Uvada to Clover Valley Junction, a distance of about forty miles, the same being identical with the line of right of way of said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company 1044 hereinbefore referred to and caused its said maps and profiles, together with copies of its articles of association and due proofs of its organization to be deposited in the proper land office in the State of Nevada under and as required by the regulations and requirements of the Department of the Interior prescribed under and by virtue of the act of Congress aforesaid; that by reason of the apparent conflict of location and claims of said several companies indicated in said several sets of maps the Department of the Interior required a hearing to be had before the said local land office in Carson City, Nevada, to determine the rights of said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company and of the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company and the said Utah and California Railway Company in respect to said location and right of way; that a hearing was had in said local land office pursuant to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, but said local land office erroneously and wrongfully held that the grant to and right of way of the said Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company under its said approved maps and location were forfeited because said line was not built within five years, and erroneously recommended that the maps and location of the said Utah and California Rail-1045 way Company should be approved. Afterwards, on the twenty-fourth day of April, 1901, the Land Commissioner of the General Land Office, having before him by proper proceedings the record and testimony and the findings and recommendations of the local land office, did correct said error made by the local land office and recommended to the Secretary of the Interior that the said maps and profiles of said Utah and California Railway Company be disapproved, and the maps and profiles and "due proofs" presented by the said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company were approved by the Secretary of the Interior of the United States on the twenty-fifth day of April, 1901.

That the said Utah and California Railway Company, after the filing of its said maps and due proofs as aforesaid, and on December 8th, 1900, at a meeting of its stockholders amended its articles of association so as to create a right, power, and franchise for it to build, construct, maintain, and operate a railroad in the State of Nevada, but did not file its said amended articles of association in the State of Nevada until the eighth day of April, 1901.

That about the first day of April, 1901, by reason of the failure of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company to build and com-

1046 plete the said railroad within five years from the date of the approval of the said maps and profiles first filed by the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company as aforesaid, and because of the approval of the maps and profiles of the Utah and California Railway Company by the local land office, and because of refusal of the approval by the local land office of the maps, profiles, and due proofs theretofore filed by said Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company, the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, having at that time obtained the consent of the Utah and California Railway Company and control of said company by ownership of its stock, was advised that the said line of right of way was owned by it and lawfully appropriated by said Utah and California Railway Company and its assigns, undertook to enter upon the said right of way, grade, roadbed, tunnels and improvements made and constructed as aforesaid, and to take hold and appropriate the same under its supposed rights under the Utah and California Railway Company and under its own charter, and that thereupon the Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company being engaged in the construction of its line of railroad southwesterly from Uvada, a direct conflict arose between the agents and servants of the respective companies.

1047 That in order to quiet the same and to settle the rights and interests of the respective claimants to said right of way, a suit was brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nevada by the Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company against the Utah and California Railway Company, the Empire Construction Company, the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, C. O. Whittemore, T. E. Gibbon, J. Ross Clark, Adam Paul, Virgil Kelley, H. B. Maxson, in which suit the the complainant alleged the facts hereinbefore set out; that in said suit the complainant therein, the Utah, Nevada & California Railroad Company afterwards filed a supplemental bill alleging that the Utah & California Railway Company had made some sort of contract or agreement whereby it conveyed or agreed to convey to the said San Pedro Company some right, title, estate, or interest in and to the said railroad grade and roadbed hereinbefore described. It also alleged in said supplemental bill the filing by it of maps, profiles, and due proofs for its branch line extending from Clover Valley Junction to the town of Pioche, in the State of Nevada; also the surveying and adoption of its line of railroad from Clover Valley Junction southwesterly across the State of Nevada to the western 1048 boundary thereof, and that it had caused maps and profiles of its line of right of way, as adopted by it for that part of its proposed line southwesterly from Clover Valley Junction across the State of Nevada to the western boundary of said State, to be suritted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval; that it had ly adopted the line of right of way described upon and embraced said maps by due corporate action by its board of directors, and at it had continuously prosecuted the work of construction of its ilroad upon the line of railroad right of way indicated and shown on its said several maps and profiles, and that it then had in opera-on twenty-three miles of railroad in and upon its said main line right of way from the Utah-Nevada State line in the direction and wards Clover Valley Junction aforesaid, and that it had on hand ack material and was actively and earnestly prosecuting the work construction of said line of railroad through Clover Valley Juncon and toward the western boundary of the State. It alleged the try upon its line of railroad by the said San Pedro, Los Angeles d Salt Lake Railroad Company and the attempted location of a ght of way for the benefit of the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, and alleged its claim to right 949 and title to the entire line of right of way and the interference therewith from Uvada westward by the agents and servants the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Com-ny, and alleged and claimed title to the whole of the said line of ght of way, and prayed that the claim of right and title asserted by e said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company ereto be quieted and its possession and right of possession be con-med to it.

That in said suit answers were filed by the defendants in said suit, cluding the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad ompany, and that a temporary injunction was issued and allowed nder the said original bill.

In said suit the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Rail-ad Company filed its answer and cross bill to the said original and id amended and supplemental bills, and denied either upon in-rmation or directly the allegations thereof, and claimed that it d the right to enter in and upon and to appropriate all the prem-es claimed by the complainant in said suit, and by way of cross mplaint in said proceedings alleged and set out its claim to all of at part of the line of right of way for a railroad commencing at Clover Valley Junction, extending thence in a southwesterly 050 direction through the Meadow Valley Wash to the Nevada-California State line, a distance of about one hundred and enty-five miles, and alleged the adoption by it of its line of ght of way for its railroad, the filing by it of copies of its articles f association, due proofs, maps, and profiles, as required by the laws f the United States; denied the said complainant's adoption, locaion, or filing of maps and profiles as to different portions of said ne, and attacked the method of survey, location, and adoption of route which had been made by the complainant, and charged that the said complainant's supposed line was not validly made, adopted, located, or proven; that on June 10th, 1901, it had commenced at Salt Lake City the survey and location of a part of its line from Salt Lake City by the most feasible and direct route through said State of Utah and into the State of Nevada to a point of connection with its said line of railroad surveyed, located, and adopted in the State of Nevada, and then had about eighty miles of said line surveyed and adopted; alleged that it had entered upon and taken possession of all of the railroad right of way from Clover Valley Junction to the Nevada-California State line, and that on May 6th it commenced the work of construction of its railroad upon said

1051 line, and that at a point about twenty-six miles southwesterly from Clover Valley Junction it had entered upon and commenced construction of its railroad line upon said disputed right of way, and alleged its purpose to continue to use and occupy said disputed right of way as the location for its line of railroad; that it was then engaged in surveying and locating a line for its railroad from the city of Los Angeles, in the State of California, to the Nevada-California State line; that it then had acquired and had in operation its railroad from San Pedro to the city of Los Angeles, a distance of 27 miles, and had acquired a system of railroads in the city of Los Angeles and extending into the surrounding country, consisting of three branch lines of standard-gauge railroad, aggregating in all about eighty miles of track; that it had expended in addition to the amount expended in acquiring the Los Angeles Terminal Railway's property, about five hundred thousand dollars; that it purchased rails for sixty miles of track, a large number of ties, was rebuilding its railroad between San Pedro Harbor and Los Angeles; that it had purchased from private owners nearly all the right of way for the first sixty miles of its railroad easterly from Los Angeles, and was engaged in securing the remainder right of

1052 way, and that it proposed to continue the same; that when the right of way was secured contracts for the grading of the first sixty miles of its line would at once be let and the railroad constructed thereon. It recited the purchase of equipment and preparations for construction; alleged that the complainant on July 29th had entered at Clover Valley Junction upon the said disputed right of way formerly owned by the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company, and forcibly took possession thereof and threatened to proceed along the said disputed right of way in the construction of its own railroad. By said cross bill the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company prayed, amongst other things, for the settlement of the title to the disputed right of way, and that the complainant in said suit and all persons under them be enjoined from interfering with or occupying the said disputed right of way, and that the title thereof be declared to be in the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, and that the title of the complainant, the Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company, be quieted in the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, and for relief by which the complainant would be excluded from any further right, title, or claim therein.

1053 The case was heard upon the issues as made up under the original bill, the supplemental bill, the cross bill, and the respective motions for injunction before the Honorable Thomas P. Hawley, judge of the said United States Circuit Court, on the 22d day of July, 1901, and the said complainants in the said original bill were granted an injunction restraining the Utah and California Railway Company and the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company from interference with the line of right of way and railroad roadbed and grade from Uvada to Clover Valley Junction and thence to Pioche, and the court denied the prayer of the complainant for an injunction pendente lite, under its amended and supplemental bill, as to that portion of the line of right of way for a railroad southwesterly from Clover Valley Junction, and as the respective claims of the parties in respect thereto were yet pending before the Land Department of the United States left the decision of questions as to such rights to be further considered after the completion of the respective hearings in said Land Department of the United States.

1054 That the complainant in said suit, the Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company, completed its line of railroad to Clover Valley Junction on or about the first day of August, 1901, and there was in operation by it and the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company at that time southwardly from Salt Lake by direct line about three hundred and twenty-four miles of railroad.

These defendants allege that after the said decision of the United States court for the district of Nevada the complainant in said suit and the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company each, by their separate corps of surveyors, surveyed and studied the country known as the Meadow Valley Wash, the then only known practicable route for a railroad southwesterly from Caliente, Nevada, for a distance of about one hundred and twenty-five miles, and which consists of a canyon carrying a mountain stream, the difficulties of railroad construction through which for even one line of railroad are from a physical standpoint very great, and thence across the desert to a junction with the line of railroad of the Atchison, Topeka and

Santa Fe Railway Company; that along the entire line of railroad through said Meadow Valley Wash and to a junction with the railroad of the Santa Fe Company there were almost no agricultural, live-stock, or mining interests or development, practically no local settlement, either actual or prospective, and the line of railroad between said points was through a canyon or a desert without any substantial showing for even a prospective local business.

These defendants deny that they or either of them were at any time or in any manner or for any reason whatever induced to or did desist from and abandon their proposed intention of building a line of railroad such as was described and defined in the articles of association of the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company. They deny that the said Harriman and his associates and the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, on the one part, and defendant Clark and his associates upon the other part, then or at any time, combined and confederated together to suppress any competition either actual or proposed. They deny that the said Clark and his associates, upon the one part, or the said Harriman and his associates and the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company then or at any time made or entered into any contract, agreement, or combination to in any manner maintain, continue, or extend the, or any, alleged restraint of trade mentioned in complainant's bill, or to maintain, continue, or extend any or the alleged monopoly. They deny that the said William A. Clark joined in the alleged or any conspiracy to suppress competition in any or all of the territory set forth or described in the complainant's bill, and deny that in pursuance of such alleged or any unlawful alliance with said, or any of said, alleged conspirators the said Clark entered into a certain agreement with the defendant Harriman under date of July 9th, 1902. They admit that the defendant Clark and the said Harriman did make a certain agreement, dated July 9th, 1902, and they admit that a copy thereof is annexed to the said complainant's bill, marked "Exhibit A." These defendants allege and aver that there was not at the time of the making of said agreement any continuous line of railroad extending from Salt Lake City in Utah to San Pedro via Los Angeles. They allege the truth to be that the only railroad constructed at that time was the railroad owned by the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and its auxiliary company, the Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company, which extended southerly from Salt Lake by direct line for a distance of about three hundred and twenty-four miles; that the said Short Line Company also owned and operated other branch lines of railroad south of Salt Lake City, including a cut-off then being constructed and known as the Leanington Cut-off, extending southerly from Salt Lake City through Stockton to Leamington Junction for a distance of about 200 1057 miles, making in all a constructed line of railroad and branch lines owned and operated by the said Short Line Company south of Salt Lake City, of about 525 miles; that the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company at that time owned in southern California a line of railroad with branches aggregating about eighty miles of constructed road, and was engaged in securing rights of way for the construction of its line of railroad and in constructing a road thereon from Los Angeles to Riverside, and that the amount of railroad thus under construction amounted to about sixty miles. It also claimed to have located a line for a right of way across Government land extending from Caliente to a junction with the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company's line of railroad for about 300 miles, the title to which was in dispute.

These defendants allege and aver that the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company had not acquired nor located its line of railroad between said junction with the Santa Fe Railroad tracks and San Bernardino and Riverside, California. That the route from Daggett, the junction point with the Santa Fe Railroad aforesaid, passed over a range of mountains over the Cajon Pass for a distance of about eighty miles, which called for the 1058 crossing of a mountain of steep grades and which required very heavy, expensive construction work, and it had not acquired any right of way nor made any certain and definite plans for the construction of its line of road from San Bernardino to Riverside, California, nor yet between said Riverside and the said junction of the Santa Fe Railroad aforesaid.

The said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company had failed to secure to itself the right and title to the line of right of way for a railroad, including the roadbed built thereon originally by the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern Railway Company, and the right to the location of its entire line of railroad from Caliente southwesterly to a junction with the Santa Fe tracks as aforesaid, was in dispute in the Land Department of the United States; and the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company was advised that its right to recover in said proceedings was in grave doubt.

The premises and nature of the country considered, it had become apparent to the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company that for the entire distance from Caliente to a junction with the line of railroad of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa 1059 Fe Railway there was not then and apparently never could be any considerable or profitable amount of local business, and that the line of railroad from Caliente northward existed in a country which promised much valuable local business between Salt Lake and Caliente; that the line of railroad owned and then being constructed by the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company in California promised a lucrative business locally in southern California, and that if said California line was connected with the lines of railroad extending from Caliente northerly to Salt Lake and to connections with railroads existing at Salt Lake and extending eastwardly to the Missouri River, namely, the Oregon Short Line and its connection, the Union Pacific Railroad, the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad and its connections to the Missouri River, a line of railroad constituting a new through transportation line from the Missouri River through Salt Lake to Los Angeles could successfully and with some reasonable chance for profit be constructed, maintained, and operated, and that the construction, maintenance, and operation of two such lines of railroad from southern California to Salt Lake would be unprofitable and nonremunerative to both of such lines.

That upon the consideration of the circumstances and con-
1060 ditions above recited, the contract and agreement of July 9,
1902, was made, executed, and entered into, and these defendants allege that the said contract and agreement did not create any combination, confederacy, or conspiracy with the intention of or with the effect of suppressing competition, and was not made with the intention of restraining trade and did not have the effect of restraining trade, and was not intended to create or provide for a monopoly and did not cause or create any monopoly whatever.

And these defendants admit and aver that after the making of said contract of July 9th, 1902, and pursuant thereto, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and its auxiliary companies made, executed, and delivered to the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company deeds and conveyances conveying to it those certain lines of railroad then commonly known as the Garfield Branch, the Leamington Cut-off, the lines of railroad of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company lying south of Sandy to Milford, including the branch line to Frisco, the so-called Tintic branches, the line of the Utah and Pacific Railroad Company extending from Milford to Uvada, the constructed line of railroad of the Utah Nevada and California Railroad Company extending from 1061 Uvada to Caliente, Nevada, the partially completed roadbed constructed upon the right of way for a railroad from Caliente to Pioche, Nevada, and assigned and caused to be assigned and conveyed to said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company all of the right, title, and interest of the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and of the Utah, Nevada and California

Railroad Company in and to the located line for a right of way for a railroad extending from Caliente southerly and southwesterly through the Meadow Valley Wash to the Nevada-California State line, and also sold and delivered to the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company a large amount of equipment and railroad material situated upon and along the said lines of constructed railroad above mentioned from Salt Lake City and from Sandy southerly to Caliente, embracing in all 523 miles of constructed and completed railroad and the franchises thereof.

These defendants also admit and aver that pursuant to said agreement the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company granted to the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company joint and equal use of the yards and terminal facilities of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company at Salt Lake City.

1062 These defendants also admit and aver that upon the application of said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company the said Southern Pacific Company granted to it the right to use jointly and equally with the Southern Pacific Company certain railroad tracks of the Southern Pacific Company extending from Riverside Junction to Colton and thence to San Bernardino, in southern California, which were secured to the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company by virtue of a definite lease embracing the tracks lastly above mentioned, and specifying the terms and conditions for the operation thereof.

These defendants further admit that upon the application of said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, and upon negotiations between said San Pedro Company and the said Santa Fe Company, the said Santa Fe Company granted to said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company the right to the joint use and occupation of certain of the tracks of the said Santa Fe Company extending from Colton, in California, through San Bernardino, and through Barstow to Daggett, for a term of years, 1063 to a point upon the line of the said Santa Fe Company, a distance of about 91 miles; and that the tracks obtained by said two leasehold interests from the Santa Fe Company and the said Southern Pacific Company, respectively, are now and after the dates of said respective leases were used by the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company as a part of its new through line of railroad from San Pedro to Salt Lake City.

That because of the making and by carrying out the said several agreements hereinbefore referred to the defendant The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, was enabled to complete and open for use its said line of railroad from Salt Lake City to San Pedro via Los Angeles on the first day of May, 1905, and that otherwise it would have been unable to complete and open its said line of railroad between said points for two or three years thereafter.

That at the time of the making of said agreements upwards of 400 miles of difficult and expensive construction work remained to be done to connect the lines of railroad of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company and those of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, Utah, Nevada and California Railroad Company at Caliente, Nevada, and there could not for several 1964 years have been any competition of any kind between the parties to said agreement for the transportation of commerce, and the possibility or probability of any such competition and of any restraint or restriction thereon was too remote or contingent to be prohibited by or to come within the provisions of said act of Congress approved July 2, 1890.

These defendants deny that for the purpose of maintaining, extending, and preserving the or any alleged restraint of trade and commerce among the States and with foreign nations, or monopolizing the same and destroying competition with relation thereto, or for any other unlawful or illegal purpose, or to any unlawful effect, said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company made certain or any traffic arrangements or contracts with either the said Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the defendant Clark and his associates or other persons, but these defendants admit and aver that said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company did make a certain agreement with the Southern Pacific Company, under date of June 18th, 1903, which is the same agreement referred to in complainants' bill.

These defendants allege and aver that the only tariffs
1065 and rates of the Southern Pacific Company, which by the terms of said contract the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company was to adopt were the rates and tariffs of the Southern Pacific Company in respect of local southern California intrastate business as to that part of the lines of said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company which extended from San Pedro through Los Angeles to Pasadena, and as to that portion of the new line then under construction by said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company which extended easterly from Los Angeles toward Riverside, California, of which no more than thirty miles had at that time been constructed. These defendants aver that the Southern Pacific Company at the time of making said contract and for many years prior thereto had owned and exclusively operated a line of railroad from San Pedro to Los Angeles; that it also owned a line from Los Angeles to Pasadena, and that its main line also extended eastwardly from Los Angeles through Pomona, Ontario, and Riverside, California, and thence to its eastern terminus; and these defendants aver and allege that on the 15th day of April, 1907, long prior to the commencement of this suit, the said agreement between said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt 1066 Lake Railroad Company and said Southern Pacific Company was by due corporate action by both of these said companies abrogated and canceled.

These defendants, further answering, admit and aver that pursuant to said contract of July 9th, 1902, certain contracts and agreements were made between said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company and the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and which are the same agreements referred to by complainant in Paragraph VI of its said bill.

And these defendants admit that in one of said contracts it was, among other things, provided that the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company would not for the term of ninety-nine years build or assist in building any lines of railroad which might run northwardly of the parallel of Salt Lake City, Utah, and that the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company would not construct any lines of railroad southwardly of the parallel of Salt Lake City, Utah, except by common consent; but these defendants deny that the purpose of said agreement was to maintain, extend, and preserve the, or any, restraint of trade or commerce among the States or with foreign nations, or of monopolizing the same and destroying competition with relation thereto, as alleged in said bill, or in 1067 pursuance of any conspiracy in said bill alleged, and that it was competent and proper for these defendants to enter into such arrangements with the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company for the reason, among others, that the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company had no corporate power under its said articles of incorporation to construct or build any railroads whatever northward from Salt Lake City, Utah; and that the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, after selling its said railroads and franchises therefor southward from Sandy and from Salt Lake City, retained no corporate power to build, construct, maintain, or operate railroads south of said Sandy or Salt Lake City, as above mentioned.

Answering further, these defendants allege and aver that pursuant to and in carrying out the said contract of July 9, 1902, certain other contracts or agreements referred to in the complainant's bill were made between the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, providing the terms and conditions upon which traffic might be interchanged between the said companies and providing for the operation of a through line for the carriage of freight and passengers by through cars, 1068 through trains, and direct connections; and that, among other things, upon the conditions in said contract recited there was reserved to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and to the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company the right to make and establish certain through rates on certain joint business between points reached over the line of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and points in Utah upon the lines of railroad of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company; but these defendants deny that the effect or purpose of said contract and its several provisions was for the purpose of maintaining, extending, and preserving the, or any, restraint of trade or commerce among the States or with foreign nations, or monopolizing the same or destroying any competition with relation thereto. For a full statement of all the terms and conditions of said contract reference is made hereby to said contract, which is dated the 18th day of June, 1903, and which will be exhibited to the court herein in due course; and these defendants deny that the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company thereby in any way or manner or to any extent surrendered the control of said company or the management of its affairs or the control and management of its said railroad and properties to the said

1069 Harriman and his associates, or to the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, or to the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, or any or either of them.

These defendants admit that there was issued of the capital stock of said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company twenty-five million dollars in par value, and that one-half of the same was issued to and for the defendant Clark and his associates and that one-half thereof was issued to said Edward H. Harriman as trustee, and that the said capital stock of said company was issued to said parties and by them transferred to and deposited with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, a corporation of the State of New York, as trustee under an agreement, a copy of which is annexed to complainant's bill, marked "Exhibit B," and made a part thereof.

These defendants deny that each and all or any of the several acts in Paragraph VI of complainant's bill alleged against these defendants were done in whole or in part or in any manner whatever pursuant to the alleged original conspiracy or to any conspiracy whatever to suppress competition or to procure a monopoly of the transportation business throughout the territory in said bill 1070 described, or in any other territory whatever, and deny that any conspiracy for any of said purposes or for any illegal or unlawful purpose existed, or that these defendants in any way or manner at any time joined in the making or maintaining of any conspiracy or the doing of any unlawful act or thing, or that they or either of them in any way or manner at any time united in connection with other persons or corporations in the purpose of accomplishing of any illegal or unlawful design, and deny that the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company was in any way or manner party to any conspiracy, combination, or confederacy forbidden by law or in restraint of trade or for the purpose of creating any combination, monopoly, or unlawful confederation or conspiracy.

These defendants deny that in pursuance of said alleged or any combination, confederation, or conspiracy, or that in fact or in any way or manner the lines of railroad owned and operated by the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company are in all or any respect managed or controlled by the said alleged or any conspirators or by any person or persons other than its own proper officers and agents, and these defendants deny that there is not now and that there has not been at all times direct, positive, 1071 and active competition between the railroad of said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company and the railroad and lines of the Southern Pacific Company or of any other line of railway controlled by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Harriman and his associates, as in said bill alleged.

They deny that the aforesaid act of Congress, approved July 2, 1890, or any other law of the United States, was intended to or could constitutionally prohibit the making or carrying out of such agreements and contracts, or any of them, and aver that the construction of railroads in the States of Utah, Nevada, and California by the corporations of said States, respectively, or by corporations of other States authorized by the said States to exercise their corporate powers therein and all agreements relating to the construction or abandonment of the construction of such railroads are matters wholly to be dealt with by the laws of the said States, respectively, and any law of Congress intended or construed to prohibit or regulate or in any manner interfere with such contracts, corporate powers, and matters is in excess of the powers of Congress under the Constitution of the United States and therefore void.

They aver that the said contract, "Exhibit A" to the pe 1072 tion, was made and entered into on July 2, 1902, and that ea and every contract thereafter made and entered into in carr ing out and pursuant to the provisions of the same was made a entered into and was fully executed during the months of June a July, 1903, and not afterwards; and these defendants aver that reason of the premises the right to maintain this suit and all ri of action or prosecution by the Government of the United States or on account of said contract or for or on account of any of t matters and things alleged in Subdivision VI of the petition accru if at all, more than three years and more than five years next bef the commencement of this suit and is therefore barred by the law the United States, and all right of the petitioner to relief herei barred by the said statute and by the laches and acquiescence of petitioner.

VII. For answer to the seventh paragraph of complainant's these defendants say that they have no knowledge, information, belief in respect of the said several matters in said Paragraph V alleged, except the statements and allegations of the complaint it as contained in said paragraph, wherefore these defend 1073 neither admit nor deny the said several allegations, but le the complainant to make its proofs therein as it may advised.

VIII. All these defendants deny all and all manner of unlaw combination and confederacy wherewith they are by the said p tion charged, without this, that if there is any other matter, ca or thing in the petition contained material or necessary for th defendants to make answer unto and not herein or hereby well sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, and avoided or den the same is not true to the knowledge or belief of these defend all of which matters and things these defendants are ready and w ing to aver, maintain, and prove as this honorable court shall di and humbly pray to be hence dismissed, with their reasonable c and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

SAN PEDRO, LOS ANGELES AND SALT LAKE RAILROAD C
By W. A. CLARK, President.

Solicitor and Counsel.

974 In the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Utah. In equity. No. 993.

The United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, Great Northern Railway Company, Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, James Stillman, Henry H. Rogers, Henry C. Frick, and William A. Clark, defendants.

The separate answer of the defendant The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company to the original petition of the United States of America. (Filed April 6, 1908.)

975 United States Circuit Court, District of Utah. No. 993. In equity.

The United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, Great Northern Railway Company, Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, James Stillman, Henry H. Rogers, Henry C. Frick, and William A. Clark, defendants.

976 The separate answer of the defendant, the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, to the original petition of the United States of America.

This defendant now and at all times hereafter saving to itself all manner of benefit and advantage of exception which can or may be taken to the many errors, uncertainties, and other imperfections in the complainant's petition contained, or to so much and such parts thereof as this defendant is advised it is material or necessary for it to make answer unto, answering, says:

I. As to all the matters alleged in Subdivisions I, II, III, IV, and V of the said petition this defendant is not informed save by said petition, and it leaves the complainant to make such proof thereof as it may be advised; except that it is informed and believes that the defendants mentioned in Subdivision I of said petition were at the times alleged in said petition, and are now, common carriers employed in the transportation of freight and passengers within and among those States and Territories of the United States in and through which the transportation lines owned by them, respectively are located, and not further or otherwise, but were and are to 1077 that extent engaged in trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign countries; and except that as to all provisions of statutes of the United States and decisions of courts of the United States purporting to be quoted or set forth in said subdivisions of said petition this defendant begs leave to refer to said statutes and decisions themselves for the contents and provisions thereof.

II. This defendant admits that on or about the 7th day of June, 1903, a contract in writing bearing date on that day was made and entered into between this defendant and William A. Clark, individually and as trustee for his associates and Edward H. Harriman, as trustee, as therein stated, of which contract "Exhibit B" annexed to said petition and referred to in Subdivision VI thereof is a true copy and to which for the terms and provisions thereof this defendant begs leave to refer as fully as if the same were herein at length set forth; and this defendant admits that the stock of the defendant San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company was deposited with and is still held and voted by this defendant in the manner, for the purpose, and as stipulated and provided in and by said contract "Exhibit B." This defendant denies that the making 1078 of said contract "Exhibit B" or the acts done thereunder were done pursuant to any conspiracy to suppress competition or procure a monopoly of the transportation business throughout the territory in said petition described or otherwise, and upon information and belief denies each and every allegation of a conspiracy or combination contained in Subdivision VI of said petition for any of the objects or purposes therein mentioned or for any other purpose, and upon information and belief this defendant denies that the matters alleged in Subdivision VI of said petition or any of them have suppressed, restrained, or in any manner restricted commerce among the several States or with foreign nations. This defendant admits upon information and belief that on or about the 9th day of July, 1902, the defendants William A. Clark and Edward H. Harriman entered into and executed an agreement in writing and that "Exhibit A" to the petition is a true copy of such agreement. Except as in this paragraph expressly admitted or denied, this defendant not informed save by said petition as to the matters alleged in ubdivision VI thereof, and it leaves the complainant to make such oof thereof as it may be advised.

III. This defendant denies that the act of Congress ap-79 proved July 2nd, 1890, referred to in the said petition, or any other law of the United States, was intended to or could con-tutionally prohibit the making or carrying out of such agreement contract "Exhibit B," or of said other agreement or contract anxed as "Exhibit A" to said petition and referred to in Subdivision
I thereof, and avers that the construction of railroads in the States Utah, Nevada, and California by individuals or by the corpora-ns of said States, respectively, or by corporations of other States thorized by the said States to exercise their corporate powers erein, and all agreements relating to the construction or the abannment of the construction of such railroads, are matters wholly be dealt with by the laws of the said States, respectively; and y act of Congress intended or construed to prohibit or regulate in any manner interfere with such contracts, corporate powers, d matters is in excess of the powers of Congress under the Contution of the United States, and therefore void.

IV. This defendant avers that the said contract "Exhibit B" to e petition was made and entered into on June 7th, 1903; it avers information and belief that the said "Exhibit A" to the petition was made and entered into on July 2nd, 1902. This defendant 80 avers that by reason of the premises the right to maintain this suit and all right of action or prosecution by the Government the United States for or on account of any of the matters and ngs alleged in Subdivision VI of the petition accrued, if at all, re than three years and more than five years next before the mmencement of this suit, and is, therefore, barred by the Revised atutes of the United States, in such cases made and provided, d all right of the complainant to relief herein is barred by the d statutes and by the laches and acquiescence of the complainant.

V. As to all the matters alleged in Subdivision VII of the said tition this defendant is not informed save by said petition, and leaves the complainant to make such proof thereof as it may be vised; except that it admits that the stock of the Northwestern cific Railroad Company is controlled equally by the defendants uthern Pacific Company and The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe ilway Company; and upon information and belief this defendant ers that said Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company is a corpotion duly organized under the laws of the State of California and that its lines of railroad are situated wholly within the State of California.

1081 VI. This defendant is advised and therefore avers that the cause of action, if any, stated in Subdivisions I to V of said petition, and the cause of action, if any, stated in Subdivision VI thereof, and the cause of action, if any, stated in Subdivision VII thereof, are wholly separate and distinct from one another, and that if either of said alleged causes of action constitutes a violation of the said act of Congress approved July 2nd, 1890, or of any other law of the United States, such violation was and is altogether distinct from any violation of said laws alleged as constituting any other causes of action, and the said alleged causes of action were improperly united in said petition. This defendant avers that the matters set forth in said petition as constituting each of said alleged causes of action are wholly irrelevant to the said other alleged causes of action.

VII. And this defendant denies all and all manner of unlawful combination and confederacy wherewith it is or may be charged in the said petition, without this, that if there is any other matter cause, or thing in the petition contained material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, and avoided

1082 or denied, the same is not true to the knowledge and belief of this defendant; all of which matters and things this defendant is ready and willing to offer, maintain, and prove as this honorable court shall direct, and humbly prays to be hence dismissed with its reasonable costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

1083 In the United States Circuit Court, District of Utah.

The United States of America, complainant, versus the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, Great Northern Railway Company, Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, James Stillman, Henry H. Rogers, Henry C. Frick, and William A. Clark, defendants.

The answer of Henry C. Frick to the bill of complaint of the United States of America.

D. T. Watson, attorney for defendant. (Filed April 6, 1908.)

1084 In the United States Circuit Court, District of Utah.

The United States of America, complainant, versus the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad, the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, Great Northern Railway Company, Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, James Stillman, Henry H. Rogers, Henry C. Frick, and William A. Clark, defendants.

The answer of Henry C. Frick to the bill of complaint of the United States of America.

To the honorable the judges of the said court:

This defendant, protesting and objecting that he was not, when the petition was filed, nor has he since been, nor is he now a resident of the district of Utah, and that this court has not, as to him, jurisdiction of the matters and things charged in the petition, and 1085 saving unto himself all manner of benefits and advantages by way of exception or otherwise which may or can be taken to the many irregularities, errors and mistakes, imperfections and uncertainties in the bill of complaint or petition contained, for answer to said bill of complaint or petition, or to so much as he is advised it is necessary or material for him to make answer to, answering, says:

I deny all the allegations of the petition that at any time or in any way I was a member of any group or combination of persons which controlled, or sought to control, the Union Pacific Railroad Company or the Southern Pacific Company, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, or any other railroad company named in the petition, and I deny that I ever entered into any conspiracy or aided or abetted any conspiracy which had for its object the restraint of trade and commerce among the several States or between the said States and foreign countries as carried on by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company, or the system of either, or by any other lines of railroads or steamships as named in the petition, and I deny that in any way I ever entered into any combination or conspiracy or aided or abetted in 1086 combination or conspiracy to unlawfully deprive the public of the facilities and advantages in the carrying on of interstate and foreign trade and commerce theretofore enjoyed through the independent competition of the railway systems and steamship lines named in the petition, or that I ever was a member of any combination or conspiracy whose object was to effect a virtual or substantial combination of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and any other transcontinental railway company or companies or steamship line or lines, or whose object or purpose was to place restraints on any or all competitive interstate and foreign trade and commerce or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the same or to suppress competition in the same as averred in the petition, or that I ever in any way was a party to or aided or abetted any such combination or conspiracy.

I never knowingly violated the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and I am not guilty of any of the acts, matters, or things charged in the petition which are in alleged violation of said act of Congress.

The facts, so far as I am concerned, touching the matters alleged in the petition are as follows:

1087 I am now, and for a number of years I have been, an investor in the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, but the stocks I have bought with my own means as my own individual investments, and without cooperation on the part of any other person. I bought them because I believed the investments to be good ones; not only that, they were, when I bought, fairly worth the price paid for them, but I believed in the future prospects of each one of said railroad companies, and I bought with such belief as one of the prominent reasons for my investment.

I am now, and I always have been, a great believer in the future of our country, and especially of the future of the West and the Pacific slope, and when I bought I then looked, as I now do look, forward to a large increase in the value of the said stocks legitimately arising from the intrastate and interstate trade and traffic which I think is certain, in the ensuing years, to develop and to demand transportation over these different lines of railroad.

I never have believed, nor do I now believe, in the restriction of competition in interstate and foreign traffic as a policy of the 1088 railroad system in a country as undeveloped as in the West and to the Pacific Ocean. Neither of the systems named in the petition, either the Union Pacific, or the Southern Pacific, or the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, or any other of the existing systems, or all of them combined, will, as I believe, in the near future, be much more than able to efficiently handle the trade and traffic which will seek their lines, and I feel certain that each one of these systems will have all the business that each can handle.

In my purchases of these stocks I had no idea of the formation of a monopoly which could hope to control the present, let alone the future, vast traffic east and west to and from the Pacific slope, and certainly I never designed any such amalgamation or combination of railroads as is charged in the petition, and I never directly or indirectly was a party to or an abettor or aider of any such scheme as is therein outlined.

I was elected a member of the board of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company in the month of October, 1904, and I have ever since been a member of said board. I deny that since I became a director of said railroad company the Union Pacific Railroad Company became a party to or has carried out any such combina-1089 tion or conspiracy as is alleged in the petition, or was a party to an attempt to restrict interstate trade or traffic.

It is true that, as in all large corporations where almost daily questions are arising which demand prompt answers, an executive committee was created long before I became a member of its board of directors, which executive committee I regard as necessary to the efficient management of the company, and the actions of that executive committee have been and are now always subject to the control of the board of directors as well as to the stockholders.

I deny the averments in the petition—

"That during all the times above mentioned, by by-laws of said company to that end enacted, the directors of said corporation have delegated their power to manage and direct the business and affairs of the said company to an executive committee of five members, to act in such manner as such committee should deem best for the company's interests in all cases in which specific directions shall not have been given by the board."

"And it is and has been also provided by said by-laws that the chairman of said executive committee is authorized to repre-1090 sent that committee when it is not in session."

The by-law which relates to such matters is as follows:

"SECTION 12. The directors shall elect from their number an executive committee of five mmbers. Such committee shall hold office until the next annual election of directors, and shall, when the board of directors is not in session, have all the powers of the board of directors to manage and direct all the business and affairs of the company in such manner as said committee shall deem best for the company's interests in all cases in which specific directions shall not have been given by the board of directors. The chairman of the executive committee shall be elected by the board of directors, and subject to the control and approval of the executive committee, shall represent it when not in session. He shall from time to time report to the executive committee. Any vacancy which may occur in said committee shall be filled by the board of directors. Regular meetings of said executive committee shall be held at such times and at such places in the city and State of New York or elsewhere as the committee shall from time to time determine. Special meetings may be called at any time by the chairman or any three members of 1091 the committee, to convene at such time and place as may be appointed. Three members of the committee shall constitute a quorum. If a quorum be not present at any meeting, a majority of the members of the committee present may adjourn the meeting until a later day or hour, and a minute of such adjournment shall be entered on the records by the secretary and no further notice of such adjournment shall be required; or the members present, whether constituting a quorum or not, at their option, shall have the power to appoint a substitute or substitutes from the members of the board of directors to act during the temporary absence of any member or members of the committee."

I deny the allegation of the petition—

"That, pursuant to said by-laws, the said defendant Harriman has with the concurrence and assistance of said individual defendants other than defendant Clark, who were members of the executive committee or directors of said company, dominated the affairs and controlled the management of said defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company."

I have, as I have stated, from time to time made investments in the capital stock of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, and I was elected a member of the board of directors of said 1092 company in the year 1904, and have ever since continued to be a member of said board and a holder of considerable stock in said railroad company.

I deny the averments of the seventh paragraph of the bill that the purchase I made of the capital stock was in pursuance of any conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize such trade or commerce, or to unlawfully restrain and prevent competition among the railroad systems named in the petition, and I deny that I purchased my said stock jointly with Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, Stillman, and Rogers. On the contrary, I purchased my said stock as my separate individual investment.

I deny that I was elected a member of the board of directors of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company for the purpose of aiding or abetting in any shape or form any such alleged conspiracy as is named in the petition, and I deny that I had or have ever united myself with any conspiracy alleged by the petition to have been made by Messrs. Harriman, Schiff, Kahn, and Stillman, and I deny that my election as a member of the board of directors of the said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company was in pursuance of or carrying out of or in aid of any such alleged conspiracy.

1093 I never knew or heard of such conspiracy until the filing of the petition in this case.

I especially deny that by reason of my being upon the board of directors of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, as also a member of the board of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, that the Union Pacific Railroad Company or any of its officers or directors have had knowledge of the affairs and business of the said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company; but I aver that, on the contrary, in each of my positions as director of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and as director of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, I have been scrupulously careful not to make known to either company the acts and doings of the other.

I have not in either of those positions acted adversely to the interest of the company in which at the time I was acting as a member of its board of directors.

I recognize that each of these systems has a great future and each will in the near future have all the business it can properly attend to, and that each of the systems is more largely benefited by the general development of the West and of the territories through 1094 which each runs, and of the business interests that each serves than from any temporary and comparatively trivial benefit which might arise from the restriction in competition for freight.

To some inconsiderable extent and at times the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company have been and probably will be competitors, but the future of each of these railroad systems is to be so certain and decided that I believe, and I act on that belief, that this future of each should domnate and control and thus minimize as a real factor in the policy o the companies the question of competition. In great and controllin degree the present and future interests of the territory traversed b each of these systems demands a thoroughly equipped railroad syste properly and economically supplying the wants of the territory tra ersed by each, and this each of these railroad systems is endeavorin to give.

I have not as a member of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Rai road Company board disregarded or slighted its interest or welfa for the benefit of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, nor have disclosed to the latter the business of the former; but, on the co trary, I have to the best of my ability acted as a member of th 1095 board of directors of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Rai road Company solely in the interest and the welfare of sai company, and I have kept my knowledge of its affairs gained as member of its board of directors as confidential.

I deny that the acquisition of stock by myself in the Atchiso
Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company, or my membership on th board of directors, in any way changed or lessened the competitio between the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Atchiso Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company or between the Southe Pacific Company and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad C

I deny the averments of the petition that for the purpose of mak ing more certain and effective the restraint of trade and commerc and the elimination of competition and the monopolization of com merce referred to in the petition, that Harriman and his alleg coconspirators caused to be purchased by the Union Pacific Railro Company $10,000,000 par value of the preferred stock of the sai Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, but I admit tha said purchase was made as a legitimate investment by the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and that the said company still own the said stock, and I also admit that the Union Paci 1096 Railroad Company owns the capital stock of said last-name company.

I deny the averments of the seventh paragraph of the bill, that th acquisition of the stock of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Rai way Company, as alleged in said petition, by myself and other has to a large extent eliminated competition between the Unio Pacific Railroad Company, and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa F Railway Company, and I deny that I or the persons alleged to b conspirators in said paragraph of the petition have caused th Southern Pacific Company to abandon certain extensions, improve ments, and additions to their railway lines in the State of California or that the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company h

been in the same manner caused and induced to abandon extensions and additions to its said railway lines in said State of California.

I then thought, and now think, that the action of the Southern Pacific Company and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company in the matter of the Northwestern Pacific Railway Company, as explained in the Union Pacific Railway Company's answer, was wise and prudent, and in the best interest of both of said
1097 railroad companies, and also of the public, and I deny the concluding averment of the seventh paragraph of the bill—

"That all of the said acts hereinbefore enumerated have been done in pursuance to the said conspiracy, so originally formed by certain of the defendants as fully set forth in this bill, and in which said conspiracy and confederation said other defendants joined from time to time as above alleged."

I admit that Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, and James Stillman were for years members of the board of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and I admit that there is a banking firm in the State of New York doing business under the name of Kuhn, Loeb & Company, but I deny the averments of the second paragraph of the petition—"which said banking house is and during all the time above stated has been the fiscal agent of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, through which agent substantially all the purchases of said stocks hereinafter mentioned have been made."

I admit that from time to time Kuhn, Loeb & Company have bought and sold bonds and stocks in which the Union Pacific Railroad Company has been interested.

1098 I admit that Henry H. Rogers and myself are still members of the board of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co.

Most of the matters and things alleged in the different paragraphs of the bill are as to transactions completed prior to the time I had any interest in either the Union Pacific Railroad Company or the Southern Pacific Company or the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company; I took no part in the said matters and things averred in said paragraphs nor have I personal knowledge as to the same.

All of the matters and things alleged in the third paragraph of the bill took place prior to my election as a member of the board of directors of either the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe or the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and I had no personal connection with any of them. As a member of the board of directors of said two companies and also as a stockholder in said two companies and in the Southern Pacific Company I do now have a general knowledge of the location of the different lines of railroad owned by the said different railroad companies and the systems as made up by said lines named in the petition, and I know in a general way of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, of the Portland &

1099 Asiatic Steamship Company, and of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and I believe the routes stated in the third paragraph of the bill are correct, but I am not acquainted with the details of matters happening prior to the time that I became a member of the board of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company.

I admit that the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company has to a certain extent since I have been on the board of directors of that company been in competition with the Union Pacific Railway Company and the Southern Pacific Railway Company, but I never took any active part in such competition, and so far as I can now recollect, no question of competition between these two companies has come up for decision before the board of directors or executive committee of either of said railroad companies at any time when I was present.

I know that the Northern Pacific Railway Company and the Great Northern Railway Company are each owners of lines of railway extending from ports on Lake Superior and also from the city of St. Paul through different Western States, and I am informed that 1100 it is true that these two railroad companies were and are the joint owners of substantially all the stock of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, but I deny the averments in the petition that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that their lines are competitive with the lines of the Union Pacific Railway Company for a large amount of traffic, both passenger and freight.

On information which I believe to be true, I deny all the other allegations of competition as alleged in the third paragraph of the petition.

I have no personal knowledge of the matters and things alleged in the fourth paragraph of the petition, and on information which I believe to be true, I deny that the conspiracy, as is therein stated, was ever formed.

I admit that the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company is the owner of 900,000 shares of the common and 342,000 shares of the preferred capital stock of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, but I deny that it was acquired in pursuance of any conspiracy such as therein alleged.

I admit that the said company, as holding such stock, took its share of the increase of stock made by the Southern Pacific Company, but I deny that the Union Pacific Railroad Company

1101 controls the management, operation, and business affairs of the Southern Pacific Railway Company, and I deny that the two railroads have been operating as one single, entire system since 1901, and I deny that the matters and things alleged in said fourth paragraph were done for the purpose of monopolizing the trade and commerce among the States and with foreign nations and of eliminating competition.

I had nothing to do with the acquisition of stock by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in the Northern Pacific Railway Company, as alleged in the fifth paragraph of the bill, and I have no personal knowledge of the matters and things therein referred to.

I know of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States reported in 197 U. S., 244, as Harriman vs. Northern Securities Company. I was not a party to said litigation, but I deny that so far as the Union Pacific Railroad Company was concerned that the litigation was prosecuted, as alleged in the petition, for the sole purpose of effectuating the said conspiracy so originally entered into to restrain trade and commerce, smother competition, and monopolize such trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations.

1102 I have no personal knowledge of the matters and things alleged in the sixth paragraph of the petition or of the contract therein referred to, or of the conspiracy therein alleged, but so far as I know and so far as I have had any part in the management of the Union Pacific Railroad Company since 1904 I deny that there has been any conspiracy to which it was a party to suppress competition or monopolize trade and commerce among the States and with foreign nations, such as is alleged in the sixth paragraph of the petition.

I deny the averments of the seventh paragraph of the petition, except as hereinbefore admitted by me.

In so far as the other allegations in said petition may be material to the case of the plaintiff, I pray it be put upon proof of each and all of the same.

And this defendant denies all and all manner of unlawful combination and confederacy wherewith he is by the said petition charged, without this, that if there is any other matter, cause, or thing in the petition contained material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, and avoided or denied, the same is not true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant; all of which mat-

1103 ters and things this defendant is ready and willing to aver, maintain, and prove, as this honorable court shall direct, and humbly prays to be herein dismissed with his reasonable costs in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

1104 In the Circuit Court of the United States, District of Utah.
In equity. No. 993.

United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company et al., defendants.

Separate answer of the defendant, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

Gardiner Lathrop, Robert Dunlap, solicitors for defendant.
P. L. Williams, of counsel.

1105 United States Circuit Court, District of Utah.

United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company; Oregon Short Line Railroad Company; The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company; The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company; The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company; Southern Pacific Company; Northern Pacific Railway Company; Great Northern Railway Company; Farmers' Loan and Trust Company; Edward H. Harriman; Jacob H. Schiff; Otto H. Kahn; James Stillman; Henry H. Rogers; Henry C. Frick; and William A. Clark, defendants. In equity. No. 993.

Separate answer of the defendant, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, to the bill of complaint of the 1106 United States of America, complainant.

This defendant, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, now and at all times hereafter saving to itself all and all manner of benefit or advantage of exception, or otherwise, that can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties, and imperfections in said bill contained, for answer thereto, or to so much thereof as this defendant is advised it is material or necessary for it to make answer to, answering, saith:

I. This defendant admits that the Union Pacific Railroad Company; Oregon Short Line Railroad Company; the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company; the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company; this defendant, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company; Southern Pacific Company; Northern Pacific Railway Company; and Great Northern Railway Company were, at the times in said bill or petition mentioned, and now are common carriers, each engaged or employed in the transportation of freight and passengers among the several States of the United States and between such States and foreign nations, and as such carriers so employed were and are engaged in trade and commerce 1107 among the several States and with foreign nations.

II. As to all the matters and things set forth in Subdivision II of said complainant's petition or bill, this defendant says that it is a stranger to all and singular such matters and things, and therefore leaves the complainant to make such proof thereof as it shall be able to produce.

III. And this defendant admits that it has been, for a period of more than eight years last passed, the owner, and in control by direct ownership and by the ownership of the stock, of railway companies owning a portion of certain lines, and now by ownership, of a line of railway reaching from Chicago in the State of Illinois, through the States of Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and the State of California, to the city of San Francisco and to tidewater at San Diego, California; that said line of railway touches the Union Pacific at Kansas City, Missouri, and to a certain extent, but in connection with other connecting lines of railroads, is and has been competitive with the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific 1108 Company, in connection also with other connecting lines of railroads, for certain traffic to and from the Pacific coast, and also from the Orient in connection with steamship lines to and from various points in the east and the Mississippi Valley and in the State of Colorado and other interior States, but largely by means of such connecting lines of railway of other railway companies as aforesaid. It admits that its tracks cross the continent between those of the Southern Pacific Company and those of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and until the construction of the San Pedro, Los Angeles, and Salt Lake Railroad constituted the only outlet to the east by rail from territory along the Pacific coast touched by it at San Francisco, Los Angeles, and San Diego, but denies that it constituted the only outlet to the east by rail from all the territory along the Pacific coast south of Portland to the Mexican border other than the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Southern Pacific Company. On the contrary, it avers that there were other lines connecting with said Southern Pacific Company south of Portland which formed an outlet to the east.

It denies that it was for a number of years engaged in operat-1109 ing a line of steamships to oriental ports from the port of San Diego, California. It admits that traffic which was competitive as between said Southern Pacific and Union Pacific companies and this defendant was and is of considerable volume, both passenger and freight.

As to all and singular the other matters and things set forth in Subdivision III of said petition or bill, this defendant says that it is a stranger as to all and singular such other matters and things, and therefore leaves the complainant to make such proof thereof as it shall be able to produce.

IV. As to the matters and things set forth in Subdivision IV of said petition or bill, this defendant says that it is a stranger to all and singular such matters and things, and therefore leaves said complainant to make such proof thereof as it shall be able to produce.

V. As to all and singular the matters and things in Subdivision V of said petition or bill contained, this defendant says that it is a stranger to all and singular such matters and things, and therefore leaves the complainant to make such proof thereof as it shall be able to produce.

1110 VI. This defendant denies that said defendant E. H. Harriman secured to said The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company the use of certain of the tracks owned and controlled by this defendant, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, in southern California. On the contrary this defendant avers that through the action of its own directors it voluntarily granted said The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company trackage rights; that is, the right to operate its trains over a portion of the line of this defendant in southern California, such arrangement being an advantageous one to this defendant, inasmuch as it derived a revenue from a part of the use of its property by said The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company.

As to all and singular the other matters and things contained in Subdivision VI of said petition or bill, this defendant says that it is a stranger to all and singular such other matters and things, and therefore leaves the complainant to make such proof thereof as it shall be able to produce.

1111 VII. This defendant admits that in the year 1904 the defendant Harriman represented to certain officials of this defendant that he and other individuals associated with him had acquired approximately three hundred thousand (300,000) shares of the stock of this defendant, and stated that he thought that these interests should be represented in the directorate of this defendant, but this defendant denies that the defendant Frick joined in or made any such representation or statement. On information and belief this defendant avers that at the time when such representation or statement were made by said Harriman the defendant Frick had not purchased any stock in the defendant company and that he has never been associated with said Harriman or any of the defendants in purchases of stock in this defendant, but that all shares of stock in this defendant held by him were purchased by him and are held by him severally and individually as an investment. This defendant avers that its officials stated to said defendant Harriman that they would not be willing to admit representatives of the Union Pacific Railroad Company or of the Southern Pacific Company to places on the board of directors of this defendant, and it avers 1112 further that the officials of this company were thereupon assured by the defendant Harriman that neither the Union Pacific Railroad Company nor the Southern Pacific Company had any interest in said stock purchased by himself and associates and that such stock had been purchased by himself and associates as investments. This defendant admits that by reason of the fact that under the cumulative system of voting provided for by the laws of Kansas the defendant Harriman, by virtue of the stock in the defendant company held by himself and his associates and by virtue of the proxies which he might be able to obtain from other stockholders, would probably have been able to elect at least two directors of the defendant company, and that the officials of this defendant consented and agreed that said Harriman and his associated owners of stock of this defendant might nominate two directors who would be satisfactory to the board of directors of this defendant, but with the distinct understanding that they were to represent only the stock held by himself and his associates individually and in no sense should act as representatives of either the Union Pacific Railroad Company or of the Southern Pacific Company. Accordingly, on February 8, 1905, the defendants, Frick and Rogers, were 1113 chosen as directors to fill vacancies on the board of directors of this defendant, and said defendants ever since have been and now are directors of this defendant. This defendant denies that said Union Pacific Railroad Company, through said Rogers or Frick, has had knowledge of the affairs or business of this defendant, and this defendant avers on information and belief that the said Rogers and Frick at all times have acted and voted as directors of this defendant conscientiously in the interest of this defendant and not in the interest of either the Union Pacific Railroad Company or the Southern Pacific Company. This defendant denies that the said Rogers and Frick, or either of them, united themselves with the said Harriman or with any of the defendants in any conspiracy alleged in the bill of complaint. This defendant avers, on information and belief, that the stock originally acquired by said Harriman and his associates was all common stock, but that subsequently some of this common stock was sold. This defendant states that its records at present show that Mr. H. H. Rogers holds one hundred

(100) shares of stock, Mr. Frick thirty-five thousand three hundred (35,300) shares of stock, Mr. Harriman two thousand three hundred (2,300) shares of stock, and Kuhn, Loeb and Company and others, believed to be in the interest of such firm, one hundred 1114 fifty-one thousand one hundred forty-nine (151,149) shares of the stock of this defendant. But it has not been advised and it does not know, that any of the above stock was purchased for or on behalf of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, but, on the contrary, avers that no stock has ever appeared on its records in the name of the said Union Pacific Railroad Company or of any of its associated companies. This defendant further denies that competition between the systems of railway controlled by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and that of this defendant has to any extent been eliminated, either on account of the holdings of the stock of the said Harriman and his associates or otherwise. This defendant further denies that it has been induced by said Harriman and his associates to abandon extensions or additions to its lines of railway in the State of California.

It admits that certain lines of railroad partially constructed within the State of California, formerly owned by corporations whose stock was owned or controlled by this defendant, and that certain other lines of railroad partially constructed within the State of California formerly owned by corporations whose capital stock was owned or controlled by the Southern Pacific Company, were conveyed to 1115 a company incorporated under the laws of California under the name of "Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company," and that one-half of the capital stock of said last-named company was owned by this defendant and the other half by the Southern Pacific Company, but it states that all of the corporations which formerly owned said lines of railway and said Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company itself were incorporated under the laws of the State of California, and that such sales and consolidation were made under and by authority of the laws of said State; that said lines of railway so consolidated formed by further construction connecting lines and such consolidation thus afforded better railway facilities to the northwestern part of California than had been theretofore afforded by the several respective lines theretofore operated by their several respective companies. This defendant further says that prior to such consolidation the companies whose stock was as aforesaid owned by it only owned and operated about fifty miles out of Eureka and a few miles of detached line in Mendocino County; that said consolidation gave this defendant, through said Northwestern Pacific Railway Company, access for traffic to the territory served by said several lines north of San Francisco Bay; that said trans-

1116 action did not prevent competition or result in a monopoly, but, on the contrary, prevented the Southern Pacific Company from having or maintaining a monopoly in the aforesaid territory north of San Francisco Bay; that but for this consolidation it would have been impracticable to build the extension connecting Eureka with the San Francisco Bay or to furnish needed railway facilities to the territory which should be served by these lines.

This defendant denies that the lines of railway of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company and of this defendant are operated in harmony with each other under agreements or understandings as to rates or divisions of business, and this defendant says that it was at no time a party to any alleged conspiracy set forth in said petition or bill, and that as to all and singular the other matters and things in Subdivision VII of said petition or bill this defendant is a stranger to all and singular such other matters and things, and therefore leaves the complainant to make such proof thereof as it shall be able to produce.

VIII. And this defendant submits to this honorable court 1117 that all and every of the matters in said complainant's petition or bill mentioned and complained of are matters with respect to which the said complainant is not entitled to any relief as against this defendant from a court of equity, and this defendant hopes that it will have the same benefit of this defense as if it had demurred to said complainant's bill or petition.

IX. And this defendant denies all and all manner of unlawful combination and confederacy wherewith it is by said bill charged, without this, that if there is any other matter, cause, or thing in said complainant's said bill of complaint or petition contained material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto and not herein and hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, and avoided, or denied, the same is not true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant; all which matters and things this defendant is ready and willing to aver, maintain, and prove as this honorable court shall direct, and humbly prays to be hence dismissed, with its reasonable costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

1119 No. 993. United States Circuit Court, district of Utah. In equity.

The United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company et al., defendants.

Answer of the defendant Henry H. Rogers.

Shearman & Sterling, attorneys for defendant. James M. Beck, P. L. Williams, of counsel.
(Filed May 2, 1908.)

1120 United States Circuit Court, district of Utah. No. 993. In equity.

The United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, Great Northern Railway Company, Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, James Stillman, Henry H. Rogers, Henry C. Frick, and William A. Clark, defendants.

1121 The answer of Henry H. Rogers to the petition of the United State of America.

This defendant, protesting and objecting that he was not, when the petition was filed, nor has he since been, nor is he now a resident of the district of Utah, and that this court has not, as to him, jurisdiction of the matters and things charged in the petition, and saving unto himself all manner of benefits and advantages by way of exception or otherwise which may or can be taken to the many irregularities, errors and mistakes, imperfections and uncertainties in the petition contained, for answer to said petition, or to so much as he is advised it is necessary or material for him to make answer to, answering, says:

This defendant denies all the allegations of the petition that at any time or in any way he was a member of any group or combination of persons, which controlled or sought to control the Union Pacific Railroad Company or the Southern Pacific Company, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, or any other railroad company named in the petition, and he denies that he ever entered into any conspiracy or aided or abetted any conspiracy which had for object the restraint of trade and commerce among the several 122 States or between the said States and foreign countries as carried on by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the outhern Pacific Company, or the system of either or by any other nes of railroads or steamships as named in the petition, and he de- ies that in any way he ever entered into any combination or con- piracy or aided or abetted any combination or conspiracy to unlaw- ully deprive the public of the facilities and advantages in the car- ying on of interstate and foreign trade and commerce theretofore njoyed through the independent competition of the railway systems nd steamship lines named in the petition, or that he ever was a mem- er of any unlawful combination or conspiracy whose object was to ffect a virtual or substantial combination of the Union Pacific Rail- oad Company and any other transcontinental railway company or mpanies or steamship line or lines, or whose object or purpose was place restraint on any or all competitive interstate and foreign ade and commerce, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the me or to suppress competition in the same as averred in the petition, that he ever in any way was a party to or aided or abetted any ch alleged combination or conspiracy. This defendant denies that 123 he ever violated the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and asks that is denial be regarded by the court for the sake of brevity as re- ated as against every allegation in said petition, which charges to e contrary as to this defendant.

For further answer this defendant says:

This defendant is now and for a number of years has been an in- stor in the capital stock of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, e Southern Pacific Company, and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe ailroad Company. These investments were not made with any ew to exercising any control in the respective companies beyond the rtial control which this defendant, in common with any stock- older, exercises in proportion to his stock holdings, and they were rther made with this defendant's own means and credit, in the be- f which this defendant had that the investments were legitimate es and that this defendant was entitled to all the rights, privileges, d profits which would lawfully and legitimately result from such vestments. These investments were not made or held with any rpose or object on the part of this defendant, either alone or in 124 conjunction with others, to restrain competition in interstate or foreign traffic or with any purpose or object of forming or maintaining any monopoly. This defendant avers that no onopoly in transportation has existed or is likely to exist, and that never had any thought, purpose, or plan, either individually or in conjunction with others, to form a combination of railroads, as is charged in Paragraph IV of the petition.

This defendant became a director of the Union Pacific Railroad on the eighth day of October, 1901, and is still a director of said company. As such director he has at all times acted according to his best judgment for the true and lawful interests of the said railroad and has never knowingly failed in any duty which he owed as such director either to the railroad company or to the public.

Further answering the said petition, by paragraphs, this defendant says:

I. The averments contained in the first paragraph of the petition this defendant believes to be true.

II. (1) He denies that from or at any time after January 1, 1901, he and the other defendants named in the first sentence of Paragraph II of the petition have owned or controlled a majority 1125 of the capital stock of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(2) He admits that he became a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the eighth day of October, 1901, and is still a director of said company.

(3) He admits that during all of said time the said Jacob H. Schiff and Otto H. Kahn were and still are members of a banking firm of the city of New York, doing business under the name and style of "Kuhn, Loeb & Co.," but denies that said banking house has been or is the "fiscal agent" of the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company; and he admits that some of the stocks referred to in the petition were bought by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, respectively, from time to time through said banking house, and that some of the bonds issued by said companies were sold to said firm.

(4) He admits that said Harriman, Schiff, Stillman, and Frick became directors and served as such as stated in Paragraph II of said petition.

(5) As to the true meaning and effect of the by-laws, referred to in Paragraph III of the petition, this defendant asks for greater 1126 certainty, if the inquiry be material and relevant, that the petitioner be required to formally prove the by-laws by the production so that this court may itself determine their true meaning.

(6) He denies that pursuant to such by-laws or otherwise the said Harriman has, with the concurrence of said individual defendants other than Defendant Clark, who are members of the executive committee or board of directors of said company, dominated the affairs and controlled the management of said Union Pacific Railroad Company.

III. Most of the averments contained in Paragraph III of the petition refer to transactions which took place prior to the hen this defendant became a director in the railroad company, nd as to such transactions this defendant disclaims personal knowl-dge. Except as hereinafter specifically admitted or denied, the ther averments refer to transactions as to which this defendant has o personal knowledge. This defendant, however, on information nd belief accepts and adopts the respective admissions and denial o Paragraph III of the said petition which are contained in the oint and several answer of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and the Oregon 127 Railroad and Navigation Company, and he asks that such admissions, denials, and averments may be regarded as part f this answer as fully as though recited herein, they being omitted or the sake of brevity and because they are already before the court n the joint answer above referred to.

IV. (1) He denies on information and belief that in the spring of 901, or at any other time, said Schiff, Kahn, Harriman, Stillman, nd Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any of them, conspired to estrain trade and commerce among the foreign States and between aid States and several countries, carried on by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Southern Pacific Company or any other ompany, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any such trade nd commerce or to restrain or prevent competition among said rail-ray systems or any other railway systems, and said steamship lines r any other steamship lines in respect to any such commerce; or to leprive the public of the facilities and advantages in the carrying on f such trade and commerce through the independent competition, if ny there was, of said railway systems and steamship lines or other railway systems or steamship lines; or that he and the said
128 defendants or any of them ever entered into a combination or conspiracy for a virtual or substantial consolidation of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and any other transcontinental ailway companies or steamship companies; or to place restraint pon any competitive commerce, if any such there was, carried on by uch companies; or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the same; r to suppress any competition existing between any of said compa-ies or lines.

(2) He admits on information that on the 20th day of February, 1901, defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company acquired by pur-hase from said firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. 750,000 shares of the capi-al stock of said Southern Pacific Company of the aggregate par alue of $75,000,000 out of 1,978,399 shares of the aggregate par alue of $197,839,900, then issued and outstanding, but he denies hat the said stock was purchased or acquired in pursuance of any onspiracy or combination or for any of the purposes alleged in said etition.

(3) He admits on information that thereafter, to wit, on or abo
the 26th day of February, 1902, defendant Union Pacific Railro Company sold and delivered the said 750,000 shares of th
1129 stock of the Southern Pacific Company to defendant Oreg
Short Line Railroad Company, which has ever since own and still owns the same.

(4) He admits on information that thereafter, to wit, on or abo
the 31st day of May, 1902, defendant Oregon Short Line Railro Company acquired by purchase from said Kuhn, Loeb & Co. 150,0 additional shares of stock of said Southern Pacific Company, whi said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company has ever since own and which it still owns.

(5) He admits on information that thereafter when, on or abo
the 20th day of July, 1904, defendant Southern Pacific Compa created an issue of preferred stock which it offered to its stockhold for subscription, said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company as t owner of 900,000 shares of the common stock of said Southern P cific Company, exercised its right and subscribed for and receiv and has ever since owned and still owns, 180,000 shares of the p ferred stock of said Southern Pacific Company; and that thereaft in July, 1907, when said Southern Pacific Company increased i said preferred stock by an additional issue thereof which it offe to the holders of its outstanding stock for subscription, said Oreg Short Line Railroad Company, as the owner of 1,080, 1130 shares of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company, ex cised its right and subscribed for and received 162,000 ad tional shares of the preferred stock of said Southern Pacific Co pany, and has ever since owned, and still owns, the same, so th said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company now owns 900,000 sha of common stock and 342,000 shares of preferred stock, making total of 1,242,000 shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pac Company, out of a total of 2,726,498 shares issued and outstandi

(6) He denies that the said preferred stock was issued by s
Southern Pacific Company, or that any of the common stock of s company was acquired or has been held by said Oregon Short Li Railroad Company or the Union Pacific Railroad Company, in p suance of any combination or conspiracy or for any of the purpo or with the intent alleged in said petition.

(7) He admits on information that at the annual meeting of t Southern Pacific Company held the 3d day of April, 1901, and every meeting of the stockholders of said company since said da the stock so acquired and owned by said Oregon Short Line R road Company has constituted a majority of the shares represe at such meetings; and he admits that by voting upon the s

1131 shares, through its duly authorized agents and proxies, and by the voting by the same agents and proxies, upon shares of other stockholders of said Southern Pacific Company, delegated to it, the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company has been able to elect the directors of said Southern Pacific Company; but he is informed and believes that at no such meeting have any votes ever been cast by any stockholder against the persons so elected.

(8) He admits on information that the stock of said Southern Pacific Company not owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company is owned by a large number of individuals, firms, and corporations residing in many different places; but he denies that said stockholders are or will be unable to elect the directors of said Southern Pacific Company, if they should deem it to their interest to do so, in opposition to those voted for by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company; and he avers that the reason why said stockholders have not heretofore elected the directors of said company is that they have been satisfied with the directors nominated and elected by the agents and proxies of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company in conjunction with the agents or proxies of other stockholders and their management of said company.

1132 (9) He denies that the Union Pacific Railroad Company or the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company controls or has ever controlled the management, operation, and business affairs of said Southern Pacific Company or exercised any control whatsoever over it, except such as lawfully and proportionately results from the voting upon the stock of said Southern Pacific Company owned by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company at meetings of the stockholders for the election of directors of said Southern Pacific Company.

(10) He admits that since April 9, 1901, a majority of the persons who have been directors of said Southern Pacific Company were at the same time directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(11) He disclaims personal knowledge as to the alleged competition between the steamship and railroad lines and asks that petitioner be put upon proof of such averments, if they be material or pertinent to any lawful inquiry in this case.

(12) He avers, on information, that the acquisition by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company of 750,000 shares of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company in 1901, and of said additional 150,000 shares of such

1133 stock in 1902 by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, were actual purchases of said stock, made in good faith, and were completed and fully executed by the delivery of the certificates for said 750,000 shares in 1901 and for said 150,000 shares in 1902 and by the payment of the price therefor at the time of such delivery; that the acquisition of the preferred stock of said Southern Pacific Company by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, as aforesaid, by the exercise of subscription rights, did not and has not changed the relative voting strength of position of the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company from what it was upon the completion of the purchase of said two lots aggregating 900,000 shares of the common stock of the Southern Pacific Company as aforesaid.

(13) He denies all the allegations of Subdivision IV of the petition, respecting the said Schiff, Kahn, Harriman, Union Pacific Railroad Company, and this defendant, and of any conspiracy or combination among them for any of the purposes or with any of the intents alleged, and denies each and every allegation of Paragraph IV of said petition not herein expressly admitted.

V. (1) He denies, on information, that the said Schiff, 1134 Kahn, Harriman, Stillman, Union Pacific Railroad, or any of them, in the spring of 1901, or at any other time, caused the Union Pacific Railroad Company to acquire a majority of the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company pursuant to any conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize such trade and commerce, or to suppress any competition; and he denies all the allegations of Subdivision V of the petition respecting any conspiracy or combination for any purpose between any of the defendants to this suit.

(2) He admits on information that in the year 1901 said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company purchased $37,023,000, par value, of the common stock and $41,085,000, par value, of the preferred stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and that at the time of such purchase the total stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company issued and outstanding was of the aggregate par value of $155,000,000.

(3) He admits on information the sale and transfer of said stock to the Northern Securities Company, and the receipt by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company of $82,491,841, par value, of the stock of said Northern Securities Company.

(4) He admits the commencement of a suit by the United 1135 States of America against said Northern Securities Company and others, and the decision of said suit as alleged in the petition.

(6) He is informed that defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, upon the final decision of said suit, proceeded from time to time to sell the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and of the Great Northern Railway Company so received by it opportunity to sell the same advantageously appeared; and that by such sales the amount of such stock so held has been steadily reduced, so that at the date of the commencement of this suit the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company had sold all but 32,516 shares of the stock of the Great Northern Railway Company and all but 38,745 shares of the stock of the Great Northern Railway Company, which it still owns, but with no intent to restrain or monopolize interstate or foreign commerce or any part thereof.

(7) This defendant was not a party to the litigation which was begun in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey, referred to in Paragraph V of the petition; but, on information and belief, he denies that the litigation was prose-1136 cuted, as alleged in the petition, for the purpose of effectuating the said conspiracy so originally entered into to restrain trade and commerce, smother competition, and monopolize trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations.

VI. This defendant denies any and every averment contained in Paragraph VI of the petition, which charges that this defendant was a party to or aided or abetted in any alleged conspiracy or unlawful combination. As to the other averments contained in said paragraph, this defendant has no personal knowledge or recollection which enables him to either admit or deny them, and he asks that the petitioner be put upon proof of the same, if the same averments be material and pertinent to any lawful inquiry before this court.

VII. (1) He denies that pursuant to any conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce among the several States with foreign nations or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any such trade and commerce or to restrain or prevent competition among any of said railway systems he and the defendants Schiff, Kahn, Harriman, Stillman, and Frick, or any of them, in the year 1904, or at any 1137 other time, made large purchases of stock of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, aggregating $30,000,000 par value of said stock or any other amount; and he denies that he or any of the other defendants at any time demanded of any officials of the said Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company that any of the defendants herein should be elected directors of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

(2) He admits that in the year 1904 he and said Frick were elected directors of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, and have since served, and are still serving, as such directors; but he denies that they were so elected for any of the reasons alleged in Subdivision VII of the petition herein, and denies that by means of such election the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company has had knowledge of the affairs and business of said the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company. This defendant avers that in discharging his duties as a director of the said Atchison Railroad Company he has always endeavored to protect and advance its best interests, and he has never intentionally acted adversely to such interests, either for the benefit of the Union Pacific Railroad Company or any other railroad company.

1138 (3) He admits on information that in July, 1906, defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company purchased, and has ever since owned, $10,000,000 par value of the capital stock of said the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company out of a total issue of preferred and common stock of said company outstanding of the aggregate par value of $216,199,530, but he denies that such purchase was for any of the purposes alleged in said petition, or in furtherance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy.

(4) He denies that he or any associates of his or defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, or all of them, have any control, partial or otherwise, of said The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

(5) He denies that competition between the systems of railways controlled by defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company and the said The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company has to any extent been eliminated.

(6) He denies that he or any other persons alleged in said petition to be "conspirators" have caused defendant Southern Pacific Company or the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company to abandon any extensions, improvements, and additions to their lines in California or elsewhere.

1139 (7) He denies that the lines of railroad of the Atchison Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company are operated in harmony with the lines of said Union Pacific Railroad Company or said Southern Pacific Company under agreements and understandings as to rates and divisions of business, and that competition between such lines has been eliminated or in anywise restricted.

(8) As to any other averments contained in the Paragraph VII of the petition not hereinbefore expressly admitted or denied, this defendant disclaims personal knowledge and asks that the petitioner be put upon proof of the same, if the same be material and pertinent to any lawful inquiry before this court.

VIII. And this defendant denies all and all manner of unlawful combination and confederacy wherewith he is by the said petition charged, without this, that if there is any other manner, cause or thing in the petition contained material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, and avoided or denied, the same is not true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant; all of which matters and things this defendant is ready and willing 1140 to aver, maintain, and prove as this honorable court shall direct, and humbly prays to be hence dismissed with his reasonable costs and charges in his behalf most wrongfully sustained.

1142 United States Circuit Court, District of Utah. No. 993. In Equity.

The United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, Great Northern Railway Company, Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, James Stillman, Henry H. Rogers, Henry C. Frick, and William A. Clark, defendants.

1143 The answer of James Stillman to the petition of the United States of America.

This defendant, protesting and objecting that he was not, when the petition was filed, nor has he since been, nor is he now a resident of the district of Utah, and that this court has not, as to him, jurisdiction of the matters and things charged in the petition, and saving unto himself all manner of benefits and advantages by way of exception or otherwise which may or can be taken to the many irregularities, errors and mistakes, imperfections and uncertainties in the petition contained, for answer to said petition, or to so much as he is advised it is necessary or material for him to make answer to, answering, says:

This defendant denies all the allegations of the petition that at any time or in any way he was a member of any group or combination of persons which controlled or sought to control, the Union Pacific Railroad Company or the Southern Pacific Company, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, or any other railroad company named in the petition, and he denies that he ever entered into any conspiracy or aided or abetted any conspiracy which had for its object the restraint of trade and commerce among 1144 the several States or between the said States and foreign countries as carried on by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company, or the system of either or by any other lines of railroads or steamships as named in the petition, and he denies that in any way he ever entered into any combination or conspiracy or aided or abetted any combination or conspiracy to unlawfully deprive the public of the facilities and advantages in the carrying on of interstate and foreign trade and commerce theretofore enjoyed through the independent competition of the railway system and steamship lines named in the petition, or that he ever was a member of any unlawful combination or conspiracy whose object was to effect a virtual or substantial combination of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and any other transcontinental railway company or companies or steamship line or lines, or whose object or purpose was to place restraint on any or all competitive interstate and foreign trade and commerce, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the same or to suppress competition in the same as averred in the petition, or that he ever in any way was a party to or aided or abetted any such alleged combination or conspiracy. This defendant denies that he ever violated the provisions of an act of Congress
1145 approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and asks that this denial be regarded by the court for the sake of brevity as repeated as against every allegation in said petition, which charges to the contrary as to this defendant.

For further answer, this defendant says:

This defendant is now and for a number of years has been an investor in the capital stock of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Company, and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company. These investments were not made with view to exercising any control in the respective companies beyond the partial control which this defendant, in common with any stockholder, exercised in proportion to his stock holdings, and they were further made with this defendant's own means and credit, in the belief which this defendant had that the investments were legitimate ones, and that this defendant was entitled to all the rights, privileges, and profits which would lawfully and legitimately flow from such investments. These investments were not made or held with any purpose or object on the part of this defendant, either alone or in conjunction with others, to restrain competition in inter-1146 state or foreign traffic or with any purpose or object of forming or maintaining any monopoly. This defendant avers that no monopoly in transportation has existed or is likely to exist, and that he never had any thought, purpose, or plan, either individually or in conjunction with others, to form a combination of railroads, as is charged in Paragraph IV of the petition.

This defendant became a director of the Union Pacific Railroad on the sixth day of December, 1897, and continued as such until the thirteenth day of February, 1908. As such director he has at all times acted according to his best judgment for the true and lawful interests of the said railroad and has never knowingly failed in any duty which he owed as such director, either to the railroad company or to the public.

Further answering the said petition by paragraphs, this defendant says:

I. The averments contained in the first paragraph of the petition this defendant believes to be true.

II. (1) He denies that from or at any time after January 1, 1901, he and the other defendants named in the first sentence
1147 of Paragraph II of the petition have owned or controlled a majority of the capital stock of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(2) He admits that he became a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 6th day of December, 1897, and continued to be a director of said company until the thirteenth day of February, 1908, when he resigned.

(3) He admits that he was a member of the executive committee of the board of directors from the 8th day of December, 1897, until the thirteenth day of February, 1908, and that the said Otto H. Kahn was a member of said committee from the 8th day of December, 1897, until the 10th day of April, 1906.

(4) He admits that during all of said time the said Jacob H. Schiff and Otto H. Kahn were and still are members of a banking firm of the city of New York, doing business under the name and style of "Kuhn, Loeb & Co.," but denies that said banking house has been or is the "fiscal agent" of the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company; and he admits that some of the stocks referred to in the petition were bought by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, respectively, from 1148 time to time through said banking house, and that some of the bonds issued by said companies were sold to said firm.

(5) He admits that Harriman, Schiff, Rogers, and Frick became directors and served as such, as stated in Paragraph II of said petition.

(6) As to the true meaning of the by-laws referred to by petitioner in Paragraph III, this defendant asks for greater certainty, if the inquiry be material and relevant, that the petitioner be required to formally prove the by-laws by their production, so that this court may itself determine their true meaning.

(7) He denies that pursuant to such by-laws or otherwise the said Harriman has, with the concurrence of said individual defendants other than defendant Clark, who are members of the executive committee or board of directors of said company, dominated the affairs and controlled the management of said Union Pacific Railroad Company.

III. This defendant, on information and belief, accepts and adopts the respective admissions and denials to Paragraph III of the said petition, which are contained in the joint and several answers 1149 of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, and he asks that such admissions, denials, and averments may be regarded as part of this answer as fully as though recited herein, they being omitted for the sake of brevity and because they are already before the court in the joint answer above referred to.

IV. (1) He denies that in the spring of 1901 or at any other time he and the defendant Schiff, Kahn, Harriman and Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any of them, conspired to restrain trade and commerce among the foreign States and between said States and several countries carried on by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Southern Pacific Company or any other company, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any such trade and commerce or to restrain or prevent competition among said railway systems or any other railway systems and said steamship lines or any other steamship lines in respect to any such commerce, or to deprive the public of the facilities and advantages in the carrying on of such trade and commerce through the independent competition, if any there was, of said railway systems and steamship lines or 1150 other railway systems or steamship lines, or that he and the said defendants, or any of them, ever entered into a con-

ation or conspiracy for a virtual or substantial consolidation of aid Union Pacific Railroad Company and any other transconti- ental railway companies or steamship companies, or to place re- traint upon any competitive commerce, if any such there was, car- ied on by such companies, or to monopolize or attempt to monopo- ize the same, or to suppress any competition existing between any f said companies or lines.

(2) He admits on information that on the 20th day of February, 901, defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company acquired by pur- hase from said firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. 750,000 shares of the apital stock of said Southern Pacific Company of the aggregate par alue of $75,000,000 out of 1,978,399 shares of the aggregate par value f $197,839,900 then issued and outstanding, but he denies that the id stock was purchased or acquired in pursuance of any conspiracy combination or for any of the purposes alleged in said petition.

(3) He admits on information that thereafter, to wit, on or about the 26th day of February, 1902, defendant Union Pacific Rail- 51 road Company sold and delivered the said 750,000 shares of the stock of Southern Pacific Company to defendant Oregon hort Line Railroad Company, which has ever since owned and still ns the same.

(4) He admits on information that thereafter, to wit, on or about e 31st day of May, 1902, defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad mpany acquired by purchase from said Kuhn, Loeb & Co. 150,000 ditional shares of stock of said Southern Pacific Company, which id Oregon Short Line Railroad Company has ever since owned d which it still owns.

(5) He admits on information that thereafter, when, on or about e 20th day of July, 1904, defendant Southern Pacific Company ated an issue of preferred stock which it offered to its stockholders subscription at par, said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company the owner of 900,000 shares of the common stock of said Southern cific Company exercised its right and subscribed for and received d has ever since owned and still owns 180,000 shares of the pre- red stock of said Southern Pacific Company; and that thereafter, July, 1907, when said Southern Pacific Company increased its said ferred stock by an additional issue thereof which it offered to the holders of its outstanding stock for subscription at par, said 2 Oregon Short Line Railroad Company as the owner of 1,080,000 shares of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company rcised its right and subscribed for and received 162,000 addi- al shares of the preferred stock of said Southern Pacific Com- y, and has ever since owned and still owns the same; so that said gon Short Line Railroad Company now owns 900,000 shares of common stock and 342,000 shares of preferred stock, making a to of 1,242,000 shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pacific Co pany out of a total of 2,726,498 shares issued and outstanding.

(6) He denies that the said preferred stock was issued by Southern Pacific Company or that any of the common stock of company was acquired or has been held by said Oregon Short L Railroad Company or the Union Pacific Railroad Company in suance of any combination or conspiracy or for any of the purp or with the intent alleged in said petition.

(7) He admits on information that at the annual meeting of Southern Pacific Company held the 3d day of April, 1901, and every meeting of the stockholders of said company since said d the stock so acquired and owned by said Oregon Short L 1153 Railroad Company has constituted a majority of the sh represented at such meetings; and he admits that by vo upon the said shares through its duly authorized agents and pro and by the voting by the same agents and proxies upon shares other stockholders of said Southern Pacific Company delegated the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company has been to elect the directors of said Southern Pacific Company; but h informed and believes that at no such meeting have any votes been cast by any stockholder against the persons so elected.

(8) He admits, on information, that the stock of said South Pacific Company not owned by defendant Oregon Short Line R road Company is owned by a large number of individuals, f and corporations residing in many different places; but he d that said stockholders are or will be unable to elect the directors said Southern Pacific Company, if they should deem it to their i est to do so, in opposition to those voted for by said Oregon S Line Railroad Company; and he avers that the reason why stockholders have not heretofore elected the directors of said pany is that they have been satisfied with the directors nomin and elected by the agents and proxies of said Oregon S 1154 Line Railroad Company, in conjunction with the agen proxies of other stockholders and their management of company.

(9) He denies that the Union Pacific Railroad Company o
Oregon Short Line Railroad Company controls or has ever trolled the management, operation, and business affairs of Southern Pacific Company or exercised any control whatsoever it, except such as lawfully and proportionately results from the ing upon the stock of said Southern Pacific Company, owned by Oregon Short Line Railroad Company at meetings of the holders for the election of directors of said Southern P Company.

(10) He admits that since April 9, 1901, a majority of the persons ho have been directors of said Southern Pacific Company were at e same time directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(11) He disclaims personal knowledge as to the alleged competi- on between the steamship and railroad lines, and asks that petitioner upon proof of such averments, if they be material or pertinent to y lawful inquiry in this case.

(12) He avers on information that the acquisition by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad 35 Company of 750,000 shares of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company in 1901, and of said additional 150,000 shares such stock in 1902 by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Com- any, were actual purchases of said stock, made in good faith, and ere completed and fully executed by the delivery of the certificates r said 750,000 shares in 1901, and for said 150,000 shares in 1902, d by the payment of the price therefor at the time of such delivery; at the acquisition of the preferred stock of said Southern Pacific ompany by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company as oresaid, by the exercise of subscription rights did not and has not anged the relative voting strength of position of the said Oregon hort Line Railroad Company from what it was upon the completion the purchase of said two lots, aggregating 900,000 shares of the mmon stock of the Southern Pacific Company as aforesaid.

(13) He denies all the allegations of Subdivision IV of the peti- n, respecting the said Schiff, Kahn, Harriman, Union Pacific ilroad Company, and this defendant, and of any conspiracy or mbination among them for any of the purposes or with any of e intents alleged, and denies each and every allegation of Para- graph IV of said petition not herein expressly admitted.

56 V. (1) He denies that he and the said Schiff, Kann, Harri- man, Union Pacific Railroad, or any of them, in the spring of 01, or at any other time, caused the Union Pacific Railroad Com- any to acquire a majority of the stock of the Northern Pacific Rail- ay Company pursuant to any conspiracy to restrain trade and com- erce among the several States and with foreign nations, or to onopolize or attempt to monopolize such trade and commerce, or to ppress any competition; and he denies all the allegations of Sub- ivision V of the petition respecting any conspiracy or combination r any purpose between any of the defendants to this suit.

(2) He admits on information that in the year 1901 said Oregon hort Line Railroad Company purchased $37,023,000 par value of e common stock, and $41,085,000 par value of the preferred stock the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and that at the time of ch purchase the total stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company issued and outstanding was of the aggregate par value o $155,000,000.

(3) He admits on information the sale and transfer of said sto to the Northern Securities Company, and the receipt by sa 1157 Oregon Short Line Railroad Company of $82,491,841 p value of the stock of said Northern Securities Company.

(4) He admits the commencement of a suit by the United Stat of America against said Northern Securities Company and othe and the decision of said suit as alleged in the petition.

(6) He is informed that defendant Oregon Short Line Railro Company, upon the final decision of said suit, proceeded from ti to time to sell the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Compan and of the Great Northern Railway Company, so received by it, opportunity to sell the same advantageously appeared; and that b such sales the amount of such stock so held has been steadily reduc so that at the date of the commencement of this suit the said Oreg
Short Line Railroad Company had sold all but 32,516 shares of t
Northern Pacific Railway Company, and all but 38,745 shares the stock of the Great Northern Railway Company, which it st owns, but with no intent to restrain or monopolize interstate or fo eign commerce or any part thereof.

(7) This defendant was not a party to the litigation whi
1158 was begun in the Circuit Court of the United States for t
District of New Jersey, referred to in paragraph V of th petition, but, on information and belief, he denies that the litigatio was prosecuted, as alleged in the petition, for the purpose of effectu ing the said conspiracy so originally entered into to restrain tra and commerce, smother competition, and monopolize trade and co merce among the several States and with foreign nations.

VI. This defendant denies any and every averment contained i Paragraph VI of the petition, which charges that this defendant w a party to or aided or abetted in any alleged conspiracy or unlawf combination. As to the other averments contained in said paragraph this defendant has no personal knowledge or recollection which e ables him to either admit or deny them, and he asks that the pe tioner be put upon proof of the same, if the said averments b material and pertinent to any lawful inquiry before this court.

VII. (1) He denies that pursuant to any conspiracy to restra trade and commerce among the several States with foreign nation or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any such tra 1159 and commerce or to restrain or prevent competition amo any of said railway systems he and the defendants Schi Kahn, Harriman, Rogers, and Frick, or any of them, in the ye 1904, or at any other time, made large purchases of stock of th

Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, aggregating $30,000,000 par value of said stock or any other amount; and he denies that he or any of the other defendants at any time demanded of any officials of the said the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company that any of the defendants herein should be elected directors of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

(2) He admits on information that in the year 1904 the defendants Frick and Rogers were elected directors of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, and have since served and are still serving as such directors; but he denies that they were so elected for any of the reasons alleged in Subdivision VII of the petition herein, and denies that by means of such election the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company has had knowledge of the affairs and business of said The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

(3) He admits on information that in July, 1906, defendant 160 Oregon Short Line Railroad Company purchased, and has ever since owned, $10,000,000 par value of the capital stock of said The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company out of total issue of preferred and common stock of said company outstanding of the aggregate par value of $216,199,530, but he denies that such purchase was for any of the purposes alleged in said petition or in furtherance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy.

(4) He denies that he or any associates of his or defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, or all of them, have any control, partial or otherwise, of said The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

(5) He denies that competition between the systems of railway controlled by defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company and by said The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company has to any extent been eliminated.

(6) He denies that he or any other persons alleged in said petition to be "conspirators" have caused defendant Southern Pacific Company or the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company to abandon any extensions, improvements, and additions to their lines in California or elsewhere.

(7) He denies that the lines of railroad of the Atchison, 161 Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company are operated in harmony with the lines of said Union Pacific Railroad Company or said Southern Pacific Company under agreements and understandings as to rates and divisions of business, and that competition between such lines has been eliminated or in any wise restricted.

(8) As to any other averments contained in the Paragraph VII of the petition, not hereinbefore expressly admitted or denied, this defendant disclaims personal knowledge and asks that the petitioner be put upon proof of the same, if the same be material and pertinent to any lawful inquiry before this court.

VIII. And this defendant denies all and all manner of unlawful combination and confederacy wherewith he is by the said petition charged, without this, that if there is any other manner, cause, or thing in the petition contained material or necessary for this defendant to make answer unto, and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered, confessed, traversed, and avoided or denied, the same is not true to the knowledge or belief of this defendant; all of which matters and things this defendant is ready and willing to aver, maintain, and prove as this honorable court shall direct,

1162 and humbly prays to be hence dismissed with his reasonable costs and charges in his behalf most wrongfully sustained.

164 United States Circuit Court, District of Utah.

No. 993. In equity.

The United States of America, complainant, vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, The Great Northern Railway Company, The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, Edward H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, James Stillman, Henry H. Rogers, Henry C. Frick, and William A. Clark, defendants.

165 The joint and several answer of the defendants Jacob H. Schiff and Otto H. Kahn to the original petition of the United States of America.

These defendants now and at all times hereafter saving and reserving to themselves all and all manner of benefit and advantages of exception or otherwise that can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties, and other imperfections in the complainant's petition contained, for their joint and several answer thereunto, or to so much and such parts thereof as they are advised it is material or necessary for them to make answer unto, answering, say:

I. These defendants deny that they or either of them ever knowingly violated the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2nd, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies." They deny all the allegations of the petition, charging that they or either of them were connected with or concerned in any combination or conspiracy which had for its object the restraint of trade and commerce among the several States or between the said States and foreign countries or any unlawful combination or arrangement of any kind whatsoever

166 between the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company and the defendant Southern Pacific Company or affecting any portion or portions of the system of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and any portion or portions of the system of said Southern Pacific Company, or any railroad companies or railroad lines whatsoever. They aver that all of the transactions between the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and said Union Pacific Railroad Company or the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company alleged in the petition, in so far as such transactions occurred, were, so far as said firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and these defendants were concerned, in the ordinary course of their business as bankers, and were not part of or in any manner connected with any conspiracy or combination of any kind whatsoever between the said firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. or these defendants or either of them and any other person or persons or corporation or corporations whatsoever. They aver that in voting as directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, and in the case of the defendant Kahn, as a member of the executive committee of the board of directors of said company, in favor of any transactions on the part of said company, they so voted because they deemed such transactions to be lawful and advantageous to said company; 1167 and they aver that in all their actions as directors of said company they were guided solely by their best judgment as to the best interests of said company. They aver that they and the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. have voted such shares of stock of The Union Pacific Railroad Company as they from time to time have held in such manner as seemed to them to be for the best interests of the company and its shareholders. They aver that on February 26, 1906, both of these defendants resigned from the board of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company; that such resignations were duly accepted by the board of directors of said company on April 10, 1906; and that since said resignations they have had no connection with or voice in the management of said company or of any of the other railroad companies mentioned in the petition; and for that reason these defendants aver that they are not proper parties defendant to this suit. And further answering the petition these defendants say:

II. They admit that the defendant Jacob H. Schiff was a director of said Union Pacific Railroad Company from March 1, 1898, until February 26, 1906, when he resigned; and that the defendant Otto H. Kahn became a director of said company on July 1, 1897, and 1168 a member of the executive committee of the board of directors of said company on December 8, 1897, and continued to be a director of said company and a member of said committee from said respective dates until February 26, 1906, when he resigned.

III. They admit that during all of the period alleged in the petition the defendants Jacob H. Schiff and Otto H. Kahn were, and still are, members of a banking firm doing business in the city of New York under the firm name and style of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and they admit that many, although by no means all, of the purchases and sales of shares of stock and bonds mentioned in said petition were made from or to or through the instrumentality of said firm; but they deny that said firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. were ever appointed as or held the office of "fiscal agent" of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, and they deny that while these defendants were members of its board of directors said company appointed any person, partnership, or corporation as its fiscal agent or agents.

They deny that during the time when they were directors of said company, or when either of them was a director thereof, the 1169 by-laws of said Union Pacific Railroad Company respecting the power of the executive committee of its board of directors and the power and authority of the chairman of said executive committee were in the form or of the legal effect alleged in Subdivision II of the petition; and for the provisions of said by-laws in respect of the power and authority of the executive committee and the chairman of the executive committee during said period these defendants respectfully refer to the records of said corporation.

They deny that, pursuant to the by-laws of said corporation or otherwise, the defendant Harriman at any time while these defendants were directors, or either of them was a director, of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, with or without a concurrence and assistance of the individual defendants in this suit, other than defendant Clark, who were members of the executive committee or the board of directors of said company, dominated the affairs and controlled the management of said company, and they allege that while these defendants were members of the board of directors of said corporation its by-laws in respect to the powers and duties of its officers were such as are usually adopted by large railroad corpora-1170 tions. They have no knowledge as to the control of the management of said company or as to its by-laws since they ceased to be directors thereof.

IV. They deny that from and after January 1, 1901, or at any time, they, or either of them, and the defendants, Edward H. Harriman and James Stillman, together with Henry H. Rogers and Henry C. Frick, or any of them, or with any other person or persons who joined with them, have owned or controlled a majority of the capital stock of the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company.

They admit that the said Edward H. Harriman was the chairman of the executive committee of the board of directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company from January 1, 1901, to February 26, 1906, when these defendants resigned as directors thereof, and that he was the president of said corporation from January, 1904, to said February 26, 1906; they are informed and believe that the said Harriman, since said February 26, 1906, has been and still is the chairman of said board of directors and the president of said corporation.

V. They admit the ownership by said Union Pacific Rail-1171 road Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, and Southern Pacific Company, respectively, of capital stock of other companies, as alleged in subdivision III of the petition, from January 1, 1901, to February 26, 1906, when these defendants resigned as directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company; but they deny that ever prior to said February 26, 1906, said Union Pacific Railroad Company managed said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company or the said Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company. They deny that said Union Pacific Railroad Company controlled said corporations or either of them except to the extent of voting its stock in said corporations for the election of members of their boards of directors, but these defendants aver that each of those companies controlled and managed its own railroads and other property in its own name and by its own officers and agents.

These defendants have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of Subdivision III of the petition respecting alleged competition between the various companies; but they aver that, if there was any competition between any railroad lines or steamship lines alleged to be controlled by the South-1172 ern Pacific Company and the lines alleged to be controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, such competition was not of such a character as to render illegal the acquisition of stock of the Southern Pacific Company by the Union Pacific Railroad Company or by the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company.

VI. They deny that in the spring of 1901, or at any other time, they, or either of them, and the defendants Harriman, Stillman, and Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any of them, conspired to restrain the trade and commerce among the several States and between said States and foreign countries, carried on by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Southern Pacific Company or any other company, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any such trade and commerce, or to restrain or prevent competition among said railway systems or any other railway systems, and said steamship lines or any other steamship lines, in respect to any such trade and commerce; or to deprive the public of the facilities and advantages in the carrying on of such interstate and foreign trade and commerce through the independent competition, if any there was, of said railway systems and steamship lines or other railway systems or steamship 1173 lines; or that they or either of them and the said defendants or any of them ever entered into a combination or conspiracy to effect a virtual or substantial consolidation of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and any other transcontinental railway companies or steamship companies, or to place restraint upon any competitive commerce, if any such there was, carried on by such companies, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the same, or to suppress any competition existing between any of said companies or lines by the means alleged in the petition or otherwise.

They admit that in February, 1901, said firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. acquired 750,000 shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pacific Company, of the aggregate par value of $75,000,000, out of 1,978,800 shares, of the aggregate par value of $197,839,900, then issued and outstanding, with the expectation of offering to said Union Pacific Railroad Company an opportunity of purchasing said shares of stock; they admit that said firm subsequently sold said stock to said Union Pacific Railroad Company (these defendants not voting upon the purchase as directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company), but they deny that the said stock was acquired or sold by said 1174 firm in pursuance of any conspiracy or combination or for any of the purposes alleged in said petition.

They admit that thereafter, to wit, on or about the 31st day of May, 1902, said Kuhn, Loeb & Co. sold to defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company 150,000 additional shares of stock of said Southern Pacific Company; but they deny that the said additional shares were acquired or sold by said firm in pursuance of any conspiracy or combination or for any of the purposes alleged in the petition.

They admit that thereafter, to wit, in 1904, defendant Southern Pacific Company created an issue of preferred stock which it offered to its stockholders for subscription pro rata at par, but they deny that these defendants, or either of them, and the defendants Harriman, Stillman, and said Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any of them, caused said issue of preferred stock. They admit that said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, as the owner of 900,000 shares of the common stock of said Southern Pacific Company, exercised its right and subscribed for and received 180,000 shares of the preferred stock of said Southern Pacific Company of the par value of $18,000,000.

They deny that the said preferred stock was issued by said
1175 Southern Pacific Company or that any of the common or preferred stock of said company was acquired by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company or the Union Pacific Railroad Company in pursuance of any combination or conspiracy with which either of these defendants was in any way connected, or for any of the purposes or with the intent on the part of these defendants or either of them as alleged in said petition.

They deny that ever, prior to February 26, 1906, when these defendants resigned as directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, said Union Pacific Railroad Company or said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company controlled the management, operation, or business affairs of said Southern Pacific Company or exercised any control whatsoever over it, except such as may have resulted from the voting upon the stock of said Southern Pacific Company owned by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company at meetings of the stockholders for the election of directors of said Southern Pacific Company. They have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to whether said companies have, or either of them has, controlled the management or operation or business affairs of said Southern Pacific Company at any time since said date.

They admit that at the annual meetings of the stock-1176 holders of the Southern Pacific Company from the time the stock was so acquired and owned by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company until February 26, 1906, when these defendants resigned as directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, such stock constituted a majority of the shares represented at such meetings, though not a majority of the entire capital stock of said company; and they admit that by voting upon the said shares, through its duly authorized agents and proxies, aided by the votes upon other shares owned by a large number of other stockholders of said Southern Pacific Company, the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company was able to elect the directors of said Southern Pacific Company; but they aver that at none of said meetings were any votes cast by any stockholder against the persons so elected. They have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the voting of said stock since said February 26, 1906.

They deny that the stock of the Southern Pacific Company so acquired and owned by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company ever was or is voted at the dictation or instance of these defendants, or either of them, or at the dictation or instance of 1177 these defendants, or either of them, acting in concert with said Union Pacific Railroad Company, Harriman, and Stillman, or any of them; or that said stock was ever voted for the purposes or ends alleged in Subdivision IV of the petition; and they deny that the directors of said Southern Pacific Company have ever been selected or caused to be elected by them, or either of them, or by them, or either of them, acting in concert with others.

They deny that competition between said Union Pacific Railroad and Southern Pacific Company with their steamship lines as set forth in the petition or otherwise, if any such competition ever existed, has been destroyed or that any interstate or foreign commerce which at any time was the subject of competition was ever, while these defendants were directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, monopolized in the hands or under the control of said company and subsidiary corporations and its officials, or any of them.

They deny each and every allegation of Subdivision IV of the petition respecting these defendants and each every allegation therein respecting any conspiracy or combination between these defendants, or either of them, and said Harriman, Stillman, and Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any of them, for any of the purposes 1178 or with any of the intents or results alleged.

VII. They deny that they, or either of them, and the said Harriman, Stillman, Union Pacific Railroad, or any of them, in the spring of 1901 or at any other time, caused the Union Pacific Railroad Company to acquire a majority of the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, or any other amount thereof, pursuant to any conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize such trade and commerce, or to suppress any competition; and they deny all the allegations of Subdivision V of the petition respecting any conspiracy or combination for any purpose between these defendants, or either of them, and any of the defendants to this suit.

They admit that in the year 1901 said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company purchased $37,023,000 par value of the common stock and $11,085,000 par value of the preferred stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and that at the time of such purchase the total stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company issued and outstanding was of the aggregate par value of $155,000,000; but 1179 they deny that such purchase was in pursuance of any conspiracy or combination or for any of the purposes alleged in the petition.

They admit the incorporation of the Northern Securities Company, and also the retirement of the preferred stock by an additional issue of common stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company as alleged in said petition.

They admit the sale and transfer of said stock to the Northern Securities Company, and the receipt by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company of $82,491,871 par value of the stock of said Northern Securities Company represented by certificates issued in the name of said Harriman and of Winslow S. Pierce, who was at that time general counsel of defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, and they admit that neither the said Harriman nor the said Pierce had any personal interest in said shares; but they deny that said sale was caused by these defendants or either of them, or by them or either of them acting with any other parties, and they deny that said stock of the Northern Securities Company was held by said Harriman and Pierce, pursuant to any conspiracy to which these defendants were parties, or either of them was a party.

They admit the commencement of a suit by the United

They admit the commencement thereafter of a suit by defendants Harriman and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and the said Winslow S. Pierce and the Equitable Trust Company of New York, as alleged in the petition; and they admit that the relief sought by the complainants in said suit was denied by the decrees entered therein. But they aver that the courts by said decrees approved the distribution by the Northern Securities Company of the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and the Great Northern Railway Company complained of by defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and its copetitioners in said suit; and that as a result of said distribution, and of the approval of the same in said suit, the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company during the year 1904 received from the Northern Securities Company, as the interest and share of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company of the assets so distributed, 281,828 shares, being 18.18 per cent of the capital stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company; and 216,536 shares, being 17.32 per cent of the capital stock of the Great Northern Railway Company; and that no doubt as to the right of 1181 said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company to so receive and hold the said shares was intimated by any of the courts in such suit. They deny that they were parties, or either of them was a party, to said suit, and deny that they, or either of them, in any way opposed or protested against any proposed distribution of shares by said Northern Securities Company as alleged in the petition.

They aver that defendant, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, upon the final decision of said suit, proceeded from time to time to sell the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and of the Great Northern Railway Company, so received by it, as sales could be advantageously effected; but they have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to what amount of said stock has been disposed of by said Oregon Short Line Railway Company or what amount thereof, if any, it owned at the date of the commencement of this suit or now owns; they deny that said Oregon Short Line Railway Company ever held or now holds any stocks as the agent or representative of these defendants, or either of them, or of any conspirators of whom either of these defendants was one, or pursuant to any conspiracy to which these defendants were parties or either of them was a party.

1182 They deny that they, or either of them, and the said Harriman, Stillman, and Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any other persons associated with them, caused the said suit of Harriman, Pierce, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and Equitable Trust Company of New York against said Northern Securities Company to be prosecuted for the purpose of effectuating any conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce or to smother competition or monopolize any trade or commerce as in said petition alleged.

They deny each and every allegation of said subdivision V of the petition not herein expressly admitted or respecting which the

have not stated that they have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief.

VIII. They have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to when or by whom or for what purpose or purposes the defendant, San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, was incorporated, or as to what line or lines of railway it had acquired or was engaged in constructing prior to the year 1902.

They deny that they, or either of them, for the purpose of restraining trade and commerce among the States and with foreign 1183 nations, and monopolizing the same, or of preventing competition, or for any other purpose, brought any suit or suits or were concerned in bringing any suit or suits in the courts for the purpose of harassing or injuring the said San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, or for any other purposes alleged in subdivision VI of said petition; and they deny that they made or were concerned in the making of any threats or caused any interference as in said subdivision alleged.

They deny that the contracts referred to in Subdivision VI of said petition, alleged copies of which are annexed thereto and marked, respectively, Exhibits "A" and "B", were entered into for the purpose alleged in said subdivision, and they deny that the consummation of said contracts had the results in said subdivision alleged.

They deny that they were parties, or either of them was a party, to any combination, confederation, or conspiracy for the purposes mentioned in the said subdivision or any of them; and they deny each and every allegation in said subdivision contained respecting these defendants.

IX. They deny that pursuant to any conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign 1184 nations or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any such trade and commerce or to restrain or prevent competition among any of said railway systems, they, or either of them, and the defendants, Harriman, Stillman, Rogers, and Frick, or any of them, in the year 1904 or at any other time, made large purchases of stock of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, aggregating $30,000,000, par value, of said stock or any other amount; and they deny that they, or either of them, at any time demanded of or were concerned in or took part in any demand upon any officials of said The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company that any of the defendants herein, or any other person or persons, should be elected directors of said company.

They deny that the defendants Frick and Rogers were elected directors of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company pursuant to any demand made by these defendants, or either of them, or pursuant to any conspiracy to which the defendants were parties or either of them was a party, or for any other reason alleged in Subdivision VII of the petition herein.

They deny that in the summer of 1906 they, or either of them, caused or were concerned in causing the Union Pacific 1185 Railroad Company or Oregon Short Line Railroad Company to purchase $10,000,000, par value, or any other amount of the stock of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, and have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the purposes of the Union Pacific Railroad Company or Oregon Short Line Railroad Company in making any purchase of stock of said Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, which it may have made.

They have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the course which has been pursued by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company in respect to the matters alleged in said Subdivision VII of the petition or as to the allegations of competition between the system of railways alleged to be controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, or any elimination thereof, if such competition ever existed.

They deny that any of the acts or transactions alleged in Subdivision VII were the result of any conspiracy, combination, or contract to restrain commerce among the several States and with foreign countries, or were done or occurred in pursuance of any con-1186 spiracy or combination for any purpose to which these defendants were parties or either of them was a party; and they deny each and every allegation of said Subdivision VII respecting these defendants.

X. They allege that, so far as practicable, they have confined this answer to the allegations of the petition which related to the matters and things of which these defendants have knowledge or with which they had some connection, either individually or as directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. As to the other allegations of the petition, they have refrained from making either admissions or denials thereon, and pray that the complainant be put upon proof of each and all of the same, if such other allegations be material or pertinent to any inquiry before this court as regards these defendants.

XI. And these defendants deny all and all manner of unlawful combination and confederacy wherewith they are in the said petition charged; without that any other matter, cause, or thing in the said petition contained, material or necessary for these defendants to make answer unto, and not herein and hereby well and sufficiently answered unto, confessed, traversed, and avoided or 1187 denied, is true to the knowledge or belief of these defendants all of which matters and things these defendants are ready and willing to aver, maintain, and prove, as this honorable court shall direct, and humbly pray to be hence dismissed, with their reasonable costs and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

1224 DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT No. 50 (PART E), APRIL 16, 1915.

In the District Court of the United States for the District of Utah.

United States of America, complainant, v. The Union Pacific Railroad Company; The Oregon Short Line Railroad Company; The Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company; The San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company; The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company; The Southern Pacific Company; Northern Pacific Railway Company; Great Northern Railway Company; The Farmers' Loan & Trust Company; Jacob H. Schiff; Otto H. Kahn; James Stillman; Henry C. Frick; William A. Clark; and Robert S. Lovett, as trustee, defendants. No. ——.

1225 Decree.

The above-entitled cause having duly come on for hearing before this court, and having been determined adversely to the complainant, and the said cause having been appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, by which court the decree of this court dismissing the said bill of complaint was in part reversed, and a mandate from the Supreme Court in proper form containing directions as to the decree to be entered herein having been filed here on the 12th day of February, 1913.

Now, therefore, this cause came on to be further heard at this term, and was argued by counsel, and thereupon, upon consideration thereof, it was ordered, adjudged, and decreed as follows, viz:

SECTION 1. That the final decree entered herein on June 24, 1911, dismissing the bill be set aside so far as the same was reversed by the Supreme Court.

SEC. 2. That prior to the year 1901, and ever since said date, the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company has controlled, by the ownership of substantially all the stock thereof, the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company; and that the defendant Ore-
1226 gon Short Line Railroad Company, by the ownership of substantially all the stock thereof, has controlled the defendant Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, which latter company has controlled, and still does, through the ownership of all the stock thereof, control the Portland & Asiatic Steamship Company; and that in the year 1901, and for several years prior thereto, said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company had been the owner and engaged in the operation of a line of steamships between Portland, Oregon, and San Francisco, California; that it continued in the operation of the same until about the year 1904, when a corporation was organized, of which said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company then was and still is the sole stockholder, known as the San Francisco and Portland Steamship Company, which took over the said line of ships between San Francisco and Portland, and has since been operating the same in connection with the rail lines of said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company; and that the lines of railway and steamships of said corporations were, prior to 1901, and ever since have been, controlled and managed in all respects by the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company; and that prior to the year 1901, and continuously since that date, the said defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company 1227 and its subsidiary corporations owned, controlled, and managed by it, have owned and have been engaged in the operation of a system of railroad and steamship lines.

SEC. 3. That the defendant Southern Pacific Company controls, by direct ownership, stock ownership, and lease a system of rail and steamship lines, and also by the ownership of a majority of its stock has, during all of said time, controlled the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which is engaged in transportation business between the port of San Francisco and various ports in China and Japan, which ports in China and Japan were also served by said Portland and Asiatic Steamship Company.

SEC. 4. That the Central Pacific Railroad Company was organized under the laws of California, and constructed a line of railroad from Sacramento, California, to Ogden, Utah.

That the Western Pacific Railroad Company was organized under the laws of California, and constructed a line of railroad from San Francisco to Sacramento, California, and that these two latter corporations were afterwards consolidated into and became the Central Pacific Railroad Company, which was for many years engaged in the operation of said line of railroad from San Francisco to 1228 Ogden, at which point it connected with the main line of said Union Pacific Railroad Company.

That the said Southern Pacific Company was and is also the owner of all the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Utah, which succeeded to the ownership of the line of railway from Ogden to San Francisco theretofore owned by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, hereinbefore particularly described; and by virtue of such ownership of all said capital stock said Southern Pacific Company in all respects controls the operation and management of the affairs and business of said Central Pacific Railway Company.

That the railways and properties formerly belonging to the said Central Pacific Railroad Company were, by indenture and agreement dated July 28, 1899, conveyed to the said Central Pacific Railway Company.

That prior thereto and on or about the 17th day of February, 1885, the said Central Pacific Railroad Company leased to the said Southern Pacific Company all of its railroad and properties for a period of ninety-nine years, which lease was threafter modified by agreements between the parties dated the first day of January, 1229 1888, and the 7th day of December, 1893, dated respectively, and the 22d day of March, 1894, and that the railroads of the said Central Pacific Railroad and said Central Pacific Railway were controlled and operated by the said Southern Pacific Company, and thereafter, and in or about the month of March, 1901, said Southern Pacific Company passed under the control of the Union Pacific Railroad Company as hereinbefore specified.

SEC. 5. That prior to the year 1901 the said systems of rail and steamship lines of the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company and the defendant Southern Pacific Company and different portions of the same were, and but for the suppression of competition hereinafter mentioned would still be, active competitors for the transportation of large quantities of freight and passengers between the Atlantic seaboard and the Pacific coast and between various other points. That the railroad and steamship lines of said Union Pacific Railroad Company's system and said Southern Pacific Company's system are natural competitors.

SEC. 6. That in the spring of 1901 the said defendants, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, and James Stillman, together with one Edward

H. Harriman, who was originally a defendant in this cause, 1230 but who has died during the pendency thereof, for the purpose of enabling the Union Pacific Railroad Company to acquire control of the railroad system of the Southern Pacific Company and thereby to form the combination herein described, caused to be acquired for transfer to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and said company thereupon, in consummation of said plan, acquired 750,000 shares of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company of the par value of $75,000,000 out of a total issue of 1,978,477 shares of the aggregate par value of $197,847,788 then issued and outstanding (said shares being delivered to said defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company on or about March 4, 1901), so that the same might be held in the treasury of said company and voted by it for the purpose and with the intention of controlling the election of the board of directors and officers of the said Southern Pacific Company and eliminating the competition that had theretofore existed between said Union Pacific system and said Southern Pacific system.

That the said shares of stock were afterwards transferred to the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, to be held for the use and benefit of said Union Pacific Railroad Company. That thereafter for 1231 the purpose of strengthening and completing said combination the Union Pacific Railroad Company acquired from time to time additional shares of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company and turned the same over to the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company to be held for the use and benefit of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, until the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company had acquired and now owns and holds 1,266,500 shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pacific Company out of a total of 2,726,724 shares issued and outstanding, or about 46% thereof.

That at each and every annual meeting of the stockholders of the Southern Pacific Company for the election of directors since said 750,000 shares of stock were so acquired the stock so held by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company has constituted a majority of the shares represented at such meetings, and the directors of said Southern Pacific Company have been chosen by the vote of such stock.

That the balance of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company is scattered among a large number of stockholders, and that by reason of the fact that such stock is so scattered the full amount of the same is not and never has been voted at any meeting, for which 1232 reason the said stock of the Southern Pacific Company so controlled by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company has constituted a majority of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company at the meetings of the stockholders thereof, and by reason of said stock ownership the said Union Pacific Railroad Company and its said subsidiary corporation have controlled said Southern Pacific Company, and in the case of a large corporation of the character of the Southern Pacific Company a compact, united ownership of 46% of the stock is ample to control the operations of the corporation.

That since April 3, 1901, members of the board of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company have constituted a majority of the board of directors of said Southern Pacific Company.

That for several years last past the Union Pacific Railroad Company and its subsidiary lines and said Southern Pacific Company have had common traffic officials, operating officials, purchasing agents, and commercial agents, and the said lines of railway and steamships of said respective systems have been and are operated as a single system, and the competition that formerly existed between the said two railway systems with their steamships has been destroyed, and the interstate and foreign commerce which was 1233 formerly the subject of competition between said two systems has been in the hands and under the control of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and its subsidiary corporations and their officials.

SEC. 7. That the stocks of the Southern Pacific Company were acquired and are held by the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company by virtue of an unlawful combination to restrain trade and commerce and eliminate the competition herein described.

SEC. 8. That the defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, acting directly or through their respective officers, boards of directors, executive committees, agents, servants, or through any other person, firm, or corporation acting for or in the interest of said companies, are hereby perpetually enjoined from purchasing, acquiring, receiving, holding, voting, whether by proxy or otherwise, or in any manner acting as the owner of any of the shares of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company.

SECTION 9. That the defendant Southern Pacific Company, its officers, directors, servants, and agents, and all persons acting by, through, or under it, be, and they are hereby, respectively and collectively, enjoined from permitting the stock aforesaid to be 1234 voted by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, or in their behalf by their attorneys or agents or the attorneys or agents of either of them, at any meeting of the stockholders of said railway company; and said Southern Pacific Company, together with its officers, directors, servants, and agents, are likewise enjoined and respectively restrained from paying any dividends to said Union Pacific Railroad Company or the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, or to any person for them or either of them on account of stock in said Southern Pacific Company, which the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company now claims to own and hold, and from paying any dividends on said stock while thus held, except to a receiver to be appointed by this court to collect and hold such dividends until disposed of by the decree of this court; and said Southern Pacific Company, its officers, directors, servants, and agents are further enjoined from permitting or suffering the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, or any of its officers or agents, from exercising any control whatsoever over the corporate acts of said Southern Pacific Company.

SECTION 10. That the defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, Oregon Railroad
1235 and Navigation Company, and Southern Pacific Company, together with the officers, directors, agents, servants, employees, and all persons and corporations acting by, through, or under the corporations named in this section, are enjoined and prohibited from continuing or carrying into further effect the combination hereby adjudged illegal, either:

(a) By the use of any written evidences of a stock interest in the said Southern Pacific Company, Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, or either of them, or by causing the conveyance of the physical property and business of the Southern Pacific Company, on the one hand, to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, or either of them, upon the other hand, or by causing the conveyance of the physical property and business of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, or either of them, upon the one hand, to the Southern Pacific Company, upon the other hand, or by placing the control of the Southern Pacific Company, on the one hand, and of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, 1236 the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, upon the other hand, in a trustee or group of trustees, or by causing the stock in said Southern Pacific Company to be held by any person for the benefit of the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, or any person acting in their interest, or in the interest of either of them; or

(b) By making any express or implied agreement or arrangement together, or one with another, like that hereby adjudged illegal, relative to the control or management of said Southern Pacific Company

by the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, or any person acting in their interest, or from causing said companies to agree as to the rates of transportation of competitive traffic, or after the first day of May, 1913, from continuing any union of management of any sort or description, either as to operation, rates, or otherwise, between the said Southern Pacific Company, on the one hand, and the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, on the other hand, and, after said date from electing, permitting to be elected, or continuing the 1237 same person or persons as a director or officer of both the Southern Pacific Company or any of its subsidiary companies on the one hand, and the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, or any of the subsidiaries of said companies, on the other hand, or by maintaining common agencies for the solicitation of traffic; but nothing herein contained shall be construed as prohibiting said railroad companies from entering into agreements for the joint carriage of through traffic, including the making of through rates and the running of through cars or trains as well as the granting of running rights by the one company to the other and the making of other operating and traffic arrangements such as can legally be made between connecting independent railroad corporations operating under separate managements.

And the defendant corporations, their respective officers, directors, agents, servants and employees, and the individual defendants, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, and James Stillman, are enjoined and prohibited from entering into any like combination to that above described, the effect of which is or may be to restrain commerce among the States or with foreign nations in violation of the act of 1238 July 2, 1890, by any of the means aforesaid.

SECTION 11. And said defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company is hereby further enjoined from selling, assigning, transferring, mortgaging, or pledging any of the said stock of the Southern Pacific Company, or any certificate of interest in the stock of the last-named company, to any person or corporation except as may be authorized by this court.

And the defendant Southern Pacific Company, its officers, directors, agents, and servants, and each and every one of them, are enjoined from recognizing as valid any transfer, mortgage, pledge, or assignment by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, of the said shares of stock of said Southern Pacific Company unless the same shall be authorized by this court.

SECTION 12. That nothing in this decree contained shall be considered as preventing the Government, or any party to this suit, from presenting to this court plans for the acquisition or control by the Union Pacific Railroad Company of the Central Pacific Railway Company, or of its line of railroad, so far and to such extent as shall be approved by this court. Any such plan or plans shall be 1239 filed with the clerk of this court within three months from the 12th day of February, 1913.

SECTION 13. The complainant herein is hereby granted leave at any time, by motion or by supplemental or amended bill or petition, as it may be advised, to make and bring in any additional parties, and the clerk of this court is directed to issue all the necessary and appropriate process to that end.

SECTION 14. That as directed by the said Supreme Court of the United States, the said defendants may present to this court plans for the disposition of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company, so held by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, within three months from the 12th day of February, 1913, the date of the filing of the mandate in this court; and the court, upon the presentation of such plans, will hear the complainant and defendants, and will bring in any additional parties whose presence may be found necessary to a final disposition of the stock in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court. In the event that defendants shall fail to present such plans within said time, or upon the rejection by the court of the plans submitted within such time, this court will take 1240 such further steps relative to a disposition of such stock as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this decree, jurisdiction of the cause being retained for that purpose.

SECTION 15. The bill of complaint is hereby dismissed as to the defendants, The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company; The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company; Northern Pacific Railway Company; Great Northern Railway Company; The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company; Henry C. Frick, William A. Clark, and Robert S. Lovett as trustee.

SECTION 16. That the complainant, United States of America, have and recover from the defendants, The Union Pacific Railroad Company, The Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn, and James Stillman, its costs and disbursements, to be taxed by the court.

Dated February 12, 1913.

1241 DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT NO. 50 (PART F), APRIL 16, 1915.

In the District Court of the United States for the District of Utah.

The United States of America, complainant, v. The Union Pacific Railroad Company; the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company; The Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company; The San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company; The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company; The Southern Pacific Company; Northern Pacific Railway Company; Great Northern Railway Company; Farmers' Loan & Trust Company; Jacob H. Schiff; Otto H. Kahn; James Stillman; Henry C. Frick; William A. Clark; Robert S. Lovett, as trustee; Central Pacific Railway Company and Southern Pacific Railroad Company, defendants.

Final decree.

Whereas the above cause was determined by a decree of this 1242 court entered June 24, 1911, dismissing the bill, from which complainant appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which, in an opinion delivered December 2, 1912, reversed the decree of this court and issued its mandate filed herein February 12, 1913, remanding the cause with instructions to enter a decree and for further proceedings in conformity with its opinion, which opinion directed, among other things, that disposition of the shares of capital stock of the defendant Southern Pacific Company found to have been unlawfully acquired by the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company in the interest of the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company "shall be made subject to the approval and decree of the district court, and any plan for the disposition of this stock must be such as to effectually dissolve the unlawful combination thus created."

And further that "The court shall proceed, upon the presentation of any plan, to hear the Government and defendants, and may bring in any additional parties whose presence may be necessary to a final disposition of the stock in conformity to the views herein ex-

* * * * * * *

"And any plan or plans shall be presented to the district court within three months from the receipt of the mandate of this court, failing which, or upon the rejection by the court of plans submitted within such time, the court shall proceed by receivership and sale, if necessary, to dispose of such stock in such wise as to dissolve such unlawful combination."

And whereas thereupon, on February 12, 1913, this Court entered a decree adjudging that the shares of the defendant Southern Pacific

Company held by the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company were acquired by virtue of an unlawful combination to restrain trade and commerce and enjoining the defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and their agents from voting or receiving dividends in respect thereof, and providing further, amongst other things, as follows:

"SEC. 14. That as directed by the said Supreme Court of the United States, the said defendants may present to this Court 1244 plans for the disposition of the stock of said Southern Pacific Company, so held by said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, within three months from the 12th day of February, 1913, the date of the filing of the mandate in this Court; and the Court, upon the presentation of such plans, will hear the complainant and defendants and will bring in any additional parties whose presence may be found necessary to a final disposition of the stock in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court. In the event that defendants shall fail to present such plans within said time, or upon the rejection by the Court of the plans submitted within such time, this Court will take such further steps relative to a disposition of such stock as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this decree, jurisdiction of the cause being retained for that purpose."

And whereas on February 12, 1913, the defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company presented a plan for the disposition of the said shares which had been approved by the Attorney General of the United States, but 1245 which was withdrawn before action thereon because of the failure of the railroad commission of the State of California to approve certain features thereof within its jurisdiction;

And whereas thereafter, with the consent of the Attorney General, the time within which to present plans was extended by the Supreme Court until July 1, 1913;

And whereas on June 5, 1913, the defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad filed herein a petition submitting (1) a first amended plan, in substance providing for the disposition of said shares by a public subscription offering at prices and upon terms to be fixed by said defendants and with certain limitations upon the right of Union Pacific stockholders to subscribe; and (2) a second amended plan, in substance providing for the transfer of said shares to a trustee and for the offering of the trustee's nonvoting certificates of interest therein, upon terms fixed by said defendants, to Union Pacific stockholders or their assignees for subscription, which certificates of interest should be exchangeable for Southern Pacific shares upon affidavit that the applicant for such exchange owned no Union Pacific Railroad Company stock;

And whereas on June 12, 1913, the said defendants filed 1246 a petition supplementing their first amended plan and second amended plan aforesaid by a proposal to sell to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company 382,924 shares of the Southern Pacific Company in exchange for 425,472 shares of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company;

And whereas, by petition filed herein June 30, 1913, the said defendants withdrew all of the plans recited in the petitions then pending before the court and submitted their third amended plan;

And whereas complainant has filed an answer to said petition submitting said third amended plan:

Now, therefore, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed:

SECTION 1. Said third amended plan is hereby approved in so far and only so far as its provisions are embodied in this decree.

SECTION 2. The defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company having asked permission to sell to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company 382,924 of the said shares of the capital stock of the defendant Southern Pacific Company, of the par value of $38,292,400, and to accept in exchange 425,472 shares (half preferred and half common) of the capital stock of the 1247 Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, of the par value of $42,547,200 (being all the stock of said company owned or controlled by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company or any of its subsidiaries), and it appearing that such sale or exchange would be a substantial step toward the effectual dissolution of the particular combination now before the court, it is hereby provided and leave is granted to effect the same: Provided, however, That neither such approval and leave nor anything contained in this decree shall ever be taken or construed as affecting the obligations, powers, rights, or duties under present or future laws of any person or corporation not a party to this cause, nor be taken or construed as an adjudication that any defendant herein has the right to acquire or hold the shares of stocks so sold or exchanged, nor as an exemption of any defendant in respect of such acquisition or holding from the operation of any law now in force or which may hereafter be enacted.

In the event of such sale immediate delivery shall be made of the said 382,924 shares of the defendant Southern Pacific Company which is hereby directed to cause them to be transferred on its stock books to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, upon presentation of the certificates therefor duly assigned, and thereupon to pay to 1248 the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, on demand, the dividends appertaining to said shares heretofore declared and payable April 1 and July 1, 1913, respectively; and the transaction shall be reported to the court within 30 days from the date hereof.

SECTION 3. The Central Trust Company of New York, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, and hereinafter called the Trustee, having declared its submission to the jurisdiction of this court for all purposes of this cause, and having entered its appearance herein by counsel, is made a party hereto; and said Central Trust Company of New York is hereby appointed to receive and hold, as the custodian and depositary of this court, subject to the provisions of this decree and to the further orders and decrees of the court herein, all shares of the capital stock of defendant Southern Pacific Company which shall be transferred to it as hereinafter provided.

SECTION 4. The shares of the defendant Southern Pacific Company held by the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company remaining after the sale to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company of 382,924 shares thereof, as hereinabove provided, to wit, 883,576 shares, or the entire holdings if such sale to the Pennsylvania Rail-1249 road Company shall not be consummated within 30 days from the date hereof, shall be transferred forthwith to the Trustee and registered in its name on the books of the Southern Pacific Company, and certificates therefor delivered to the Trustee.

The defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company shall assign or cause to be assigned to the Trustee all dividends appertaining to the shares so transferred which shall have been declared and shall be then or thereafter payable to the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company or the individuals holding in its behalf as the registered stockholders entitled to such dividends. Such dividends, hereinafter designated as the "accumulated dividends", shall be collected by the Trustee and held and distributed upon the terms and conditions hereinafter provided.

SECTION 5. Prior to November 1, 1913, the defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company shall offer to all stockholders of the former, common and preferred (registered as such on a date to be designated in the offer and not more than 40 days from its date), or to their assignees the right to subscribe for certificates of interest representing the said 1250 Southern Pacific Company shares transferred to the Trustee as provided hereunder substantially in the proportion of their respective holdings, with such allowance in fixing the distribution ratio as the above-named defendants may deem necessary for possible conversions of convertible bonds of the said Union Pacific Railroad Company. The offering shall include all accumulated dividends appertaining to said shares, and shall be at such price and upon such other terms as the defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company shall determine, except as specifically herein prescribed or as otherwise directed by the court by a subsequent order or decree.

The subscription price shall be payable at the time of the subscription or at the option of the subscriber, $25 per share at the time of subscription and the balance within one year thereafter, with interest on such balance at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. The subscriptions shall be filed with the Trustee.

Neither of the defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company or Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, nor any corporation controlled by either, nor any person acting in the interest of either, shall acquire by purchase or otherwise any of said certificates of interest.

1251 The defendants, Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, may cause the sale of said certificates of interest upon such subscription offer to be underwritten, the underwritters to agree to purchase any certificates, or such an amount thereof as shall be designated in the underwriting agreement, not subscribed for pursuant to the offer.

SECTION 6. The Trustee shall execute and issue certificates of interest representing the shares transferred to it hereunder and shall deliver them at its offices in the city of New York to the subscribers therefore under section 5 hereof, upon payment in full of the subscription price and compliance in all respects with the terms prescribed by the offering, or by any subscription receipt issued under section 7 hereof, to be performed by the subscribers to entitle them to receive such certificates of interest; and in like manner shall deliver such certificates of interest upon full payment therefor to any other purchasers t owhom the defendants, Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, shall be authorized by the court to sell the same. All such certificates shall be registered by the trustee in the names of the purchasers. They shall 1252 be substantially in the form hereto annexed, marked
"Form A."

SECTION 7. The Trustee shall issue part-paid subscription receipts to all subscribers who shall elect to defer payment of the balance of the subscription price, upon payment of the aforesaid initial installment thereof and due compliance in all other respects with the terms prescribed by the offering to be performed by the subscribers at the time of the subscription; and in like manner shall deliver such subscription receipts, upon payment of such initial installment of the purchase price, to any other purchasers to whom defendants, Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, shall be authorized by the court to sell the said certificates of interest. All such subscription receipts shall be registered by the Trustee in the names of the purchasers. They shall be substantially in the form hereto annexed, marked "Form B."

SECTION 8. The certificates of interest and subscription receipts issued hereunder may be in the denominations of 1 share, 10 shares, 50 shares, 100 shares, and such other denominations as the Trustee shall elect. The certificates of interest and subscription receipts shall be executed on behalf of the Trustee by such officer of the 1253 Trustee in the city of New York, or by such agent in London, England, as it shall authorize thereunto, and such certificates of interest may be countersigned by a trust company in the city of New York as registrar.

SECTION 9. The Trustee shall, if so requested by the registered owner of any subscription receipt issued hereunder and then outstanding, by application in writing presented at its office in the city of New York not less than 10 days prior to any annual or special stockholders' meeting of the Southern Pacific Company, execute and deliver to such registered owner, or to his nominee, a proxy appointing such attorneys, agents, and proxies as such registered owner shall nominate in his said application, to appear and vote at such stockholders' meeting upon the number of shares represented by said subscription receipt for the election of directors and upon any other business transacted at such meeting: Provided, however, that as a condition precedent to the issue of such proxy the applicant shall file with the Trustee at its said office, on or before the tenth day preceding such meeting, an affidavit executed as hereinafter in section 11 hereof prescribed, and in one of the forms referred to in said 1254 section 11, except that said affidavit shall refer to and describe a subscription receipt (or receipts) owned by said applicant, instead of certificates of interest, and that there shall be substituted in the form of said affidavit for the words "for the purpose of procuring the issue of shares of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company held by said Trustee, in exchange for said certificate (or certificates) of interest" the words "for the purpose of procuring the issue of a proxy to vote upon the shares of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company held by said Trustee represented by the subscription receipt (or receipts) above described": And provided further, that the applicant for such proxy shall at the close of business on the tenth day preceding said meeting be registered on the books of the Trustee as the owner of the subscription receipt (or receipts) upon which such application is based.

The Trustee shall not be entitled to vote or issue proxies for voting in respect of any of the said shares of defendant Southern Pacific Company except as in this section provided or as may be hereafter directed by the court.

SECTION 10. So long as any of the shares of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company aforesaid shall be held by the 1255 Trustee, the Trustee shall collect and receive any and all cash dividends declared by the Southern Pacific Company appertaining to the shares so held, which shall be payable to the Trustee as the registered stockholder entitled to such dividends by the terms of the declarations thereof.

Upon the conversion pursuant to section 11 hereof of any certificate of interest issued hereunder into a certificate for shares of capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company held by the Trustee, the latter shall pay in cash to the owner of the certificate of interest converted, or upon his order, the amount of all cash dividends collected by it, including the aforesaid accumulated dividends, appertaining to the number of shares represented by such certificate of interest, but without interest thereon, and shall execute and deliver to such owner, or upon his order, a dividend order or assignment for the amount of any unmatured dividends declared in respect of such shares which shall be vested at the time of such conversion in the Trustee as the registered stockholder entitled thereto. Any interest realized or allowed by the Trustee upon funds paid to it as dividends shall be applicable to the payment of the compensation of the Trustee and the expenses of the administration of the trust, and any balance thereof remaining shall be paid to the defendant 1256 Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, unless otherwise ordered by the court.

All dividends payable otherwise than in cash which shall be declared by the Southern Pacific Company shall be received and held by the Trustee for the pro rata benefit of said registered owners from time to time, of the certificates of interest issued hereunder and outstanding, upon the same terms and conditions as the shares originally deposited, and shall be distributed to the persons who shall be the respective owners of certificates of interest when and as, and only when and as, the shares originally deposited are distributed to them respectively, subject to any necessary adjustment by scrip or otherwise, in the discretion of the Trustee, in respect of fractional shares. All subscription or other rights offered to stockholders of the Southern Pacific Company shall be immediately assigned by the Trustee pro rata to said registered owners of the certificates of interest and subscription receipts issued hereunder and then outstanding, who shall be such registered owners at the date when such rights become fixed.

No deduction shall be made by the Trustee in the distribu-1257 tion of such dividends or increase for any commissions or expenses of the Trustee or other cost of collection or payment.

SECTION 11. At any time upon demand, at its office in the city of New York, upon surrender of any outstanding certificate of interest by the registered owner thereof or his assignee, the Trustee shall deliver to him stock certificates for the number of shares of the defendant Southern Pacific Company (of the par value of $100 each) represented by the surrendered certificate of interest, which stock certificates shall be issued by the said Southern Pacific Company and registered on its books in the name of the new holder, upon condition, however, that the applicant for such conversion or exchange shall file with the Trustee a duly executed affidavit in one of the forms hereto annexed.

The affidavit in the case of an individual applying for such conversion or exchange in his own right shall be substantially in the form annexed hereto marked "Form O".

If the applicant is a corporation or joint-stock company, the affidavit shall be executed by its president, vice president, controller, secretary, or treasurer, or, in the case of a corporation of a foreign country, by one of its managing officers, and shall be substan-2258 tially in the form annexed hereto marked "Form D".

If the applicant is a partnership, the affidavit shall be executed by one of the partners and shall be substantially in the form annexed hereto marked "Form E".

If the applicant is an executor, administrator, guardian, or testamentary or other trustee of an express trust, the affidavit shall be made by such executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee, as the case may be, or by one of such if the application is made on behalf of joint representatives, or, if such representative is a corporation or joint-stock company, by its president, vice president, controller, secretary, or treasurer, or, in the case of a corporation of a foreign country, by one of its managing officers, and shall be substantially in the form annexed hereto marked "Form F".

Provided, however, that whenever the number of shares of capital stock of the defendant Southern Pacific Company held by the Trustee hereunder shall be reduced by the conversion of certificates of interest as provided in this section to 500 shares, it shall be the duty of the Trustee thereupon to distribute such remaining shares pro rata amongst the registered owners of the then outstanding certificates of interest, or their assignees, upon the surrender of such cer-2259 tificates of interest, without requiring the affidavits hereinabove provided for.

All certificates of interest surrendered pursuant to conversions or exchanges effected under this section shall forthwith be canceled by the Trustee and shall not be reissued.

Within thirty (30) days after the conversion of certificates of interest as herein provided shall have commenced, and at monthly intervals thereafter, the Trustee shall file with the clerk of the court a report showing the aggregate amount of certificates of interest converted since the last previous report of the Trustee and the names of all persons, firms, or corporations to whom shares of stock of the Southern Pacific Company shall have been issued pursuant to every such conversion involving more than one hundred (100) shares; and from time to time, upon the request of the Attorney General of the United States, the Trustee shall furnish him with any information which he may require relating to the carrying out of this decree.

SECTION 12. The Trustee shall keep at an office maintained by it in the city of New York books for the registration and transfer 1260 of the certificates of interest and subscription receipts issued hereunder. Provision may be made by the Trustee for the registration and transfer of subscription receipts and certificates of interest in London, England. Upon the surrender of any such certificate of interest or subscription receipt duly assigned for transfer and the payment of any stamp tax required by law the Trustee shall issue to the transferee one or more new certificates of interest or subscription receipts for a like number of shares and shall cancel the surrendered certificate of interest or subscription receipt.

The Trustee may treat the person in whose name shall be registered any certificate of interest or subscription receipt, as hereinbefore provided, as the absolute owner thereof, and shall not be affected by any notice to the contrary; and also, in order to enable it to effectuate the true intent of this decree, the Trustee (so far as consistent with the provisions hereof) may decide all matters of detail in respect of the form of subscription receipts or certificates of interest and the arrangements necessary for their issue and transfer.

The Trustee shall be accountable for its action hereunder 1261 only in proceedings in this cause, and any order of the court entered upon notice to it and to the defendants, Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, shall be full protection to the Trustee for any action which it may take pursuant thereto, and any action so taken by the Trustee shall be binding upon all holders of subscription receipts and certificates of interest. The Trustee shall not be liable to anyone for deferring to take any action until instructed by the court.

In case any certificate of interest or subscription receipt issued hereunder shall become mutilated or be destroyed, the Trustee, in its discretion, may issue a new certificate of interest or subscription receipt of the same denomination in exchange and substitution for and upon cancellation of such mutilated certificate of interest or subscription receipt, or in lieu of and substitution for the same destroyed. In case of destruction the applicant for a substituted certificate of interest or subscription receipt shall furnish to the Trustee evidence of such destruction to the satisfaction of the Trustee, in its discretion, and such reasonable indemnity as the Trustee shall require.

SECTION 13. From time to time the Trustee shall pay over to 1262 the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, or to its order, upon demand, when and as received by it, the moneys received by it in payment of, or on account of, subscriptions or purchases as hereinbefore provided, and it shall not be liable for any loss of such moneys unless incurred through its gross negligence or willful misconduct.

SECTION 14. The Trustee shall be entitled to reasonable compensation, the amount thereof to be approved by the court, for all services rendered by it hereunder, which compensation, together with counsel fees and other expenses incurred hereunder and approved by the court, and all stamp and other taxes imposed by law upon the transfer of the shares of the Southern Pacific Company from the Trustee to the holders of certificates of interest, shall be paid by the defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company.

SECTION 15. The defendant Southern Pacific Company is hereby authorized and directed from time to time to make any transfers upon its stock books of the aforesaid shares of its capital stock held by the defendant Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, or its nominees, and to make all payments of dividends contemplated by the provisions of this decree or necessary or appropriate in the performance thereof.

SECTION 16. Nothing in this decree nor in that entered 1263 February 12, 1913, shall be construed as prohibiting the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company from acquiring at any time the capital stock or the railroads and other property of the defendant Central Pacific Railway Company.

SECTION 17. If at any time after January 1, 1916, any of such certificates of interest shall remain outstanding, the court in its discretion, after a hearing upon such notice to holders of certificates of interest as it may direct, may order the shares of the Southern Pacific Company represented by said certificates to be sold and the proceeds distributed to the registered owner or owners of such certificate or certificates.

SECTION 18. The Trustee is hereby authorized to treat all funds on deposit hereunder as general deposits and to allow interest thereon.

Louis C. Krauthoff, Esquire, of New York City, is appointed commissioner for the court to see to it that the letter and spirit of this plan of dissolution is carried out and is directed to report to the court from time to time.

SECTION 19. The Trustee shall be subject to removal by the court in its discretion, and, in the event of such removal, the court shall appoint another Trustee.

1264 SECTION 20. Any party to this cause may make application to the court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or proper in relation to the carrying out of the provisions of this decree, or in relation to the disposition of the unlawfully held shares of the defendant Southern Pacific Company; and jurisdiction thereof is retained for the purpose of giving full effect to this decree and the decree herein entered on February 12, 1913, and for the purpose of making such other and further orders and decrees or taking such other action, if any, as may become necessary or appropriate to carry out and enforce said decrees and the directions of the Supreme Court.

1265 Form A.

No. ———. ——— shares.

Certificate of interets in Southern Pacific Company stock.

This is to certify that the undersigned (hereinafter designated as the "Trustee") has received and now holds for ——— or assigns certificates representing ——— shares of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company, a corporation of the State of Kentucky, of the par value of $100 each, subject to the terms of a decree entered the ——— day of June, 1913, by the District Court of the United States for the District of Utah, in the suit of the United States of America against Union Pacific Railroad Company and others, to which decree reference is hereby made for a statement of the terms and conditions upon which this certificate is issued and of the rights of the holder hereof, and to which decree the holder of this certificate assents by acceptance hereof.

This certificate is one of a series of certificates issued by the undersigned in accordance with the terms of the said decree, repre-1266 senting in the aggregate not exceeding ——— shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pacific Company.

The registered owner hereof, or his assigns, is entitled, upon the surrender of this certificate and upon filing with the Trustee an affidavit in the form required by section 11 of said decree (to the effect, in substance, that the applicant does not own any shares of the capital stock of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and is not acting for or on behalf of any stockholder of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or in concert, agreement, or understanding with any other person, firm, or corporation for the control of the Southern Pacific Company in the interest of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, but in his own behalf in good faith), to receive a stock certificate for the number of shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pacific Company represented by this certificate and to receive the amount of all dividends (but without interest thereon) appertaining to the number of shares represented by this certificate declared and payable by the Southern Pacific Company after the 2d day of January, 1913, and collected and received by the Trustee prior to such conversion, and also to receive a dividend order or assignment
1267 executed by the Trustee for any declared but unmatured dividend appertaining to said shares which shall be vested at the time of such conversion in the Trustee as the registered holder of said shares. All subscription or other rights offered by the Southern Pacific Company appertaining to the shares represented by this certificate will be assigned to the registered owner hereof, as provided in said decree.

This certificate is transferable by the registered owner hereof, in person or by his duly authorized attorney, at the office of the Trustee in the city of New York, upon surrender and cancellation hereof; and thereupon one or more new certificates for a like number of shares will be issued to the transferee in exchange therefor.

This certificate is not valid until countersigned by the registrar.

In witness whereof, , as Trustee, has caused this certificate to be executed by one of its vice presidents and its corporate seal to be hereunto affixed and to be attested by one of its assistant secretaries this day of , 191 .

No. ——— ——— shares

Subscription receipt for certificate of interest in Southern Pacific Company stock.

This is to certify that the undersigned (hereinafter designated as the "Trustee" has received payment of the first installment of twenty-five dollars ($25) per share of the subscription price ($ per share) of certificates of interest in shares of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company, of the par value of $100 per share, and that , or assigns, will be entitled to receive a fully paid certificate of interest for said shares, at the office of the undersigned in the city of New York, upon the surrender of this receipt and the payment of the balance of said subscription price, on or prior to the day of , 1914, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum to the date of payment.

For failure to pay the said deferred balance of the subscription price, with the interest thereon, on the day of , 1914, will operate as a forfeiture of all rights in respect of the 1270 subscription and the installment previously paid.

The undersigned has received and will hold, until default in the payment of the principal or interest of the deferred balance of the said subscription price, for the above-named subscriber, or assigns, stock certificates representing the number of shares above specified of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company, subject to the terms of a decree entered the day of June, 1913, by the District Court of the United States for the District of Utah, in the suit of the United States of America against Union Pacific Railroad Company and others, to which decree reference is hereby made for a statement of the terms and conditions upon which this subscription receipt is issued and of the rights of the holder hereof, and to which decree the holder hereof assents by acceptance hereof.

All dividends, appertaining to the number of shares above specified, declared and payable by the Southern Pacific Company after the second day of January, 1913, will be collected by the Trustee, and paid over (but without interest thereon) to the holder of a fully paid certificate of interest for said shares, upon the conversion of such certificate of interest into said shares of the capital stock of 1271 the Southern Pacific Company pursuant to the provisions of said decree.

This subscription receipt is transferable by the registered owner hereof, in person or by his duly authorized attorney, at the office of the Trustee in the city of New York or at its office or agency in London, England, upon surrender and cancellation hereof; and thereupon one or more new subscription receipts for a like number of shares will be issued to the transferee in exchange herefor.

The registered owner hereof is entitled, at any time not less than 10 days prior to the annual stockholders' meeting of the Southern Pacific Company held on the Wednesday following the first Monday of April in each year, and not less than 10 days prior to any special stockholders' meeting of said company, to require the Trustee to execute and deliver to such registered owner or his nominee a proxy appointing such attorneys, agents, and proxies as the registered owner hereof shall nominate in writing to appear and vote at such stockholders' meeting upon the number of shares represented by this subscription receipt for the election of directors and upon any other business transacted at such meeting: Provided, however, That 1272 such registered owner shall file with the Trustee, at its office in the city of New York, on or before the tenth day preceding such meeting, an affidavit in the form required by sections 9 and 11 of said decree (to the effect, in substance, that the registered owner hereof does not own any shares of the capital stock of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and is not acting for or on behalf of any stockholder of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or in concert, agreement, or understanding with any other person, firm, or corporation for the control of the Southern Pacific Company in the interest of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, but in his own behalf in good faith); and provided, further, that the applicant for such proxy shall at the close of business on the tenth day preceding said meeting be registered on the books of the Trustee as the owner of this subscription receipt.

This subscription receipt shall not be valid for any purpose unless signed on behalf of the Trustee by one of its officers or by its agents in London.

In witness whereof , as Trustee, has caused this certificate of interest to be executed in its behalf this day of , 1913.

1280 DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT NO. 50 (PART G), APRIL 16, 1915.

Appellant's brief of facts and appellant's brief of the law filed in the United States Supreme Court on behalf of the United States of America by George W. Wickersham, Attorney General, Frank B. Kellogg and C. A. Severance, special assistants to the Attorney General in "The United States of America vs. The Union Pacific Railroad Company et al."

Pursuant to stipulation at page 1929 of the testimony the briefs offered in evidence need not be copied among the exhibits in this case.

1281 DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT (NEILL) NO. 51, APRIL 16, 1915.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY,
Board of Directors, May 7, 1914.

The chairman submitted draft of letter over his signature as president, dated New York, May 7, 1914, and addressed to the stockholders of this company, explanatory of the steps proposed to be taken in connection with handling the company's business after July 1, 1914, as outlined in the foregoing resolution; and he stated he proposed, with the approval of this board, to forward a copy of this letter to each stockholder of the company;

Whereupon, on motion duly seconded, it was

Resolved, That the proposed action of the chairman to forward a copy of such letter to each stockholder of the company, and the form of such letter submitted as above are hereby approved.

I, Hugh Neill, secretary of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true copy 1282 of a preamble and resolution duly adopted by the board of directors of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at a special meeting of said board held at the principal office of the company in the city and State of New York on the 7th day of May, 1914, at which a quorum was present; and that the said preamble and resolution are now in full force and effect. And I do further certify that annexed hereto, marked "Exhibit A", is a true copy of that certain letter, dated New York, N. Y., May 7, 1914, signed J. Kruttschnitt, president, and addressed to the stockholders of this company, in the foregoing resolution referred to; that annexed hereto, marked "Exhibit B", is a true copy of the notice of annual meeting of stockholders of Pacific Mail Steamship Company held May 27, 1914; that annexed hereto, marked "Exhibit C", is a true copy of the printed form of proxy used at the annual meeting of stockholders of this company held May 27, 1914; and that I caused a copy of each of the above-described documents, hereinabove referred to as "Exhibits A,

B, and C", respectively, to be mailed in a sealed wrapper, by United States mail, postage prepaid, addressed to each stockholder of record of this company, at his address as the same appeared on the books of the corporation.

In witness whereof I have hereunto subscribed by name 1283 and affixed the seal of said company this 5th day of April, 1915.

[SEAL.] HUGH NEILL,
Secretary.

"EXHIBIT A."

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY,
EXECUTIVE OFFICES, 165 BROADWAY,
New York, N. Y., May 7, 1914.

To the stockholders of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company:

The opening of the Panama Canal in the near future will practically put an end to that part of the business in which this company is now engaged, which consists of through traffic between San Francisco and Atlantic coast and Gulf ports of the United States and European ports, which traffic is now carried by the company's steamers between San Francisco and Balboa in connection with the Panama Railroad between Balboa and Colon and Atlantic Ocean steamship lines. Upon the opening of the canal such traffic will move in one bottom and without transhipment from port of origin to port of destination. By reason of the expense of transhipment, as 1284 well as the breakage of cargo through rehandling and the incidental loss, it will be impossible for this company to retain any of such competitive business.

Entirely apart from the prohibitions of the act of Congress, known as the Panama Canal act, it would be impracticable and unprofitable for this company to try to compete for this business by sending through the canal the small combination freight and passenger steamers it now operates in the Panama service, since they would be in competition with the high-capacity vessels of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Company, of the Grace Line, and of the Luckenbach Line, all of the most modern design, with efficient cargo handling facilities, and all operated with small and economical crews possible where freight alone is carried and passengers are excluded. Moreover, the company possesses the requisite number only of steamers with limited capacity to accommodate the coastwise business between San Francisco and west coast ports. It has not a sufficient number of these small steamers to maintain service between Balboa and Atlantic coast ports, and possible relief by transfer of its large modern ships is out of the question because it owns a number barely sufficient to equip its trans-Pacific lines.

Mr. Schwerin, the general manager of this company, in reporting the above facts, has recommended that the company cease engaging in the business between the San Francisco and Atlantic ports via the Isthmus of Panama, above refered to, and confine the operation of its steamships (heretofore in Panama service) to handling freight and passenger traffic between San Francisco and ports in Mexico and Central America, and, by transhipment at Balboa, to South American ports, and vice versa; between said Mexican and Central American ports and Europe and Atlantic coast and Gulf ports said traffic with Europe and Atlantic and Gulf ports to be handled to or from Balboa and transhipped to vessels operating through the canal; and from San Francisco, Mexican, and Central American ports to ports of the West Indies and the northeast coast of South America, and vice versa.

The directors approve of these recommendations, but desire that the matter be passed upon by the stockholders at their approaching annual meeting. Accordingly, the board, at its meeting to-day, May 7, 1914, passed resolutions submitting the question to the stockholders. A copy of these resolutions is attached.

It is believed that the foregoing statement, in connection with the recitals of the resolutions, will fully explain the situation.

Yours, truly,

J. KRUTTSCHNITT, President.

Pacific Mail Steamship Company stockholders' meeting.

NEW YORK, May 27, 1914.

The sixty-seventh annual meeting of stockholders of the Pac Mail Steamship Company was held at the office of the company,

Broadway, New York City, on Wednesday, May 27, 1914, at 11.45 o'clock a. m., pursuant to notice made and given in conformity with law and the by-laws of the company.

On motion duly made and seconded, Mr. Gordon M. Buck was nominated as chairman of the meeting and, having received a unanimous vote, was declared duly elected, and thereupon took the chair.

On motion duly seconded Mr. Hugh Neill was appointed secretary of the meeting.

The secretary submitted proofs of publication of the notice of the annual meeting, showing that the said notice had been published for the time and in the manner prescribed by the by-laws of the company.

1290 Oath of inspectors.—The oath of office of the inspectors of the meeting was then read by the secretary and ordered on file.

List of stockholders.—The secretary also submitted a certified alphabetical list of stockholders of the company registered as such at the close of business on May 23, 1914, and, upon call of said list, it was found that there were present at the meeting, in person or by proxy, stockholders owning shares as follows:

1. By proxies in favor of J. Kruttschnitt, G. M. Buck, and R. P. Schwerin, represented by G. M. Buck	135,235 shares.
2. By proxy in favor of Claude A. Simpler	1,100 shares.
3. Owen F. Roberts, in person	5,200 shares.
4. Martin A. Springsteed, in person	40 shares.
Total	141,575 shares.

Of the aggregate par value of $14,157,500 and more than one-half of the capital stock of the company.

Approval of minutes of board of directors.—The minutes of all the meetings of the board of directors since May 28, 1913, were 1291 read, and, on motion, duly seconded, it was, by a majority vote,

Resolved, That all action of the board of directors and officers of the company since the 28th day of May, 1913, as set forth or mentioned in the record of the minutes of meetings of the board of directors of the company, is hereby ratified, approved, and confirmed.

Mr. Simpler, representing 1,100 shares, and Mr. Springsteed, owning 40 shares of stock, desired to be recorded as voting against approval of the resolution adopted by the board of directors at its meeting held May 7, 1914, relating to change in the conduct of the company's business proposed to be made July 1, 1914.

Approval of minutes of executive committee.—The minutes of the meetings of the executive committee, held since May 28, 1913, were submitted, and, on motion, duly seconded, it was unanimously

Resolved, That all action of the executive committee and officers of the company since the 28th day of May, 1913, as set forth or mentioned in the record of the minutes of the executive committee this company, is hereby ratified, approved, and confirmed.

1292 Opening of the polls.—At 12 o'clock, noon, the chairm declared the polls open for the purpose of receiving the vot of the stockholders for the election of directors for the ensuing ye

At this point Mrs. Lizzie L. Poirier, a holder of 15 shares of stoc and Mr. George Reuter, a holder of 150 shares of stock came into th meeting.

The following resolution was offered by Mr. Owen F. Roberts:

Resolved, That the by-laws be amended so as to postpone the d fixed for the annual meeting of the stockholders, in order that in th future the annual report of the company may be prepared in time f the annual meeting of stockholders and be submitted at such ann meeting; and that the general manager of the company be pres at the annual meeting.

Having failed to receive a second, this motion was not put to vote.

The preambles and resolutions adopted at a special meeting of th board of directors of this company, held at its office, 165 Broadw
New York, on May 7th, 1914, were submitted to the meeting and re aloud by the secretary.

On motion, duly made and seconded, the following pr
1293 ambles and resolution were by majority vote adopted:

Whereas, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company is now ope ating steamers which are engaged in freight and passenger traffic follows:

(1) Between San Francisco and Hawaiian Islands, Philippi Islands, China, and Japan.

(2) Between San Francisco and ports on the west coast of Mexi and Central America, and also west coast of South America by inte change with other vessels at Balboa.

(3) Between west coast ports of Mexico and Central America an
New York, New Orleans, and European ports, by through route co sisting of its own steamers between San Francisco and Balboa, th Panama Railroad and Atlantic Ocean steamship service.

(4) Between San Francisco, west coast ports of Mexico and Ce tral America and ports of the West India Islands and the northe coast of South America, by a through route consisting of its ow steamers on the Pacific Coast, the Panama Railroad and Atlan Ocean steamship service.

(5) Between San Francisco and New York, New Orleans, an European ports by through route consisting of its own steame between San Francisco and Balboa, the Panama Railroad an 1294 Atlantic Ocean steamship service.

Whereas Mr. R. P. Schwerin, the vice president and general manger of this company, has reported to the board of directors that respective of the prohibitions of the Panama Canal act it will t be practicable or feasible for this company, after the opening f the Panama Canal, to continue in the class of traffic embraced section (5) above, because with a transhipment at Balboa it n not secure such traffic in competition with ships operating rough the Panama Canal between San Francisco and Atlantic d European ports, and because the ships of this company now emoyed in such trade are unsuitable and inadequate for service rough the canal; and has recommended that the company conue to engage in all of the traffic above specified except that emaced in section (5).

Whereas the board of directors by preambles and resolution, dopted at a special meeting held May the 7th, 1914, and submitted this meeting, has referred to the stockholders the aforesaid recomendations of Mr. Schwerin;

Resolved, That the above referred to recommendations of Mr. Schwerin be approved, and the board of directors be and they 95 are hereby authorized to withdraw from the traffic described in clause (5) of the above preambles and to continue in the affic embraced in sections (1), (2), (3), and (4), or so much ereof in which in the judgment of the board this company should ntinue to engage, such change to be made on or before July the t, 1914, or at such other time or times as the board of directors ay determine.

Mr. Simpler, representing 1,100 shares, Mr. Springsteed, repreenting 40 shares, and Mr. Owen F. Roberts, representing 5,200 ares of stock, desired to be recorded as voting against the adoption the foregoing resolution. Mr. George Reuter desired to be reorded as not voting. All other shares represented at the meeting ere voted in favor of the resolution.

Closing of the polls.—At 2 o'clock p. m. the shareholders having d full opportunity to cast their ballots, the chairman declared e polls closed. Mr. George Reuter, representing 150 shares of ock, requested to be recorded as not voting in the election for rectors.

Thereupon the inspectors submitted their report as follows:

96 "Pacific Mail Steamship Company. Certificate of inspectors of election of directors.

00 I, Hugh Neill, secretary of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true opy of the minutes of the annual meeting of its stockholders held on e 27th day of May, 1914; and that annexed hereto is a copy of that rtain resolution adopted at a special meeting of the board of direcrs of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company held May 7th, 1914, to hich reference is made in the preamble and resolution appearing on age 4 of the foregoing minutes of the annual meeting of stockholders ove referred to. And I do further certify that at the above-menoned annual meeting of stockholders, held on the 27th day of May, 914, the Southern Pacific Company was present by proxy covering 0,755 shares of this company, owned by said Southern Pacific Comany, and that such shares were duly voted by proxy and participated said annual meeting.

In witness whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed e seal of said company this 5th day of April, 1915.

[SEAL.] HUGH NEILL, Secretary.

1301 Pacific Mail Steamship Company. Resolution adopted by board of directors May 7, 1914.

Whereas the Pacific Mail Steamship Company is now operating steamers which are engaged in freight and passenger traffic as follows:

(1) Between San Francisco and Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, China, and Japan.

(2) Between San Francisco and ports on the west coast of Mexico and Central America, and also west coast of South America by interchange with other vessels at Balboa.

(3) Between west coast ports of Mexico and Central America and New York, New Orleans, and European ports, by through route consisting of its own steamers between San Francisco and Balboa, the Panama Railroad, and Atlantic Ocean steamship service.

(4) Between San Francisco, west coast ports of Mexican and Central America, and ports of the West India Islands and the northeast coast of South America, by a through route consisting of its own steamers on the Pacific coast, the Panama Railroad, and Atlantic Ocean steamship service.

1302 (5) Between San Francisco and New York, New Orleans and European ports, by through route consisting of its own steamers between San Francisco and Balboa, the Panama Railroad and Atlantic Ocean steamship service.

Whereas Mr. R. P. Schwerin, the vice president and general manager of the company, has reported to this board that, irrespective of the prohibitions of the Panama Canal act, it will not be practicable or feasible for this company, after the opening of the Panama Canal to continue in the class of traffic embraced in section (5) above, because with a transhipment at Balboa it can not secure such traffic in competition with ships operating through the Panama Canal between San Francisco and Atlantic and European ports, and because the ships of this company now employed in such trade are unsuitable and inadequate for service through the canal.

Whereas Mr. Schwerin has recommended that the company continue to engage in all of the traffic above specified except that embraced in section (5).

Whereas this board approves Mr. Schwerin's recommendation but believes that the suggested change in the business of the company should be approved or authorized by the stockholders.

1303 Resolved, That this board refer to the stockholders at the next meeting the matter of withdrawing from the traffic described in section (5) above, and continuing in the traffic embraced in sections (1), (2), (3), and (4), or so much thereof in which, in the judgment of the board, it should continue to engage, and that such change shall be made on or before July 1, 1914, or at such other time as the board of directors may determine.

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true copy of preambles and resolution unanimously adopted at a special meeting of the board of directors of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, duly convened and held at the office of said Pacific Mail Steamship Company, 165 Broadway, New York, N. Y., on the 7th day of May, 1914, at 11.30 o'clock a. m., eastern time.

In witness whereof I have hereunto signed my name and affixed the seal of said company this 7th day of May, 1914.

1304 DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT NO. 52, APRIL 16, 1915.

Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington.

I, George B. McGinty, secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, do hereby certify that the attached is true copy of application of Southern Pacific Company, under the provisions of section 5 of the act to regulate commerce as amended by section 11 of "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, in connection with the operation of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, filed February 18, 1914, under docket No. 6605, the original of which is now on file and of record in the office of this Commission.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed by name and affixed the seal of the commission this 5th day of April, 1915.

GEORGE B. MCGINTY,
Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

1305 Before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Application of Southern Pacific Company under the provisions of section 5 of the act to regulate commerce as amended by section 11 of "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, in connection with the operation of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Comes now Southern Pacific Company, hereinafter called the petitioner, and respectfully shows:

1. The petitioner is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Kentucky. The petitioner owns, controls, and operates either directly, as lessee, or through stock ownership, lines of railroad within the States of California, Oregon, Uta Nevada, Arizona, and New Mexico, extending from Portland in th

State of Oregon, to Sacramento, in the State of California, fro Ogden, in the State of Utah, through Sacramento to San Francis in the State of California, and from San Francisco, in the State California, to a point in the State of New Mexico on the R 1306 Grande River near El Paso, in the State of Texas, wi branches thereof reaching numerous points in said Stat Said lines of railroad hereinbefore described connect at or near Paso with the line of railroad of The Galveston, Harrisburg & S Antonio Railway Company, which owns and operates a line of ra road extending from said point to Galveston and Houston, in t State of Texas. At said city of Houston, in the State of Texas, t railroad of The Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway Co pany connects with a line of railroad owned and operated by t Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company, which owns and operat a line of railroad extending from said city of Houston to the Sabi River, at which point said last-named line of railroad connects wi a line of railroad owned and operated by the Louisiana West Railroad Company extending from the Sabine River to Lafayet in the State of Louisiana, at which point the line of railroad of t last named company connects with a line of railroad owned a operated by the Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamsh Company, extending from Lafayette, in the State of Louisiana, New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana. Each of said lines of ra road has numerous branches extending to numerous points wit
the States of Louisiana and Texas.

1307 Substantially all of the capital stock of each of the railro companies hereinbefore described as owning and operati lines of railroad east of El Paso in the State of Texas is owned by in the interest of the petitioner. The petitioner is also the owner substantially all of the capital stock of the Houston East & We Texas Railway Company, the Houston & Shreveport Railroad Co
pany, and the Houston & Texas Central Railroad Company, wh through connections with each other or with one or more of the li of railroad hereinbefore described form continuous lines for t transportation of persons and property to numerous points wit the States of Texas and Louisiana. All of the lines of railroad he inbefore described are engaged in the interstate transportation persons and property and constitute a single system of railroads co monly known as the Southern Pacific System.

The petitioner is also the owner of all of the outstanding capi stock of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of Mexico, a corp ration organized and existing under the laws of the State of N Jersey, which owns and operates a line of railroad extending fr at or near Nogales, in the State of Arizona, at which point it connects with the railroad of the petitioner to various points in the Republic of Mexico.

1308 2. The petitioner also owns 110,800 shares of the par value of $11,080,000 out of a total of 200,000 shares of the par value of $20,000,000 of the capital stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, hereinafter called the Steamship Company. The Steamship Company owns and operates steamships plying between San Francisco, in the State of California, Hawaii, and the Orient, and between San Francisco and Balboa on the western coast of the Isthmus of Panama and intermediate ports in the Republic of Mexico and in Central America. The vessels engaged in the latter service are not suitable for transoceanic service.

3. Traffic between Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States and between Pacific ports of the United States and Europe in which the Steamship Company engages is now handled across the Isthmus of Panama by rail, and thence by water carriers in which neither the petitioner nor the Steamship Company has any direct or indirect interest. Upon the opening of the Panama Canal it will be impracticable and infeasible to continue the present service described in this paragraph 3 of this petition, or to handle traffic between the Pacific ports of the United States and the Atlantic or 1309 Gulf coast or Europe by shipment to or from Balboa, there to be transhipped to or from other vessels in competition with through service. As a result of the opening of the Canal the Steamship Company will be unable to engage in traffic between said ports.

4. From and after July 1, 1914, the steamship company will engage (in addition to its Hawaiian-Asiatic traffic hereinbefore described) in traffic between San Francisco and the ports of San Blas, Manzanillo, Acapulco, and Salina Cruz, in the Republic of Mexico; Ocos, Champerico, and San Jose de Guatemala, in the Republic of Guatemala; Acajutla, La Libertad, and La Union, in the Republic of Salvador; Amapala, in the Republic of Honduras; Corinto and San Juan del Sur, in the Republic of Nicaragua, and Punta Arenas, in the Republic of Costa Rica, between said ports above named, between said Mexican and Central American ports and Europe, and between said Mexican and Central American ports and Atlantic and Gulf ports of the United States, which said traffic with Europe and with the Atlantic and Gulf ports will be handled by the steamship company to or from Balboa and transhipped in connection with the vessels of other lines in no way connected with the petitioner.

1310 It will also engage in traffic between the port of Mazatlan, Mexico, and other Mexican and Central American ports above named and between Mazatlan and Atlantic and Gulf ports of the United States.

The location of the ports named herein is shown by the map attached hereto and made a part hereof marked "Exhibit A."

None of the Mexican and Central American ports above named, except Mazatlan, a point on the Southern Pacific Railroad of Mexico, are reached by any railroad company owned, leased, operated, or controlled by the petitioner or in which the petitioner has any interest whatsoever by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly or indirectly, through any holding company or by stockholders or directors in common or in any other manner. The steamhip company and the petitioner do not and could not compete in any manner whatsoever for any of the traffic described in this paragraph; and petitioner alleges that its lines of railroad and the water line and service described herein are not competitive within the meaning of section 11 of "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912;
1311 and that the said water service is being and will be operated in the interest of the public and is and will be of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that its continuance will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition.

5. From and after July 1, 1914, the steamship company will also engage in traffic between San Francisco and Mazatlan, in the Republic of Mexico. The petitioner alleges that the situation in connection with the handling of said traffic is such as to admit of possible competition between the rail lines of the petitioner and the steamship company; that the steamship company and the railroad lines of the petitioner do not and may not compete for said traffic within the meaning of said act of Congress of August 24, 1912; and that the said water service between said points is being and will be operated in the interest of the public and is and will be of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that its continuance will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition.

6. From and after July 1, 1914, the petitioner will also engage in the handling of local traffic between San Francisco and Balboa, but as alleged in paragraph 3 hereof, will be unable to engage in 1312 traffic between San Francisco and Balboa for transhipment to or from Atlantic or Gulf ports of the United States or to or from Europe. Petitioner states that said local traffic between San Francisco and Balboa is traffic for which the steamship company and the railroad lines of the petitioner do not and may not compete, and that the water service of the steamship company between said points is being and will be operated in the interest of the public and is and will be of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people and that its continuance will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition.

7. The petitioner is advised and believes that the continuance of the existing service hereinbefore set forth as that in which the steamship company will engage from and after July 1, 1914, will not cause the petitioner's ownership of stock in the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to be in violation of said act of Congress of August 24, 1912, but as said act contemplates that application shall be made to this commission not only for permission to continue a service in violation of the statute but likewise for the purpose of determining whether an existing or contemplated situation is or will be in violation thereof, the petitioner in order to avoid any suspicion of 1313 wrongdoing or violation of the said act files this its application with this honorable commission.

Wherefore petitioner prays that a full hearing may be had as provided by section 11 of the act of Congress of August 24, 1912, and that the commission shall make an order or finding with respect to the meaning or interpretation of said act as applied to the facts hereinbefore set forth and for such relief as it may be entitled to receive.

1314 Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington.

I, George B. McGinty, secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, do hereby certify that the attached is a true copy of amendment filed May 21, 1914, to application of Southern Pacific Company, under the provisions of section 5 of the act to regulate commerce as amended by section 11 of "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, in connection with the operation of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, docket No. 6605, the original of which is now on file and of record in the office of this commission.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed the seal of the commission this 5th day of April, 1915.

GEORGE B. MCGINTY,
Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

1315 Before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In re application of Southern Pacific Company under the provisio of section 5 of the act to regulate commerce as amended by sectio 11 of "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protectio and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and go ernment of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, in conne tion with the operation of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Amendment of application of Southern Pacific Company.

Now comes Southern Pacific Company (hereinafter called t petitioner) and files this amendment to its application heretofo filed herein, and respectfully shows:

As set forth in the original application filed herein, the Paci Mail Steamship Company (hereinafter called the steamship co pany) is engaged in the transportation of passengers and prope between Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States a 1316 between Pacific ports of the United States and Europe, whi traffic is now handled across the Isthmus of Panama by rail a to or from the Isthmus by water carriers on the Atlantic side there in which neither the petitioner nor the steamship company has a direct or indirect interest; and, as therein set forth, upon the openi of the Panama Canal it will be impracticable and infeasible to c tinue said service involving transhipment in competition w through service. Petitioner is informed that the said canal w probably not be open for through service until after July 1, 19 after which date it is stated in the original application herein t the steamship company will be unable to engage in said traffic. It h been represented by the commercial and shipping interests of the P cific coast that it would be unfortunate from the standpoint of shipper if the steamship company should discontinue participatio said traffic until the canal is open for through traffic, and that wi out the steamers of the steamship company there would probab not be sufficient steamers to handle this traffic. In view of s representations the steamship company is willing and proposes continue in said traffic, both passenger and freight, until th shall be substituted therefor a satisfactory and equival 1317 through service.

Petitioner also states that in addition to the traffic forth in the original application filed herein, the steamship comp engages in traffic between San Francisco and Mexican and Cen American ports and ports of the West India Islands and the no east coast of South America. Petitioner states that the water service herein described is being and will be operated in the interest of the public, and is and will be of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that its continuance will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition.

Wherefore petitioner prays that a full hearing may be had as provided by section 11 of the act of Congress of August 24, 1912, upon the matters herein set forth, as well as upon those set forth in the original application filed herein; and that the commission shall make an order or finding with respect to the meaning or interpretation of said act as applied to the facts hereinbefore set forth; and if continuance in said traffic or any part thereof shall be found to be in violation of the strict letter of said act, that the commission may make an order granting permission for continuance of the service herein described.

Application of Southern Pacific Company to amend its applicati under the provisions of section 5 of the act to regulate commer as amended by section 11 of "an act to provide for the openi maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal a the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approv
August 24, 1912, in connection with the operation of the Pacif Mail Steamship Company.

Now comes Southern Pacific Company and states that at the ti of the filing of its application herein it was advised that transhi ment of traffic between Mexican and Central American ports a Europe and between Mexican and Central American ports and A lantic and Gulf ports of the United States, as described in paragra 4 thereof, could be effected by transfer by railroad across the Isthm of Panama from Balboa to Colon; that it has since been advised th the Panama Railroad will not handle commercial shipments a that transfer must be made directly from vessel to vessel at one e of the canal; and that it is also advised that such transhi-1321 ment from vessel to vessel cannot be made in all instances Balboa at the western end of the canal, and that it therefo may be necessary at times to make transfer of such traffic betwe Mexican and Central American ports and Europe or Atlantic a Gulf ports of the United States at Colon as well as at Balboa.

In order, therefore, that said petition may conform to the chan in conditions, petitioner prays leave to amend the same by insertin after the word "Balboa" in the sixteenth line of the fourth para graph thereof the words "or Colon."

In re Application of Southern Pacific Company to amend its application under the provisions of section 5 of the act to regulate commerce as amended by section 11 of "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, in connection with the operation of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Amendment to amended application.

Now comes Southern Pacific Company and amends its amended application herein by striking out, after the word "Balboa," in the 10th line of the fourth paragraph thereof, the words "or Colon," which said words, "or Colon," were inserted by an amendment to the original application herein, dated New York, December 3, 1914, and transmitted to this honorable commission on December 5, 1914, so that the fourth paragraph of the application herein, as now amended, will be restored to its original condition, and will read as follows:

1934 "4. From and after July 1, 1914, the steamship company will engage (in addition to its Hawaiian-Asiatic traffic hereinbefore described) in traffic between San Francisco and the ports of San Blas, Mazanillo, Acapulco, and Salina Cruz, in the Republic of Mexico; Ocos, Champerico, and San Jose de Guatemala, in the Republic of Guatemala; Acajutla, La Libertad, and La Union, in the Republic of Salvador; Amapala, in the Republic of Honduras; Corinto and San Juan del Sur, in the Republic of Nicaragua; and Punta Arenas, in the Republic of Costa Rica, between said ports above named, between said Mexican and Central American ports and Europe, and between said Mexican and Central American ports and Atlantic and Gulf ports of the United States, which said traffic with

Europe and with the Atlantic and Gulf ports will be handled by the steamship company to or from Balboa and transhipped in connection with the vessels of other lines in no way connected with the petitioner. It will also engage in traffic between the port of Mazatlan, Mexico, and other Mexican and Central American ports above named and between Mazatlan and Atlantic and Gulf ports of the United States.

"The location of the ports named herein is shown by the map attached hereto and made a part hereof, marked 'Exhibit A'

1325 "None of the Mexican and Central American ports above named, except Mazatlan, a point on the Southern Pacific Railroad of Mexico, are reached by any railroad company owned, leased, operated, or controlled by the petitioner or in which the petitioner has any interest whatsoever by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly or indirectly, through any holding company or by stockholders or directors in common or in any other manner. The steamship company and the petitioner do not and could not compete in any manner whatsoever for any of the traffic described in this paragraph; and petitioner alleges that its lines of railroad and the water line and service described herein are not competitive within the meaning of section 11 of 'An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone,' approved August 24, 1912; and that the said water service is being and will be operated in the interest of the public and is and will be of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that its continuance will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition."

1327 DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT (GRIGGS) NO. 53, APRIL 20, 1915.

Report of the Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., November 30, 1899.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

* * * * * * *

Pacific Railroad matters.—The deficiency appropriation act of July 7, 1898 appointed the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General a commission, with full power to settle the indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific bond-aided railroads, upon such terms and in such manner as might be agreed upon by them, or by a majority of them, and the owners of said railroads, subject to the approval of the President.

1328 An agreement for the settlement of this indebtedness was entered into between the said commissioners with the railroad companies on February 1, 1899. At that date the amount due the United States for principal and interest upon its subsidy liens upon the Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroads was $58,-112,715.48, more than one-half of which was accrued interest upon the principal debt. The agreement of settlement provided for the funding of this amount into 20 promissory notes bearing date February 1, 1899, payable, respectively, on or before the expiration of each successive six months for ten years, each note being for the sum of $2,940,635.78, or one-twentieth of the total amount due. The notes bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and have a condition attached to the effect that if default be made, either in the payment of principal or interest of either of said notes or in any part thereof, then all of the said notes outstanding, principal and interest, shall immediately become due and payable notwithstanding any other stipulation of the agreement of settlement.

It was further agreed that the payment of the principal and 1329 interest of the notes shall be secured by the deposit with the United States Treasury of $58,820,000 of face value of first refunding mortgage 4 per cent gold bonds, to be thereafter issued by the Central Pacific or its successor having charge of the railroads then owned by said company, such bonds to be part of an issue of not exceeding $100,000,000 in all, and to be secured by mortgage upon all railroads, equipments, and terminals owned by said Central Pacific Railroad Company, such mortgage to be a first lien upon such property or to be secured by the deposit as collateral of certain percentages of the outstanding bonds upon such property or on the different divisional parts thereof.

The notes provided for by this agreement were duly executed and delivered to the Treasurer of the United States in conformity with the terms of the agreement. In pursuance of another provision of the agreement the four earliest maturing notes were purchased by Speyer & Co. March 10, 1899, and the proceeds, amounting to $11,762,543.12 and accrued interest to the date of payment $35,771.02, in all $11,798,314.14, were received and covered into the Treasury March 27, 1899, as part payment of the indebtedness of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroad Companies. The properties of the various companies comprising the Central Pacific system were subsequently conveyed to a new corporation called the Central Pacific Railway Company, which latter company executed the mortgage and bonds provided for by the agreement of settlement. On October 7, 1899, bonds were delivered to the Treasury Department by the Pacific Railway Company to secure the outstanding notes held by the Treasury in conformity to the terms of the agreement of settlement. The United States therefore holds the notes of the Central Pacific Railroad Company guaranteed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to the amount of $47,050,172.80, bearing interest payable semiannually at the rate of 3 per cent per annum and secured by the deposit of an equal amount of first mortgage bonds of the Pacific Railway Company, thus providing beyond doubt or peradventure for the sure and gradual payment of the whole of this subsidy debt, and providing in the meantime for the payment of interest at the rate of 3 per cent upon the unpaid balances.

In my report for the year 1898 I advised the Congress that the whole amount of principal and interest due on the Union Pacific subsidy had been realized and paid into the Federal Treasury, and that of the amount due upon the Kansas Pacific subsidy the whole amount of the principal, namely, $6,303,000 had been paid in, leaving due to the Government only the accrued interest on the Kansas Pacific, amounting to about $6,500,000. I further reported that I had caused to be filed a claim on behalf of the United States on account of this deficiency against certain funds remaining in the hands of the receivers of the Union Pacific Railway Company, which claims, along with many others aggregating a large sum, were subject to investigation and subsequent adjudication. The matter has since been brought to a conclusion, with the very satisfactory result that the United States procured a decree directing the receivers to pay on account of its deficiency debt out of the moneys in their hands as pro rata dividend upon its deficiency claim the sum of $821,897.70, which sum has recently been paid into the Treasury of the United States and is to be credited against the deficiency above mentioned.

The proceedings referred to in my last report pending against the American Loan and Trust Company of Boston as trustee for the purpose of securing on account of the Government's deficiency claim certain moneys in the hands of such trustee which represent the proceeds of securities mortgaged for the benefit and further security of first-mortgage bonds of the Kansas Pacific Railway, and for the benefit, protection, and further security of the United States in respect to their subsidy bonds and interest thereon, have not yet been brought to a conclusion, but are being pressed with all due diligence, and before long I hope to be able to report the collection of a very substantial sum from this source in further reduction of the deficiency due the Government on this account.

The amounts paid or secured to be paid to the United States on account of Pacific Railroad subsidy claims since November 1, 1897, will appear from the following table:

Union Pacific, cash	$58,448,223.75
Kansas Pacific, cash	6,303,000.00
Central and Western Pacific—
Cash	11,798,314.14
Notes	47,050,172.36
Kansas Pacific, dividend on deficiency due United States, cash	821,897.70
Total	124,421,607.95

So that it appears that out of an indebtedness of about $130,000,000, more than one-half of which consists of accrued interest, the Government has realized in cash or its equivalent the sum of $124,421,670.95 within a period of less than two years.

Taking into account the enormous material benefits that have accrued to the country from the construction of these transcontinental lines of communication and the advantage which the Government has had by way of reduced rates of transportation and service over them, the participation of the Government in the construction and maintenance of these enterprises has been fully justified and the faith of the original promoters and projectors of these great lines has been proven to have had a substantial basis.

Central Pacific R. R.—Settlement—Official announcement—Re
justment plan.—Messrs. Speyer & Co. make the following announ ment: "The agreement of settlement of the Central Pacific R. R. has been executed by the railroad company and by the Governm commission, and approved by the President. The agreement p vides for the payment in full of the debt of the railroad compa principal and interest, amounting to about $59,000,000, in twe equal half-yearly installments, running with 3 per cent interest, first one to mature August 1, 1899. The twenty notes given by railroad company to correspond with these installments are to secured by an equal amount of first refunding bonds, which are to created under the readjustment plan shortly to be promulgated h and in Europe. The readjustment of the financial affairs of the r road company is to be in charge of Messrs. Speyer & Co., New Yo Messrs. Speyer Brothers, London; Laz Speyer Ellisen, Fra 1385 fort-on-the-Main; Messrs. Teixeira de Mattos Brothers, A sterdam, and the Deutsche Bank of Berlin."

The sum due as of Feb. 1 was $58,812,714, composed of the follo ing items:

Central Pacific debt February 1, $25,885,120 principal and $ 604,385 interest, less $9,100,452 of judgments, bonds, and sinki fund, leaving net liabililty $53,389,052. The amount due by Western Pacific on the same date was $5,423,662, making the to sum due by the two roads $58,812,714.

The agreement will obviate the necessity of foreclosure.

The act under which the settlement is made was passed by Congr last July, and was given in full in our issue of July 2, page 27. T act appoints the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the In rior, and the Attorney General a commission with full power to se the indebtedness, provided that any and all settlements shall be s mitted in writing to the President for his approval or disappro and unless approved by him shall not be binding. (V. 67, pp. 11

1386 [2—Extract from the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, February 1899, volume 68, pages 352 to 354.]

The Central Pacific reorganization plan.

The plan just submitted for the reorganization of the Cen Pacific property seems thorough and complete. It accompli three distinct objects, each important in itself and essential to sound and comprehensive scheme for establishing the property firmly in public estimation and confidence. In the first place, it secures that prime prerequisite, the adjustment and settlement of the indebtedness owing to the United States. In the second place, it accomplishes that other and hardly less desirable object, the placing of the relations between the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific on a definite and assured basis, removing cause for future misunderstanding and controversy. In the third place, it provides for the complete refunding at a lower rate of interest of all the bonded indebtedness of the Central Pacific, while at the same time furnishing needed cash for present and future capital wants.

1387 As far as the settlement with the United States is concerned, the country certainly has no reason to complain. The Government gets the full amount of its claim, both principal and interest, namely $58,812,715. Such favorable terms for it were considered as hardly within the range of probabilities, or even possibilities, only a short time ago. By this we mean that few thought the company could safely undertake to carry a burden of obligations such a settlement on such a basis involved. No doubt, if the claim had been held by a private creditor it could not have been collected in full. A spirit of equity and fairness would have required part abatement of the claim. In the case of the United States as a public creditor, the occasion for leniency and concession was tenfold greater. The country as a whole, and the Government in particular, has derived incalculable advantages and blessings from the building of the road as part of the first route across the continent. Besides this, the United States is strong and prosperous, and would have suffered no hardship or inconvenience if it had agreed to forego a portion of its large claim. But Congress was unyielding. Its action was controlled by those antagonistic to the road. These people succeeded in having a 1388 law passed forbidding a settlement involving compromise or concession. The full pound of flesh was demanded—nothing less. This was the situation confronting the security holders and those administering the property. The company was practically without alternative but to accept them, merciless and unfair though they certainly were and onerous as they seemed likely to prove. And quick action, too, was called for, since this law declares that a settlement, even on these harsh terms, must be effected within twelve months from the date of the passage of the act (that is, July 7, 1888), otherwise the President was directed to begin foreclosure proceedings under the Government lien. This latter would have meant the wiping out of the junior equities. Nothing remained but to try to avert this unfortunate contingency, and a method has now been devised for meeting the requirements of the law, while placing th prospects for the security holders on a very encouraging basis.

Several fortuitous circumstances have opportunely come in t facilitate the operation, and to this must be ascribed the fact th a task which but a short while back seemed impossible is now bein confidently undertaken by a very shrewd and able syndicate o 1389 financiers. Traffic and revenues have very considerably in creased during the last eighteen months, so there is a muc larger basis of earnings to start with. Then the outlook for indu trial interests is now altogether assuring, where previously it ha been clouded by many uncertainties. Furthermore, the rate of in terest in this country has been steadily declining, so that money ca be borrowed on lower and more advantageous terms than a sho time back. Of the two new issues of bonds provided under the re organization, one bears only 4 per cent interest, the other but 3 per cent. The old bonds carried 5 to 6 per cent interest. Th the saving to be effected in annual charges in this way is importan
Then it must also be remembered that the Central Pacific has hel large corporate sinking funds, and the assets in these funds cou as an important offset to the increased obligations incurred in th settlement of the Government claim. A statement in the reorganiz tion plan shows that the securities in these sinking funds, and whic are to be deposited as part security for the new 3½ per cents, aggr gate $12,553,000 and yield a present annual income of $689,680.

The reorganization scheme is in many respects a clever an 1390 ingenious contrivance. The payments to the Government a arranged in exact accordance with the new law. And here little study will show that our lawmakers, in their desire to be seve and give no quarter, have overreached themselves. The law pr vides that in any settlement in the "final payment" and "full di charge" of the indebtedness "shall not be postponed to exceed t years, and the whole amount, principal and interest, shall be pa in equal semiannual installments within the period so limited." I compliance with these provisions, the agreement with the Gover ment provides for the payment of the debt in twenty equal se annual installments. The payments are to be evidenced by twen notes of the railroad company, falling due one every six mont beginning August 1, 1899, and these notes are to be secured by a equal amount at face value of the new first refunding mortgage fo per cent gold bonds. The ordinary way of settling would have be to make a direct tender of the new bonds. The terms of the la of Congress made that impossible, so notes had to be given inste with the new bonds as security. But the notes bear only 3 per ce interest, while the bonds bear 4 per cent. The result is a sa of one per cent per annum to the company. Messrs. Speyer & 1891 Co. have agreed to purchase the $11,762,543 of these notes earliest maturing; that, however, will still leave $47,050,172 of notes in possession of the Government. Eventually these notes will be replaced by the new refunding bonds, but in the meantime the difference in interest will mean a saving to the company of $470,000 per year in the charges.

One other good result will follow, and in this sense the rigorous terms of the law will prove a not unmixed evil. Had payment been in bonds, the Government might have held them indefinitely and thus retained its interest in the property, furnishing occasion for a continuation of the meddlesome interference with the affairs of the road on the part of Congress which has characterized its course in the past. As it is, a definite limit is set to the time within which the pecuniary concern of the United States may continue. After ten years Government interest in the property will cease, and the United States will be totally eliminated as a factor in the road's affairs.
Indeed, this may be said to be the situation from the start under the new arrangement, for with the indebtedness placed on a fixed basis the only concern the Government has is to see that the semi-annual payments are met, and that, of course, by the arrange-1892 ment is put beyond question.

The reorganization scheme provides, as already indicated, for the taking up of all the existing bond issues of the Central Pacific Company. These will be replaced by two general issues—(1) $100,- 000,000 of first refunding mortgage 4 per cent gold bonds, to run not less than forty-five years, and (2) $25,000,000 of 3½ per cent mortgage gold bonds, to run thirty years. The latter as a lien upon the property and plant of the new company will be subordinate to the first refunding mortgage bonds, but, on the other hand, will have a prior lien upon the existing sinking-fund assets (amounting, as stated above, to $12,553,000 in securities, besides a small amount of cash), and also a lien upon the lands and the land notes covered by the mortgage securing the present land bonds. The new company will likewise issue $20,000,000 of 4 per cent cumulative preferred stock, mainly for betterments and additions to the property, $5,000,000 being expressly reserved for this purpose, to be used at the rate of not exceeding $200,000 per annum. This preferred stock will not be sold, but will all be taken by the Southern Pacific Company, which will issue and sell its collateral trust bonds against the same, 1893 bearing 4 per cent interest. Finally there will be $67,275,500 of new common stock, the same as at present. Under the terms of the arrangement with the Southern Pacific the latter will guarantee both the new issues of Central Pacific bonds.

The fixed charges of the new company will be heavier than those of the old company. This follows from the fact that the payment to the United States is so large and includes such great arrearages of interest (the payment of $58,812,715 being more than double the original principal of the subsidy bonds issued in aid of the road and which amounted to only $27,855,680), which arrears of interest have now to be capitalized. Part of the additional burden falls on the Southern Pacific Company, which agrees to issue altogether $36,819,000 of the collateral trust bonds referred to above. But the charges on that account may be disregarded in considering the position of the new Central Pacific Company by itself. For the year ending June 30, 1898, the fixed charges were $4,269,905. The charges of the reorganized company, when the whole $100,000,000 of new 4s and $25,000,000 of 3½s have been issued, will be $4,875,000. For the present, however, there will be a saving of $470,000 in the way noted above on the notes issued to the Government, re-1394 ducing the total of charges on the Central Pacific to $4,405,000 as against the $4,269,000 actually paid for the late year. The direct increase, therefore, will be comparatively small.

As against the $4,405,000 of charges which the new company will have to meet, the Central Pacific's net earnings from operations in the late year were $5,658,033. For the 10½ years ending last June the average of the net earnings was $4,893,259. In both cases this is independent of the income from the securities in the sinking funds, which, as we have seen, at present amounts to $689,680 per year. The position of the new company would thus appear to be entirely safe and secure. It would seem, too, that the inducement to the old bondholders to take the new securities offered them in exchange for their present obligations is strong. The terms vary for the different issues, larger or smaller proportions of the 4s and of 3½s being given in each case, depending upon the merits and position of the old security. But the old bondholders are not tied down to the terms of exchange. If they prefer, the reorganization syndicate will purchase their holdings for cash—offering for some issues par and accrued interest, for others 105 and interest, and for still 1395 others 109 and interest. Of the $100,000,000 of 4s, $47,036,000 will be retained against the 3 per cent notes given the Government, $51,253,500 will go in partial exchange for existing bonds, and $1,690,500 will be purchased by the syndicate to provide the cash requirements of the plan. Of the 3½ per cents, $13,695,000 will go in partial exchange for existing bonds and $11,305,000 will be purchased by the syndicate.

The cash requirements are put altogether at $21,420,100. Of this $11,762,543 represents the money needed to take up the first semiannual notes given the Government and $9,657,556 represents the sum required for new equipment, improvements, and other purposes. To raise this large sum of money the syndicate purchases, besides the $1,690,500 of refunding 4s and $11,305,000 of new 3½s, the amount of $12,000,000 of the new Southern Pacific collateral trust bonds to be created. It is estimated that in this way upwards of $4,500,000 cash will be provided which will be immediately available for improvements.

We have stated above that one of the merits of the plan is that it provides a definite adjustment of the relations with the 1396 Southern Pacific as well as with the United States. This is accomplished by giving Southern Pacific stock in exchange for Central Pacific. The argument in opposition to Southern Pacific control of Central Pacific has always been that the former had an alternative route in its line via El Paso and that it was to its interest to favor this line at the expense of the Central Pacific route via Ogden. But as stockholders of the Southern Pacific it will be immaterial to the present shareholders of the Central Pacific which route is developed. They will have a proprietary interest in both, and all cause for complaint will be removed.

The proposition to the Central Pacific shareholders looks very attractive and certainly surpasses anything that was deemed probable by outsiders only a few months ago. If the shares had been called upon to pay an assessment of $20 or $25 a share, hardly anyone would have been surprised. Instead they are asked for a cash payment of only $2, and in return are given share for share of Southern Pacific stock and 25 per cent of collateral trust 4 per cents. As to the value of Southern Pacific stock, that company in the late year showed a surplus above charges and expenses of $4,122,602. Even after deducting $1,299,258 spent for betterments and additions, the 397 surplus was $2,823,344. The Central Pacific surplus for the same twelve months, to be added to this, was $1,561,464. But against the latter there is the increase in charges to be taken into account.

Central Pacific's own charges, we have seen, will be increased only $35,095. The interest on the collateral trust bonds of the Southern Pacific will, of course, be an entirely new charge. The plan, as already remarked, provides altogether for $36,819,000 of these bonds, but only $23,819,000 will be required at present—$16,819,000 being given to Central Pacific shareholders and $12,000,000 being sold to the syndicate. On this $28,819,000 of bonds the annual interest charge will be $1,152,760, but that will be offset by the $690,000 income (roughly) on the securities in the Central Pacific sinking funds, making a net increase of $462,760, which, added to the $135,095 increase in the Central Pacific's own charges, gives an aggregate augmentation in charges of $597,855. Deducting this from the $1,561,464 surplus for the Central Pacific, as above, we h $963,609 to be added to the Southern Pacific's own surplus $2,823,344, making a total of $3,786,953; that is to say, the new char when applied to last year's earnings show a surplus in 1398 sum of over 3¾ million dollars after the expenditure 1½ million dollars ($1,299,258 by the Southern Pacific $162,250 by the Central Pacific) for betterments and additions.

course the aggregate of Southern Pacific stock will be increased.
present the total is $121,070,810; the amount issuable against Cen Pacific shares will add $67,275,500, and $10,118,184 is issuable agai
the stocks of Southern Pacific proprietary roads not yet exchan bringing the total up to $198,464,494.

1899, volume 68, pages 378 and 379.]

Central Pacific R. R.—Southern Pacific Company—Readjustm plan—Control of Stock—Guaranty.—Under date of Feb. 8, 1 Messrs. Speyer & Co. and their associates have prepared a for the thorough readjustment of the finances of the Central Pa R. R. Co. The plan contemplates the acquisition of a controll interest in the stock by the Southern Pacific Co., and immedia thereupon the guaranteeing by that company of the bonds of new Central Pacific issues.

As stated last week, a settlement has been negotiated with United States Government of its claim against the company, agreement dated Feb. 1, 1899. The balance of the indebtedness to the United States, as of Feb. 1, 1899, as therein stated, amoun principal and interest, to $58,812,715.48, which is to be evide by twenty 3 per cent notes of the Central Pacific R. R. Co. fal due one every six months, beginning Aug. 1, 1899, to be secured an equal amount of new first refunding mortgage 4s. Ma Speyer & Co. have agreed to purchase $11,762,543 of said n 1400 earliest maturing, Aug. 1, 1899, to Feb. 1, 1901, so that amount of said first refunding mortgage 4s to be retaine collateral by the United States will be $47,056,000.

In order to create these new first refunding mortgage gold b it is proposed promptly to readjust the financial affairs of the road company, and for this purpose the following is now pro gated. A syndicate has been formed to provide all the cash req ments under the plan.

New securities.—The plan provides for the creation of the fol ing new securities:

(1) Securities to be issued by present Central Pacific R. R. Comp or its successor.

First refunding mortgage 4 per cent gold bonds, to run no than forty-five years, to bear interest from Aug. 1, 1899, free of t and to be secured by a mortgage upon all the railroads, terminals, and equipment now owned by the Central Pacific R. R. Co., covering about 1,349 miles of first track and about 365 miles of second track and sidings, or by deposit as collateral security therefor of at least 90 per cent of the present outstanding first mortgage bonds of the Central Pacific R. R. Co. of California, and the Western Pacific R. R. Co., and of at least 75 per cent of the aggregate 1401 of all the now outstanding bonds of the Central Pacific R. R. Co. and of all now outstanding bonds of the divisional companies by the consolidation whereof it was formed, including such first-mortgage bonds of the Central Pacific R. R. Co. of California and Western Pacific R. R. Co., said new bonds to be guaranteed by endorsement as to principal and interest by the Southern Pacific Company upon delivery to that company of the controlling interest in the stock of the Central Pacific, as below stated.

Total issue of bonds	$100,000,000
Of which to be retained by U. S. Government as collateral for 3 per cent notes	47,056,000
In partial exchange for existing bonds	51,253,500
Purchased by syndicate to provide cash requirements of plan	1,690,500

3½ per cent mortgage thirty-year gold bonds, to bear interest from Aug. 1, 1899, free of taxes, and to be secured by a second lien upon all the properties covered by the first refunding mortgage above mentioned, and also by deposit with the trustee as acquired of all securities and moneys held in any sinking fund of the Central Pacific R. R. Co., and by a trust deed upon all the lands now 1402 covered by the mortgage dated Oct. 1, 1870, said new bonds to be guaranteed by endorsement as to principal and interest by Southern Pacific Company upon delivery to that company of the controlling interest in the stock of the Central Pacific as below stipulated.

Total issue	$25,000,000
Of which in partial exchange for existing bonds	13,695,000
Purchased by syndicate to provide cash requirements of plan	11,305,000
Preferred stock, 4 per cent cumulative, to be delivered to the Southern Pacific Co. in consideration of the issue of an equal amount at par value of the Southern Pacific Company's 4 per cent gold bonds hereinafter mentioned	20,000,000
Of which to be delivered on completion of readjustment	12,000,000
Reserved to be delivered only to provide additional funds, if required, for the payment of said 3 per cent notes to the United States, and thereafter only for betterments and additions	3,000,000
Reserved to be delivered for improvements and additions at not exceeding $200,000 yearly	5,000,000
Common stock to be sold to syndicate and offered for sale to depositors of present common stock upon payment of $2 per share deposited	67,275,500

(2) Securities to be issued by Southern Pacific Company.

4 per cent collateral trust gold bonds bearing interest from A 1, 1899, free of taxes, and having fifty years to run (but subject redemption at any time, at the option of the Southern Pacific C at par and accrued interest, upon six months' notice). Said bo to be secured by a collateral trust mortgage covering all the n preferred stock issued and delivered, and also all the common st of the railroad company purchased by the Southern Pacific Co.

Total issue	$36,819,
Of which as part consideration for the common stock of the railroad company, being one-fourth of the par value thereof	16,819,
In consideration of new preferred stock of the railroad company as above stated ($3,000,000 reserved as stated in plan)	15,000,
Reserve for betterments or additions to the railroad company's properties at not exceeding $200,000 per annum, against the issue of an equal amount at par value of the new preferred stock	5,000,
Common stock, as part consideration for like amount of railroad company stock, if paying assessment of $2 per share	67,275,

The London shareholders' committee, F. G. Banbury, Esq., chairman, representing a majority of the outstanding shares, has agreed to the purchase of said stock by the Southern Pacific Co. and has deposited the shares with the readjustment managers under the plan of readjustment.

Guaranty, when to be endorsed.—The Southern Pacific Company agrees that upon delivery to it of $12,000,000 of new preferred stock and at least 377,194 shares of the 672,755 shares of common stock of the railroad company, it will simultaneously guarantee unconditionally by endorsement the payment of the principal and interest of the first refunding mortgage 4 per cent gold bonds and of the 3½ per cent mortgage gold bonds.

Position of reorganized company.—A circular shows that 1406 under the plan the Central Pacific Company's fixed charges will aggregate $4,875,000. On the 4 percents held by the Government, however, there will be a saving of 1 per cent per annum until Feb. 1, 1901, or about $470,000 annually, while the Central Pacific sinking funds will earn about $695,000, making the net charges $3,710,000. The Southern Pacific charges will be increased by the interest on $28,819,000 new bonds, or $1,152,760, making the total net annual interest charge on account of the Central Pacific $4,862,760, as against $4,269,905 for the year ending June 30, 1898, or an increase of $592,855. Against this increase there was a surplus on the Central Pacific for the last year, after charging all betterments to earnings, of $1,561,463, and a surplus on the Southern Pacific of $2,823,344, a total of $4,384,807.

The Southern Pacific's present stock is $121,070,810; issuable against Central Pacific stock, $67,275,500; issuable against stocks of proprietary companies not yet exchanged, $10,118,184; making a total stock issue of $198,464,494. See further particulars in advertising columns.

"It thus appears that the fixed charges of the new company on completion of the readjustment will be well within the past net 1407 income of the property. It is estimated that under the readjustment upwards of $4,500,000 cash will be provided, which will be immediately available for improvements on the properties of the railroad company."

Deposits.—Participation under the plan of readjustment in any respect whatsoever is dependent upon the deposit of securities with Speyer & Co., of New York, the depositary, or their associates, within the required time. Bonds must carry all coupons maturing after Feb. 1, 1899.

To facilitate the carrying out of the plan, holders of certificates of deposit issued under bondholders' agreement dated Aug. 14, 1897, representing Central Pacific first-mortgage bonds, series A, B, C E, F, G, H, and I should present their certificates at the offices of of the readjustment managers to be stamped as assenting to the p Holders who do not withdraw their bonds prior to March 23 be held to have assented. Any holder desiring to accept cash ra than the new securities must present his securities of deposit t stamped accordingly on or before March 23, 1899.

Similarly, holders of certificates of deposit issued under b holders' agreement dated Oct. 1, 1896, representing Central Pa fifty-year 5 per cent mortgage bonds, due April 1, 1939, should sent their certificates for stamping.

1408 Securities sold.—Speyer & Co. announce that, as syndi managers, they have sold all of the new Central Pacific Southern Pacific bonds which the syndicate agreed to take under Central Pacific readjustment plan. Of the aforesaid bonds, $8,000, of the $12,000,000 Southern Pacific collateral trust 4s were purcha by Brown Brothers & Co. and F. S. Smithers & Co. (V. 68, p. 3
v. 67, p. 839, 844.)

1409 [4—Extract from the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, March 4, 1
volume 68, page 397.]

As expected, the Central Pacific readjustment is proving an qualified success. This week the American shareholders, as rep sented by the certificates of deposit of the Central Trust Compa unanimously adopted a resolution expressing approval of the Spe plan and directing the committee, of which Mr. August Belmont chairman, to conclude an agreement and accept the plan on behalf the shareholders. There have been few other undertakings of eq magnitude where success has followed so quickly upon the heels the official promulgation of the plan. Seldom, too, has such gener satisfaction been expressed by all parties in interest. And it must admitted that the terms offered are favorable beyond the most sa guine expectations. When one considers how dubious the outlo appeared only a short time ago one can but marvel at the comple transformation which has been worked in the prospects of the co pany and in the situation of the security holders. The problem to met was a difficult one. In the case of all the other transcontinen lines—the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, and the Atch

1410 son—security holders were called upon to make important sa rifices. In each of these instances the shareholders w obliged to pay heavy assessments. The Central Pacific shareholde have not only escaped this, but they get what must be considered th equivalent of a handsome bonus, on a cash payment of only two do lars per share, while all the other securities have been equitably and fairly dealt with.

We risk nothing in saying that such results would have been entirely out of the question except for the fact that Mr. C. P. Huntington and the banking house of Speyer & Co. have both stood behind the security holders, determined to protect them and see that they were not allowed to suffer. Mr. Huntington has at times been as harshly criticized by certain of the shareholders as he has been by the political agitators and demagogues of California. Yet he has repeatedly made important sacrifices on behalf of the Central Pacific, and in assenting to the present plan of readjustment has given proof that he regards the interests of that property as identical with those of every other portion of his vast system. As for the house of Speyer & Co., they deserve great credit for the solicitude and care displayed in looking after the Central Pacific se-1411 curity holders. To them also belongs the credit of having devised the plan. Few people appreciate the time and labor required not only in carrying out the financial requirements of an undertaking of this magnitude but in contriving and perfecting such a scheme on a basis which shall be at once just and in exact accordance with the requirements. We understand that the plan is the work of Mr. James Speyer, who for the last six or seven months has given all his time and attention to it. The scheme must be regarded as in every way a most clever contrivance. The problem to be solved was such as to call for the utmost skill and ingenuity and the exercise withal of great patience in the elaboration of the various details. Not only were there the security holders to provide for, but the large debt owing to the United States (swollen to more than double the original principal of the subsidy loan through unpaid arrearages of interest) had to be arranged and settled. Moreover, the settlement had to be in accordance with a rigid law of Congress. It required a special order of talent to deal with such a complex state of affairs. The plan meets the situation exactly, and it is difficult to see how the same happy results could have been attained in any other way.

1412 [5—Extract from the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, March 4, 1899, volume 68, page 427.]

Central Pacific R. R.—Southern Pacific Co.—Deposits without penalty limited to March 23—Majority of stock assents.—Speyer & Co. give notice that the time for further deposits of bonds and stock under the Central Pacific R. R. Co. readjustment has been limited to March 23, after which date deposits will be accepted, if at all, only upon such terms and conditions as the bankers may impose. A majority of the stock has already been deposited.

At a meeting of the American holders of certificates of the Centra Trust Co. issued in exchange for stock, held on Tuesday, a resolution was unanimously adopted authorizing the New York stockholders' committee, consisting of August Belmont, John G. Carlisle, and George Coppell, to conclude an agreement and accept the plan of readjustment. A similar resolution was adopted by the foreign stockholders several days ago in London. Holders of Central Trust Company certificates are notified to exchange them on or before March 23 for certificates of deposit issued under the plan of readjustment.

1413 Cash payment must be made by April 6.—The cash payment of $2 per share on shares of Central Pacific stock deposited has been called, and must be made on or before April 6, 1899, at the office of Messrs. Speyer & Co., 30 Broad Street, New York, or at the offices of their agents in Europe.

Central Pacific R. R.—Listed.—Of the company's $67,275,500 c capital stock, 393,918 shares have been deposited under the plan o readjustment, and Speyer & Co. engraved certificates of deposit issued therefor have been listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Central Pacific R. R.—Southern Pacific Co.—Plan operative.
Further deposits to be received till April 6.—A large majority o each class of bonds and over 97½ per cent of the stock of the Centra Pacific having assented to the plan and agreement for the readjus ment of the company, dated Feb. 8, 1899, the readjustment manage give notice that the said plan is declared operative. The time f further deposits of stock and bonds, without additional charge, has been extended to and including April 6, 1899, after which date deposits will be accepted only upon a cash payment of one per cent of the par value of bonds, and an additional cash payment of $1 per share of stock deposited.

As to the Central Pacific first-mortgage bonds, series A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, and I, holders of certificates of deposit issued under bondholders' agreement, dated Aug. 14, 1897, are notified that in order to accelerate the carrying out of the plan holders should present their certificates promptly at the offices of the readjustment managers to be stamped as assenting to the plan of readjust-1417 ment. Any holder desiring to accept cash for his bond rather than the new securities as provided in the plan must present his certificate of deposit to be stamped accordingly on or before April 6, 1899. See advertisement in another column. (V. 68, p. 523.)

Listed.—The New York Stock Exchange has listed the engraved certificates issued by Speyer & Co. for the following securities:

$2,196,000 Western Pacific R. R. first-mortgage bonds, series A and B; $9,152,000 California & Oregon R. R. first-mortgage bonds, series A and B; $5,156,000 Central Pacific R. R., San Joaquin Valley Branch, first-mortgage bonds; and $1,703,000 Central Pacific Ry. land bonds. The amount of bonds on the list is to be reduced accordingly, and the committee on stock list is empowered to add to the list additional certificates as officially notified that they have been issued in accordance with the plan.

1418 [9—Extract from the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, April 15, 1899, volume 68, pages 721 and 722.]

Central Pacific R. R.—Securities mostly assented—Penalty.—Speyer & Co. announce that over 91 per cent of the bonds and 99 per cent of the stock have been deposited under the plan of readjustment, dated February 8. Further deposits will be accepted upon a cash payment of 1 per cent of the par value of bonds and an additional cash payment of $1 per share of stock deposited until April 29, after which date no deposits will be accepted except in their discretion and upon such terms and additional payments as may be imposed. (V. 68, p. 617.)

Readjustment plan.—The plan issued by Speyer & Co. and associates in Feb., 1899, and published in v. 68, p. 378, provides for the acquisition of the stock by the Southern Pacific Co. and the guaranteeing by that company of the principal and interest of two new Cent. Pac. loans shown above. The present indebtedness, including the U. S. Government loan (the latter amounting, with interest, on Feb. 1, 1899, to $59,812,714), will be discharged and the future needs of the property provided for by the following new securities

(1) Common stock, $67,275,500, to be sold to syndicate and offered for sale to depositors of present common stock upon payment of $2 per share deposited.

(2) Preferred stock, 4 per cent cumulative, authorized issue $20,000,000, to be delivered to Southern Pacific Co. in consideration of issue of equal amount at par value of the Southern Pacific Company's 4 per cent gold bonds; of which to be delivered on completion of readjustment, $12,000,000; reserved to be delivered only to provide additional funds, if required, for the payment of 3 per cent notes to the United States, and thereafter only for betterments and additions, $3,000,000; reserved to be delivered for improvements and additions at not exceeding $200,000 yearly, $5,000,000.

(3) First refunding M. gold 4s, $100,000,000, and to be secured by all the railroads, terminals, and equipment now owned, including about 1,349 miles of first track, etc., or by deposit as collateral security of at least 90 per cent of the present outstanding first-mortgage bonds of the Cent. Pac. R. R. Co. of California and the West. Pac. R. R. Co., and at least 75 p. c. of all the now outstanding bonds of the Central Pacific R. R. Co. and merged companies; of which 1421 to be retained by United States as collateral for 3 per cent notes, $47,056,000; in partial exchange for existing bonds, $51,253,500; purchased by syndicate to provide cash requirements of plan, $1,690,500.

(4) Thirty-year gold 3½s, $25,000,000, to be secured by a second lien upon all the properties covered by the 1st ref. mortgage, and also by deposit with the trustees as acquired of all securities and moneys held in any sinking fund of the Central Pacific R. R., consisting Jan. 1, 1899, of $12,553,000 in securities and $86,459 cash, and by a trust deed upon all the lands now covered by the mortgage dated Oct. 1, 1870; of which in partial exchange for existing bonds, $13,695,000; purchased by syndicate to provide cash requirements of plan, $11,305,000.

(5) Twenty three per cent notes, aggregating $58,812,714, issued to the Government in settlement of subsidy debt; $11,762,543 paid, leaving $47,056,000 to mature, $2,940,635 half yearly Aug., 1901, to Feb., 1909. First refunding 4s are deposited to retire the notes as they fall due.

The Southern Pacific Co. will acquire the stock of the Cent. Pacific R. R., issuing its own stock for $67,275,500 as part considera-
1422 tion, and also $36,819,000 collateral 50-year gold 4s, secured by a collateral trust mortgage covering all the new Cent. Pac. preferred and common stock acquired. See statement for Southern Pacific Co. In March, 1899, a large majority of each class of bonds and over 97½ per cent of the stock had assented to the plan, which was thereupon declared operative. (V. 68, p. 617.)

Readjustment plan.—The plan issued by Speyer & Co. and associates in Feb., 1899, and published in v. 68, p. 378, provides for the acquisition of the stock by the Southern Pacific Co. and the guaranteeing by that company of the principal and interest of the new Cent. Pac. loans shown above. The present indebtedness, including the U. S. Government loan (the latter amounting, with interest, on Feb. 1, 1899, to $59,812,714), will be discharged and the future needs of the property provided for by new securities 1426 in the table above, viz:

(1) Common stock, $67,275,500.

(2) Preferred stock, 4 per cent cumulative, authorized issue $20,000,000, to be delivered to Southern Pacific Co. in consideration of issue of equal amount at par value of the Southern Pacific Company's 4 per cent gold bonds, of which to be delivered on completion of readjustment, $12,000,000; reserved to be delivered only to provide additional funds, if required, for the payment of 3 per cent notes to the United States, and thereafter only for betterments and additions, $3,000,000; reserved to be delivered for improvements and additions at not exceeding $200,000 yearly, $5,000,000.

(3) First refunding M. gold 4s, $100,000,000, and to be secured by all the railroads, terminals, and equipment now owned, including about 1,349 miles of first track, etc., or by deposit as collateral security of at least 90 per cent of the present outstanding first-mortgage bonds of the Cent. Pac. R. R. Co. of California and the West. Pac. R. R. Co., and at least 75 p. c. of all the now outstanding bonds of the Central Pacific R. R. Co. and merged companies, of which to be retained by United States as collateral for 3 per cent notes, $47,056,000; in partial exchange for existing bonds, 1427 $51,253,500 purchased by syndicate to provide cash requirements of plan, $1,690,500.

(4) Thirty-year gold 3½s, $25,000,000, to be secured by a second lien upon all the properties covered by the 1st ref. mortgage and also by deposit with the trustees as acquired of all securities and moneys held in any sinking fund of the Central Pacific R. R., consisting. Jan. 1, 1899, of $12,553,000 in securities and $86,459 cash, and by a trust deed upon all the lands now covered by the mortgage dated Oct. 1, 1870, of which in partial exchange for existing bonds $13,695,000; purchased by syndicate to provide cash requirements of plan, $11,305,000.

(5) Twenty three per cent notes, aggregating $58,812,714, issued to the Government in settlement of subsidy debt; $11,762,543 paid, leaving $47,056,000 to mature, $2,940,635 half-yearly Aug., 1901, to Feb., 1909. First refunding 4s are deposited to retire them when due.

The Southern Pacific Co. will acquire the stock of the Cent. Pacific R. R., issuing its own stock for $67,275,500 as part consideration, and also $36,819,000 collateral 50-year gold 4s, secured by a collateral trust mortgage covering all the new Cent. Pac. preferred and 1428 common stock acquired. See statement for Southern Pacific Co. In March, 1899, a large majority of each class of bonds and over 97½ per cent of the stock had assented to the plan, which was thereupon declared operative. (V. 68, p. 617.)

Muir, a citizen of the State of California, residing within the southern district of Californa; and D. Burkhalter, a citizen of the State of California, residing within the southern district of California.

1442 And thereupon your orators allege and show unto the court: That each of the railroad companies and transportation companies above named now are, and at all the times hereinafter named have been, engaged in carrying passengers, property, and commerce between and among the States of the United States and between and among the States and Territories of the United States, and between and among the United States and foreign countries.

And your orators further allege that the railroad and transportation companies above named severally own and operate lines of standard-guage railroad, which are all connected with each other, which when taken together, form a continuous line from Portland, Oregon, by way of San Francisco and Los Angeles, in the State of California, Yuma, in the Territory of Arizona, and El Paso, in the State of Texas, to New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, with connecting lines from Ogden, Utah, to San Francisco, California, from El Paso, Texas, to Santa Rosalia, Mexico, from Houston, Texas, to Galveston, Texas, from Houston, Texas, to Albany, Texas, and to the cities of Denison and Paris, and from Los Angeles, Cali-1443 fornia, to San Pedro, Santa Monica, and Ellwood, California, and from San Francisco to Calistoga, Santa Rosa, Rumsey, Oroville, Placerville, Ione City, Valley Springs, Milton, Monterey, Santa Cruz, and to various other points and places.

And your orators further allege that said line of railroad from San Francisco, by way of Los Angeles, to Fort Yuma, upon the Colorado River, was constructed by the United States through the agency of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, by virtue of t acts of Congress of July 27, 1866 (14 Stats., 292), and of March 1871 (16 Stats., 573), for the purpose of securing the safe and spee transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and publ stores of the United States over said line of railroad.

And your orators further allege that said line of railroad fro Ogden, Utah, to San Francisco, California, was likewise construct by the United States, through the agency of the Central Pacific Ra road Company, for like uses and purposes of the United States.

Your orators further allege that the line of railroad from the li between Oregon and California to San Francisco, California, w likewise constructed by the United States, through the agen 1444 of the California and Oregon Railroad Company, for li uses and purposes of the United States.

And your orators further allege that that part of the line of ra road constructed between the line between California and Oreg and Portland, Oregon, was constructed by the United States, throug the agency of the Oregon Central Railroad Company, for like us and purposes of the United States.

And your orators further allege that the defendants herein hav combined and conspired together, and with other persons and cor porations, whose names are unknown to your orators; but, when as certained, will be inserted as defendants herein, to restrain trade and commerce between and among the several States of the United State and between and among the States and Territories of the United States, and between and among the United States and foreign na tions.

And your orators further allege that, in furtherance of such com bination and conspiracy as aforesaid, the defendants have attempted to monopolize and have monopolized all the trade and commerce between San Francisco and other cities and places upon the Bay of San Francisco, in said State, by railroad, and other points and places within the United States outside of the State of California, and 1445 have attempted to monopolize, and have monopolized, a large part of the trade and commerce between and among the several States of the United States, and between and among the States and Territories of the United States, and between and among the United States and foreign nations, particularly that part of such trade and commerce by land and by sea between cities and towns in California, Nevada, Oregon, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas, respectively, and other States and Territories of the United States.

And your orators further allege that, in furtherance of said com bination and conspiracy, and in fraud of the rights of the United States and of the public, the defendants herein have combined all of said lines of railroad and transportation under a single management forming a monopoly of the trade and commerce thereof, by land and by sea between the points and places named as aforesaid.

And your orators further allege that, in furtherance of such combination and conspiracy, and in fraud of the rights of the United States and of the public, and without any authoritiy so to do, said Southern Pacific Company of Kentucky and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California, defendants, did, on the 10th
1446 day of February, 1885, enter into a certain contract or agreement, a copy of which is hereto annexed and made a part hereof and marked "Exhibit A," by which said Southern Pacific Railroad Company pretended to lease to said Southern Pacific Company, for the term of ninety-nine years, all of its railroad situated in the State of California, with all its branches, and all railroads leased to said Southern Pacific Railroad Company, together with all rolling stock, telegraph lines, tools, and property of every kind and nature.

And your orators further allege that, in furtherance of such combination and conspiracy, and in fraud of the rights of the United States and of the public, and without any authority so to do, said Southern Pacific Company of Kentucky and the Central Pacific Railroad Company, defendants, did, on the 17th day of February, 1885, enter into a certain contract or agreement, a copy of which is hereto annexed, made a part hereof, and marked "Exhibit B," by which said Central Pacific Railroad Company pretended to lease to said Southern Pacific Company for the term of ninety-nine years all of its railroad situated in the Territory of Utah and States of Nevada and California, known and designated as the Central Pacific Railroad, together with all the branches thereof, and together
1447 with all the rolling stock, telegraph lines, steamboats, wharves, piers, depots, workshops, and all other property, real and personal, owned, held, and possessed by said Central Pacific Railroad Company.

And your orators further allege that, in furtherance of said combination and conspiracy, and in fraud of the rights of the United States and of the public, and without any authority so to do, said Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California and the San Jose and Almaden Railroad Company, the Pajara and Santa Cruz Railroad Company, the Monterey Railroad Company, the Monterey Extension Railroad Company, the San Pablo and Tulare Railroad Company, the San Pablo Extension Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Branch Railway Company, the San Ramon Valley Railroad Company, the Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company, the Stockton and Tulare Railroad Company, the San Joaquin Valley and Yosemite Railroad Company, the Los Angeles and San Diego Railroad Company, the Los Angeles and Independence Railroad Company, the Long Beach, Whittier and Los Angeles County Railroad Company, the Long Beach Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Extension Company, and the Ramona and San Bernardino Railroad Company, on the 4th day of May, 1888, 1448 entered into a certain contract or agreement, a copy of which is hereto annexed, made a part hereof, and marked "Exhibit C," by which all of said railroad corporations agreed and pretended to amalgamate and consolidate their debts, properties, assets, and franchises, forming a new corporation, by the name and style of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

And your orators further allege that, in furtherance of said combination and conspiracy, and in fraud of the rights of the United States and of the public, and without any authority so to do, said Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California, incorporated in the year 1888 as aforesaid, did make, execute, and deliver to the defendant the Central Trust Company of New York a certain mortgage or deed of trust to secure the payment of thirty-eight millions ($38,000,000.00) of dollars of bonds proposed to be issued to said Central Trust Company as trustee, which said pretended mortgage or deed of trust has been recorded in all of the counties of the State of California through which said railroads and branches thereof pass, a copy of which said pretended mortgage or deed of trust is hereto annexed, made a part hereof, and marked "Exhibit D."

And your orators further allege that sometimes defend-1449 ants herein pretend to have transferred a majority and controlling interest of the stock of said Southern Pacific Railroad Company, Southern Pacific Company of Kentucky, and other railroads mentioned as aforesaid to the Pacific Improvement Company, a defendant herein, in order to more effectually and conveniently carry out such combination and conspiracy in restraint of such trade and commerce and to create such monopoly thereof, but your orators allege that all such transfers of stock from one company to another is utterly void and of no effect.

And your orators further allege that sometimes defendants, in order to accomplish such combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce, pretend to have elected as boards of directors of said several railroad corporations and transportation companies above named the same persons appointed the board of directors of each such company, and such other persons as will carry out such combination and conspiracy without regard to the rights of the United States and of the public, and without regard to the rights of any of the stockholders of said companies; but your orators allege that all such acts and doings are illegal and void, and in fraud of the rights of the United States and of the public.

1450 Your orators hereby expressly reserve the right to question the corporate existence of any or all of said various railroad companies and transportation companies above named, in view of the unlawful acts of said companies and the violation and abuse of the charter powers of said companies.

To the end, therefore, that said defendants may, if they can, show why your orators should not be granted the relief herein sought, and that the matters herein alleged may be determined, and the rights of your orators enforced, your orators bring this suit and require each of the above-named corporations defendant herein to show, upon oath, to the best of their respective knowledge and information:

First. The original or copy of so much of the stock books or book of stockholders or other record of said respective compaines showing the names and residences of the owners and holders of the shares of capital stock of said respective companies, and the number of shares and amount now held by each such owner or holder.

1451 Second. The originals or copies of all contracts, leases, and agreements, of every kind and nature, between each of said companies and any other defendant herein, and between each of said companies and any other person or corporation relating to the operation or control or leasing or pooling of earnings of each such company or line of railroad of such company or any portion thereof.

And your orators further pray that said contract or lease between the Southern Pacific Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, dated February 10, 1885, may be annulled and decreed to be void.

That the said agreement between the Southern Pacific Company of Kentucky and the Central Pacific Railroad Company, dated February 17, 1885, may be annulled and decreed to be void.

That the said pretended articles of amalgamation and consolidation between the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and seventeen other railroad corporations, dated May 4, 1888, may be annulled and decreed to be void.

1452 That the said pretended mortgage or deed of trust of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to the Central Trust Company of New York may be annulled and decreed to be void.

And your orators further pray that all contracts, leases, agreements, and consolidations by and between the defendants and between each defendant railroad and transportation company and any other defendant railroad and transportation company, and between each defendant railroad and transportation company and any other railroad or transportation company, in anywise relating to the leasing, operation, or control of any thereof, may be annulled and decreed to be void.

And your orators further pray that all transfers of the shares of the capital stock of any of the corporations defendant herein to any other corporation defendant herein be annulled and decreed to be void.

And your orators further pray that by a proper decree of this court each of the railroad and transportation companies defendant herein be required henceforth, through its own corporate officers and employees, to maintain and operate, without favor or discrimination against any person, company, or corporation, or the United States, its said respective railroad or transportation line for railroad 1453 governmental, commercial, and other public purposes, and exercise, by itself alone, all of its respective duties required by its charter and by the laws of the United States and of the State of California.

And your orators further pray that the defendants herein and each of them, their servants, agents, and employees, be perpetually enjoined from in any way combining or conspiring together or with any other person or corporation to restrain trade or commerce between the States or with foreign nations.

And your orators allege and show unto the court that all of the defendants herein are necessary parties to this suit, and they pray that the court may order all of such defendants, whether they reside within this judicial district or not, may be summoned, and that subpœna may be issued to that end.

And may it please your honors to grant unto your orators all such other and further relief as the nature of the case may require and as may seem to your honors to be equitable, and for costs of this suit.

May it please your honors to grant unto your orators a writ of subpœna issuing out of and under the seal of this honorable 1454 court, directed to the Southern Pacific Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kentucky; the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California and of the United States; the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the Territory of Arizona; the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the Territory of New Mexico; the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas; the Texas and New Orleans Railroad Company of 1874, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas; the Louisiana Western Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by vir-

1482 DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT No. 97, MAY 29, 1915.

This lease, made this first day of March, A. D. 1912, by and between Central Pacific Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Utah, party of the first part and lessor, and Southern Pacific Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under laws of the State of Kentucky, party of the second part and lessee—

Witnesseth:

That whereas heretofore, on the 17th day of February, 1885, Central Pacific Railroad Company and Southern Pacific Company entered into an agreement of lease, covering the whole of the railroad, equipment, and property then owned by said Central Pacific Railroad Company and situated in the Territory of Utah and States of Nevada and California; and

Whereas said agreement and lease was subsequently changed and modified by four certain written agreements entered into between said Central Pacific Railroad Company and Southern Pacific Company, and dated, respectively, January 1, 1888, December 7, 1483 1893, March 22, 1894, and April 15, 1897, all of which said five agreements are hereby referred to and made a part hereof as fully as if they were herein set forth in full; and

Whereas subsequent to said amendment and agreement of April 15, 1897, Central Pacific Railroad Company sold, assigned, and transferred unto Central Pacific Railway Company, said lessor, all of the railroad, rights, properties, and franchises which were the subject of said five agreements with said Southern Pacific Company; and

Whereas said lessor, as the successor in interest of said Central Pacific Railroad Company, has recognized said five agreements and has continued to receive the benefits arising therefrom to it as the successor in interest of said Central Pacific Railroad Company and all benefits which would have been realized therefrom by said Central Pacific Railroad Company but for said sale to said lessor; and

Whereas the consideration moving and to move from said Southern Pacific Company for the exercise of the rights enjoyed by it under said five agreements made by it with Central Pacific Railroad Company is deemed by this lessor to be ample and adequate for the execution of this agreement and lease and for the rights to be 1484 enjoyed by said Southern Pacific Company under this agreement; and

Whereas before the acquisition of said property of said Central Pacific Railroad Company by said lessor Central Pacific Railroad Company acquired certain property not specifically mentioned and described in said five agreements, but which has been treated by the parties hereto as falling under and leased by the effect of said five agreements; and

Whereas since the acquisition of said property of said Central Pacific Railroad Company by the said lessor said lessor has acquired certain property connected with and necessary in the conduct of the line of railroad acquired by it from said Central Pacific Railroad Company, which said after-acquired property has also been treated as falling under the terms and effect of said five agreements by said Central Pacific Railroad Company; and

Whereas, in addition to the after-acquired property of said lessor next hereinbefore mentioned, said lessor has acquired by deeds dated February 29, 1912, certain properties from Central California Railway Company, Oregon Eastern Railway Company, Nevada & California Railway Company, Chico & Northern Railroad Company, Fernley & Lassen Railway Company, Goose Lake & Southern 1485 Railway Company, Modoc Northern Railway Company, and Sacramento Southern Railroad Company:

Now, therefore, it is hereby agreed by and between the said lessor and the said lessee that the following properties now owned by said lessor shall be, and are hereby, subjected to the terms, conditions, and provisions of the lease herein by said Southern Pacific Company of the properties formerly owned by Central Pacific Railroad Company, as said lease is evidenced by said five agreements between said Central Pacific Railroad Company and said Southern Pacific Company, and for no other or further consideration, and for the unexpired portion of the term of said lease of said Southern Pacific Company of said properties of said Central Pacific Railroad Company, as evidenced by said five agreements.

The property so hereby leased consists of—

1st. All railroad properties, together with their branches, depots, station houses, equipments, appurtenances, appendages, and adjuncts of every kind and nature acquired by said Central Pacific Railroad Company subsequent to the date of said agreement of April 15, 1899.

2nd. All railroads, together with their branches, depots, station houses, equipments, appurtenances, appendages, and adjuncts 1486 of every kind and nature acquired by said Central Pacific Railway Company prior to February 29, 1912.

3rd. The following railroad properties acquired by said Central Pacific Railway Company on February 29, 1912:

All that certain line of railroad formerly belonging to the Central California Railway Company, and extending from a connection with the line of railroad of the Central Pacific Railway Company at Niles, in the county of Alameda, in a general southwesterly direction through Newark, in the county aforesaid, and across San Francisco Bay to a connection with the railroad of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at Redwood City, in the county of San Mateo, all in the State of California, being about 16.316 miles in length, together with all of the rights, powers, immunities, privileges, franchises, and other property appertaining thereto.

Also those certain lines of railroad, together with all of the rights, powers, immunities, privileges, franchises, and other property appertaining thereto, formerly the property of Nevada & California Railway Company, a California corporation, and by it conveyed to Central Pacific Railway Company, a Utah corporation, by deed dated February 29, 1912, which said lines of railroad are described as follows:

1487 (a) A line of railroad extending from a connection with the railroad of the Central Pacific Railway Company at or near Hazen, Churchill County, Nevada, in a general southeasterly direction via Churchill and Tonopah Junction, Nevada, and Owenyo, California, to Keeler, Inyo County, California, through Churchill, Lyon, and Mineral Counties, Nevada, and Mono and Inyo Counties, California, about 288.64 miles.

(b) A line of railroad extending from a connection with line (a), above described, at or near Hazen in a general southeasterly direction to Fallon, all in Churchill County, Nevada, about 15.92 miles.

(c) A line of railroad extending from a connection with line (a), above described, at or near Churchill in a general southwesterly direction to Mound House, all in Lyon County, Nevada, about 26.21 miles.

(d) A line of railroad extending from a connection with line (a), above described, at or near Filben in a general southeasterly direction to Candelaria, all in Mineral County, Nevada, about 5.51 miles.

Also all those certain lines of railroad, together with all of the rights, powers, immunities, privileges, franchises, and other property appertaining thereto, which were conveyed to Central Pacific Railway Company by Oregon Eastern Railway Company, an Oregon corporation, by deed dated February 29, 1912, and which said lines of railroad so hereby leased are described as follows:

The constructed line of railroad acquired by the Oregon Eastern Railway Company from the California Northeastern Railway Company extending from a connection with the line of railroad of the Central Pacific Railway Company at or near Weed Station, in Siskiyou County, California, in a general northeasterly direction to

Klamath Falls, Klamath County, Oregon; and also the line of railroad projected and partly constructed by the Oregon Eastern Railway Company extending from a connection with the aforesaid line of railroad of the Oregon Eastern Railway Company at said Klamath Falls in a general northerly direction to Odell, in said 1489 Klamath County, Oregon, and thence in a general northwesterly direction to a connection with the line of railroad of the Oregon & California Railroad Company at or near Natron, Lane County, Oregon.

4th. All railroads, property, branches, depots, station houses, equipments, appurtenances, appendages, and adjuncts, of every kind and nature, now owned and hereafter acquired or constructed by said Central Pacific Railway Company as or in connection with main lines, extensions, or branches, including the extension of said former Oregon Eastern Railway Company's line, and the lines projected by Fernley & Lassen Railway Company, Goose Lake & Southern Railway Company, and Modoc Northern Railway Company.

Nothing in this agreement contained shall be construed to cover the property acquired by the said lessor from Chico & Northern Railroad Company by deed dated February 29, 1912, nor the property acquired by said lessor from Sacramento Southern Railroad Company by deed dated February 29, 1912, nor any extensions or branches of said Chico & Northern Railroad Company or said Sacramento Southern Railroad Company, so long as the properties formerly owned by said two last-mentioned companies are under 1490 lease to corporations other than said lessee.

It is hereby further expressly understood and agreed that this lease shall and will be subordinated in all its terms and conditions to any future mortgage, deed of trust, or instrument evidencing or establishing a lien for indebtedness made or executed by the lessor upon any or all of the properties hereby leased; and in the event of such mortgage, deed of trust, or lien being foreclosed in whole or in part, this lease shall have no priority with respect to the rights acquired under such instrument creating or evidencing such lien, or under such foreclosure.

It is further agreed that the automatic extension of this lease to railroad properties hereafter constructed, including said lines and extensions projected by said Oregon Eastern Railway Company, Modoc Northern Railway Company, Goose Lake & Southern Railway Company, and Fernley & Lassen Railway Company, shall be effective only upon the completion of such after-constructed extensions, lines or branches, ready for operation, and as and at the time each new construction, including the ones above mentioned, is ready for operation.

1491 It is hereby further agreed that the lease now subsisting between Nevada & California Railway Company and Southern Pacific Company, dated July 1, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, cancelled.

In witness whereof each of the parties hereto has caused these presents to be signed by its president or a vice president and its corporate seal to be hereunto affixed, attested by its secretary or assistant secretary, all as of the day and year first above written.

1498 DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT No. 98, MAY 29, 1915.

Southern Pacific Company to Union Trust Company of New York, trustee.

Four per cent mortgage (Central Pacific stock collateral). Dated August 1st, 1899.

1499 NEW YORK, May 21, 1915.

I, John V. B. Thayer, vice president of the Union Trust Company of New York, do hereby certify that this is a true copy of the original mortgage, dated August 1st, 1899, of the Southern Pacific Company to Union Trust Company of New York, trustee, to secure an issue of bonds known as Southern Pacific Company four per cent gold bonds (Central Pacific stock collateral).

JOHN V. B. THAYER.

1500 [$14,409.25 internal-revenue stamps affixed and cancelled.]

This indenture, made the first day of August, A. D. 1899, by and between the Southern Pacific Company, a corporation created, organized, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kentucky, party of the first part, and the Union Trust Company of New York, a corporation created, organized, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, party of the second part.

Witnesseth:

Whereas the party of the first part, in pursuance of its corporate powers, has acquired, and now holds, the preferred and common stock hereinafter described of the Central Pacific Railway Company, a corporation created, organized, and existing under the laws of the State of Utah; and

Whereas the party of the first part is about to issue (to the amount and within the limits hereinafter prescribed on that behalf) its four per cent gold bonds, to be designated as four per cent gold bonds—Central Pacific stock collateral—in the general forms following, that is to say:

1501 [Form of coupon bond.]

No. $1,000 (or $500)

United States of America. Southern Pacific Company. Four per cent gold bond, Central Pacific stock collateral.

Know all men by these presents that the Southern Pacific Company, for value received, promises to pay to the bearer or, if registered, to the registered holder, of this bond, on the first day of August, nineteen hundred and forty-nine, at the office or agency of the Southern Pacific Company, in the city of New York, one thousand (or five hundred) dollars, gold coin of the United States of the present standard of weight and fineness, and to pay interest thereon at the rate of four per cent per annum from August 1, 1899, payable semi-annually at the said office or agency, in like gold coin, on the first day of June and the first day of December in each year, but only upon presentation and surrender, as they severally mature, of the 1502 coupons therefor annexed hereto.

The right is reserved to the Southern Pacific Company and its successors, at its or their option, to redeem this bond at par and accrued interest thereon, upon giving previous notice of its or their intention so to do by publication as prescribed in the mortgage or deed of trust hereinafter mentioned, and the interest upon this bond shall cease at the time for which the same shall have been so called for redemption, as provided in said mortgage or deed of trust.

Both the principal and interest of this bond are payable without deduction for any tax or taxes which the Southern Pacific Company may be required to pay, or to retain therefrom, under any present or future law of the United States or of any State or county or municipality therein.

This bond is one of a series of four per cent gold bonds—Central Pacific stock collateral—(coupon and registered) of the Southern Pacific Company, issued and to be issued for an aggregate principal sum not exceeding thirty-six million eight hundred and nineteen thousand dollars at any one time outstanding, under and in pursuance of, and all equally secured by, a mortgage or deed of trust dated April 1st, 1899, executed by the Southern Pacific Com-
1503 pany to the Union Trust Company of New York, as trustee, covering the preferred and common stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, pledged or to be pledged by said mortgage or deed of trust, to which reference is hereby made for a statement of the stock so mortgaged, the nature and extent of the security, the rights of the holders of said bonds under the same, and the terms and conditions upon which said bonds are issued and secured.

This bond shall pass by delivery unless registered in the owner's name on the books of the Southern Pacific Company at its office or agency in the city of New York, such registry being noted on the bond by the bond registrar of the Southern Pacific Company. After such registration no transfer shall be valid unless made on the company's books by the registered owner and similarly noted on the bond; but the same may be discharged from registry by being transferred to bearer, and thereafter transferability by delivery shall be restored; but this bond may again, from time to time, be registered or transferred to bearer as before. Such registration, however, shall not affect the negotiability of the coupons, which shall continue to be transferable by delivery merely.

1504 The holder may also, at his option, surrender for cancellation this bond with the coupons for future interest thereon in exchange for a registered bond without coupons, as provided in said mortgage or deed of trust.

This bond shall not become obligatory for any purpose until it shall have been authenticated by the certificate, hereon endorsed, of the trustee under said mortgage or deed of trust.

In witness whereof the Southern Pacific Company has caused these presents to be signed by its president or one of its vice presidents and its corporate seal to be hereunto affixed, and to be attested by its secretary or an assistant secretary, and coupons for said interest with the engraved signature of its treasurer to be attached hereto this first day of August, 1899.

(The mortgage or deed of trust securing this bond has been duly stamped according to law.)

United States of America. Southern Pacific Company four per cent gold bond, Central Pacific stock collateral.

Know all men by these presents that the Southern Pacific Company for value received promises to pay to or registered assigns the sum of dollars, gold coin of the United States of present standard of weight and fineness, on the first day of August, nineteen hundred and forty-nine, at the office or agency of the Southern Pacific Company in the city of New York, and to pay interest thereon at the rate of four per cent per annum from the first day of June or December next preceding the date hereof, payable semiannually at the said office or agency, in like gold coin, on the first day of June and the first day of December in each 1507 year, until the payment of said principal sum.

The right is reserved to the Southern Pacific Company and its successors, at its or their option, to redeem this bond at par and accrued interest thereon, upon giving previous notice of its or their intention so to do by publication as prescribed in the mortgage or deed of trust hereinafter mentioned, and the interest upon this bond shall cease at the time for which the same shall have been so called for redemption, as provided in said mortgage or deed of trust.

Both the principal and interest of this bond are payable without deduction for any tax or taxes which the Southern Pacific Company may be required to pay or to retain therefrom under any present or future law of the United States or of any State or county or municipality therein.

This bond is one of a series of four per cent gold bonds—Central Pacific stock collateral—(coupon and registered) of the Southern Pacific Company, issued and to be issued for an aggregate principal sum not exceeding thirty-six million eight hundred and nineteen thousand dollars at any one time outstanding, under and in pursuance of, and all equally secured by, a mortgage or deed of 1508 trust dated August 1st, 1899, executed by the Southern Pacific Company to the Union Trust Company of New York, as trustee, covering the preferred and common stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company pledged or to be pledged by said mortgage or deed of trust, to which reference is hereby made for a statement of the stock so mortgaged, the nature and extent of the security, the rights of the holders of said bonds under the same, and the terms and conditions upon which said bonds are issued and secured.

This bond is transferable by the registered holder thereof in person or by attorney duly authorized on the books of the Southern Pacific Company at its office or agency in the city of New York upon surrender and cancellation of this bond; and thereupon a new registered bond will be issued to the transferee in exchange herefor, as provided in said mortgage or deed of trust, and on payment, if the Southern Pacific Company shall so require, of the charge therein provided for.

This bond shall not become obligatory for any purpose until it shall have been authenticated by the certificate hereon endorsed of the trustee under said mortgage or deed of trust.

[L. S.] SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY,

By

Vice President.

Attest:

Assistant Secretary.

[Form of trustee's certificate.]

This bond is one of a series of bonds described in the within-mentioned mortgage or deed of trust executed by the Southern Pacific Company to the undersigned.

UNION TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK,
Trustee.

By

Vice President.

1510 Whereas the said bonds of the party of the first part so to be issued as aforesaid are to be secured by the pledge and deposit with the trustee hereunder of the said preferred and common stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company and of such preferred and common stock of the last-mentioned company as may be hereafter deposited hereunder with the said trustee; and

Whereas at a meeting of the board of directors of the party of the first part, duly called, and held on the nineteenth day of September 1899, the following resolutions were adopted, that is to say:

Resolved, That for the corporate purposes of the company this company issue its bonds, to be known as "Four per cent gold bonds—Central Pacific stock collateral"—to an amount which shall not in any event exceed in the aggregate the principal sum of $36,819,000 at any one time outstanding. Such bonds shall bear date August 1, 1899, in the case of coupon bonds and of the time of their issue in the case of registered bonds, shall become and be payable on the first day of August, 1949, in gold coin of the United States of the present standard of weight and fineness, and shall bear interest

1511 at a rate not exceeding four per centum per annum, payable semiannually, in like gold coin, on the first day of June and the first day of December in each year, but shall be subject to the right on behalf of the company and its successors, at its and their option, to redeem the same at par and accrued interest thereon upon giving previous notice of its or their intention so to do by publication as prescribed in the mortgage or deed of trust hereinafter mentioned. Said bonds shall be issued either as coupon or registered bonds. The coupon bonds shall be for the principal sum of one thousand dollars or five hundred dollars each, and shall give to the holders the right to register the principal thereof, and also the right to convert the same into fully registered bonds. The registered bonds without coupons shall be each for the principal sum of one thousand dollars, or such multiples thereof as the company by resolution of its board of directors may from time to time prescribe, and may be issued originally either as registered bonds or in exchange for coupon bonds for an equivalent sum. Such bonds, whether coupon bonds or registered bonds, shall be issued, as shall be determined by the action of the board of directors or the executive committee of the company, at such times and to such amounts as the purposes for which they are 512 to be issued may require. When issued such bonds shall be signed by the president or any vice president of the company, and the corporate seal shall be thereunto affixed and attested by the secretary or any assistant secretary. In case the officers who shall have signed and sealed any such bonds shall cease to be officers of the company before the bonds so signed and sealed shall have been actually issued, certified, and delivered, such bonds may, nevertheless, be adopted and used by the company, and may be issued, certified, and delivered as though the persons who signed and sealed such bonds had not ceased to be officers of the company. There shall be attached to the coupon bonds coupons for the interest to grow due thereon, authenticated by the engraved signature of the treasurer or of any future treasurer of the company; and the company may adopt and use for that purpose the engraved signature of any person who shall have been such treasurer, notwithstanding the fact that such person may have ceased to be such treasurer when such bonds shall have been actually issued, certified, and delivered.

Resolved further, That in order to secure the payment of said bonds issued and to be issued, with interest thereon, this com-513 pany execute a mortgage or deed of trust to the Union Trust Company of New York, a corporation of the State of New York, as trustee, covering the preferred and common stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company described in the printed form of mortgage now submitted to this board.

Resolved further, That the said printed form of mortgage now submitted to the board and the forms of bonds embodied therein be, and the same are hereby, approved, and that the president or any vice president and the secretary or any assistant secretary be, and they are hereby, authorized to execute and deliver the same on b half of the company under its corporate seal.

Now, therefore the said parties hereto, in consideration of th premises and of one dollar to each by the other in hand paid at before the ensealing and delivery of these presents, the recei whereof is hereby acknowledged, and for other good and valuabl considerations, do each covenant, promise, and agree, for themselv and their respective successors and assigns, in manner and form fo lowing; that is to say:

First. The said party of the first part has simultaneously with th execution hereof pledged and deposited with the said party 1514 the second part certificates duly issued to and in the name the party of the first part or its nominees, and assigned by or them in blank, with irrevocable power to transfer the same, re resenting preferred and common stock of the Central Pacific Railw Company to the following amounts, respectively; that is to say:

1. Preferred stock to the amount at its face value of twelve m lion dollars ($12,000,000).

2. Common stock to the amount, at its face value, of sixty-sev million two hundred and seventy-four thousand two hundred dolla ($67,274,200).

The said certificates so pledged and deposited with the party of t second part are to be held by the said party of the second part its successors in this trust, subject to the reservations, terms, and co ditions hereinafter expressed, upon trust for the benefit of the se eral persons and corporations who shall be or become holders, respe tively, of any of the bonds issued or to be issued hereunder by t party of the first part or its successors to secure to such holde equally and without preference of one over another, by reason priority of time of issue thereof or otherwise, the due and punctu payment of the said bonds and the interest thereon as it sh 1515 become due, according to the tenor and effect of the said bon and the interest coupons attached thereto.

Second. The said party of the first part further covenants a agress that it will, and its successors and assigns shall, in like manne from time to time, pledge and deposit with the said party of the s ond part, or its successors in this trust, further certificates issued and in the name of the party of the first part, or its successors or or their nominees, and assigned by it or them in blank with ir vocable power to transfer the same, representing preferred stock the said Central Pacific Railway Company, not exceeding in the gregate eight million dollars ($8,000,000), when the same shall ha been delivered to the party of the first part, or its successors assigns, from time to time, in consideration of the issue hereunder said party of the first part, or its successors, of bonds not exceed the like amount, as provided in clauses 2 and 3 of article third of this indenture, such deposits to be made promptly from time to time as soon as practicable after the acquisition of such preferred stock by the party of the first part, or its successors or assigns, the same to be held by the said party of the second part and its suc-1516 cessors in this trust for the uses and purposes and upon the trusts and subject to the reservations, terms, and conditions set forth and declared in this indenture.

Third. The party of the second part and its successors in the trust hereby created is and are to authenticate and certify as issued hereunder, and deliver to the party of the first part, its successors or assigns, or upon its or their order, bonds of the party of the first part or its successors, in the forms or substantially the forms above prescribed to the amounts and upon the conditions hereinafter stated, and not otherwise, that is to say:

1. Bonds to the amount, at their face value, of twenty-eight million eight hundred and eighteen thousand five hundred dollars ($28,818,500), simultaneously with the deposit with the trustee hereunder of the certificates referred to in article first hereof, representing twelve million dollars ($12,000,000), par value, preferred stock, and sixty-seven million two hundred and seventy-four thousand two hundred dollars ($67,274,200) par value, common stock, of the said Central Pacific Railway Company.

2. Bonds to the further amount of three million dollars
1517 ($3,000,000), at their face value, to be reserved by the party of the first part, or its successors, (a) to be used to provide additional funds, if required, for the payment from time to time of any of the twenty promissory notes for $2,940,635.78 each, heretofore delivered to the United States under a settlement agreement between the United States of America, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and Messrs. Speyer & Co., dated February 1, 1899; or (b) when such notes shall have been paid, to be applied at their market value to provide for payment for, or the reimbursement of, the cost of betterments and additions to the properties of the Central Pacific Railway Company, covered by the mortgages securing its first refunding and three and one-half per cent mortgage bonds, as such cost shall be certified by the president or vice president and chief engineer of the Central Pacific Railway Company.

3. Bonds to the further amount of five million dollars ($5,000,000), at their face value, to be reserved by the party of the first part, or its successors, to be applied at their market value to provide for payment for, or reimbursement of, the cost of betterments and additions to the said properties of the Central Pacific Railway Company, as such cost shall be certified by the president or vice president

1518 and chief engineer of the said railway company; but the amount of such additional bonds so to be applied under claus 3 hereof shall not at any time exceed at their face value two hundred thousand dollars per annum from the date of this indenture.

When and as any such bonds are issued by said party of the firs part, or its successors, under clause 2 or 3 hereof, the like amount at their par value of preferred stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company are to be received by it or them in consideration therefor and are to be forthwith deposited with the trustee hereunder, to be held by the said trustee for the uses and purposes and upon the trusts and subject to the reservations, terms, and conditions set forth and declared in this indenture.

The party of the first part hereby covenants and agrees with the party of the second part and with the holders of the bonds intended to be secured by this indenture that the said bonds and their proceeds shall be used and applied only to the objects and purposes above specified.

All the above bonds authenticated in compliance with the provisions of this indenture shall be equally secured hereby with-1519 out regard to the time or times when the said bonds shall have been actually issued or otherwise, and without any discrimination or preference of one over another.

Any of the foregoing bonds from time to time, at the option of the party of the first part or its successors, may be executed, authenticated, and certified originally either as coupon bonds or as registered bonds, but the aggregate amount of the bonds issued and outstanding under this indenture shall never at any one time exceed the principal sum of thirty-six million eight hundred and nineteen thousand dollars ($36,819,000).

Only such bonds as shall bear thereon endorsed a certificate of the trustee hereunder by it duly executed under the hand of its president or a vice president thereof shall be secured by this indenture or shall be entitled to any lien or benefit thereunder, and every such certificate of the said trustee upon any bond executed in behalf of the party of the first part, or its successors, shall be conclusive evidence that the bond so certified has been duly issued hereunder and is entitled to the benefit of the trust hereby created.

Before certifying or delivering any coupon bond hereby secured the trustee hereunder shall cut off and cancel all coupons 1520 thereof then matured, and the said Trustee shall not certify or deliver any registered bond bearing interest from any date more than six months prior to such certification or delivery.

Whenever any coupon bond or bonds issued under and secured by this indenture, together with all unmatured coupons thereto belonging, shall be surrendered for exchange for registered bonds, party of the first part or its successors shall issue, and the said trustee shall certify and deliver, in exchange for such coupon bond or bonds, a like amount of registered bonds without coupons. Such registered bonds shall be for $1,000 or for such multiples thereof as, from time to time, the party of the first part or its successors, may prescribe, and shall bear interest at the same rate as the surrendered coupon bonds and from the date of the last matured coupon thereof. In every case of such exchange the said trustee forthwith shall cancel the surrendered bond or bonds and coupons, and shall deliver the same to the party of the first part or its successors.

Whenever any such registered bond shall be surrendered for transfer, the party of the first part or its successors shall issue, and the said trustee shall certify and deliver, to the transferee, upon 1521 surrender and cancellation of the bond or bonds transferred, a like amount of new registered bonds for $1,000, or for such multiples of $1,000 as the party of the first part or its successors, from time to time, may authorize, and bearing interest at the same rate as the surrendered registered bond or bonds, but no registered bond may be converted into a coupon bond.

For any exchange of coupon bonds for registered bonds, and for any transfer of registered bonds without coupons, the party of the first part or its successors, at its or their option, may make a charge not exceeding one dollar for each new registered bond issued upon such exchange or transfer.

Upon surrender by the party of the first part, or its successors, to the trustee for cancellation of any coupon or registered bonds issued hereunder and secured hereby, with a request that bonds be issued hereunder for the like amount at a reduced rate of interest, the trustee shall certify and deliver to the party of the first part or its successors bonds issued hereunder and secured hereby to the amount at their face value of the bonds so surrendered, and carrying interest at such lower rate of interest than four per cent per annum, payable semiannually, as the party of the first part or its successors 1522 may prescribe in that behalf, and the new bonds so certified and delivered shall be entitled to share in the security of these presents with the like effect as if they had been bonds originally issued under this mortgage.

In case any coupon bond issued hereunder, with the coupons thereto appertaining, or any registered bond without coupons, shall become mutilated or be destroyed the party of the first part or its successors, in its or their discretion, may issue, and thereupon the said trustee shall certify and deliver a new bond of like tenor and date, bearing the same distinguishing number, in exchange and substitution for and upon cancellation of the mutilated coupon bond and its coupons or the mutilated registered bond, or in lieu of and substitution for the coupon bond and its coupons or the registered bond so destroyed upon receipt of satisfactory evidence of the destruction of such coupon bond and its coupons or of such registered bond and upon receipt also of satisfactory indemnity.

Fourth. The party of the first part and its successors is and are to have the right, at its or their option, to redeem the bonds issued hereunder at par and accrued interest thereon upon giving 1523 previous notice of its or their intention so to do, by publication at least twice a month for three successive months in one newspaper in New York and one newspaper in London, England, the first such publication to be at least six months prior to the date at which such bonds are called for redemption, and the interest upon such bonds shall cease at the time for which the same shall have been so called for redemption, unless the party of the first part or its successors shall thereafter make default in the payment of said bonds at the rate above prescribed upon presentation thereof for that purpose.

Fifth. The party of the first part also covenants with the party of the second part that the party of the first part, its successors or assigns, shall and will punctually pay to the holders of the bonds aforesaid intended to be secured hereby the interest thereon when and as the same shall become due and payable according to the terms and conditions in the said bonds and coupons set forth and contained, and shall and will also, when the principal sums of the said bonds shall according to the provisions thereof become due and payable, fully and entirely pay, satisfy, and discharge the whole of said bonds, both principal and interest.

Sixth. Until default shall be made in the payment of the 1524 principal or interest of the bonds authenticated hereinunder and intended to be secured hereby, or some of them, the party of the second part, and its successors in this trust, shall permit and suffer the party of the first part, its successors and assigns, to retain all the authority, powers, rights, and privileges belonging or incident to the stock hereby pledged or agreed to be pledged or to the ownership thereof not inconsistent with the rights of the party of the second part, or its successors in this trust, as herein expressed.

And it is likewise an express condition of this indenture that until default shall be made in the payment of the principal or interest of the bonds authenticated hereunder and intended to be secured hereby, or some of them, the preferred and common stock of the said Central Pacific Railway Company pledged by the party of the first part, or its successors, with the party of the second part, or its successors, in trust upon the trusts herein declared, shall remain or be registered in the name of the said party of the first part, or its successors or its or their nominees or assigns provided the certificates representing such stock assigned in blank, with irrevccable power of transfer executed by the registered 1525 owners, shall be deposited with the party of the second part, or its successors in this trust, under and subject to the terms and conditions of this trust, the party of the first part, or other registered owners of such deposited stocks being entitled to have the same transferred upon the books of the Central Pacific Railway Company to such persons or parties as may be designated by it or them, provided arrangements satisfactory to the party of the second part, or its successors in this trust, are made for securing the deposit hereunder with the party of the second part, or its successors in this trust, of the new certificates representing such transferred stocks assigned in blank, with irrevocable power of transfer executed by the registered owner or owners; and the person or persons, corporation or corporations, in whose name the said stock shall be registered shall have and enjoy all the rights, powers, and privileges of a stockholder with respect to the said shares of stock, including the voting power thereon, and the right to collect and receive any and all amounts which may from time to time be paid on account of dividends upon either class of the said stock or otherwise in respect thereof, except by way of distribution of capital, and shall be entitled to take any and all proceedings which the party of the 1526 first part, or its successors or assigns, may deem requisite for the protection of its or their rights and interests under or in respect of the said stock.

Seventh. The party of the first part further covenants that, while the bonds issued hereunder remain outstanding, neither the preferred nor the common stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company shall be increased beyond twenty million dollars ($20,000,000) par value of preferred stock and sixty-seven million two hundred and seventy-five thousand five hundred dollars ($67,275,500) par value of common stock, unless arrangements have been made for depositing hereunder (simultaneously with the issue of such increase of such stock) the same proportionate part of such increase of each class of stock as the stock of such class theretofore covered hereby was of the whole outstanding stock of such class as it existed before such increase, and the said Central Pacific Railway Company shall not be merged or consolidated with any other railroad company without the consent of the holders of a majority in amount of the bonds issued hereunder and then outstanding.

Eighth. While any of the bonds issued under this indenture 1527 are outstanding no new mortgage other than the first refunding mortgage and three and one-half per cent mortgage of the Central Pacific Railway Company dated August 1st, 1899, shall be made of the properties covered by such mortgages (except to refund the first refunding mortgage bonds and three and one-half per cent mortgage bonds secured thereby or either of such issues), and the party of the first part agrees that, while any of the bonds issued under this indenture are outstanding, it will not, nor shall its successors or assigns, vote the stocks pledged hereunder or permit the same to be voted in favor of any new mortgage except as aforesaid, nor as owner of such deposited stocks will it assent thereto.

Ninth. The existing lease of the properties of the Central Pacific Railway Company to the party of the first part shall terminate in case the pledged stocks above referred to shall be sold under the provisions of this indenture in reference to the sale of such stocks in consequence of default of the party of the first part hereunder; and while any bonds are outstanding hereunder the party of the first part will not as the owner of such pledged stocks vote for or assent to any other lease of such properties, unless such lease shall have 1528 been approved by the holders of a majority in amount of the bonds outstanding hereunder, or shall contain a provision terminating the same in case such pledged stocks shall be so sold.

Tenth. In case default shall be made in the payment of the principal or interest of any of the bonds authenticated hereunder and intended to be secured hereby, and such default shall continue for six months, or in case of default under the provisions of article eighth hereof, then and in that event, and while such default shall thereafter continue, the party of the second part, or its successors in this trust, shall be entitled to transfer the deposited stock into its own name and to receive (when and as the same shall be paid) all amounts which may from time to time be paid on account of dividends upon the stock pledged hereunder or otherwise in respect thereof, and shall be entitled to exercise the voting power thereon, and otherwise exercise the rights, powers, and privileges of a holder of such stock and shall be entitled to take any and all proceedings which the party of the second part, or its successors in this trust, may deem requisite for the protection of its or their rights and interests under or in respect of the said stock.

1529 Eleventh. In case default shall be made in the payment of the principal or interest of the bonds authenticated hereunder and intended to be secured hereby, and such default shall continue for six months, or in case of default under the provisions of article eighth hereof, then and in that event the party of the second part and its successors in this trust, is and are hereby authorized and empowered, at the request of the holders of one-fourth in amount of the said bonds then outstanding, to resort to any proceedings, legal or equitable, that may be deemed necessary or expedient for the enforcement of the lien hereby created upon all or any part of the preferred or common stock pledged under the provisions of this trust. All moneys collected under the provisions of this or the preceding article of this indenture shall be applied in the manner provided in the next article of this indenture.

Twelfth. It shall also be lawful for the said party of the second part and its successors in this trust, in case default shall be made as aforesaid by the party of the first part and continued as aforesaid, upon like request of the holders of one-fourth in amount of the bonds issued and authenticated under the provisions of this indenture then outstanding (such default still continuing), to sell 1530 at public sale in the city of New York (after advertising notice of the time and place of such sale not less than once a week for six consecutive weeks in one or more daily newspapers published in the said city of New York) all the stocks hereby pledged which shall then be in its or their possession as trustee or trustees under the provisions hereof, or such portions thereof as may be necessary to pay the outstanding bonds of the party of the first part or its successors secured hereby, and all arrears of interest thereon, and all expenses attending as well the execution of this trust as the said sale, and any other costs and charges that may be necessarily incurred in consequence of such sale; such sale to be made in such lots or parcels as the party of the second part, or its successors in trust, may deem most beneficial. The party of the second part, or its successors in trust, may adjourn the sale of the whole or any part of the said stock from time to time in its or their discretion, and may make sale thereof at such adjourned date without further advertisement, and may make all necessary deliveries and transfers to the purchaser or purchasers, discharged from all and every the trusts hereby created, and without liability on the part of the pur-1531 chaser or purchasers to see to the application of the purchase money.

After deducting from the proceeds of such sale or sales the costs and expenses thereof, or which may have been necessarily incurred thereby, and sufficient moneys to indemnify itself or themselves for all advances which may have been made, and against all liabilities which may have been incurred, in the execution of this trust, as well as a reasonable compensation for its or their own services, the said party of the second part, or its successors in the trust, shall apply the residue of the said proceeds, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to or towards the payment and discharge, with pro rata equality, of the principal and interest which shall then be due and unpaid upon all and singular of the said bonds issued by the party of the first part or its successors hereunder, and then remaining outstanding and unpaid, and without preference of interest over principal or principal over interest, and so that no priority or preference shall be given to any bond which shall have been issued under and be secured by this indenture, and be then due and outstanding over any other bond so issued and secured; and if any surplus of such moneys shall thereafter remain, then the said 1532 party of the second part, or its successors in trust, shall pay over such balance of the trust funds in its or their hands, and transfer and assign any residue of the trust estate or property unto the said party of the first part, its successors or assigns. Any and every sale of preferred or common stock made pursuant to the foregoing power shall absolutely bar and foreclose all right, interest, and equity of redemption of the party of the first part, or its successors or assigns, in or to the stock so sold; and it is hereby expressly understood and agreed that in the event of any sale of the pledged stock pursuant to the provisions of this article, the party of the second part, or its successors in this trust, may declare the principal of all the bonds issued by the party of the first part, or its successors hereunder, and then unpaid and outstanding, to be due and payable forthwith, and thereupon the same shall become immediately due and payable, anything in the said bonds contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding. And if it shall occur that after the exhaustion of all the stock hereby pledged as a security for the payment of the said bonds, or which shall be subject to the provisions of this trust, there shall be a deficiency in the payment of 1533 the principal or interest due on any of the bonds issued and authenticated under this indenture, then the party of the first part and its successors shall remain liable for the payment of such deficiency, and the said party of the second part and its successors in this trust is, and are hereby, authorized to take such further proceedings in law or equity as it or they may be advised to recover the same.

Thirteenth. In case default shall be made in the payment of the principal or interest of any of the bonds authenticated hereunder and intended to be secured hereby, and such default shall continue for six months, then and in that event, upon the written request of the holders of one-fourth in amount of the bonds hereby secured and then outstanding, the party of the second part, by notice in writing delivered to the party of the first part, shall declare the principal of all bonds hereby secured and then outstanding to be due and payable immediately; and upon any such declaration the same shall become and be due and payable immediately, anything in this indenture or in said bonds contained to the contrary notwithstanding. This provision, however, is subject to the condition that at any time after the principal of said bonds shall have been so declared to be due and payable and prior to the sale of the stock 1534 pledged hereunder the holders of a majority in amount of the bonds hereby secured and then outstanding, by written notice to the party of the first part and to the party of the second part, may rescind and annul such declaration and its consequences; but no such rescission and annulment shall extend to or shall affect any subsequent default or impair any right consequent thereon.

Fourteenth. The party of the first part from time to time will pay and discharge all taxes, assessments, and governmental charges lawfully imposed upon the shares of stock at any time pledged hereunder and subject to the lien hereof, or upon any part thereof, or upon the income and profits thereof, the lien of which upon such shares would be prior to the lien hereof, so that the priority of this indenture shall be fully preserved in respect of such shares; provided, however, that nothing contained in this section shall require the party of the first part to pay any such tax, assessment, or charge so long as the party of the first part in good faith shall contest the validity thereof.

Fifteenth. The party of the first part agrees to use its best efforts to maintain and preserve the corporate existence of the Central 1535 Pacific Railway Company; and for such purposes it may from time to time sell, assign, transfer, and deliver so many shares of the stock of said company as may be necessary to qualify persons to act as directors of, or in any other official relation to, said company.

Sixteenth. In case of dissolution of the party of the first part or the sale of its properties or reorganization of its affairs the deposited stocks may be dealt with and disposed of in such manner as may be agreed upon by the party of the first part, its successors or assigns, and the trustee hereunder, or by the party of the first part, its successors or assigns, and the holders of a majority in amount of the bonds then outstanding hereunder and secured hereby; but all fruits and proceeds of such dealing with or disposition of said deposited stocks shall be held by the Trustee hereunder subject to the terms and conditions hereof; provided, however, that any assessments, contributions, or cash payments made in respect of such deposited stocks by or on behalf of the party of the first part, its successors or assigns, or the trustee hereunder or the holders of such bonds shall constitute a first charge prior to the lien of these presents upon such fruits or proceeds, and shall be forthwith repaid therefrom 1536 or from the sale of such portions thereof as may be requisite to provide for such repayment.

Seventeenth. In case of the resignation, insolvency, neglect, or incapacity to act of the said party of the second part or any successor in this trust the holders of a majority in interest of the bonds issued hereunder then outstanding may select or designate some other trust company or corporation authorized to hold and execute trusts of this nature, and the company or corporation so selected shall be thereupon entitled to receive and hold the pledged stocks belonging to this trust upon the trusts herein mentioned and declared and shall have all the rights and powers and be subject to all the duties expressed in this indenture. In case of a failure of the bondholders to fill such vacancy in the manner above prescribed the president for the time being of the party of the first part or its successors shall make a temporary appointment for such vacancy, which shall continue until the holders of a majority in interest of said outstanding bonds shall have designated a new trustee to act hereunder. When holders of a majority in interest of the said outstanding bonds shall by an instrument in writing executed by themselves or their attorneys in fact designate a new trustee under this indenture the estates, 1537 powers, rights, and privileges of any trustee hereunder under any such temporary appointment shall immediately cease and determine and be transferred to and vest in the new trustee so designated, and such temporary trustee shall, upon request of the new trustee, execute and deliver any and all such assignments, transfers, or other instruments in writing as shall be requisite therefor, and thereafter such new trustee shall hold such estates, rights, powers, and privileges with like effect as if it had been designated as the party of the second part hereunder.

Eighteenth. Any and all costs, charges, and expenses incurred in or in respect of, or in connection with the execution of this trust by or on behalf of the said party of the second part, or its successors in this trust, or for which the said party of the second part, or its successors in this trust, shall be or become in anywise liable or responsible, shall be borne and defrayed by the said party of the first part, and said party of the first part undertakes, covenants, and agrees, for itself and its successors and assigns, that it and they will, upon demand, pay all such costs, charges, and expenses, including therein just and reasonable compensation to said party of the second 1538 part, or its successors in this trust, for such services as it or they may be called upon to render in or about or in respect of the trust hereby created.

Nineteenth. The party of the second part hereby accepts the trust created and declared by this indenture, and shall and will, at the request of the party of the first part or its successors, in accordance with the provisions of article third hereof, but not otherwise, certify the bonds intended to be hereby secured, and deliver the same to the party of the first part or its successors. But it is hereby expressly understood and agreed that neither the said party of the second part nor any successor in the trust hereby created shall incur any responsibility or liability whatever by reason of permitting or allowing the said party of the first part, or its successors or assigns, to exercise the rights, privileges, and authority hereinbefore reserved to said party of the first part, its successors or assigns, in regard to stocks that now are, or may under the terms hereof become, subject hereto; and it is hereby further provided that neither the party of the second part nor any successor in the trust hereby created shall incur any responsibility or liability whatever, except for the 1539 negligent, willful, or intentional breaches by such trustee of the trust herein expressed and contained; and neither the said party of the second part nor any successor in this trust shall at any time be bound or required to undertake any proceeding at law or in equity, or otherwise, for the protection of the bondholders, involving expenditures of, or liability for, the payment of money, unless, if it shall see fit to require it, adequate indemnity against such liability or outlay be furnished by the bondholders asking such action or proceeding.

Twentieth. The said party of the first part shall from time to time execute any further instruments or assurances necessary or requisite to carry out the purposes hereof.

Twenty-first. Any request or other instrument required by this indenture to be signed and executed by bondholders may be in any number of concurrent instruments of similar tenor, and may be signed and executed by such bondholders in person or by agents appointed in writing. Proof of the execution of any such request or other instrument, or of a writing appointing any such agent, and of the holding by any person of coupon bonds transferable by delivery, shall be sufficient for any purpose of this indenture if made in the following manner:

1540 The fact and date of the execution by any person of any such request or other instrument of writing may be proved by the certificate of a notary public or other officer authorized to take acknowledgments of deeds to be recorded in the city of New York that the person signing such request or other instrument acknowledged to him the execution thereof, or by the affidavit of a witness of such execution. The amount of coupon bonds transferable by delivery held by any person executing any such request or other instrument as a bondholder, and the amounts and issue numbers of the bonds held by such person and the date of his holding the same, may be proved by a certificate executed by any trust company, bank, or bankers, or other depositary, wherever situated, if such certificate shall be deemed by the trustee to be satisfactory, showing that at the time therein mentioned such person had on deposit with such depositary the bonds therein described. The ownership of registered bonds, or of registered bonds without coupons, shall be proved by the company's registers of such bonds. Such proof shall be prima facie evidence in favor of the trustee with regard to any action by it taken under such request or other instrument. The bearer of any

istered as hereinbefore authorized, and the bearer of any coupon for interest on any such bond, whether the same shall be registered or not, may be deemed and treated by the company and the trustee as the absolute owner of such bond or coupon, as the case may be, for the purpose of receiving payment thereof, and for all other purposes; and no notice to the contrary shall affect the company or the trustee.

Twenty-second. In case the trustee shall have proceeded to enforce any right under this indenture by foreclosure or otherwise, and such proceeding shall have been discontinued or abandoned because of any waiver or for any other reason, or shall have been determined adversely to the trustee, then and in every such case the party of the first part and the trustee shall be restored to their former position and rights hereunder in respect of the pledged stock, and all rights, remedies, and powers of the trustee shall continue as though no such proceedings had been taken.

Twenty-third. The company covenants and agrees that it will not, directly or indirectly, extend or assent to the extension of the time for payment of any coupon or claim for interest upon any bonds secured hereby, and that it will not, directly or indirectly, be a 1542 party to any arrangement therefor by purchasing or funding said coupons or claims for interest or registered bonds, or in any other manner. In case the payment of any such coupon or claim for interest should be so extended by or with the consent of the company, such coupon or claim for interest so extended shall not be entitled in case of default hereunder to the benefit or security of this indenture, except subject to the prior payment in full of the principal of all bonds issued hereunder and outstanding and of all coupons and claims for interest on such bonds the payment of which has not been so extended, the intention of this agreement being to prevent any accumulation after maturity of coupons or claims for interest upon registered bonds.

Twenty-fourth. The company will not at any time insist upon or plead, or in any manner whatever claim or take the benefit or advantage of, any stay or extension law now or at any time hereafter in force, nor will it claim, take, or insist on any benefit or advantage from any law now or hereafter in force providing for the valuation or appraisement of the pledged properties, or any part thereof, prior to any sale or sales thereof to be made pursuant to any provision herein contained or to the decree of any court of competent 1543 jurisdiction; nor after any such sale or sales will it claim or exercise any right under any statute enacted by any State to redeem the property so sold or any part thereof; and it hereby expressly waives all benefit and advantage of any such law or laws, and it covenants that it will not hinder, delay, or impede the exertion of any power herein granted and delegated to the trustee, but that it will suffer and permit the execution of every such power as though no such law or laws had been made or enacted.

Twenty-fifth. No holder of any bond or coupon hereby secured shall have any right to institute any suit, action, or proceeding in equity or at law for the foreclosure of this indenture, or for the execution of any trust thereof, or for the appointment of a receiver, or for any other remedy hereunder, unless such holder previously shall have given to the trustee written notice of default hereunder and of the continuance thereof, as hereinbefore provided; nor unless, also, the holders of twenty-five per cent in amount of the bonds hereby secured then outstanding shall have made written request upon the trustee, and shall have afforded to it reasonable opportunity either to proceed to exercise the powers hereinbefore granted or to 1544 institute such action, suit, or proceeding in its own name; nor unless, also, they shall have offered to the trustee adequate security and indemnity against the costs, expenses, and liabilities to be incurred therein or thereby; and such notification, request, and offer of indemnity are hereby declared, in every such case, at the option of the trustee, to be conditions precedent to the execution of the powers and trusts of this indenture and to any action or cause of action for foreclosure or for the appointment of a receiver or for any other remedy hereunder; it being understood and intended that no one or more holders of bonds and coupons shall have any right in any manner whatever to affect, disturb, or prejudice the lien of this indenture by his or their action, or to enforce any right hereunder, except in the manner herein provided, and that all proceedings at law or in equity shall be instituted, had, and maintained in the manner herein provided, and for the equal benefit of all holders of such outstanding bonds and coupons.

Twenty-sixth. Except as herein expressly provided to the contrary, no remedy herein conferred upon or reserved to the trustee, or to the holders of bonds hereby secured, is intended to be exclusive of any other remedy, but each and every such remedy shall be 1545 cumulative, and shall be in addition to every other remedy given hereunder or now or hereafter existing at law or in equity or by statute.

Twenty-seventh. No delay or omission of the trustee, or of any holder of bonds hereby secured, to exercise any right or power accruing upon any default continuing as aforesaid shall impair any such right or power, or shall be construed to be a waiver of any such default or an acquiescence therein; and every power and remedy given hereunder to the trustee or to the bondholders may be exercised from time to time, and as often as may be deemed expedient, by the trustee, or by the bondholders severally and respectively.

Twenty-eighth. If the principal and interest of the bonds issued by the party of the first part, or its successors hereunder, and intended to be secured hereby, shall be paid to the holders thereof when and as the said principal and interest shall become due, according to the tenor and effect of the said bonds and in accordance with the provisions of this indenture, thereupon the trustee hereunder shall satisfy and discharge the lien of this indenture, and all the preferred and common stock hereby pledged or agreed to be pledged which shall then remain in the hands of the said trustee, and any residue 1546 of the trust estate or property, shall at once be transferred and delivered to the said party of the first part, its successors or assigns, and upon such transfer and delivery thereof the said trustee shall be thenceforth discharged from further duties under this trust.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have caused their respective corporate seals, attested by their respective secretaries or assistant secretaries, to be hereunto affixed, and these presents to be signed on their behalf by their respective presidents or vice presidents on the day and year first above written.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PETITIONER, vs. SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY ET AL., DEFENDANTS.	No. 3575 (420). In Equity.

To the clerk of said court:

I hereby certify that the above-entitled cause now pending in said court is a suit in equity brought by the United States against Southern Pacific Company et al., under the act of Congress entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890; and that said suit is in my opinion a case of general public importance.

I therefore request that in conformity with the act of Congress approved February 11, 1903 (32 Stat., 823), as amended by the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 854), providing for the expedition of suits brought under the above-mentioned act of Congress of July 2, 1890, you will file this certificate among the records of the above-entitled cause, and immediately furnish a copy thereof to each of the circuit judges of the Eighth Circuit, to the end that said case shall be given precedence over others and in every way expedited, and be assigned for hearing at the earliest practicable date before not less than three judges of said circuit, as provided by the said act of February 11, 1903, as amended June 25, 1910.

Hon. EDWARD F. MCCLENNAN,
Special Assistant to the Attorney General, 161 Devonshire St., Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of June 7, 1915, has been received and submitted to the circuit judges. They will hear the case of United States vs. Southern Pacific Company and the Central Pacific Company at St. Louis on the first day of December, 1915. I return to you the enclosed stipulation, for the hearing which you sent me. It should be filed with the clerk of the United States District Court at Utah together with the letter I send you fixing the date of the hearing.

Yours, truly,

WALTER H. SANBORN,
U. S. Circuit Judge.

Rec'd & lodged June 17/15. J. R. L.

2329 In the District Court of the United States, District of Utah.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PETITIONER, vs. SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, et al., defendants. } In Equity No. 3573. No. 420.

For the Government: Mr. E. F. McClennen, special assistant to the Attorney General, and Mr. James W. Orr, special assistant to the Attorney General. The Attorney General, Mr. C. Carroll Todd, assistant to the Attorney General, and Mr. Edward E. Gann, special assistant to the Attorney General, were with him on the briefs.

For the defendants: Mr. Garrett McAnerny and Mr. Peter F. Dunne. Mr. J. P. Blair and Mr. Wm. F. Herrin were with them on the briefs. Mr. Perry D. Trafford filed a memorandum for the Union Trust Company of New York.

Before SANBORN, HOOK, and GARLAND, Circuit Judges.

HOOK, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit by the United States to enjoin and dissolve an alleged monopoly and combination in restraint of trade and commerce formed by a lease to the Southern Pacific Company until January 1, 1984, of the railroads of the Central Pacific Railway Company, and by the acquisition by the former company of 2330 all the stock of the latter, in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890.

It is also charged that the control so obtained by the Southern Pacific Company is contrary to the Pacific Railroad acts of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat., 489), July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 356), and June 20, 1870 (18 Stat., 111).

The needs of the case do not require a history in detail of the origin and growth of the various railroads which the Government regards as composing two independent systems that should be kept separate and competitive. It will be sufficient to refer generally to the two companies and their respective constituents and predecessors inclusively, as the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific, and to speak more precisely only when necessary. We may say in the beginning that the location and physical interdependence of the lines of these companies in California and Oregon give the distinct appearance of a single system of railroads. So clearly is this so of the lines in California and Oregon north of Sacramento that when an attempt was made in 1913, in the matter of the dissolution of combination of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, also to divorce the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific, it was generally agreed they should be left with the latter company. It is equally clear as regards the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific lines in California south from Sacramento and San Francisco. Those of the Central Pacific appear on the map as natural links and parts of the Southern Pacific system. Practically all of the spurs, branches, and tributary feeders of the Central Pacific lines are the property of the Southern Pacific.

2331 It is only when we consider the Central Pacific line from San Francisco to Ogden, Utah, on the one hand, and the Southern Pacific main line from San Francisco through Yuma and El Paso to New Orleans on the other that the propriety of their common control seems in any degree debatable. This aspect of the railroad map is confirmed in great measure by the history of the construction of the various roads. The Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, the ancestor of the present Central Pacific, was incorporated in 1861. Up to 1870 it had constructed or acquired and put in operation the lines from San Francisco to Ogden, from Niles to San Jose in California, and from Roseville to Chico in the same state. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated in 1865, and in 1870 the construction of the Southern Pacific lines was actively commenced. There was not much of importance of the Southern Pacific before that year. In 1870 and prior thereto the Central Pacific was dominated and controlled by Leland Stanford, Charles Crocker, C. P. Huntington, and Mark Hopkins, and in that year, if not earlier, the same group of men were in control of the Southern Pacific. For at least fifteen years thereafter and during the most important constructive period of the Southern Pacific a common control and dominance over both companies was exercised by them or the representatives of their estates. Parts of the lines of both companies were built by the same construction companies owned by Mr. Stanford and his associates, under the same superintendence and with the same equipment.

2332 The primary financing of the enterprise was done by them. The Central Pacific was employed as the principal or parent company and the Southern Pacific as its subsidiary, or rather as the corporate instrumentality for the expansion of its system. Except as to corporate title and bookkeeping there were generally the aspects of a single enterprise. In this respect the conditions were not unlike those which have characterized the growth of many of the important railroad systems of the country in which, for necessity or convenience of financing and in some instances because of local laws, separate corporate organizations were utilized. Between 1870 and 1883, as fast as the Southern Pacific lines were built from Goshen, California, the terminus of the Central Pacific, south to Los Angeles, thence eastward to Yuma and across Arizona and New Mexico and into Texas, they were turned over by completed sections to the Central Pacific for operation. Up to 1885 all the Southern Pacific railroads, including the main line to New Orleans (with an unimportant exception), were officially announced, advertised and operated by the Central Pacific as part of its system. The legal relation between the two companies was expressed in executed leases, and the system was known as "Central Pacific Railroad and Leased Lines." In February, 1885, the Southern Pacific having become the major factor the relation was reversed, and the Central Pacific leased all its railroads to the Southern Pacific (Company of Kentucky) for ninety-nine years from April 1, 1885. The old leases of the Southern Pacific lines to the Central Pacific were surrendered by the same instrument.

2333 This was five years before the passage of the antitrust act.

In December, 1893, another lease from the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific was executed, modifying the terms of the lease of 1885 in matters not important here, and though the older instrument was canceled in terms, in legal effect the relation of lessor and lessee continued unbroken. The term of this last lease is until January 1, 1984. Whatever immunity or exemption from the operation of the antitrust act attended the proprietary relations existing prior to its passage was not destroyed by the change in the position of the parties effected by the lease of 1885. Nor did the amendment of that lease in immaterial respects in 1893 create a new starting point. It is not material that the amendment was by a revision substituted for the old instrument instead of by a separate supplement. The applicability of the anti-trust act can not be made to rest on such considerations. It is also argued that the leases mentioned were not authorized by the statutes of California. We need not consider that. We do not think the antitrust act picks up the laws of the States for original enforcement. It deals with actual conditions affecting interstate commerce whether they are authorized by those laws or not. In the case before us there was from 1870 an existing, continuous, common control of the railroads of both companies created by leases executed and observed by the parties and unquestioned by the State. This was the situation when the Central Pacific debt to the United States was settled in 1899 pursuant to the act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat., 659) and when the Southern 2334 Pacific acquired all the stock of the present Central Pacific which was then organized to succeed the old company.

In United States v. Union Pacific, 226 U. S., 61, 85, the court said:

"We take it therefore that it may be regarded as settled, applying the statute as construed in the decisions of this court, that a combination which places railroads engaged in interstate commerce in such relation as to create a single dominating control in one corporation whereby natural and existing competition in interstate commerce is unduly restricted or suppressed is within the condemnation of the act."

Prior to the stock acquisition in 1899 and since there never was a time in our opinion when there was in any real substantial sense "a natural and existing competition in interstate commerce" between the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific within the intent of the antitrust act. Prior to 1870 the Southern Pacific lines were a negligible factor as a competitor in such commerce, and thereafter the situation has been as we have described. That competition of the kind mentioned might now result from an enforced independence of the two companies and a separation of their railroads may be true, but we do not think the statute was intended to create competition by destroying a proprietary relation formed long before its passage and by the very means of which a railroad system has been brought into existence.

That the Southern Pacific control of the Central Pacific
2335 was not regarded as contrary to the statutes of the United States appears from the proceedings under the act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat., 659). By that act a commission consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General was appointed to settle the Central Pacific debt to the United States. The act provided that "any and all settlements" should be subject to the approval of the President. William McKinley was then President, and the other officials were Lyman J. Gage, Cornelius N. Bliss, and John W. Griggs. The settlement was effected as of February 1, 1899. At that time the Central Pacific debt to the United States for Government aid in the construction of the lines between Sacramento and Ogden and Sacramento and San Jose amounted to $58,812,715.48. More than half of this amount was accrued interest, and it was secured by a statutory lien on the two bond-aided lines subject to prior first mortgages. In addition the Central Pacific bonded debt then amounted to $57,471,000, most if not all of which was secured by first mortgages upon its various lines of road. It had outstanding $67,275,500 of stock. Before stating the details of the settlement the conditions in the light of which the statute authorizing it was passed may be briefly mentioned. Congress had been fully aware for many years of the relations between the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific. As early as 1886 the President transmitted to the House of Representatives a copy of the lease of 1885, and from that time on the connection of the two companies was frequently the subject of 2336 official and legislative communications and reports. In February, 1890, a copy of the lease was laid before the Senate with the report of a committee in which it was said: "It is manifest from the terms of their lease that any bill for the adjustment and settlement of the debt of the Central Pacific Company must, in order to be efficacious, contain provisions by which this lease and the obligations of the Southern Pacific Company under it shall become security to the United States, and that the consent of the Southern Pacific Company shall be obtained to such provisions of the bill."

substantially exhausted in satisfying them. They reported that among the plans suggested to them was one "That all the associated lines forming the Southern Pacific Company (and these include the Central Pacific as consolidated) become parties" to 2 per cent bonds of the United States secured by a first lien upon the consolidated properties of all the lines. The above is but a small part of a continuous history of legislative efforts in the years preceding the act appointing the commission. Congress was fully informed of the lease and its terms, and that in any conventional settlement the Southern Pacific could not be ignored but had to be reckoned with. Agreement or litigation with the Southern Pacific were unavoidable alternatives, and the remedy by foreclosure of the statutory lien meant probable substantial loss. While the bills introduced in Con-2337 gress to effect a direct legislative settlement did not pass, it does not appear that the failure was due to a definite opposition of that body to the relation between the two companies. But, however that may be, the whole situation in all its angles and complications was public history, and with definite knowledge of it Congress committed the settlement to the commission. The commission was given "full power to settle the indebtedness * * * upon such terms and in such manner as may be agreed upon by them, or by a majority of them, and the owners of said railroads." The power, however, was subject to the following limitations: The Government was to receive not less than the full amount of principal and interest due it; in equal semiannual installments; with interest not less than 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually; "with such security as to said commission may seem expedient"; final payment and full discharge not to be postponed beyond ten years; all to become due upon default in any installment or interest; and if settlement was not perfected the President should proceed at once to foreclose.

No other conditions than these were prescribed.

An agreement of settlement as of February 1, 1899, was made and signed by the commissioners, the Central Pacific, and Messrs. Speyer & Co., who were managing the reorganization of that company. It was approved by the President. Contemporaneously with the consummation of the settlement the Central Pacific was reorganized under a plan that provided for a new Central Pacific company and its issue of $100,000,000 of first refunding 4 per cent mortgage bonds.

The plan also contemplated the guaranty of the bonds by 2338 the Southern Pacific and its acquisition of the stock of the new company. There was the same publicity of the details of this plan as generally attends the reorganization of important railroad systems, and the commission was advised of them in the early stages of its preparation. By the agreement of settlement the Central Pacific was to execute to the United States twenty promissory notes dated February 1, 1899, payable, respectively, on or before the expiration of each successive six months for ten years, each for the sum of $2,940,635.48, or one-twentieth of the total debt, and bearing interest at 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually. Each note contained a provision for the maturity of all upon partial default as provided in the act appointing the commission. The Central Pacific "or its successor company having title to the aforesaid railroads" was also to make an issue of 45-year 4 per cent gold bonds not exceeding $100,000,000 in all, secured by a first refunding mortgage upon all its railroads, whether bond aided or not, and all its equipment and terminals. The bonds were to be further secured by the guaranty of the Southern Pacific and were to be, as expressed in the agreement of settlement, "prior in lien to any lease of the railroads of said Central Pacific." Of these bonds, $58,820,000 were to be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as security for the twenty installment notes. In addition, Speyer & Co., reorganization managers, were within one month after the execution and delivery of the notes, to purchase from the United States without recourse the four earliest maturing and pay therefor the 2339 face amount, $11,762,543.12, and accrued interest. A proportionate amount of the collateral mortgage bonds was to go with the four notes. The above constituted the security which seemed expedient to the commission within the authority conferred by the act of Congress.

The agreement of settlement was carried out in all its details. The lease to the Southern Pacific was subordinated to the mortgage securing the new first refunding bonds by an indenture executed by that company which recited as consideration "the benefits and advantages to be derived by said party of the first part (the Southern Pacific) from the carrying out of the agreement between the United States, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and Messrs. Speyer & Co., dated February 1, 1899." On February 15, 1899, the commission reported to the House of Representatives. The report was in general terms and referred to the agreement of settlement a copy of which accompanied it. No reference to the guaranty of the Southern Pacific appeared in the report or the agreement, but the proof is convincing that the commission regarded it as a vital feature of a settlement. In the annual report of the Attorney General to the Senate and House of Representatives in November, 1899, the completion of the settlement was set out but the guaranty of the Southern Pacific was inadvertently stated as being upon the notes instead of upon the bonds securing them. With the exception of some credits which will be presently mentioned the notes held in the Treasury of the United States were paid by the checks of the Southern Pacific. That company charged the amounts to the 2340 Central Pacific upon their intercompany accounts.

The rule as to the persuasive force of an administrative construction of statutes is a familiar one and is frequently applied, but in the case before us there was more than the ordinary acts of public officers subject to legislative restraint. Here there was a commission composed of the very highest officials of the Government, specially created and charged with the adjustment of a difficult and complicated business that had for years engaged the attention of Congress. Limitations upon their power and conditions to be observed were expressly set forth in the statute but none remotely suggesting any obstacle in the antitrust act. Except as to those limitations and conditions plenary power was given them. The relations between the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific, long a matter of public history, naturally foreshadowed the engagement of the former in any adjustment of the financial condition of the latter; and additional considerations than affecting the other transcontinental railroad companies pointed the same way. So natural if not inevitable was the settlement that was made that the omission of limitations now urged is most significant. We do not say the commission was authorized to violate or to sanction the violation of the act of Congress, but the adjustment they effected necessarily involved the question of its pertinence to the business in hand. The acceptance of the guaranty of the Southern Pacific was a recognition that it had sufficient corporate interest in the Central Pacific to justify it. Without such interest its accommodation guaranty 2341 of $100,000,000 of bonds of another company would manifestly have been ultravires—a gross, indefensible excess of its corporate powers. Again, the acceptance of the guaranty implied a recognition of its possible, natural result, that is to say, the enforcement of the rights of a guarantor against the property of a debtor. The addition of the stock ownership by the Southern Pacific to its long leasehold interest did not so change the situation as to make unlawful what was not so before.

With knowledge of the settlement, and, it may be fairly presumed, of the details that were public history, Congress authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of "Any notes in his possession touching the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States," act of March 3, 1899, 30 Stat., 1245. Further, by the act of March 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1023, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized and directed to settle claims for interest growing out of transportation services for the Government "over nonbond aided lines of the Southern Pacific Company and Central Pacific Railroad Company by crediting" the amounts upon the Central Pacific installment notes. This was done. The claims were just debts of the Government, and the legislative direction to credit them due the Southern Pacific upon the indebtedness of the Central Pacific was a recognition in some degree at least of a relationship between the two companies that justified it. There was no other warrant or authority than that which arose from the proprietary position of the Southern Pacific.

It is contended by both parties that the opinion and decision 2342 of the Supreme Court in United States v. Union Pacific supra, has a decisive bearing upon the case at bar. Aside from the controlling principles of law announced by the court and a matter presently to be mentioned we do not think so. The Central Pacific was not a party to that suit, and though the relations between it and the Southern Pacific were mentioned in the opinion the references were not condemnatory, but were explanatory of the railroad situation and the movements of traffic. The court said, however, that nothing in its opinion should be considered as preventing the court below from approving or adopting a plan providing for the retention by the Union Pacific of the Central Pacific line from San Francisco to Ogden. There is a relevance here in the necessary inference that such retention by the Union Pacific would not have been regarded as contrary to the antitrust act. On the record then before the court it appeared that the Union Pacific already controlled the line from Portland, Oregon, to Granger, Wyoming, and was largely interested in the line from San Pedro, California, to Salt Lake City, Utah. The retention by the Union Pacific of the Central Pacific road from San Francisco to Ogden would have given the former company lines from the three important ports—Portland, San Francisco, and San Pedro—to connections with its main line in Utah and Wyoming. In corporate origin each of the three lines was separate and distinct from the others and from the Union Pacific in the same sense as the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific are corporately separate. With steamship connections with the Orient the three lines were theoretically at least competitors 2343 for foreign traffic destined through those ports eastward to the interior of the United States or to the Atlantic seaboard. But the control of all of them by the Union Pacific was evidently not deemed a suppression of competition sufficiently direct and appreciable to be repugnant to the antitrust act. The situation considered by the court in that case is not greatly different in its ultimate significance from the case at bar. If the antitrust act be construed to reach proprietary relations, as distinguished from those of a mere continuous operating character, formed long prior to its passage, whereby divergent or tangential lines of road to widely separated gateways or points in the currents of traffic movement are held in a single ownership or control, its enforcement accordingly would have such a destructive effect upon established, accepted railroad systems of the country that their inclusion within the intent of Congress may well be doubted.

After the decision of the Supreme Court that the combination of the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific was unlawful, those companies, to meet the suggestions of the Attorney General, incorporated in the plan to dissolve the combination provisions for the surrender by the Southern Pacific to the Union Pacific of all the Central Pacific lines except one from northern California to the northern State line and a branch therefrom into Oregon. These provisions were in excess of the mandatory requirements of the Supreme Court and their consummation depended upon the approval of the Railroad Commission of California. Upon a consideration of them the commission expressed the belief that the arrangement would "not substantially benefit the shippers of 2344 transcontinental freight either in rates or in service," and that it would be a distinct detriment to local commerce within the State. However, the commission made certain modifications and conditions as to features within its jurisdiction, but the railroad companies were unable to agree to them, and that part of the plan was abandoned. The failure to agree was followed by this suit to separate the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific, but we think the doubts of the California Commission would apply with equal force to the result now sought to be accomplished. It may be observed in this connection that this case of the Government, unlike others of similar character, finds little if any support in testimony from complaining shippers or the public generally.

Finally, it is contended that the control of the Central Pacific line from San Francisco to Ogden by the Southern Pacific is in violation of the Pacific Railroad acts. The proofs show no foundation in fact for this contention. When this suit was brought and since, the line was being maintained and operated in every particular required as a part of a continuous railroad from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast. In conjunction with the Union Pacific there were through rates, through billings and through freight, passenger and mail trains. There were no criticisms of the track, the service or the schedule. The Government and the public were being served adequately. Those statutes require physical connection with the Union Pacific to make a through line and the furnishing of 2345 equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation without discrimination of any kind. If those requirements are met it does not seem material whether they are performed by the Southern Pacific as lessee and stockholder or by the Central Pacific independently.

The petition is dismissed.

2346 CARLAND, C. J., dissenting.

It is difficult to determine from the opinion of the majority exactly upon what ground or grounds the bill in this case is dismissed. The opinion states that: "Prior to the stock acquisition in 1899 and since there never was a time, in our opinion, when there was in any real substantial sense 'a natural and existing competition in interstate commerce' between the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific within the intent of the antitrust act." * * * "That competition of the kind mentioned might now result from an enforced independence of the two companies and a separation of their railroads may be true, but we do not think the statute was intended to create competition by destroying a proprietary relation formed long before its passage and by the very means of which a railroad system has been brought into existence."

If the language first quoted means natural and existing competition in fact, then it is entirely consistent with the claim of counsel for the United States, which is that no such competition existed or could exist by reason of the common control since 1899 of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific. If the language means that there could be no competition between the two railroad systems, then the language is inconsistent with the language which follows, wherein it seems to be conceded that but for the common control there would be competition. As the breaking up of an unlawful combination does not create natural competition, but simply removes the barriers which prevent the free flow of interstate com-2347 merce, the concession that there might be competition if the combination was broken is also a concession that there is a natural competition which is suppressed by reason of the control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific.

The combination which is complained of in this case is alleged to have originated in 1899 in the acquirement of all the stock of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific. The fact that prior to the passage of the antitrust law there had been a practical control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific through a leasing arrangement in no way validates the present combination if it be unlawful.

Standard Oil Co. vs. United States, 221 U. S., 1; United States vs. American Tobacco Company, 221 U. S., 106; United States vs. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S., 290; United States vs. Delaware & Hudson Company, 213 U. S., 366; Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington R. R. Co. vs. Schubert, 224 U. S., 603; Waters-Pierce Oil Company vs. Texas, 212 U. S., 86; United States vs. Kissel, 218 U. S., 601; Armour Packing Co. vs. United States, 209 U. S., 56.

There does not seem to be any conflict in the authorities upon this proposition. The evidence in the record, in my opinion, establishes beyond question that the Southern Pacific, extending from San Francisco Bay to New Orleans, with its steamship connection with New York, is a natural competitor of the Central Pacific, both as to California-Atlantic seaboard freight and Central and Western United States freight to and from California. A mere inspec-2348 tion of the different routes over which interstate commerce is moved through the El Paso and Ogden gateways would seem to show that the two roads are natural competitors. If they are competitors, and the Southern Pacific, as it is admitted, controls the Central Pacific, it follows that the free flow of interstate commerce is restrained. United States vs. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 226 U. S., 61; Northern Securities Co. vs. United States, 193 U. S., 197.

I do not think the evidence shows that the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific were created originally and have always continued to be one system. They have always been and are now operated as separate systems. The settlement by the United States of the debt of the Central Pacific in 1899 can not be held to estop the United States from insisting at this time that the combination between the two roads are in violation of the antitrust act. It is not remarkable that in the proceedings resulting in the settlement so far as they appear of record the antitrust law was not referred to, as little attention was given in those days to the antitrust law of July 2, 1890.

Finally, I am unable to reconcile the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S., 61, with the conclusion reached by the majority in this case. The Union Pacific and the Central Pacific constitute one transcontinental line from Omaha, Nebraska, to the Pacific coast.

Of course, it would not be objectionable for the Union Pacific 2349 to control the Central Pacific so far as anything in the record in this case is concerned, because it would simply be the same through line with no competition involved as between these two roads, but the Supreme Court held in the case cited that the control of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific was a combination in restraint of commerce that should be broken up.

In this case the Southern Pacific, which the Supreme Court held was in competition with the Union Pacific, controls the Central Pacific or another section of the through line from Omaha to the coast. How is the decree of the Supreme Court in the Union Pacific case to become effective with the competitor of the Union Pacific controlling the Central Pacific?

If it was unlawful for the Union Pacific, being one section of the through line, to control the Southern Pacific, why is it not unlawful for the Southern Pacific to control the other section of the through line? It is said in the opinion that there is no evidence of complaint by shippers of the alleged unlawful combination. The Attorney General in instituting this action represents the public, including shippers.

For these reasons, briefly stated, I dissent from the conclusion reached by the majority.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PETITIONER,
vs.
SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY AND OTHERS, defendants.
} Equity No. 3575 (420).

Assignment of errors.

The United States of America, the petitioner, assigns as the errors of the proceedings and final decree entered March 9, 1917, in the above-entitled cause, on which errors it will rely in the prosecution of its appeal from said decree, that a decree should not have been entered dismissing the petition, but that on the contrary a decree should have been entered granting relief to the petitioner to dissolve the combination and monopoly complained of, and to prevent the further infraction of the Pacific Railroad laws, and for greater particularity the petitioner assigns that said errors were committed in failing in said proceedings and decree to give sufficient consideration and effect to the matters of law and matters of fact apparent in the record as follows, namely:

First. In February, 1899, when this combination was formed, the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad were existing railroads naturally competitive for an enormous volume of interstate traffic and the combination between them unreasonably, directly, substantially and wholly prevented and destroyed 2353 competition between them, and continues to do so, and the combination artificially created a monopoly to the public injury.

Second. The Pacific Railroad laws imposed on the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad and on the franchise of the Union Pacific Railroad the reciprocal duty of the one railroad not to discriminate against the other in favor of any other railroad, but to exert together in normal voluntary cooperation all the natural forces of a single railroad naturally competing with the parallel Southern Pacific Railroad, and the systematic and preconcerted discrimination which the Southern Pacific Company in operating the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad has practiced against the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad is a violation of those laws; and this combination between the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad furnishing the incentive of self interest to discriminate against the Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and so to violate those laws, imposed on the Central Pacific Railroad an unreasonable and unlawful restraint to the injury of the public and to the defeat of the purpose of those laws, which was to create and develop three separate, competitive systems of railroad to the Pacific coast, with all the advantages that would come to the public from three railroads which were competitive.

Third. The payment by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of its debt to the United States, and the transactions leading thereto, did not exempt the Southern Pacific Company from the 2354 provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890, or permit that company to make a combination which otherwise would be one in restraint of trade, because (1) the settlement commission did not seek any guaranty by the Southern Pacific Company, (2) the contract of settlement did not require such a guaranty, (3) the United States received only payment of a debt already due and adequately secured, (4) neither the commission, nor the President, nor the Congress purported to give this company a special indulgence to make a combination in restraint of trade, prohibited as a crime by general law to all other corporations, and (5)

such a special indulgence or advance pardon is beyond the constitutional power of the commission, the President, and the Congress.

Fourth. The Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad were never, prior to February 20, 1899, a single railroad or system, but, on the contrary, were always two distinct railroads; (1) separately projected by separate and unrelated groups of men; (2) separately aided by gifts of public lands and loans of the public credit under acts of Congress to promote these two separate, competitive systems of railroad between the Atlantic Ocean and the Central United States on the east and the Pacific Ocean on the west, and enacted prior to 1867 and before any person interested in the one railroad was interested in the other; (3) separately owned by separate corporations organized by separate groups of men; (4) separately constructed at the expense of and for these separate 2355 corporations; (5) separately leased by these separate corporations under separate leases, making the amount of rent dependent on the net earnings of the separate railroads; (6) separately controlled by boards of directors, some of whom were always diverse, and a majority of whom were diverse in all but five years between 1865 and 1899; and (7) separately stock-owned, always to a substantial extent, and from 1883 to 1899 to the extent of more than a majority of the capital stock in each separate corporation, held by widely scattered stockholders in the United States and in Europe.

Fifth. The Southern Pacific Company on February 20, 1899, had no contractual, or property, or vested interest, direct or indirect, in the Central Pacific Railroad, because (1) the purported lease of February 17, 1885, by the Central Pacific Railroad Company was void for lack of power in that company to make it, both under the laws of California, and under the laws of the United States, the sovereignty from which it derived its franchises; (2) in 1893 this lease was cancelled and the new purported lease then given was equally void for the same reason; and (3) the leasehold interest was subject to immediate desctruction by the foreclosure of the underlying lien of the United States.

Sixth. Even if the Southern Pacific Company had had some control over the Central Pacific Railroad before the Sherman Anti-Trust Act was passed, this would not render lawful a combination for 2356 the increase and perpetuation of that control, formed after this act as passed.

Outline of Argument.

PART I. The case under the Anti-Trust Act of July 2nd, 1890 2–5

This argument is supplemental to the main brief and argument and is not intended to cover the whole case. Its central theme is the case of the United States vs. Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, et al., 226 U. S. 61. Attention is thus focused upon the Unmerger Suit not only for the purpose of showing to what extent the issues in the present case are controlled or affected by the decision in the former case, but because a discussion of the distinguishing features of the two cases will present some of the main defenses relied on in the present case in the contrasting light of the facts of the former case.....

I. The Government's case as defined by its pleadings and as further restricted by the evidence..... 6–26

Under this heading the charges, i. e., alleged violations of the Anti-Trust Act, contained in the petition are enumerated (pp. 8-10), the charges which have been abandoned stated (pp. 10-13), the single surviving charge disclosed (pp. 13-14), and the narrow basis of the case indicated by a statement of the matters and things which the Government has made no attempt to prove and of the matters and things established by defendants' evidence which the Government has made no attempt to rebut (pp. 16-24). The Southern-Pacific-domination myth is exposed and the immateriality of certain ancient traffic agreements pointed out (pp. 21-23).

PAGE

The conclusion is reached that the case which the Government claims to be analogous to the Unmerger Case is one of an attack upon a railroad system because of the inclusion therein of a divergent stem forming, with other connections, a through route competitive with another through route formed by lines of the system, the Government regarding its case as one of res ipsa loquitur, requiring no proof either of destruction of competition or of injury to the public or of increase of competition or benefit to the public to follow from the disruption of the system (p. 25).

II. Effect on the Government's case of the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the application of the Southern Pacific Company, under the Panama Canal Act Amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act, to be permitted to continue to operate the line of steamships which forms a part of the Sunset-Gulf Route, notwithstanding its ownership of a part of the all-rail route via Ogden 26–34

The Commission has found in effect that the continued ownership by the Southern Pacific Company of the Central Pacific line to Ogden and of the whole of the Sunset-Gulf route is in the interest of the public, to the advantage and convenience of commerce, and will not exclude, prevent or reduce competition, actual or possible.

The implications of the Panama Canal Act Amendment and of the acts of Congress permitting the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to construct and operate railroads from San Francisco to form links in two competing transcontinental lines are opposed to the proposition of law underlying the whole of the Government's case (pp. 32-33).

III. The defense based on the origin of the common control of the lines composing the Southern Pacific System and on the manner of the formation and development of that system..... 35–44

IV. The Union Pacific Unmerger Case (United States vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Southern Pacific Company, et al., 226 U. S. 61)..... 45–122

It is proposed to show that the decision in the Unmerger Case affords no authority for a judgment against defendants in the present case, and that the Government secured the unmerger of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems upon propositions of fact and of law the reverse of which it now relies on to bring about a disruption of the Southern Pacific system.

The argument under this heading includes an analysis of the pleadings in the Unmerger suit (pp. 45-57), an examination of the brief and argument of the Attorney-General (pp. 57-67), and a discussion of the opinion and decree of the Supreme Court (pp. 67-121).

An analysis of the pleadings shows that it was alleged by the Government and denied by defendants that at and prior to the merger there was active competition between the "Ogden route" and the "Sunset route" and that such competition was destroyed by the merger. It was likewise affirmed and denied that the two systems were competing in many other fields at the time they were merged, and that all such competition was eliminated by the merger.

An examination of the brief and argument shows that the existence vel non at the time of the merger in 1901 of competition for coast to coast traffic between the Ogden route and the "Sunset route" was treated by the Attorney-General as an important issue in the case, as well as the complete neutralization thereof by the merger of the two systems. The position of the Government involved allegation and proof that ownership by the Southern Pacific of the Central Pacific had not prevented active and effective competition between the Ogden route and the "Sunset route", and such was its contention, the Attorney-General claiming that this was established by overwhelming proof and that "there was the same incentive to active, energetic competition between these lines that there would have been had the Southern Pacific not owned the line between Ogden and San Francisco" (p. 59). It was further contended that this prior existing competition was destroyed by the merger, and the claim that such competition as previously existed between the two routes still continued was ridiculed (pp. 65-66).

In the discussion of the opinion and decree of the Supreme Court the objectionable features which led to the condemnation of the merger are stated (pp. 68-70), and the absence of each of such features from the common control of the Central Pacific and other Southern Pacific lines is pointed out (pp. 70-121). Attention is called to the fact that the combination involved in the former case was connected with other great combinations or attempted combinations, while the mis-called combination complained of in the present case took place nearly a half century ago and was followed by no absorption or acquisition of competing properties but only by gradual, normal growth and development.

Among the differentiating features of the present case are:

(a) The Southern Pacific system is not a combination between previously competing or even previously existing lines of railroad (pp. 70-81).

Before the "Sunset route" was in esse or in posse or in prospectu, the common control complained of existed (p. 78).

(b) There were lawful and justifying reasons for the formation and development of the Southern Pacific system. It had neither for its purpose nor effect the elimination of competition (pp. 81-97).

The situation at the time of the lease of 1885 and the purchase of the Central Pacific stock in 1899 is stated (pp. 91-93).

Incompetence and immateriality of testimony and documents adduced before committees of Congress in years long past are shown (pp. 93-95).

(c) The inclusion of the Central Pacific lines in one system with the other Southern Pacific lines has not prevented or created the power or a motive to prevent the only competition alleged to exist between them, i. e., that involved in the competition between the Ogden and the Sunset routes (pp. 97-116).

(d) The separation of the Central Pacific lines from the Southern Pacific system would not benefit but would injure the public. And the Interstate Commerce Commission has in effect so found (pp. 116-121).

V. The Government's case reviewed..... 122–130

PAGE

PART II. Discussion of the case under the Pacific Railroad Acts 131–203

The purpose of this argument, which again, on this branch of the case, is supplemental to the main brief and argument and is not intended to cover the whole case, is by a consideration of the pleadings and the general scope of the evidence to arrive at the precise question to be decided, and then to show that the Government's case essentially depends upon a construction of the statutes not justified by the plain meaning of the words used, not necessary to accomplish their purpose and, when subjected to the test of general application, productive of consequences obviously not intended—a construction, moreover, which remained concealed and unsuspected during thirty years notorious existence of conditions amounting to flagrant violation of the law, so construed, and was brought to light only in the search for grounds upon which to base the present divorce suit.

I. The Government's case as defined by the pleadings and as further restricted by the evidence 133–150

An analysis of the petition, in the light of the Government's evidence, reduces the violation of the Pacific Railroad Acts relied on to the single charge of discrimination against the Ogden route in favor of the "Sunset route", which discrimination is based solely on the preferential solicitation for the "Sunset route" of some traffic which might otherwise have moved by the Ogden route. To this should be added, perhaps, the general contention that the greater interest of the Southern Pacific Company in securing certain traffic for the longer haul via the "Sunset route" of itself makes its ownership of the Central Pacific line a violation of the acts (pp. 133-136).

The alleged violations of the Pacific Railroad Acts have not prevented the construction and maintenance of a through connection for the Union Pacific west of Ogden infinitely superior to the bond-aided line of the Central Pacific, and the establishment and maintenance of a mutually satisfactory through service under which the Ogden route has become the strongest and most successful of the all-rail transcontinental lines. The alleged antagonistic affiliations have not prevented the Southern Pacific from giving to the Union Pacific at Ogden more freight than it receives from that road, and have not prevented the Union Pacific from being the preferred connection of the Southern Pacific for by far the greater part of transcontinental traffic, a traffic sufficient in volume and value to create the strongest motive and inducement in the Southern Pacific to do everything required by the Pacific Railroad Acts.

The Southern Pacific's ownership of the Central Pacific and of the "Sunset route" has never empowered it to control the routing of traffic which may pass over either the "Sunset route" or the Ogden route. The recent advent of water carriers through the Panama Canal has had such a revolutionary effect upon Atlantic Seaboard territory traffic that the matter of the preferential solicitation of such traffic for the "Sunset route" is now of no practical or legal consequence.

The evidence holds out no promise of either an improvement in the through service or an increase in the through business over the Ogden route to result from the separation of the Central Pacific lines from the Southern Pacific system.

PAGE

II. Provisions of the Pacific Railroad Acts imposing obligations upon the railroad companies subject thereto in respect to operation and use of their roads 150–157

Preferential solicitation through some other junction or gateway than the one where connection is made with a Pacific Railroad Acts company is not a violation of the statutes, since such conduct does not break the continuity of the through line or lines described in the acts, does not interfere with the existence over such lines of equal and non-discriminatory rates, time schedules, and every other element of through service, and does not amount to a discrimination in any sense heretofore given that term, and certainly is not a discrimination by one member against or in favor of another member of the Pacific Railroad Acts family.

III. The provisions of the Pacific Railroad Acts requiring the railroad companies authorized to construct the through line or lines from the Pacific to the Missouri River to accord each other equal and non-discriminatory facilities and advantages in respect to rates, time and transportation will not support a charge of discrimination against said through line in favor of an outside line 158–164

IV. The mere fact that the Southern Pacific Company to the extent and in the manner shown by the evidence preferentially solicits for its "Sunset Route" some traffic which might otherwise pass over the Central Pacific-Union Pacific Line does not constitute a violation of the Pacific Railroad Acts 164–168

The construction contended for by the Government is unwarranted, because it extends the obligations of the statutes beyond the express requirements or anything reasonably to be implied therefrom and beyond what is necessary either to secure the use and operation of the lines for all purposes of travel and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one continuous line or to secure impartiality and equality in respect to advantages and facilities afforded as to rates, time or transportation, even if impartiality or equality is to be determined with reference to such advantages and facilities afforded any other connection whatever (pp. 167-173).

The Government's contention considered in the light of the general law as it existed at the date of the Pacific Railroad Acts and of subsequent legislation relating to connecting railroads (pp. 173-178).

Effect of applying the Government's construction of the statutes to conditions contemplated or authorized therein (pp. 178-181).

When subjected to the test of general application the Government's contention leads to absurd consequences.

It is discredited by the report of the Pacific Railway Commission (pp. 184-187).

V. The pleadings, arguments and decision of the Court in the Union Pacific Unmerger Suit considered with reference to their bearing on the Pacific Railroad Acts 188-203

The Pacific Railroad Acts figured in the Unmerger Suit only in connection with the question, whether it was necessary for the Union Pacific to acquire the Central Pacific in order to insure a continuance of the fair treatment which it had always received. As the Government characterized the conduct of the Southern Pacific as fair treatment of the Central Pacific-Union Pacific lines, as the Union Pacific was not aware that it was, and had been since 1883, the victim of an unlawful discrimination, the Court did not have before it any argument in favor of or against the construction of the Pacific Railroad Acts which the Government now urges upon this Court, and did not decide in favor of the Government the question whether the Pacific Railroad Acts were violated by the relations existing between the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific Company or by the preferential routing of certain traffic over the "Sunset route".

If, by reason of the fact that the Union Pacific dominated the defense of the Unmerger Suit and by reason of other circumstances adverted to in the argument, the Unmerger Suit left the Court under the impression that it would be satisfactory all around to turn over the Central Pacific to the Union Pacific, there is enough in the present record completely to obliterate any such impression.

There is, however, a fundamental inconsistency between the attitude of the Government in the two cases. In the former suit it was urged that the Union Pacific had always been treated fairly and had nothing to complain of under the operation of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific, and that the Pacific Railroad Acts insured a continuance of such treatment. In the present suit it is urged that the Union Pacific is being discriminated against under the operation of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific within the prohibition of the Pacific Railroad Acts. In one case the Acts were invoked as securing a continuance of conditions, which were approved of and characterized as constituting fair treatment of the Union Pacific. In the other case the Acts are invoked as prohibiting the same conditions, which are declared to constitute discrimination against the Union Pacific.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant, v. SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, et als., Appellees.	No. 21, October Term, 1920.

SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANTS DEALING PARTICULARLY WITH UNION PACIFIC-SOUTHERN PACIFIC UNMERGER CASE (226 U. S. 61), REPORT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION ON APPLICATION OF SOUTHERN PACIFIC UNDER THE PANAMA CANAL ACT AMENDMENT, AND THE CASE UNDER THE PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

PART I.

DISCUSSION OF THE CASE UNDER THE FEDERAL ANTI-TRUST ACT OF JULY 2, 1889.

This brief is to be regarded as supplemental to the main brief and argument for defendants. It is therefore not intended to cover the whole case. Its purpose, so far as relates to the case under the Federal Anti-Trust Act, is to take as its central theme the case of the United States vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Southern Pacific Company, et als. (226 U. S. 61), and to show to what extent the decision of the questions involved in this case may be regarded as predetermined, controlled or affected by the issues presented and decided in the opinion rendered in the former case. We shall refer to that case hereafter as the Unmerger Suit or Case.

Both the Government and defendants believe that the Unmerger Suit has an important bearing upon the present suit. Both sides will probably admit that but for the decree in the Unmerger Suit the present suit would not have been instituted. The Government regards the proceeding to disrupt the Southern Pacific System as the logical outcome of its successful effort to unmerge the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems. Defendants have shown by the testimony in this case that the idea of the Southern Pacific Company parting with its Central Pacific stock originated in the mind of the then Attorney-General as a convenient method, through exchange of stock, of enabling the Union Pacific to dispose of its Southern Pacific stock. (II Vol., p. 782 ffg.) This idea grew upon the natural opposition of the Southern Pacific Company into the conviction that that Company must be dispossessed of its holdings by decree of court, under the mistaken theory that the union under one system of the Central Pacific lines and the other lines of the Southern Pacific System was of the same legal character and constituted the same kind of prohibited restraint of trade as the merger of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems. The Government regards the decision in the Unmerger Case as authority for its contentions in the present case. Defendants take an entirely contrary view. They believe, moreover, that there are glaring inconsistencies in the contentions of the Government in the two suits. They have accordingly pleaded the record in the former suit as a bar and estoppel, and have offered the record, including the printed briefs of counsel for the Government, as conclusive evidence against the truth of the charge, so essential to the present case against defendants, that the ownership or control by the Southern Pacific Company of the Central Pacific lines was destructive of competition between the Sunset line and the line through Ogden formed by the line from San Francisco to Ogden, standing in the name of the Central Pacific Railway Company, in connection with the Union Pacific and its eastern connections.

For the reasons indicated and for an additional reason it is believed that a brief specially devoted to an analysis and discussion of the Unmerger Case will be worth while, the additional reason being that, in pointing out the differences between the two cases and the inconsistent contentions of the Government, in showing wherein the opinion in the former case does not support the Government and does help defendants in this case, many of the important points of our defense will be presented from a special point of view and with the advantage of contrast with the features of the other case.

A comparison between the two cases will bring out in special prominence the fundamental distinction between the merger of two independent, self-sufficient, previously competing railway systems and the organic union of lines of railway born of a common parentage, developed as parts of one whole, and so united and inter-dependent that a separation would leave each part crippled and capable of being operated only with impaired efficiency and at increased cost. A like contrast will be shown to exist in the matter of the element of competition. The charge in the earlier case was the destruction of competition previously existing in many fields between the two great systems concerned. In the present case, in the absence of any status quo ante of independent competitive existence, the charge is that, if the always existing common control had never existed, there might have been greater or more effective competition with a combination of the parts of the Southern Pacific system under some different ownership; and that, if the common control were now terminated, the sum total of competition might be increased. Without waiving but insisting upon the defence that the alleged effect on potential competition is insufficient in law to show a cause of action, it will be shown in the discussion of the two cases that the allegation is not well founded in fact. In addition to the admission of record in the former suit and the uncontradicted evidence in this case to the effect that in the only field of competition concerned, that between the "Ogden route" and the "Sunset-Gulf route", there has always existed active and vigorous competition, the vigor and activity of which would not be increased by the proposed dismemberment of the Southern Pacific System, attention will be called to a report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, filed after the submission of this case in the Court below, in which the Commission declares that continued common ownership and operation of the line from San Francisco to Ogden, forming part of the "Ogden route", and of the steamship line from Galveston and New Orleans, forming part of the "Sunset-Gulf route" and essential to the integrity of that route, will have no harmful effect upon competition.

I. The Government's case as defined by its pleadings and as further restricted by the evidence.

Before comparing this case with the Unmerger Case we shall briefly discuss the Government's case now before the Court as disclosed by its pleadings and as further illumined by its evidence, especially in the light of what it has failed to prove or to attempt to prove. We shall thus get at the surviving issues in the case. We use the term "surviving issues", because many of the alleged violations of the statute have been abandoned, not expressly but by petitioner's failure to make any attempt to prove the facts upon which the charges are based. After the abandoned charges, inserted originally perhaps in ignorance of the facts, are eliminated, the case is reducible to practically one question, whether the fact that the Central Pacific line from San Francisco to Ogden forms part of a through line, in connection with the Union Pacific and eastern connections, which offers an alternative route for certain traffic with the through line owned by the Southern Pacific Company from San Francisco via El Paso and New Orleans or Galveston and thence by steamship to New York, makes the inclusion in one system of the Central Pacific lines and the lines composing the mixed rail and water line an undue and unreasonable restraint of trade within the condemnation of the law.

The petition starts out with a general charge that defendants are restraining and monopolizing, or attempting to monopolize, trade and commerce in respect to transportation between the points afterwards mentioned, and that the individual defendants, as officers and agents of the Southern Pacific Company, are responsible for a continuance of the combination and monopolization complained of. Then follows the general description of the lines of railway and steamships controlled and operated by the Southern Pacific Company. The "Sunset route" is described as a joint rail and water route between New York City and the Pacific coast terminals in California and Oregon. This route is more accurately designated by defendants' witnesses as the "Sunset-Gulf route". The Southern Pacific Company's operation and control, by lease or stock ownership, of the lines composing this route are alleged. Mention is made of the Southern Pacific Company's ownership of a majority of the stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and its consequent control of a line of steamships between San Francisco and Oriental points, and a line of steamships between San Francisco and Panama, the latter by means of connections at Panama forming part of a through line between San Francisco and New York. The lines of railway forming the Central Pacific Railway Company are stated; and reference is made to the ownership by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California of the line of railroad from the Rio Grande to Los Angeles and thence to San Francisco by the two routes, the Coast line and the west side San Joaquin Valley line, its ownership of the roads leading up into Oregon, and its control of various railroad corporations in California, Oregon and New Mexico. The lease of the Central Pacific Railway and of the other lines above mentioned and their operation since 1885 by the Southern Pacific Company are alleged, as well as the Southern Pacific Company's ownership of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company.

These general and descriptive charges are followed by particular charges showing or intended to show facts and conditions in violation of the Anti-Trust Act.

(1) The Central Pacific, in connection with the Union Pacific and its eastern connections, is a "natural competitor" of the "Sunset route" of the Southern Pacific Company in the transportation of traffic between points on the Atlantic Seaboard and in the Middle West on the one hand and all points on the Pacific Coast, as well as points in the Orient, on the other.

(2) The Central Pacific connecting at Fresno with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway forms, with the connections of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, a route which is a natural competitor of the Southern Pacific Company and its connections for traffic between Tehama, Marysville, Sacramento, Oakland, San Francisco, San Jose, and many other points in Central and Northern California, on the one hand, and points in Arizona, New Mexico, Texas and Louisiana on the other, including Phœnix, El Paso, San Antonio, Houston, Galveston and New Orleans.

(3) The through routes formed by Central Pacific connecting at San Francisco Bay with various steamship lines (those operating via Panama to and from Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippines and Asia) are natural competitors of the Southern Pacific Company and its water connections.

(4) The union between the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific has possibly prevented the existence of two independent competitive lines between San Francisco and Portland. The line now under construction by the Central Pacific from Weed to a connection at Natron with the Southern Pacific Company's line thence to Ogden, might be extended to Portland or the Central Pacific might, in exchange for trackage rights given the Southern Pacific over the line between Tehama and the northern boundary line of California, obtain trackage rights over the Southern Pacific line between Natron and Portland.

(5) The line of the Central Pacific from Hazen to Mojave connects at Mojave with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and with the connections of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe forms a route which, with joint traffic or prorating arrangements, would be a natural competitor of the Southern Pacific Company and its connections for traffic between points on the Central Pacific and tributary territory and points in Arizona, New Mexico, Texas and other Southern States, but by reason of joint control of the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific such through traffic arrangements have not been made.

(6) It is alleged that prior to 1885 the lines of the Central Pacific were operated in connection with the lines of the Union Pacific and its connections in competition with the lines of the Southern Pacific. Then, after setting forth the lease of February 17, 1885, and its amendments, the organization of the present Central Pacific in 1899, the acquisition of its stock by the Southern Pacific Company in 1899, the control of both companies by a single management, it is alleged that the purpose and effect of said acquisition of stock and lease was to prevent competition between the lines of the two companies. It is further alleged that the ownership by the Southern Pacific Company of the stock of the Central Pacific and its leases of the properties of that company and its domination, management and control thereof, constitute a combination in restraint of trade and a monopolization thereof.

No evidence was adduced by petitioner to explain or support charge (2), that a line in the name of the Central Pacific connecting at Fresno with the Santa Fe forms, with connections of the Santa Fe, a through route which is a natural competitor of the Southern Pacific Company and its connections for traffic between points in Northern and Central California and points in Arizona, New Mexico, Texas and Louisiana. We might safely leave this unsupported charge to fall by its own weight. But the evidence shows that the Santa Fe, by its own lines or in connection with the lines of the Western Pacific and several electric lines, has access to the territory and effectively competes for the traffic in question. Moreover, the Santa Fe has access to all territory served by the Southern Pacific System (including Central Pacific lines) under arrangements for through rates and divisions which enable it to successfully compete with the Southern Pacific Company. (See testimony of Spence, Vol. III, pp. 1024-5, 1029-1030, 1045; of Chambers, Vol. III, pp. 942, 954 ffg., 984; of Kruttschnitt, Vol. II, p. 769.) Such being the state of the record on the facts, it is not worth while to combat the legal proposition, that a system of lines becomes a prohibited restraint of trade when it is possible to form from a part of the system and some outside line a through route which is a "natural competitor" of a through route formed by other parts of the system with other lines.

Charge (3) as to routes formed by Central Pacific at San Francisco with various steamship lines (those operating via Panama, to and from Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippines and Asia) being natural competitors of the Southern Pacific Company and its water connections, was apparently not deemed by petitioner of sufficient importance to be explained or supported by any evidence. We have only the testimony of defendants' witnesses which shows that there is active competition for all business passing through the port of San Francisco, that such competition is not affected in any way by the union under one control of the Central Pacific and the other lines of the Southern Pacific, and that in respect to such business there is not even "natural" competition between the Central Pacific lines and the other lines of the Southern Pacific System. (See testimony of Schwerin, Vol. II, pp. 698 ffg., 703-4; of Spence, Vol. III, pp. 1106-7, and p. 1037.)

Charge (4) accusing the common control of the Central Pacific lines and the other Southern Pacific lines of possibly preventing the construction of an extension of the California and Oregon line of the Central Pacific to Portland and of an extension of the Oregon and California line of the Southern Pacific to San Francisco, is so devoid of merit that we might safely ignore it, as petitioner has done in the evidence taken by it. We cannot forbear, however, calling attention to the absurdity of making such a charge in respect to two lines which Congress required to be constructed to connect with each other and thereafter to be operated as one continuous line (Act of July 25, 1866, 14 Stat., 239, Sec. 7). It is also worth while to call attention to the very imperfect information which the charge under discussion discloses to have been possessed by the Department of Justice respecting the system it was seeking to disrupt. It finds fault with the union under one control of lines which the former head of the Department had insisted should remain under a common control after the separation of the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific Company. When he was trying to enforce the sale to the Union Pacific of the Central Pacific stock, Mr. Wickersham, then Attorney General, recognized the advantage and necessity of the Southern Pacific Company retaining a through line between Portland and San Francisco, made up in part of Central Pacific lines, and insisted that the Southern Pacific Company should retain, after the sale, the Central Pacific line from Tehama north. (See testimony of Kruttschnitt, Vol. II, pp. 754-5 and p. 789.)

Charge (5) in respect to the possibilities of a through line, to be formed by the Hazen-Mojave branch of the Central Pacific in connection with the Santa Fe, as a "natural competitor" of the Southern Pacific Company, was also wholly neglected by petitioner when taking its testimony. The branch is in part a narrow gauge road with traffic not sufficient to justify its reconstruction on a standard gauge. It offers no possibilities as a connection of the Santa Fe. It was constructed by the Southern Pacific Company and put in the name of the Central Pacific. The charge in question has no merit even as a makeweight. Even if the Southern Pacific Company had been guilty of adding to its system by constructing a line which might form a part of a good through line with the Santa Fe, this would not serve to eke out a case of prohibited restraint of trade.

By this process of elimination we find the surviving charges to be those enumerated above as (1) and (6). They are essentially one charge, consisting of three propositions: (a) The line standing in the name of the Central Pacific, in connection with the Union Pacific and its Eastern connections (the "Ogden route"), is a "natural competitor" of the "Sunset route" for certain traffic. (b) Prior to 1885 the Central Pacific line was operated in connection with the Union Pacific in competition with the lines of the Southern Pacific Company, i. e., the lines forming the "Sunset route" or "Sunset-Gulf route". (c) The lease of 1885 and the acquisition of the Central Pacific stock in 1899 had for their purpose and effect to destroy previously existing competition between the two through routes.

In the argument in the court below counsel for the Government took the position that the so-called combination attacked was that charged to have taken place in February, 1899, when the Southern Pacific Company acquired the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, and that the lease of February 17, 1885, which was referred to when the petition charged that "under that and subsequent leases and amendments the Southern Pacific has ever since controlled and operated said properties and the additions thereto", was to be treated as without effect because ultra vires and invalid under the laws of California. This belated attack, extra petitionem, upon the validity of the lease of 1885 has been met in our main brief. Without repeating what is there said we submit that, so far as the United States and the charges in this suit are concerned, that lease and its amendments must be regarded as valid and effective, unless and until set aside as in violation of the Federal Anti-Trust Act of 1890. Hence, when the Southern Pacific Company in 1899, with the knowledge and consent, and, indeed, at the invitation of the United States, purchased the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, it was not only acquiring the ownership of lines of railway which had always been parts of its system, with reference to which its through lines had been constructed, and without which its system would be disrupted, but it was acquiring the stock of a company all of whose property it already had in its possession and control under a lease, made before the Anti-Trust Act was adopted, which still had eighty-five years to run. If that lease was not a prohibited restraint of trade, neither was the stock purchase. If the property was lawfully acquired prior to the Anti-Trust Act, discharging a prior lien to protect such lawfully acquired property is certainly not a violation of that law.

It is important to observe that the competition complained of as destroyed is that in one field of competition, namely, for traffic for which the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route offer alternative routes. The evidence shows that this field is restricted territorially to Northern and Central California on the one hand and Atlantic Seaboard territory on the other, and is restricted by natural and physical conditions to traffic which will stand trans-shipment. The evidence further shows that the traffic, as thus restricted, is the most highly competitive of transcontinental traffic, both in respect to the number of competitors and the fierceness of the struggle therefor. There is no evidence, however, to justify the contention that so much of the traffic in question as is secured for the Sunset-Gulf route represents traffic which has been "diverted", to the prejudice of the public, to a more expensive route with inferior service. The witnesses stated with practical unanimity that the Sunset-Gulf route, in respect to such traffic, was at least the equal in service, time and otherwise of any of the several all rail lines, including the Ogden route, competing for such business.

Having reduced the scope of the Government's case to the charge that the Southern Pacific System is an unlawful combination in restraint of trade because of the inclusion therein of a link in a through line which is competitive with another through route made up of system lines, we shall now show from the Government's evidence the very narrow grounds relied on as constituting the alleged unlawful restraint of trade. It is not intended to discuss the evidence in detail. A general statement of its scope and purpose will suffice.

Abundant evidence was introduced to prove the conceded fact, that the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route afforded alternative routes for the movement of traffic between California and Atlantic Seaboard territory. As was to be expected, there was no evidence of any "natural" or other competition between the parts of the Southern Pacific System standing in the name of the Central Pacific and the other parts of the system, except such as might be said to result from the fact that a Central Pacific line formed part of the Ogden route.

There was no attempt to prove that the natural, necessary or actual effect of the union in one system of the Central Pacific line to Ogden and the lines constituting the Sunset-Gulf route was to destroy competition between the two routes. On the contrary, the witnesses for the Government agreed with defendants' witnesses in declaring that at all times, except during the Union Pacific-Southern Pacific merger, there had been active, vigorous and effective competition between the two routes (Lincoln, I Vol., pp. 121, 123; Schumaker, Id., pp. 148, 163-7, 173; Kruttschnitt, II Vol., pp. 732-4, 740; Spence, III Vol., pp. 1037-1039, 1045-1048; Chambers, Id., pp. 950-952, 967-968, 983). The testimony of these witnesses, as will be shown hereafter, is in accord with the contentions successfully made by the United States in the Unmerger Suit, and with the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission on an application by the Southern Pacific Company, under the Panama Canal Amendment Act, for permission to continue to operate the water line part of the Sunset-Gulf route notwithstanding that company's ownership of the Central Pacific line to Ogden.

There was no attempt to prove any effort on the part of the Southern Pacific Company to destroy or neutralize competition between the two routes.

There was no attempt to disprove the abundance of competent testimony adduced by defendants showing, not only the absence of any power, but the absence of any motive or inducement for the Southern Pacific Company to eliminate or lessen competition between the two routes by impairment of service or otherwise, using service in its broadest meaning.

There was no attempt to meet or rebut the testimony of numerous witnesses for defendants who testified, with convincing details, that the public had always enjoyed the full benefit of competitive service over the two routes and that both routes were better and rendered more efficient and economical service by reason of the unified management which the Government alone complains of (infra, pp. 116-117). This testimony is not met by the declaration that it is a general rule that the more railroads the more competition and the more competition the better service. It is not worth while to consider whether there is any such general rule or whether the exceptions thereto are so numerous as to deprive the rule of any value. Mr. Schumacher, one of the Government's best informed witnesses, who announced the rule (I Vol., p. 156), declared it was not true in the present case (Id., p. 157). Testimony of defendants' witnesses, which include Mr. Eshelman, representing the views of the Railroad Commission of California, and Mr. Lynch, representing the experience of the shipping public, declaring that the Southern Pacific System, with the Central Pacific lines included therein, had not lessened competition and that its dissolution would not only not increase competition but would injure the public in just the respects in which competition is supposed to benefit it, cannot be said to be met by the testimony of three Union Pacific officials to the effect that, if the Central Pacific were independent, its soliciting organization would be added to the army of solicitors striving to secure traffic for the Ogden route. We believe the Court will agree with defendants' witnesses (e. g., Mr. Spence, Vol. III, pp. 1038-9) that the sum total of competitive striving for the particular traffic in question would not be appreciably or beneficially increased by such an addition to the soliciting force. As it is, the Union Pacific and forty or fifty other lines have agents at both ends striving to secure traffic for the Ogden route, offering every inducement in the way of service, not only their own service but the service over the Central Pacific line. It cannot be said that the service on the western end of the Ogden route is not competitive service. On the contrary, competition has its full influence on this service. The enormous traffic which passes over the Ogden route is subject to the fiercest competition, and can be secured and held only by the maintenance of the best service on the line between Ogden and San Francisco. And it is this competitive service which the army of solicitors working for the Ogden route offer the public. A new solicitor for an independent Central Pacific could not offer any more. He could not offer as much; for the uncontradicted testimony is that the present service over the Ogden route between Ogden and San Francisco, made up as it is not only of lines in the name of the Central Pacific but of lines and facilities belonging to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, is a better service than one made up only of the lines and properties of the Central Pacific. We are, therefore, justified in stating that there was a complete failure on the part of the Government to show that the proposed dismemberment of the Southern Pacific System would be followed by any increase of competition or any benefit to the public, and that defendants have proved the contrary. Of course, the Court will bear in mind that competition for the traffic which may move over either the Ogden route or the Sunset-Gulf route is not confined to those two routes, and that loss of good will or of business consequent upon impairment of service over one of the routes would not necessarily or probably benefit the other route, but would certainly injure the Southern Pacific Company in respect to the far greater part of transcontinental traffic which the Sunset-Gulf route cannot compete for.

There was no attempt to convict the so-called combination of restraint of trade by reason of its treatment of competitors or by reason of injury done the public. Defendants, however, have shown by competent uncontradicted evidence that the interests and convenience of the public are against the proposed dissolution, and that accounts for the conspicuous absence from the Government's list of witnesses of any complaining shipper or traveler. No competitor appeared to rebut the testimony of defendants' witnesses showing that the policy of the Southern Pacific Company towards its connections had been to promote the exchange of traffic and to give access to its territory to every connection. It turned over its line from Mojave to Needles to the Santa Fe, as soon as the latter reached the California boundary, and it voluntarily made such arrangements in respect to business north of Mojave that the Santa Fe became an effective competitor for Central California business long before it reached San Francisco over its own rails.

There was no attempt to prove the present existence of any monopolistic conditions or trade-restraining control as resulting from the so-called combination. We mention, simply to call attention to its immateriality, testimony to the effect that many years ago the only rail lines in California were those of the system now known as the Southern Pacific System. If it once occupied the field alone, it was because its lines were first constructed and not because it excluded or had the power to exclude others from the field. It is a point upon which the witnesses on both sides agree, that whatever domination or influence over traffic (and especially traffic between California and Atlantic Seaboard territory, with which we are specially concerned) which the Southern Pacific System ever possessed, has been for many years on the wane until now it has reached the vanishing point. There was no attempt to rebut the testimony of Mr. Spence, which was in line with the testimony of other witnesses (I Vol., p. 169), that the competition for transcontinental traffic has been gradually increasing and the proportional takings of the Southern Pacific had greatly diminished even before the opening of the Panama Canal, and that the entrance upon the field of the water carriers through the Canal, the most powerful of all the competitors, who compete for all the traffic which is competitive between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route, has caused the dominating influence of the Southern Pacific Company, if it ever existed, to be numbered among the things that were (III Vol., pp. 1031-2).

We mention simply to dismiss as immaterial the several contracts between the transcontinental lines which were put in evidence by the Government. The latest of them terminated in 1892, more than twenty years prior to the institution of this suit. There is no likelihood that they will ever be renewed. They were not due to the miscalled combination complained of, and the dismemberment of the Southern Pacific System is not necessary to prevent their recurrence. They were joined in by all railroads concerned in transcontinental traffic. If the Central Pacific Railroad Company had had no connection at the time with the other lines of the Southern Pacific System, the agreements would have been entered into just the same. Such agreements or associations were then being formed by all the rail carriers of the country. They belong to a period in the history of American railroads when they were seeking, by contracts with each other, to bring about stability of rates, the abolition of secret rate cutting, etc. They became unnecessary with the enforcement, after necessary amendment, of the Interstate Commerce Act. They disappeared entirely after the decisions rendered by the Supreme Court in the Trans-

Missouri Freight Association and Joint Traffic Association cases.

For similar reasons the several contracts between the transcontinental railroads and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and between the Steamship Company and the Panama Railroad Company, are unimportant and immaterial to the issue, whether the Southern Pacific System, with the Central Pacific lines included therein, constitutes a prohibited restraint of trade. These contracts were not due to or in furtherance of the alleged combination or conspiracy complained of, and they have long ago ceased to exist. It is a matter of public notoriety that the Southern Pacific Company no longer has any interest in the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and all that could have been accomplished by this suit in respect to the Pacific Mail has already been accomplished.

We do not believe that either set of contracts should cause the Court to impose one demerit mark against the otherwise perfect record of good conduct which may rightly be claimed for the system, once Central Pacific now Southern Pacific, during its whole lifetime of more than forty years.

Reduced to a last analysis the Government's case is one of an attack upon a railroad system because of the inclusion therein of a divergent stem, forming with other connections a through route competitive with another through route formed by other lines of the system (the formation of the system preceding the construction of one of the through routes), without proof of any destruction of competition or of any injury to the public and without promise of any increase of competition or benefit to the public to follow the disruption of the system.

There accordingly rests upon the Government the burden of showing, among other things, either that every railway system having a divergent stem forming by its connections a through route competitive with the parent system is unlawful, or that the Southern Pacific System is within the condemnation of the law upon grounds peculiar to it and not generally applicable to railway systems having such divergent stems. Now it is true of all such systems that, other things being equal, freight is preferentially solicited for the 100% haul, and it may be charged against all such systems that, if the divergent stem were separated from the parent system and independently operated, another corporation and another soliciting agency would be added to the number working for the through line of which it forms a link. Assuming that the Government does not claim that all railroad systems with divergent stems are unlawful, it will not advance the case against the Southern Pacific System to show merely that, if its divergent stem were operated by an independent corporation, there would be an addition to the number of railroad corporations working for the Ogden route, an addition which the record shows would amount practically to nothing more than another soliciting agency added to the now nearly half hundred fighting for that route, and would involve a decided decrease in the efficiency of the Ogden route and in its force as a competitive factor. The Government is under the necessity of showing that there is something in the origin of the Southern Pacific System or in the manner of its growth and development or in its effect on competition between the two through routes in question which amounts to a violation of the Federal Anti-Trust Act. This necessity, however, the Government does not admit or has been unable to meet. It presents its case as if it were one of res ipsa loquitur. It shows that the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route are competitive routes and that a link in one and the whole of the other route are under a common control or ownership, and claims, as a conclusion of law, that such common control or ownership constitutes a prohibited restraint of trade, despite the fact that such common control antedates both the conception and the construction of the lines in question, despite the fact that the conditions complained of are not only common but inevitable in practically every railway system of the country, despite the uncontradicted evidence that competition between the two routes has not been prevented or restricted, despite its own admission to that effect in the Union Pacific Unmerger suit, and despite the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission has sanctioned the common control as neither preventing, excluding nor reducing competition, actual or potential. And this brings us to a report of the Interstate Commerce Commission which has an important bearing on the issues of this case.

II. Effect on the Government's case of the favorable report of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the application of the Southern Pacific Company, under the Panama Canal Act Amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act, to be permitted to continue to operate the line of steamships which forms a part of the Sunset-Gulf route, notwithstanding its ownership of a part of the all-rail route via Ogden.

After the close of the testimony and the submission of the case in the court below the Interstate Commerce Commission acted upon an application of the Southern Pacific Company, under the Panama Canal Act Amendment of Section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (37 Stat. L. 564), to be permitted to continue to own and operate its steamship line between the port of New York and the ports of New Orleans and Galveston. This application was filed in February, 1914, submitted June 1, 1916, and decided January 24, 1917.

The Commission found the existence of competition between the rail lines of the Southern Pacific and their connections via the Ogden gateway and via the El Paso gateway and the Sunset-Gulf route, of which the steamship line in question formed a part, and hence that the Southern Pacific Company's rail lines may and do compete with its steamship lines operating between New York and the two Gulf ports. It remained then for the Commission to determine the effect on competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route of the ownership by the Southern Pacific Company of a part of the all-rail line and the whole of the rail and water line, including the steamship lines in question. The finding of that body of experts is a shattering blow to the contentions of the Government in the present case. Under the terms of the Panama Canal Act Amendment the Commission was authorized to permit the Southern Pacific Company to continue to own and operate the steamships only if it found that such water service was "being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that such extension (i. e., permission to continue to own and operate) "will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration * * *". What competition? Any competition, including competition with the Ogden route, certainly, as well as competition through the El Paso gateway. The Commission granted the application of the Southern Pacific Company to be allowed to continue to own and operate the water part of its Sunset-Gulf route, and it necessarily and expressly decided that such operation and the ownership by the Southern Pacific Company of the rail and water line and, at the same time, of the link between Ogden and San Francisco of the all rail line was in the public interest, to the advantage of commerce, and did not exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition between the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes—not simply the actual, but any possible competition.

The report of the Commission, which bears date

January 24, 1917, will be found in the official volumes of the Commission's Reports, 43 I. C. C. 168, entitled "Southern Pacific Company's Ownership of Atlantic Steamship Lines". After explaining the rail system of the Southern Pacific Company and its connections, including the Ogden route, and the steamships operated by it, especially those forming part of the Sunset-Gulf route, the report states:

> "The record shows that the Southern Pacific Company's rail system and its rail connections form all-rail transcontinental routes via the El Paso gateway and via the Ogden gateway. The record also establishes that these all-rail routes engage in the 'most active and vigorous competition' with the Sunset-Gulf route and that the Southern Pacific Company, by its participation in the solicitation and carrying of traffic over these all-rail routes, actively competes with its Atlantic Steamship lines through both New Orleans and Galveston in their solicitation and carrying of traffic over the Sunset-Gulf route. We, therefore, find that the Southern Pacific Company's rail lines may and do compete with its Atlantic Steamship lines operating between New Orleans and New York and between Galveston and New York for through traffic. It follows that the time during which the petitioner may continue to operate or to have an interest in such service by water can not be extended by us, under the terms of the statute, unless the record shows that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on these routes by water and that the present operation is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people" (pp. 170-1).

After some discussion of water competition between the Gulf ports and New York, and after a very complimentary allusion to the character of the service maintained by the Southern Pacific Company and its universal endorsement (pp. 172-3), the Commission disapproved of certain practices in the port to port business, and then declared that the correction of those objectionable practices would leave no basis of record for withholding an order permitting the continued ownership and operation by the Southern Pacific Company of its steamship lines. The objectionable practices related to confining the benefit of a dry goods mixture rule to goods owned by one shipper and the practice of allowing shippers the benefit of the port to port rates in certain cases where the Commission thought the higher through rate should have been applied. These practices having been corrected by proper tariff amendments the Commission, at a general session held at its office in Washington, D. C., May 12, 1917, rendered an order in which it recited the application of the Southern Pacific Company under Section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act, the investigation thereof by the Commission and its report thereon,

> "which said report contained findings that the petitioner's rail lines may and do compete with its Atlantic Steamship Lines operating between New York and New Orleans and between New York and Galveston, that under present conditions an extension of the time during which the petitioner may continue to operate or have an interest in these steamship lines will neither exclude, prevent nor reduce competition on the routes by water, and that the correction of certain objectionable practices which were enumerated would leave no basis of record to justify the withholding of the requisite finding, under the act, that the existing service of these steamship lines between New York and New Orleans and between New York and Galveston is in the interest of the public and of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people;

"And it further appearing, That the petitioner by the filing of appropriate tariffs now effective from New York, N. Y., and points in Atlantic seaboard territory to Galveston and interior Texas points has corrected the objectionable practices above referred to."

And thereupon it was ordered—

"That the application of the Southern Pacific Company for an extension of time beyond July 1, 1914, within which it may continue the operation of its Atlantic Steamship Lines between New York and New Orleans and between New York and Galveston be, and it is hereby, granted, subject to such further order or orders as may hereafter be entered by the Commission.

"It is further ordered, That all rates, fares, schedules and regulations applying to the transportation of persons and property by the petitioner's Atlantic Steamship Lines between New York, N. Y., and New Orleans, La., and between New York, N. Y., and Galveston, Tex., subject to the act, be filed with this Commission and posted as required by the act to regulate commerce and regulations of the Commission on or before July 1, 1917."*

We submit that this report of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the order based thereon are directly opposed to the fundamental proposition of the Government in the present suit. How can a common control or ownership whose continuance is in the public interest and to the advantage of commerce, or which does not exclude, prevent, or reduce competition, amount to an unreasonable restraint of trade? There is abundant evidence in this record in support of the Commission's finding, and there is no evidence to the contrary.

The fact of such a finding in respect to the negligible effect on competition of the common control of the Central Pacific lines and Sunset-Gulf route, and the impossibility of conceiving of such a finding in respect to the common control of the Southern Pacific System and the Union Pacific System, shows that there is a fundamental difference between the present case and the Unmerger Case.

The irreconcilable conflict between the report of the Commission and the contentions of the Government in this case will be made more manifest by a consideration of the extended scope which must be given to competition as used in the Panama Canal Act Amendment. The competition which the common control of railways and a water carrier must not prevent or lessen is not simply the competition between the water line considered by itself and the rail lines considered by themselves. The Southern Pacific Company has no rail lines between the Gulf ports and New York. The Commission has always held that, in considering the public interest and the convenience and advantage of commerce, the competition to be regarded included competition between through lines made up in part of the water line and through lines made up in part of rail lines belonging to the owner of the water line. Moreover, the competition which must be protected is not only the competition which actually exists or has existed, but also any competition which might be brought into existence by a separation of the joint ownership or control in question. The mandate to the Commission is broader than any mandate given the courts by the Sherman Law. It follows, therefore, that no matter how broad a meaning the Government gives to competition in its complaint that competition between the Sunset-Gulf route and the Central Pacific line as part of the Ogden route has been destroyed, such competition is included within the competition which the Commission has found not to have been prevented or reduced.

*Note: The report of the Commission, after correction of objectionable practices, is found in 45 I. C. C. 505. The formal order is printed in the appendix of this brief.

The provisions of the Panama Canal Act Amendment prescribing the conditions under which the Interstate Commerce Commission may authorize the continued ownership by a railroad of a line of water carriers which may or does compete with its rail lines are inconsistent with the theory upon which the Government is prosecuting this suit. The Government asserts as a proposition so universally true that it need not be supported, and cannot be overthrown, by any evidence, that common ownership or control of any parts of two lines of transportation which may or do compete, is so restrictive of competition as to constitute such common ownership or control, without more, an unreasonable restraint of trade. But the provisions in question of the Panama Canal Act imply that there may be a common ownership or control of two lines of transportation which are actual or possible competitors that is of public advantage or convenience and that does not exclude or restrict competition between them.

Congress seems always to have regarded the common ownership or control of links in two or more competing through routes as not necessarily so restrictive of competition as to be against the public interest. By the act of July 27, 1866 (14 Stat. 292, Sec. 18), it authorized the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to construct and operate a line from San Francisco to Needles, to form part of the transcontinental line along the 35th parallel of latitude, and by the Act of March 3, 1871 (16 Stat. 573, sec. 23), it authorized the same company to construct and operate a line from San Francisco to Yuma to form part of a transcontinental line along the 32nd parallel of latitude. And there is good reason to believe that Congress knew at the time that the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific Railroad Companies were then under a common control.

We submit that the report and order of the Interstate Commerce Commission strongly support the practically unanimous testimony in this case to the effect that—

(1) The inclusion of the Central Pacific lines in the Southern Pacific System has not eliminated competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route, the finding of the Commission being that there is "most active and vigorous competition" between the two routes.

(2) The common ownership and operation of the Sunset-Gulf route and of the Central Pacific link of the Ogden route neither excludes, prevents nor reduces such competition.

(3) The present common ownership and operation is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people.

We believe, however, that it will not be necessary for the Court to consider whether any increase of competition may be effected by the separation of the Central Pacific lines from the other lines of the Southern Pacific System, because the origin and nature of the common control complained of is such as to exempt it from the condemnation of the Sherman Law even if some increase of competition might result from a termination of such control. And this brings us to the defense based on the origin and manner of the formation and development of the Southern Pacific System.

III. The defense based on the origin of the common control of the lines composing the Southern Pacific System and on the manner of the formation and development of that system.

An important and fundamental defense to the case under the Anti-Trust Act is afforded by the origin and nature of the common control complained of and the manner of the formation and growth of the resulting system of railroads. Here again it is not our intention to discuss in detail the facts upon which this defense is based or to show to what extent it is an answer to the alleged violations of the statute. The main brief for defendants does this. Attention is now called to this defense and its legal significance, because the facts upon which it is based serve to make the Southern Pacific System essentially different from the combination of railway systems attacked in the Unmerger Case.

The common control resulting from the union under one management of the railroads composing the Southern Pacific System did not originate from the combination of prior existing competing lines. It was coincident with the construction of each part of the system. It not only antedated the Sherman Law, but it antedated the construction of the railroads over which it extends. It may be said to have existed ab initio, and the railroads included in it to have never had an independent existence. The present system of railroads is the creation of that common control. Its growth and development, which has been by construction by the normal means and in the usual manner according to which a system of railroads is naturally developed, was influenced and determined by the common control to which it has always been subject. That is to say, the different parts of the system were conceived and constructed as parts of one interdependent system of lines.

The manner of the growth and development of the system is graphically shown by the series of maps portraying the system at different stages of its development (Defendants' Exhibits 1 to 7) and by the testimony, among other witnesses, of Mr. Kruttschnitt (see particularly II Vol., pp. 725-6, 727). Exhibits numbers 1 to 6, inclusive, are maps which exhibit the growth and development of the Southern Pacific System (including as a part thereof lines standing in the name of the Central Pacific) by showing the lines in existence on successive dates, viz: January 1, 1870, January 1, 1875, January 1, 1880, January 1, 1882, March 1, 1885, and July 2, 1890. Exhibit No. 7 is a map intended to show the Southern Pacific System west of El Paso as it was on July 2, 1890, the date of the Federal Anti-Trust Act, and to show each subsequent addition or extension thereof. Every such addition or extension is designated and numbered, and the reason therefor explained and justified by Mr. Kruttschnitt (Vol. II, pp. 714-727). The gradual, ordinary, normal growth and development of the system as one interdependent whole is thus clearly demonstrated. (Exhibit No. 7 will be found at the beginning of Vol. V, Defendants' Exhibits.)

It follows from the foregoing that there has been no elimination or restriction of any prior existing competition, and the system of railroads is to be regarded as one organic whole and not as an abnormal union or combination of two or more independent competing lines. It follows also that the proposed separation of the roads standing in the name of the Central Pacific from the rest of the system is not an unmerging of two systems. There are no separate and distinct units to be restored to a former independent existence. The division which the Court is asked to make amounts to a disintegration of one interdependent system into more or less incomplete parts. As would naturally be expected from a common control which has continued for more than forty years, with reference to which the lines of railway were constructed, to which business has become accustomed, and with which the public are satisfied, the result of the disruption which the Government seeks to obtain will be most injurious not only to the dismembered parts but to the public depending upon them for service. Neither the Central Pacific, separate from the system with which it has grown up, nor the other lines of the system, severed from the Central Pacific, in union with which they were born and raised, can serve the public as well or supply the same amount of useful, effective competition as they have done under unified management.

As to the legal significance of the manner of the formation and development of the system of railroads now charged with undue and unreasonable restraint of trade, it certainly distinguishes this case from the Union Pacific-Southern Pacific unmerger and other cases relied on by appellant, all cases of combinations between railroad companies having an independent origin and existence which, prior to the combination, had been competing with each other, so that in each case it was found by the Court that the purpose and effect of the combination was to destroy or unduly restrict prior existing competition, and the dissolution of the combination restored self-sufficient units to the status quo ante of independent competitive existence.

That the distinction just pointed out is material will have to be supported by an appeal to reason rather than authority, because it does not seem to have occurred to any one before this suit to charge that the Sherman law was violated by a common control which did not result from a combination between previously independent competitors but from the construction of a system of lines by one and the same interest. To construct and thereafter operate two trading or manufacturing concerns doing the same kind of business in overlapping territory is not the same thing in fact or in the eyes of the law as the purchase by the owner of one such concern of another, similarly located, but independently owned and operated. In the one case there would be an extension of trading or manufacturing facilities with no effect upon any competition that ever existed; in the other case one competitor would absorb another competitor and a disappearance of prior competition would result. One man may build two railroads so located that a part of the traffic carried by one could be carried by the other, and both may serve in some degree a common territory, so that, if they were independent enterprises under separate ownership, they would be competitors; yet it cannot be said that, by constructing two lines of railroad one of which was a potential competitor of the other in respect to some traffic, a person was guilty of suppressing or diminishing competition. No reasonable construction of the Sherman law can make it prohibit a man, or the same set of men acting under one corporate name or several corporate names, from constructing and thereafter owning and operating two or more lines of railroad so situated that one by itself or in connection with other lines may serve territory which overlaps the territory served by the other. And this is true, although at the same time it may be true that different parts of such a system, if they had had an independent existence and so had been competing with each other, could not thereafter lawfully be united in a common ownership or control because of the destruction or diminution of antecedent competition which would result. When the construction of the Central Pacific line to Ogden was followed by construction of the line from San Francisco which, with connections, reached the Gulf by a more southern route, and thence by steamships was extended to the Atlantic coast, the effect was to add to the lines of transportation open to the public and not to diminish or restrict any existing competition. It is absurd to say that the construction and subsequent operation of this new line constituted a restraint of trade simply because such addition to the transportation facilities of the company was made by the same people who owned the Central Pacific.

In this connection the use of the adjective "natural" in the petition of the Government is significant. Heretofore the adjectives "actual," "existing," "prior existing," or the noun "competition," without any qualifying or restrictive words, have been sufficient to define the prohibitions of the Sherman law or to charge a violation of that law, but by reason of the origin and nature of the Southern Pacific system of lines it became necessary in this suit to seek a more comprehensive adjective than "actual," or "existing," or even "potential," to be used in describing the competition which defendants are charged with preventing. The word "natural" was therefore selected. It is used to denote competition which would exist if two or more concerns were not owned by the same person. To charge that two business enterprises or two lines of railway engaged in interstate commerce are "natural competitors" is not sufficient to show that their joint ownership or control is a restraint of trade or even an elimination of competition, unless it be further shown that such natural competitors came into existence under separate ownership, and that the joint control is a result of a subsequent contract, combination or conspiracy which had for its dominant purpose and effect to suppress the competition which before that time had existed between the parties to the combination. Otherwise there would be a restraint of competition whenever one person (individual or corporation) owns or constructs and thereafter operates two or more stores or manufactories or lines of railroad which, if separately owned, might compete with each other. And, in order to avoid the charge of elemination of competition, and, possibly, of restraint of trade, commercial and manufacturing enterprises would have to be confined to practically one store or plant; for the facilities of communication are such that the field of trade of commercial and manufacturing enterprises may be coextensive with this country, and those situated in remotely distant parts of the United States may have overlapping and competitive territory. The adoption of the Government's theory of what constitutes a restraint of trade would prevent a railroad company from building parallel branches or feeders or loops to serve different parts of tributary territory or any divergent stems or forks to put itself into connection with different gateways; for, considering the vast number of railroads in this country, it would always be possible for some part of a system of railways to form with some possible connection a through line which might compete for some traffic with the parent road. The use of the term "natural competitor" in the petition may be characterized as an ingenious effort to extend the meaning of the Sherman law to an unprecedented and unwarranted extent.

The defense based on the origin and nature of the Central Pacific-Southern Pacific System amounts to as much as the difference between a charge of restraint of trade based on the elimination or lessening of previously existing competition and an alleged restraint of trade based on the hypothetical, uncertain, indirect effect on competition resulting from the same person constructing and thereafter operating lines of railway which, under different ownership, might have been differently constructed or combined differently with other lines so as to make the sum total of competition greater than under existing conditions. And the difference is as great as no cause of action and a possibly good cause of action under the Anti-Trust Law.

We are firm in the belief that the genesis of the Southern Pacific System is sufficient of itself to show that it is not within the condemnation of the Federal Anti-Trust Act. When we go further, as we shall do in this argument, and show that the system of railways so formed and developed possesses none of the characteristics of a prohibited combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade and has neither the power nor any motive to destroy competition, and that its preservation rather than its dissolution is demanded by the public interest, we are really assuming the offensive, because we are showing, not only that there are no legal grounds for the dismemberment of the system, but no reasonable ground or excuse for an attempt on the part of the Government to accomplish such a result.

We claim that the defense under discussion, the origin and nature of the common control, is a complete answer to the whole of the Government's case under the Sherman Law, even if this control had prevented or lessened any competition which would otherwise exist between the Central Pacific lines and the other lines of the Southern Pacific System. This is true because the nature and origin of the common control gives to the system the same legal character it would have if it had been originally constructed and owned by one and the same corporation, and for the other reasons set forth in the briefs. But we do not admit that the effect of the common control is to prevent any competition which would otherwise exist between the Central Pacific lines and the other lines of the system. There is no competition between the "Sunset route" and the Central Pacific line to Ogden as such, or between the other lines of the system and the Central Pacific lines, considered by themselves. The only competitive relations alleged and attempted to be proved are those between the "Sunset route" and the Central Pacific-Union Pacific through line. While it is not necessary for our case, we shall endeavor to show that the contention of the Government, that the common control complained of has prevented or created the power and incentive to prevent the competition between the Ogden route and "Sunset route", is not only contrary to the evidence in the present case, but contrary to the evidence, the pleadings and contentions of the Government and the findings of this Court in the Union Pacific unmerger suit. As the common control has always existed the contention of the Government means that there has never been a time when any real competition betweeen the two routes existed.

This brings us to a discussion of the issues and decision in the Unmerger Suit. We expect to show that whether at the time of the merger in 1901 actual competition existed between the Ogden and the Sunset routes, and the extent of such competition, and whether the control by the Southern Pacific Company of the Central Pacific created the power or incentive to prevent such competition, were material issues in the former suit. They were presented by the pleadings, testified to by witnesses, discussed in the briefs, and finally decided by the Supreme Court, the decision being in favor of the actual existence, prior to the merger, of "competition, sharp, well defined and vigorous", and of the absence of power or motive on the part of the Southern Pacific Company to destroy or control such competition. We expect further to show that the Southern Pacific System, with the Central Pacific lines included therein, is amenable to none of the objections which led to the condemnation of the Union Pacific-Southern Pacific merger.

IV. The Union Pacific Unmerger Case (United States vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Southern Pacific Company, et als., 226 U. S. 61).

The defendants have put in evidence the record in the above case, consisting of the pleadings and the orders, decrees and opinions of both courts (Defendants' Exhibits, Vol. VI, pp. 1990, ffg.). They have also put in evidence the brief and argument filed in this Court on behalf of the United States. We propose now to show the issues raised by the pleadings, to confirm and fortify the conclusions drawn from the pleadings by references to the brief and argument, and then to show how those issues were decided by this Court and upon what grounds. Such showing will make clear that the decision in the Unmerger Suit is no precedent for a judgment against defendants in the present case, and that the Government secured the unmerger of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems upon propositions of fact and of law inconsistent with those it now relies upon to secure the dismemberment of the Southern Pacific System.

The Pleadings.

The parties defendant were the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, the Southern Pacific Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company, Great Northern Railway Company, Farmers Loan & Trust Company, E. H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, and other individuals.

After alleging the interstate commerce business of the defendant railroad companies and the relations of the individual defendants to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the petition (paragraph III) sets forth the corporate history of the Union Pacific and of the Central Pacific with special reference to the Pacific Railroad Acts, and cites the provisions of those acts requiring the operation of those roads as one continuous line, quoting Section 15 of the act of July 2, 1864, and stating the terms of the amendment of June 20, 1874. The petition, in the same paragraph, describes the location of the main lines of the Oregon Short Line and of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, and alleges the ownership of those companies by the Union Pacific. It also shows the ownership in 1901 and since by the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company of a line of steamships between Portland and San Francisco and of a line of steamships plying between Portland and Japan, China and other points of the Orient. It also alleges the ownership by the Southern Pacific Company of the lines of railroad from Portland to New Orleans and Galveston and the operation in connection therewith of the steamships to New York, as well as its ownership of the capital stock of the Central Pacific and the operation and management of the lines of that Company.

The competition existing at the time of the merger betwen the Union Pacific System and the Southern Pacific System is thus described in paragraph III of the petition:

> "That the said rail lines of the said Southern Pacific Company from the Mississippi River to Portland, Oreg., by way of San Francisco and Los Angeles, were in active competition with said lines of railroad of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for the transportation of vast quantities of freight from points in the Mississippi Valley and in the Eastern States; both to and from the Pacific coast and points in Colorado and other interior States; and said steamship line of said Southern Pacific Company from New York to New Orleans and Galveston, together with its rail lines run in connection therewith, was in active competition with the lines of said Union Pacific Railroad Company for a large amount of traffic originating in the Atlantic coast and Central States;
>
> "That the rail line of said Southern Pacific Company from San Francisco to Portland was in active competition with the ships plying between San Francisco and Portland and owned by said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, as hereinbefore alleged;
>
> "That the said ships of the Portland and Asiatic Steamship Company, in connection with the rail lines of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and its subsidiary companies, as hereinbefore alleged, running from Portland, Oreg., to the East, were in active competition with the ships of said Pacific Mail Steamship Company and the rails of said

Southern Pacific Company running to the East from San Francisco;

"That the line of railroad composed of the tracks of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company between Ogden, Utah and Portland, Oreg., were in active competition with the lines of said Southern Pacific Company, between said points;

"That the rail lines of the said Southern Pacific Company were in active competition with the ships and rail lines of the said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company for a large amount of traffic between San Francisco and points in Montana, Idaho, and other States;

"That the competition hereinbefore alleged between the system of railroads and steamships owned and controlled by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and the system of railroads and steamships owned and controlled by said Southern Pacific Company was substantial and included a large volume of traffic, both freight and passenger."

The remainder of the paragraph deals with competition of the Union Pacific System with the Santa Fe System and with the Northern Pacific and Great Northern systems.

It clearly appears from the foregoing that the petition alleges the existence at the time of the merger of "active competition" between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific systems in the following fields:

(a) Between the rail lines of the two systems for traffic to and from Colorado and other interior States.

(b) Between the Southern Pacific steamship line from New York and Galveston and New Orleans, in connection with its rail lines, and the Union Pacific for Atlantic Coast and Central States traffic. This is equivalent to the allegation of active competition at the time of the merger between the "Ogden route" and the "Sunset-Gulf route" in respect to Atlantic Seaboard territory.

(c) Between the rail line of the Southern Pacific and the steamship line of the Union Pacific between San Francisco and Portland.

(d) Between the steamships in the Asiatic trade of the Union Pacific running from Portland and those of Pacific Mail (in which the Southern Pacific had a majority stock ownership) running from San Francisco.

(e) Between rail lines of the two systems between Ogden, Utah and Portland, Oregon.

(f) Between the rail lines of the Southern Pacific and the ships and rail lines of the Union Pacific between San Francisco and points in Montana, Idaho and other States.

The important fact is the allegation then, forming an admission now, of "active competition" at and prior to the merger between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route, the charge made and sustained being, as we shall hereafter see, that such competition was destroyed by the merger. Another important fact is that the competition between the Ogden gateway and the El Paso gateway was not the only competition between the two systems. They were striving for traffic in many other competitive fields at the time they were merged. (See also testimony of Mr. Spence in the present suit, Vol. III, p. 1178.)

Paragraph IV of the petition alleges the acquisition for the Union Pacific of $75,000,000, out of a total then outstanding $197,847,788, of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company, for the purpose and with the effect of eliminating the aforesaid prior existing competition, which holding of stock was afterwards increased to $90,000,000; and that by virtue of such stock ownership the management of the two systems was amalgamated and the competition previously existing between the two railway systems and their steamship lines was destroyed.

Paragraph V shows the efforts of the defendants, Harriman, Schiff, Kahn and Stillman to acquire control of the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. Paragraph VI relates to their dealings with the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, and Paragraph VII to their efforts to secure control of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company.

The relief was a general prayer that the defendants, and each of them, be enjoined from carrying on the conspiracy charged as existing to restrain interstate and foreign trade and commerce, and a part of the special relief prayed for was the unmerging of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems by the sale of the Southern Pacific stock held by or for the Union Pacific. It was further prayed that the Court grant such other and further relief as the nature of the case may require.

Coming now to the responsive pleadings, the answer of the Union Pacific and its subsidiary companies, the Oregon Short Line and the Oregon Railroad & Navigation companies, admits, among other things, the construction of the Union Pacific and of the Central Pacific under the Pacific Railroad Acts, refers to those acts for an answer to the statements in the petition respecting the duties imposed upon the companies covered thereby, but makes no averment as to any failure on the part of the Central Pacific or Southern Pacific to discharge those duties. It admits the ownership by the Southern Pacific Company of the lines of steamships between New York and Galveston and between New York and New Orleans, and its ownership of the capital stock of the railroad companies owning the lines of railroad from New Orleans and Galveston, through the States of Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico and Arizona, to San Francisco, California, and Portland, Oregon.

The answer sets up the history of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, its indebtedness to the United States, the settlement of that indebtedness, involving the organization of the Central Pacific Railway Company. It is specially averred (paragraph III, clause 25) that the discharge of such indebtedness was caused and brought about by the Southern Pacific Company, which provided the means for satisfying the same.

It is denied (clause 27),

> "that the steamship lines of the Southern Pacific Company between New York and New Orleans and between New York and Galveston, together with the rail lines in connection therewith, were in active competition with the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for a large amount of traffic originating on the Atlantic Coast and in the Central States."

It is averred, on the contrary (clause 28),

> "that in the transcontinental lines of railroad reaching the Pacific coast south of Portland, Oregon, the Union Pacific Railroad was but a link, about 1,000 miles in length, and the defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company merely an intermediate carrier without any power to make rates upon such traffic, and that the defendant Southern Pacific Company, through its possession and operation of the Central Pacific Railroad and its ownership of all the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, controlled that portion of such transcontinental line about 850 miles in length extending from Ogden, Utah, to the Pacific Ocean at San Francisco and other points in California, and no rate between the Missouri River or points east thereof and the Pacific coast south of Portland or Asiatic ports could be made by these defendants except with the consent of and by agreement with said Southern Pacific Company; and while these defendants separately owned connecting lines of railroad, operated as a single system as aforesaid, extending from the Missouri River to Portland, Oregon, and operated certain small steamships between Portland and San Francisco, as aforesaid, yet they aver that such route via Portland was not only an impracticable route as a competitor of said Southern Pacific Company, but any attempt of these defendants to use it as such competitor would have greatly injured defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, because said Southern Pacific Company would thereupon have preferred the rivals of said Union Pacific Railroad Company in routing and interchanging traffic at Ogden, and the business, in tonnage and revenue, which defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company would thereby have lost would have greatly exceeded the total volume of any business it could have secured over such impracticable route in competition with said Southern Pacific Company, so that the interest of defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the companies formerly owning its lines, always prevented it and them from using or attempting to use the said route via Portland in competition, with said Southern Pacific Company upon any business to or from the Pacific coast south of Portland or to or from Asiatic ports."

Specific denials are made of the existence of competition in other fields described in the petition.

Then follows, in Paragraph IV, Clause 14, the reasons alleged for the acquisition of the stock of the Southern Pacific Company, namely:

"That although the railroad of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the said Central Pacific Railroad physically formed a continuous line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, yet almost one-half the length of said line, to wit, from Ogden to San Francisco, with many branches, was owned by the Central Pacific Railway Company, and was controlled and operated by the Southern Pacific Company, and no rate for the transportation of passengers or property over the said line between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean could be made without the concurrence of both the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company; and the only means by which the Union Pacific Railroad Company could secure control of the said Central Pacific Railroad was to secure control of the said Southern Pacific Company, which owned every share of the stock of said Central Pacific Railway Company. That the lines of railroad now owned by defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company had been greatly improved while in the hands of receivers in the foreclosure proceedings hereinbefore mentioned and prior to January 1, 1901, it recognized the necessity, in the interest of the public as well as of itself, of further improving, and it had determined to further improve, the said railroads, particularly the line between Council Bluffs and Ogden, in order to be able to develop its traffic and serve and accomplish the object of its construction, and to handle such traffic efficiently and economically. Unless the line of the Central Pacific Railway Company, extending from Ogden to the Pacific Ocean, was likewise improved, and put and maintained in condition to handle promptly and efficiently the transcontinental traffic passing over the Union Pacific Railroad, the improvement of the latter, as contemplated, would be practically futile. The said Central Pacific Railroad had been mortgaged for large amounts, and the Central Pacific Railway Company was without means or credit to procure the means necessary to bring, by improvements, its said line of railroad up to anything approximating the condition and efficiency of said Union Pacific Railroad; and the Southern Pacific Company was also without such means or credit, as practically all of its assets, and the assets of the various corporations controlled by it were mortgaged or otherwise pledged. The stock of defendant Southern Pacific Company formerly owned by Collis P. Huntington, who died in August, 1900, together with other stock amounting to nearly one-half of the shares of said company, was for sale, and if the same had been acquired by any interest adverse to defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company, its plans, efforts and object to improve its line of railroad between Council Bluffs and Ogden, and the substantial object of the aforesaid acts of Congress providing for a continuous line and system from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, would have been defeated and rendered futile, and defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company would furthermore have been deprived of any opportunity to become, and rival lines would have become, the preferred connection of said Southern Pacific Company and Central Pacific Railway Company at Ogden, Utah, and the value of the lines of railroad and the credit of the Union Pacific Railroad Company would have been greatly and permanently depreciated and impaired. For the purpose of procuring the improvement of the said Central Pacific Railroad, and to bring it up to the standard and degree of efficiency approximately of the line of the Union Pacific Railroad, and in order that said Union Pacific Railroad Company should become and securely remain the preferred connection of said Southern Pacific Company and Central Pacific Railway Company at Ogden, and thereby secure the unrouted traffic of said companies interchanged at Ogden, and in order to protect itself against the acquisition and control of said Central Pacific Railway Company by adverse interests to these defendants, and without any intent or purpose in anywise to suppress or restrain any competition in interstate or foreign commerce the said 900,000 shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pacific Company were purchased and acquired as hereinbefore alleged by defendants Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and are now so held by the company last named."

It is significant that the reasons for the acquisition of the Central Pacific line are based upon apprehended trouble should the stock of the Southern Pacific Company pass into hostile hands, not upon any past misconduct or failure of the Central Pacific, under the control of the Southern Pacific, to discharge its duties under the Pacific Railroad Acts.

The remainder of the answer deals with matters with which we are not presently concerned.

As was to be expected under the circumstances, the Southern Pacific Company in its answer makes the same defenses as the Union Pacific. It also denies competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route and avers that no through rate could be made over either without its consent. It denies the existence of competition between the two systems in the other respects charged in the petition.

It is significant that it especially defends its control of the Central Pacific and its acquisition of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company.

The answers of the other defendants are not material to this inquiry. To all the answers general replications were filed.

The Brief and Argument of the United States.

We have put in evidence the briefs on the facts and on the law filed on behalf of the United States for the light they throw upon the issues and upon the materiality of the several issues.

The Attorney General treated as one of the issues in the case, and one of the most important issues, the existence vel non at the time of the merger in 1901 of actual competition between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific in respect to traffic between California and the Atlantic coast, and contended that such competition existed because of the active competition for such traffic which existed between the alternative routes, now familiar to us as the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route. This necessarily implied the assertion that the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific Company had not prevented such competition, and counsel for the United States expressly claimed that such was the proven fact.

This contention, which as we shall see prevailed in this Court, is absolutely inconsistent with the present contention that the competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route or the El Paso gateway was prevented by the Southern Pacific's ownership of the Central Pacific, and with the present contention that such competition as is claimed to have existed and to exist between the two routes was unaffected by the merger of the Southern Pacific with the Union Pacific.

One of the main headings of the Government's Brief of Facts is "Competition Between Union Pacific and Southern Pacific Previous to Merger" (p. 34 of the brief). This is referred to as perhaps the most prominent issue tendered by the pleadings, which are analyzed to show the allegation on the one hand and the denial on the other of such competition. On page 35 will be found an enumeration of the different competitive fields, seven in number, in which the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific systems were striving for traffic at the time of the merger. That such competition was actual and in respect to traffic important in amount, is shown under seven subdivisions of the brief.

The first of these subdivisions "Competition As to Traffic Between the Atlantic Seaboard and the Pacific Coast", is discussed on pages 36-90. After a preliminary description of the alternative through lines in question and of the efforts of the Southern Pacific to secure the routing of traffic via El Paso, New Orleans, and thence to destination via its steamship lines, and the efforts of the Union Pacific organization to secure the traffic via the Ogden route, and of the rates and divisions, the following conclusion was stated (p. 39):

> "Therefore there was the same incentive to active, energetic competition between these lines that there would have been had the Southern Pacific not owned the line between Ogden and San Francisco."

This statement is supported by quotations from the testimony of a large number of witnesses showing the existence prior to the merger of active, vigorous, effective competition between the Ogden gateway and the El Paso gateway, and especially between what we now term the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route (pp. 39 ffg.).

From page 78 of the brief we quote as follows:

> "It is a significant fact that the defendants spent several weeks in introducing testimony to show with infinite detail the improvements made since 1901 on the right-of-way and equipment of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, but made no effort to break down the showing made by complainant as to the active competition thus existing up to the time of the merger between the two systems."

On page 86 it is said that from this "great mass of testimony" it would seem to be "conclusively established" that not only was there competition between the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific as to traffic in the handling of which "neither system used a foot of the rails of the other, and as to which competition no witness has suggested a doubt", but "these lines were also competitive as to an enormous traffic moving between New York common points and California". And the brief goes on to present the competitive situation as follows, pages 86-88:

> "The only difference between the movement to California and to Portland and Oregon points consisted in the fact that from Ogden to San Francisco the California traffic moved over the rails of the Southern Pacific. But the Union Pacific line is a thousand miles long. Through its friendly connections east of the Missouri River, it constitutes a direct line from the seaboard to Ogden, 2,500 miles in length in round figures. Under the laws of Congress, as we will show in our brief of the law, the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific lines were required to be operated as a continuous line without discrimination; but irrespective of the law, the Southern Pacific, as a matter of self-preservation, was always compelled to and did gladly interchange business with the Union Pacific, accepting for its share of the through haul, the division of the through rate accorded to it by consent, from 1870 down to the present time, as testified to by Mr. Stubbs. The fact that at Omaha the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, the Chicago & Northwestern, Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Rock Island, the Wabash, the Chicago

Great Western, and the Illinois Central, were pouring vast streams of traffic into the Union Pacific to be transported thence to the coast, made that a very powerful transcontinental line; and in addition to this traffic moving through Omaha, there are many lines connecting with the Union Pacific at Kansas City, with which transcontinental business was interchanged.

"The statistics to which we shall later refer show the immense earnings accruing monthly to that system for the handling of business to and from California points. These two great routes from the east were open at equal rates, the business was fought for by the one against the other by all means known to railroad solicitors, and it is idle speculation to consider what might have been done by the Southern Pacific in the way of diverting traffic, or raising divisions or anything else of that sort. It was, as a matter of practical railroading, an impossible suggestion that the Southern Pacific would deliberately refuse to do business turned over to it by the Union Pacific and its eastern connections, to secure which it was at no expense, and which was worked in connection with its local and intermountain business. This did not in any way, however, prevent the Southern Pacific from endeavoring to take every pound of freight it could by its own through line from one coast to the other. Every railroad man who testified, and it must be remembered that the natural sympathies of railroad men are not with the complainant here, was emphatic as to the strenuous competition and active efforts of the Southern Pacific on the one hand, and the Union Pacific on > the other, to get and keep from each other this great traffic; and it is a new suggestion, born out of the necessities of this case, that the Union Pacific could not be a competitor of the Sunset Route of the Southern Pacific because it does not reach through to California, and hence had no power, independent of its connections, to make rates. As we have shown above, the power it condededly possesed to make rates to Portland included the power to make rates to San Francisco."

Pages 91 to 275 of the Brief of Facts are devoted to showing competition between the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems as to traffic between points in the interior and the Pacific coast, between the Atlantic Seaboard and Colorado and Utah common points, between Portland and Utah and Colorado common points, including certain points in Nevada, between San Francisco and Portland, between San Francisco and points in Montana, Idaho, and other States, and between various ports in the Orient and points east of the Missouri river in the United States.

Having demonstrated the existence prior to the merger of active competition between the Ogden route and the El Paso route, including the Sunset-Gulf route, notwithstanding the Southern Pacific Company's ownership of the Central Pacific, counsel for the United States then present an argument (which also was successful in the Supreme Court) to the effect that this competition was not merely permissive on the part of the Southern Pacific but existed independently of its grace or favor. On page 276 of the Brief of Facts we find in large type the following proposition:

> "The possession of a through line from the Missouri River to Portland with the additional strength given by the boat line from there to San Francisco, made the Union Pacific so powerful in maintaining and conducting this competitive struggle for business that the Southern Pacific was helpless to destroy that competition simply by the ownership of the line from Ogden to San Francisco over which the traffic secured by the Union Pacific ordinarily moved."

This is followed by the statement that, "This is a fact that has at all times been recognized both by the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific companies, and has also been clearly established by the testimony in this case." It is not necessary to refer in detail to the portions of the brief dealing with this branch of the case. It is interesting to compare what was said as to the controlling influence of the Portland route on transcontinental rates, which convinced the Court and contributed to the Government's victory in the former case (pp. 283 ffg.), with the efforts of Government's counsel in the instant case to belittle and belie the exercise by the Portland route of any such influence. The argument showing want of power and of interest in the Southern Pacific Company to prevent competition between the two routes is closed (p. 317) with the declaration:

> "It was a physical impossibility for the Union Pacific to be excluded from the California traffic. The Southern Pacific would not only have lost the business it was carrying at remunerative rates from Ogden to San Francisco, but its revenue upon traffic moving over its long line from New York and from New Orleans would have been so shot to pieces that there would have been a speedy ending to any effort to 'bottle up' the Union Pacific at Ogden, to use the expression of some of the witnesses, which was adopted by the trial court."

In order to make out this branch of the case against the Union Pacific it remained only to show that the merger of the two systems effectually destroyed competition between them, including the competition between the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes, and this showing was made in pages 318-395 of the Brief of Facts.

It is not necessary to repeat here the argument of the Government. It sufficed to convince the Supreme Court. Its general character may be seen from the three headings of the argument:

> "The purpose and effect of the consolidation of the traffic departments has been to destroy competition" (p. 318).
>
> "After the purchase of the control of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific, not only were agencies consolidated and the competitive efforts of soliciting agencies withdrawn, but the agents of the two systems were instructed to handle traffic in a way to produce the most revenue for the consolidated system" (p. 360).
> "Previous to the acquisition of the control of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific, as to such business as the Southern Pacific could not get by its own route to the East by New Orleans, and which had to move by Ogden, there was an active competition kept up between the Union Pacific and the Rio Grande, but this competition on the part of the Rio Grande was substantially destroyed through the joint efforts of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific agencies" (p. 372).

We call attention to the fact that counsel for the Government demolished the contention, evidently made by the Union Pacific, that the continued competitive solicitation of traffic for the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes by the agents of the Union Pacific-Southern Pacific organization was as effective to produce competition between the two routes as the previous competitive striving for traffic independently by the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific. Notwithstanding such demolition counsel for the Government in the present suit seeks to revive the Union Pacific's contention and urges it now against the Southern Pacific. We may be pardoned, therefore, for reproducing one of the shafts with which such contention was punctured (p. 319):

> "A fanciful idea has been born out of the necessities of this extraordinary situation, to the effect that competition can go on just the same, even though there is a common head to the various parts of the system, which were formerly in competition. Of course, that is absurd on its face, but in the case of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems, the farce of maintaining separate commercial agents who come in immediate contact with the shipper, has been abandoned, except in the case of New York City and San Francisco, and those offices, as we will show by the testimony, have practically been consolidated because of the instructions given as to the way business should be worked."

In the Government's Brief on the Law the same propositions in respect to the existence of active competition at the time of the merger between the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems, including competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route, are advanced and supported by cases defining competition and the effect thereon of a combination between competing railroad companies.

Whatever be the ruling of the Court upon the pleas of estoppel, we will certainly not be denied the right to avail ourselves of the arguments made by the Government in the former suit. And we may safely assume that they will suffice in this suit, as they did in the former suit, to overcome the contention that the ownership of the Central Pacific lines by the Southern Pacific Company prevented or created the power to prevent or had an interest in preventing competition between the Ogden route or the Sunset-Gulf route, and the contention that the competition, if any, between the two routes remained the same after the merger of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems. The fact that in the former case those contentions were denounced, and the present case are adopted, by the Government, does not make the arguments any the less convincing.

Opinion and Decree of the Supreme Court.

We ask special attention to the discussion of the opinion of the Court which follows because, in showing that a decision against the lawfulness of the combination of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems is not authority for the separation of the Central Pacific lines from the Southern Pacific System, we at the same time show that the Southern Pacific System, whether considered with reference to its origin and subsequent development or with reference to past, present or prospective conditions, is not an unlawful combination in restraint of trade. In order to make clear the radical difference between the inclusion of the Central Pacific lines with the other Southern Pacific lines in one system and the merger in 1901 of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems, we shall state the objectionable features which led to the condemnation of the merger and then show the absence of such features from the common control of the Central Pacific and other Southern Pacific lines.

When, in addition to the various points of difference to which we are about to call attention, it is remembered that the common control now complained of took place nearly a half century ago and has been followed by no absorption or acquisition of any competing properties but only by gradual, normal, natural growth and development, and that over the combination of the two systems involved in the former case there was the shadow of a powerful personality, ambitious for domination over the railroads of this country, and more than a hint of other great combinations or attempted combinations, it will be seen that the general conditions and atmosphere, as well as the particular facts of the two cases, differ toto coelo from one another.

First, as to the combination between the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems—

(a) It was a combination between two great systems of previously independent and competing railroads which, prior to the combination, were actively competing for traffic in many different fields of competition. They were distinct in origin and met only at the junction at Ogden. Each was a complete, self-sufficient whole.

(b) The combination was voluntary, without justifying necessity or legitimate purpose or lawful cause.

The justification alleged, that the Union Pacific was at the mercy of the Southern Pacific as owner of the line from Ogden to San Francisco, whose future treatment of the Union Pacific might not be as blameless as its past conduct was conceded to have been, was not accepted by this Court. The contrary contention of the Government was approved, namely, that the ability of the Union Pacific to operate a through competitive line to the Coast via Ogden did not depend upon the favor or permission of the Southern Pacific Company; that the Southern Pacific Company's own interests and the requirements of the Pacific Railroad Acts sufficed to insure for the Union Pacific in the future the continued operation of the through line via Ogden under reasonable conditions as to rates, divisions and otherwise. Subsequent developments, disclosed by the evidence in this case and elsewhere discussed (infra, pp. 107-108, 202), have demonstrated the correctness of the conclusion of the Court, that a merger of the two systems was not necessary to protect the through line via Ogden, and have shown with equal conclusiveness that the continued existence of the through line does not require, nor will its efficiency be improved by, a separation of the Central Pacific line from the Southern Pacific System.

(c) The result of the amalgamation into one of the two systems was to effectually destroy the active competition previously existing between them in many important fields, including that between the Ogden route and the "Sunset route".

Such was the contention of the Government, as we have already shown. Such was the conclusion of the Supreme Court; otherwise the decision would have been for defendants.

(d) The public interest would be subserved by the dissolution of the combination.

There was nothing to rebut the inference that the public was being injured by the destruction of the incentive to good service afforded by the prior existing competition. On the contrary, it appears from the Government's Brief on the Facts that evidence tending to show impaired service was in the record (See Brief on the Facts, pp. 19; 519-565).

(e) It did not appear that the unmerger would be accompanied by any consequences unjust or even injurious to the parties or that it would be otherwise than to the advantage of the public. It simply involved the renewal of the independent competitive existence of two complete self-sufficient systems, with no impairment of the service and with the probability of better service under re-created competition.

Now as to the union under one control or management, the inclusion in one system, of the Central Pacific and the other lines composing the Southern Pacific System. There is a radical difference between the organic union of lines embraced in the Southern Pacific System and the combination formed between the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems in respect to each of the features, indicated above, which led to the unmerger of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific.

(a) The railroad system now attacked was not formed by a combination between previously existing and competing lines of railroad.

The lines of railway in question, in whatever corporate names they once stood or now stand, had a common origin and grew up together as interdependent parts of one system, without any status quo ante of independent operation or competitive existence. The common control preceded the building up of the system. The different parts which are now claimed to be competitive and are sought to be torn asunder were conceived and constructed, and have ever since been managed and operated, as parts of one system. They do not constitute two complete or sufficient wholes; they are interdependent parts of one whole. The resulting system of lines has the same legal character it would have had if its different parts had been constructed and had been, originally and ever since, owned and operated by one corporation. They are in a real sense one enterprise.

The distinction we are making is of such controlling importance that, at the risk of repeating what may be said elsewhere in the briefs, we shall state in a summary way the origin and formation of what is now the Southern Pacific System. For, in determining the legal character of a common ownership or management of lines of railway, one of the matters to be considered is the origin of the common control and the then existing relations of the parts. The union under one control and management, or the inclusion in one system of the Central Pacific lines and of the lines now in the name of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company began so far back in the past that its exact date cannot now be shown. It probably antedated the construction of any lines of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. It certainly antedated the existence, actual or contemplated, of the parts of the system which are now alleged to be competitive with the Central Pacific part. Practically every mile of the Southern Pacific System, other than the Central Pacific line between Ogden and Oakland, came into existence during the regime of the common control and management, and is the creation of the common ownership or control.

The Southern Pacific System existed before the Southern Pacific Company was created. It began when those who were in absolute control as owners of the Central Pacific Railroad Company obtained like absolute control of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. From that time on the union between the lines and properties was as complete as if they had been owned by one and the same person. Huntington, Stanford, Crocker and Hopkins, the "big four", the men who constructed and owned the Southern Pacific system, were no ordinary men. It is not a mere figure of speech when we say that they were the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. The Southern Pacific System was their single enterprise. This was true in the seventies, and in 1883, when the Sunset-Gulf route was opened for business, and in 1885, when the Southern Pacific lease was made. The Southern Pacific Company was in the beginning the "big four" incorporated, a convenient agency for the operation of the previously existing system, before then known as the Central Pacific System and after that time as the Southern Pacific System. The lease did not create the common control or management or alter its essential character. It had no practical effect upon the operation or management of the properties. The same officers and employees with the same functions and work continued as before. The testimony of these men is to the effect that they went to bed one night all "C. P.'s" and woke up the next morning all "S. P.'s", and that was all there was to it.

Let us now try to get at the date when the Central Pacific lines and properties, so far as they then existed, and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's lines and properties, such as then existed, if any, came under that common control and management from which sprang the Southern Pacific System.

The Central Pacific was under the control of the "big four" ab initio. As to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, there is some reason for believing that it was initially an enterprise of Mr. Huntington and his associates. Its first report to the Secretary of the Interior under the Pacific Railroad Acts, for the year ending June 30, 1868, was forwarded in a letter from the office of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and signed by C. P. Huntington. Defendants' Exhibits No. 23, Vol. V, page 1704.

But be that as it may, certain it is that on October 12, 1870, the existence of the common control in question became manifest. On that date the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California was formed by a consolidation, under the laws of California, of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and three other small railroad corporations. The "big four" appear in the articles of association as constituting a majority of the new board. (See Vol. IV of Petitioner's Exhibits, pp. 1282 ffg., Exhibit 13.) From that time on the destinies of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company were united with the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The properties ever after continued under a common control and management and developed and grew up as interdependent parts of one whole.

Taking then October 12, 1870, as the date when the union under one control of lines of the Central Pacific and of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was a manifest fact, when the nucleus or germ of the system of railways now attacked as an illegal combination was in existence, let us note what lines of railroads were then in existence or in contemplation. This can be seen from the outline history of the corporate organization of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, Petitioner's Exhibits 12 and 13, Vol. IV of Exhibits, pages 1277, 1282. The lines in being at the time are also shown in Petitioner's Exhibit 42, IV Vol. of Exhibits, pages 1638 ffg.

On October 12, 1870, the constructed lines of railway of the Central Pacific Railroad Company consisted of the line from near Ogden to Sacramento, thence via Stockton, Lathrop, Niles and San Jose to Oakland, and two branches, the California, and Oregon, which then stopped at Chico, a short distance above Marysville, and the San Joaquin Branch which extended from Lathrop nearly to Modesto.

On the coming into existence on October 12, 1870, of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California, the only constructed line was a line from San Francisco south to Gilroy, a distance of eighty miles. (IV Vol. of Petitioner's Exhibits, p. 1283.) This line as subsequently extended gradually along the coast was not connected with the rest of the system until some time in 1901. Of the four companies parties to the consolidation, the San Francisco and San Jose Railroad Company had a completed line from San Francisco to San Jose (Id., p. 1283), and the Santa Clara and Pajaro Valley Railroad Company had a completed line from San Jose to Gilroy (Id., p. 1284). Neither the Southern Pacific Railroad Company nor the California Southern Railroad Company had any constructed roads (Id., pp. 1284-5).

The articles of consolidation contain the corporate powers of each party to the consolidation and of the consolidated company. In this way we may ascertain the extent of railroad enterprise then in contemplation.

The charter purposes of the San Francisco & San Jose Railroad Company were to construct and operate a railroad from the city of San Francisco to the city of Jan Jose (Id., 1283).

The charter purposes of the Santa Clara & Pajaro Valley Railroad Company were to construct a railroad from the city of San Jose in Santa Clara County (joining there with the San Francisco & San Jose Railroad) to a point near the town of New Gilroy in the same county (Id., 1284).

The charter purposes of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company were to construct a railroad from some point on the Bay of San Francisco to pass through the counties of Santa Clara, Monterey, San Luis Obispo, Tulare, Los Angeles and San Diego to the town of San Diego; thence eastward through the county of San Diego to the eastern line of California, there to connect with a contemplated railroad from said eastern line of the State of California to the Mississippi River (Id., 1284).

The charter purposes of the California Southern Railroad Company were to construct a railroad beginning at the town of Gilroy, and thence through the counties of Santa Clara, Santa Cruz and Monterey to a point near the town of Salinas (Id., 1284-5).

It will be observed that the railroads contemplated by the San Francisco & San Jose Railroad Company, the Santa Clara & Pajaro Railroad Company, and the California Southern Railroad Company formed a connecting railroad from San Francisco to Salinas City, and that the railroad contemplated by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was one passing through the counties named in the charter to Los Angeles and San Diego, and thence across to the eastern line of the State of California, there to connect with a contemplated railroad wholly in futuro.

The charter purposes of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California, formed by the consolidation, was to own and operate a continuous line of railroad from the city and county of San Francisco through the counties of San Mateo, Santa Clara, Monterey, Fresno, Tulare, Kern, San Bernardino, and San Diego to some point on the Colorado River in the southeastern part of California, a distance of 720 miles, as near as may be; also, a line of railroad from the town of Gilroy to the County of Santa Clara, passing through the counties of Santa Cruz and Monterey to a point near Salinas City, a distance of nearly 45 miles (Id., 1283).

It appears from the foregoing that at the time of the alleged illegal union under one control of lines of the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific Railroad companies, the only line of the Southern Pacific Railroad constructed was a short non-competitive line from San Francisco to Gilroy, and the only line in contemplation or authorized by the charter was a line from San Francisco southward to San Diego, or in the direction of San Diego, and thence eastward to a point on the Colorado River in the southeastern part of California. This line afterwards materialized as a line from Goshen to Mojave, and thence to the Needles, where it joined the Atlantic and Pacific (or Santa Fe). The portion between Mojave and the Needles was immediately after construction turned over to the Santa Fe and was operated by that Company under a lease until it acquired the full ownership by purchase. It is clear, therefore, that if we consider the lines constructed or authorized to be constructed at the time when the authors of the Southern Pacific System did the first and only thing in the history of the system resembling even remotely a combination of railway lines, there was no destruction or prevention of competition. Indeed the competition, the elimination of which is the basis of this suit, is that between the through route via Ogden, of which the Central Pacific line forms a part, and the through route formed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's line from San Francisco via Yuma to El Paso and its connections thence to New Orleans and Galveston and the steamship lines to New York.

But at that time neither this through line nor the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's part thereof was in being or in contemplation. The Sunset-Gulf route was not then in esse or in posse or in prospectu. The act of Congress incorporating the Texas and Pacific Railway Company, Section 23 of which authorized the "Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California" to construct a line of railroad from Tehachapi Pass, by way of Los Angeles, to the Texas and Pacific Railroad at or near the Colorado River (the line to Yuma) was not passed until March 3, 1871 (16 Stat. 573). And it was not until April 2, 1871, that the articles of incorporation of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company were amended so as to include within its charter purposes the line to Yuma (Vol. 4 of Petitioner's Exhibits, p. 1285). Hence in its origin or conception, as well as in its construction, the Sunset-Gulf route is a creature of the common control. The common ownership or control which extended the Central Pacific line to Goshen built under a different name the line thence to Mojave, to Los Angeles, to Yuma, to El Paso and beyond, using the same organization, even the same contractors, and operating the line as constructed by the same operating organization as had charge of the Central Pacific line. At the time the Sunset-Gulf route was opened for business in 1883 and at the time of the lease to the Southern Pacific Company in 1885, and at the date of the Sherman Law, the part of the Sunset-Gulf route north of Goshen was a line belonging to the Central Pacific Railroad Company (Kruttschnitt, II Vol., 723). At no time from the beginning, at least from October 12, 1870, has there been a time when the Central Pacific lines and the other lines of the system, as they came into existence, were not parts of one system. There has never been a break in the continuity of the unified management and common control. There is no date subsequent to October 12, 1870, which can reasonably be taken as the origin of the union into one system of the Central Pacific lines with the other lines of the system.

Such being the nature and origin of the railway system now attacked, can it be said to be a combination between previously competing lines? Can it be said to be a combination which had for its purpose or effect to eliminate competition between the Central Pacific line to Ogden and the Sunset-Gulf route? Is it a "combination" at all in the sense in which the word is used in the federal Anti-Trust Act? To call the Central Pacific line and the lines forming part of the Sunset-

Gulf route "natural competitors" does not advance the Government's case. It is a novel proposition that the Attorney-General may look over any railroad system and, when he finds that there have been constructed as parts of the system lines of road which furnish alternative routes for traffic and under independent ownership might compete with each other, he can dismember the system on the ground that it is a combination of natural competitors. It is also an absurd proposition. A common ownership or control cannot be at the same time the creator of competitive units and the destroyer of competition between them. A case of undue and unreasonable restraint of trade is not shown against a corporation owning or controlling a system of railroads by showing simply that an increase of the general stock of competition might result if some parts of its system were separated and either placed under independent ownership or turned over to some rival company.

We might pursue the subject further, but we submit enough has been said to show the radical difference between the Southern Pacific System, the manner of whose origin and gradual growth from within has been fully developed by the evidence, and the amalgamated system artificially created at one time by the combination of the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific systems. This difference extends to the nature and effect of a decree of dissolution. In one case there was an unmerger; in the other there would be a dismemberment. In one case self-sufficient units were left to renew their previous independent existence; in the other, parts which were not intended to exist apart would be left to a maimed existence of impaired efficiency. In one case the public is benefited by a restoration of competition which had formerly existed; in the other the effort to convert into competitors lines constructed as parts of one system would injure the public by substituting imperfect parts for a well-rounded whole.

(b) The formation and development of the Southern Pacific System was for lawful and justifying purposes. It was neither its purpose nor effect to eliminate competition.

While it may not be necessary for our case, we desire to show under this heading that it cannot be said that, by reason of the absence of any reason or necessity or useful purpose to be served by the construction of the Southern Pacific System, including therein the Central Pacific lines, it must be presumed that the union of the lines into one system had for its direct and intended purpose the suppression of any competition resulting therefrom.

The genesis of the Southern Pacific System, fully disclosed by the evidence and indicated under the previous heading, establishes this second point by showing that the competitive potentialities which form the basis of the alleged restraint in trade were not in existence at the time the common control was created. But there is still more to be said on the subject.

The "big four" were great men who had the vision, but there is nothing in the record to justify the statement that they had in mind the Sunset-Gulf route when they gradually extended southward the Central Pacific line from Goshen. They built this extension in the name of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, doubtless for financial reasons and because of the land grant to that company. They had in mind two purposes, to feed the Central Pacific and to meet the Texas and Pacific at Yuma. It does not appear how much of the Texas and Pacific had been constructed when the Southern Pacific line reached Yuma in September, 1877, but the Texas and Pacific was certainly not then in sight nor was the prospect very encouraging, since it did not reach the vicinity of El Paso until 1882. Yuma was not a desirable terminus and the mining fields of Arizona were inviting, so the line was extended into Arizona in 1879. Exactly when the idea of a through coast to coast line under one management was first conceived is not known. The evidence shows that the line was extended through New Mexico to El Paso, the road of the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway was constructed between El Paso and east of San Antonio, and connecting lines between Houston and New Orleans acquired, together with a steamship line from New Orleans to New York; so that on February 1, 1883, there was opened for business a through mixed rail and water line between San Francisco and New York, with the then unique advantages and efficiency of unified management. Until the lease to the Southern Pacific Company in 1885, this through line, the Sunset-Gulf route, was operated by the Central Pacific Railroad Company. It had been constructed in connection with the Central Pacific lines, beginning as an extension of those lines, which formed an essential part thereof.

That the only enterprise in contemplation for several years after the formation of the system (first called Central Pacific, now Southern Pacific) was the construction of lines to develop Southern California and to feed the Central Pacific from the traffic thus developed, and that the line from Tehachapi to Yuma was regarded as a branch of the main line to the Needles, is shown by the following extracts from reports to the Secretary of the Interior by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the reports being generally copies of reports of the President to the stockholders and of reports of officers of the companies to the President.

In the report of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California for the year ending June 30, 1874, Mr. Huntington, the President, referring to the consolidation of October 12, 1870, declared (V Vol. Defendants' Exhibits, p. 1717):

> "The object of the new corporation was to construct, equip, maintain and operate a line of railroad from the city of San Francisco to a point on the Colorado River, in the southeastern portion of the State, a distance of, say, six hundred and twenty-nine miles, with a branch from Tehachapi Pass to the Colorado River, at or near Fort Yuma, a distance of, say, three hundred and fifty-three miles." (Italics ours.)

Further on in his report, under the heading of "Prospective Business of the Road," we find the following (Id., pp. 1719-1720):

> "Fourth.—The general location of the Southern Pacific Railroad is peculiarly favorable for developing and controling a large and remunerative miscellaneous business, for it occupies almost the only passes through which a railroad extending from San Francisco to the Colorado River can be built, and must therefore command the entire business between San Francisco and the southern portion of California, as well as northern Mexico and Arizona. At the Colorado River it will meet the Texas & Pacific Railroad, and when this connection is made it will give your road a direct communication by rail with all the southern and southwestern portions of the United States, and the shortest line from San Francisco to New Orleans and the country bordering the Gulf of Mexico, over which you may look for much of the surplus grain from the southern half of California to pass on its way to the European market.
> "Fifth.—The country tributary to your road embraces nearly one-third of the entire State of California, say 50,000 square miles. In traversing this large extent of country the road passes through some of the finest valleys in California, such as the San Jose, Santa Clara, Pajaro, Salinas, Tulare and the large and fertile valleys south of the Sierra Madre, in the counties of Los Angeles and San Bernardino. The soil in those valleys is exceedingly fertile, and produces all kinds of vegetables and grain of the temperate zones, and most of the fruits of the semi-tropical regions, such as oranges, lemons, limes, olives, apricots, figs, etc., in great abundance. Recent experiments in the culture of tobacco, near Gilroy, where some four hundred acres were planted the past season, have shown that the soil in that part of the State is peculiarly adapted to that crop, the yield per acre being from 1,500 to 2,000 pounds of a superior quality, equal to the best Havana, and from 2,500 to 3,000 pounds per acre of the coarser varieties. Recent experiments have also demonstrated that jute, ramie and cotton can be grown in great abundance along the line of your road, for which the producer will always find a ready sale and remunerative prices, as these products will bear transportation and thus have access to the world's markets.

"Among the foot-hills and on the slopes of the mountains are vast tracts of land abounding in wild oats and native grasses, which are very nutritious, and afford pasturage for sheep and cattle throughout the entire year; and the temperature is so mild, even in winter, that shelter is seldom required. Nearly all the land in the foot-hills also produces the grape in great abundance, and much of it is considered the best vine-land in the world, as it never fails to yield a crop. There are also immense tracts of timberland covered with red-wood, red-cedar, pine and other varieties, which will afford an extensive lumber business for the road; in short, the country traversed by and tributary to the Southern Pacific Railroad has almost every variety of land adapted to every branch of agriculture, with a mild and healthful climate, and is already attracting the attention of emigrants from the Eastern States, as well as from the nations of Europe, and is being rapidly taken up along the line of the road, and even in advance of its construction.

"With all these vast and varied interests awaiting the construction of your road, the villages and cities with their rapid increase of population, the fertile valleys with their great abundance and variety of agricultural resources, the forests with their wealth of lumber, the mines with their vast supplies of coal and untold millions of the precious metals, we think you may reasonably hope for satisfactory dividends on your investments when the road is completed."

From the report of the Central Pacific Railroad Company for the year 1873, we extract the following statements regarding the San Joaquin Valley arm of the Central Pacific (the line from Lathrop to Goshen) and its extension under the name of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company (II Vol. Defendants' Exhibits, pp. 1742-3):

"The latter diverging from the main line at Lathrop runs southeasterly in a nearly direct line for a distance of one hundred and forty-six miles to Goshen, where it connects with the Southern Pacific Railroad, which is already constructed from this point to Delano, a distance of some forty-one miles further south, and is ultimately, as I understand, to be extended southerly through the State to the Colorado River, thus forming an important feeder to this part of your road, making it, in fact, a link in the great Southern transcontinental route, which must eventually find its most eligible terminus at San Francisco Bay. In view of its importance in this respect, as well as with regard to the heavy local traffic which must result from the development of the agricultural resources of this valley, the road has been constructed upon a maximum grade of ten and one-half feet per mile ascending and with a grade of but five and one-fourth feet per mile against freight descending the valley. The alignment is also very favorable, the total curvature after leaving Lathrop being, in a distance of one hundred and forty-six miles, but two hundred and fifty-five degrees, with a minimum radius of five thousand seven hundred and thirty feet.

"This great valley, extending from the confluence of the San Joaquin and Sacramento Rivers, southeasterly for a distance of two hundred and forty miles, with a width of from sixty to seventy miles, nearly all susceptible of cultivation is as yet sparsely populated, though the large grain shipments from the comparatively small area under cultivation fully attest its value as a grain-producing region.

"With the completion of the system of irrigation already in contemplation by resident and foreign capitalists, and for which the topography of the country is admirably adapted, the population of this valley must rapidly increase; and when this is accomplished, its productive capacity can hardly be over-estimated."

In the report for 1876 we find the following reference to the traffic expected from the lines south of Goshen (Id., p. 1755):

"While the traffic of the Visalia and Tulare divisions is comparatively light, it is very encouraging to note the extensive arrangements which are being made for irrigation and for general agricultural development all along the line, especially in the rich region of the State embraced in Fresno, Tulare and Kern counties; which development is made possible by the extension of the road through the San Joaquin Valley to Caliente, three hundred and twenty-four miles from San Francisco. This road offers to that section of the country the long-desired outlet to market, and a large increase of business may be expected in the near future from it, and the rich mining districts beyond."

The traffic expected from the extension into Arizona and New Mexico is referred to in the report for 1877 as follows (Id., p. 1757):

"The completion of that portion of the Southern Pacific Railroad (leased to the Central Pacific Railroad Co.) to the Colorado River, secures to that company the traffic to and from Arizona, which promises to be very large, and as the road shall be extended beyond the river, through this rich mining territory, it will largely develop and secure the trade also of New Mexico and the adjacent country.

"The looked for remunerative business over this long line will, we confidently believe, materially increase the earnings for the current year, and more than compensate for the loss of traffic we may expect from the short harvest, consequent upon the drouth more or less affecting the southern portion of the State."

The statements in these reports are corroborated by the testimony of Mr. Chambers (Vol. III, pp. 939, ffg.). They not only show that the alleged competitive conditions, the supposed elimination of which is the basis of this suit, were not in existence or contemplation at the time when the common ownership or control complained of originated, but they show also that the construction of the line which brought about the alleged competitive conditions was a natural, normal railroad development with the usual and justifying purpose of reaching new fields and feeding existing lines.

There is no competent evidence in the record to support a finding that, when it was determined to build or secure a line through to New Orleans and thence to New York, the controlling motive was to effect a restraint of trade by eliminating competition. The natural inference from the competent evidence is that the extension of the line beyond Yuma was due to the breakdown of the Texas and Pacific enterprise, and to the desire to reach a promising field of business in Arizona and New Mexico, and that when the adventure had proceeded so far the practicability and advantages of a through route to the Atlantic coast, under unified management, dawned upon the owners of the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific Railroad companies. What these advantages were has been explained in the testimony of Mr. Spence and other witnesses. In the then stage of development of the railroad business, the arrangements for handling through traffic over several independent connecting roads did not produce good service. It had not been found possible, and it did not seem possible, to secure that degree of co-operation necessary to afford satisfactory service over the numerous independent companies concerned in the all-rail route across the continent. Neither in time nor in the character of the service nor in the settlement of claims or otherwise was the service calculated to attract or develop transcontinental traffic. The men in control of what was then the Central Pacific System, and is now the Southern Pacific System, believed that by means of a through line under a unified management great improvements in the service, with consequent increase in the volume of the traffic, could be effected, and to this belief is due the Sunset-Gulf route. Its construction was abundantly justified. It rendered better service than had been before considered possible. It developed an enormous traffic. And, what is more important, it set a standard of service which the all-rail lines had to meet. It conferred an inestimable benefit both in opening up new lines of traffic and in applying the spur of competition to existing lines. It not only did not close the all-rail line via Ogden, but it aroused the rail lines engaged in transcontinental traffic to the necessity of better service and forced the Eastern connections of the Central and Union Pacific, as well as the Santa Fe and its connections, to join in arrangements which resulted in vastly improved service (Spence, III Vol., pp. 1028-9, 1041-2). To charge the railway system or its management with lessening competition and restraining trade by reason of bringing this new competitor in the field seems absurd, and yet, in the last analysis, this is what the Government's case under the Sherman law really amounts to.

Prior to the lease to the Southern Pacific Company in 1885 the Benicia Cut-Off, the line from Tracy to Martinez and various other additions and extensions had been constructed as parts of the system. These new lines did not belong to the Central Pacific, but were so connected with its lines as to improve the service over them, by affording shorter and better routes or by relieving congestion through alternative routes.

The situation then in 1885, at the date of the lease complained of, was that the Central Pacific lines and the other lines of the system were essential constituents of the new through line, the Sunset-Gulf route, and that the two sets of lines were also jointly used, and necessarily so used, to give the best service on the through line via Ogden as well as locally. The controlling, dominant purpose, and the lawful purpose, of the lease to the Southern Pacific Company was to afford a convenient means of operating together lines which were already parts of a system, which had been conceived and constructed as parts of a system, which were necessary to each other, and the separation of which would cripple the service on all parts of the system. To say that the lease made at that time and under those circumstances had no justifying cause or lawful purpose, but must be regarded as having for its main and direct purpose to destroy previously existing competition between the leased lines is absurd.

What has been said of the lease of 1885 applies a fortiori to the acquisition by the Southern Pacific Company in 1899 of the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad or Railway Company. The taking over of this stock was, moreover, necessary to effect the readjustment of the affairs of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the settlement of its indebtedness to the United States. And such readjustment and settlement was necessary to prevent the disruption of the Southern Pacific System, the separation of lines which had been constructed together, and the immense loss to the Southern Pacific Company and injury to the public which would result from such dismemberment of a long established system. The Government, which was practically a party to the plan of readjustment involving the stock purchase and knowingly profited by it, should be the last person to make the absurd charge that the direct object and effect of the purchase was to suppress competition between the parts of the system standing in the name of the Central Pacific and the parts standing in other corporate names. The two sets of lines which were born of a common parentage and had grown up as members of one family, were already yoked together under a one hundred years lease, and in the only respect in which they are charged to be naturally competitive, i. e., in respect to the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes, their union had not then, nor has it at any time since, prevented or created the power or a motive to prevent the most active and vigorous competition. Read in this connection Mr. Spence's summary statement of the value to the Southern Pacific System of the Central Pacific lines (III Vol., p. 1070).

Excerpts from the voluminous testimony and documents adduced before Committees of Congress at various times seem to be relied on by the Government to overcome the evidence afforded by the testimony of witnesses produced in this case by defendants or to supply the lack of such evidence by the Government. We submit that testimony before Congressional Committees is not competent evidence in this case, and that, were it otherwise, the excerpts in question are not inconsistent with, and certainly do not overcome, the evidence adduced in this case in support of what has been said above respecting the history, nature and purposes of the Southern Pacific System. The investigation which culminated in the report of 1887 had for one of its objects to ascertain whether the United States, as a creditor of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, had not a claim against Huntington, Stanford, Crocker and Hopkins or the Southern Pacific Company, on the theory that the revenues or property of the Central Pacific had been diverted or sacrificed. Hence, the efforts of those concerned were directed to show that all that had been done was done to "protect" the Central Pacific lines by having the feeders and extensions southward in "friendly hands". Considering the conditions we have shown as existing on October 12, 1870, the acquisition by the "big four" of the lines of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company then in being or in contemplation is not tainted with illegality even if we assume at that early date the existence of a desire to protect the Central Pacific Railroad Company by having in "friendly hands" a then unthought-of line of railroad. There is no force in the contention that the Southern Pacific System is proved to be an unlawful combination in violation of the Sherman law of July 2, 1890, because there is found in some public document or in some letters of questioned authenticity something tending to show that in the late seventies, when the failure of the Texas and Pacific to build its road to Yuma within the required time had caused the extension of the Southern Pacific Railroad across Arizona and New Mexico, Mr. Huntington and his associates opposed the granting of additional government aid to the Texas and Pacific to build a parallel road. They had constructed their road through the deserts without government assistance. Their natural protest against a subsidy in bonds, in addition to a land grant, being accorded the Texas and Pacific to help it parallel their road through the deserts would not have violated the Federal Anti-

Trust Act, if it had been on the statute books at that time. It is certainly not a continuing offense so as to constitute a violation of a law enacted twelve years afterwards.

Of the same character and even less entitled to any consideration are the minority reports and documents annexed thereto, showing hostility to the Southern Pacific System by some people in California twenty years ago. It redounds to the credit of the Southern Pacific Company that its conduct has been such as to overcome any hostility which might have existed and so completely to disprove the prophesies of evil of an earlier day that the strongest opponents now of the proposed dissolution are the people it serves on the Pacific coast. We have faith to believe that this case will be decided by the facts as they are disclosed by the evidence contradictorily adduced in this case and not by the slander and gossip and political accusations of a by-gone era.

When a man's character is assailed or his motives impugned, he has a right to be judged by his past life. The history of the Southern Pacific System from the beginning is found in detail in the evidence. It is a sufficient refutation of the charge that its purpose or effect was to suppress competition or establish a monopoly. If the object of the system or its authors was to neutralize competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf routes, why is it that the Central Pacific line has always been so maintained and operated in connection with the Union Pacific as to make the through line a most active, vigorous and successful competitor of the Sunset-Gulf lines? If the object was to secure a monopoly of transcontinental traffic, why do we find the relinquishment of one of its lines to the Santa Fe, and the consistent policy of liberal arrangements for through traffic with all connections, so that every new junction marked the entrance of an able competitor in the field of transcontinental carriage? If the object was to establish a system which would dominate the field, why is it that from October 12, 1870, to the present time, we find only a gradual, normal growth from within, with no combinations or absorptions of competing lines?

In endeavoring to show that the common ownership or control to which the Southern Pacific System owes its existence was not originally tainted by any illegal purpose, we are not to be understood as conceding that proof of such an original taint is proof or evidence that such common ownership or control has produced or has a tendency to produce conditions prohibited by the Anti-Trust Act. A suit, brought twenty-four years after the enactment of that law, to remove an alleged existing restraint upon commerce attributed to a so-called combination originating nearly twenty years before the law was passed, essentially depends upon proof of the present existence, as a result of the so-called combination, of an undue and unreasonable restraint of trade. In the absence of such proof, and a fortiori in the face of proof to the contrary, the Southern Pacific System cannot be condemned by reason of the unrealized expectations or of the unaccomplished or abandoned purposes of the original parties. We take it that the Court, if it finds it necessary to determine the inherent nature of the common control in question, will not deem it worth while to consider uncertain evidence of what might have resulted or might have been intended to result from the common control when it has before it the actual results of forty years of its continued existence. Conjecture and prophecy yield to the demonstration of conduct and experience.

(c) The result of the union under one control and management of the Central Pacific lines and the other lines now composing the Southern Pacific System, unlike the amalgamation of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems, was not to destroy active competition previously existing between the lines of railway concerned. Not only so, but the inclusion in one system of the lines in question does not destroy or create a motive for destroying the competition alleged in the petition, namely, competition between alternative through routes, one of which is made up of lines constructed under the regime of the common control complained of.

It cannot be said that on October 12, 1870, when the two sets of lines, one partly in esse and the other practically altogether in futuro, passed under the common control and management under which they have remained to the present day, there was any previous competition to be destroyed, since one of the sets of lines was not only not in existence, but, as to the alleged competitive portion, was not even in contemplation.

It is not alleged in the petition, and it was not attempted to be proved by the testimony of witnesses, that the lines standing in the name of the Central Pacific, considered by themselves, are competitive with the other lines of the system. In its opening testimony petitioner's questions to its witnesses were directed to showing that the through line via Ogden, formed by the Central Pacific line and the Union Pacific and eastern connections, was a competitive route with the line formed by other lines of the Southern Pacific System through El Paso and New Orleans or Galveston and thence to New York. As we read the petition, the charge as to the natural competition prevented or destroyed is confined to competition between the Ogden route and the through rail and water route between San Francisco and New York, designated in the pleadings as the "Sunset Route" and in the testimony as the "Sunset-Gulf route". At any rate, in the discussion to follow, we shall deal mainly with the competitive relations between the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes, as defined, because the complaint seems to be confined to those two routes and because, if we show that the Government has made out no case in respect to the mixed rail and water line wholly owned by the Southern Pacific Company, it has certainly made no case in respect to the all-rail routes via El Paso, formed by the Southern Pacific line to El Paso and railroads of other companies subsequently constructed and connected with the Southern Pacific line to form alternative through routes.

The petition charges that "the lines now owned by the Central Pacific Railway Company, in so far as then existing, were operated prior to 1885 in connection with the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company as a continuous connecting route between the San Francisco and the Missouri River, with connections eastward to the Atlantic Ocean, and were in competition with the lines now operated by the Southern Pacific Company in interstate and foreign transportation" (clause IV, p. 14 of the printed petition, I Vol., p. 8), and that the purpose and effect of the lease to the Southern Pacific Company in 1885, as well as the acquisition of the Central Pacific stock in 1899, was to prevent this competition (clause V, I Vol., p. 9). Among other defenses to this charge, the defendants denied (clause IV of answer, I Vol., p. 29):

> "* * * that the line owned by the Central Pacific Railroad Company as operated prior to 1885, in connection with the line of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, was in competition with the lines now operated by the Southern Pacific Company in interstate and foreign transportation, except that both prior and subsequent to 1885 the through route or routes formed by the line of the Central Pacific Railway Company from San Francisco to Ogden in conjunction with connecting railroads, including the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and their eastern connections, have carried traffic in competition with the said Sunset > Route and with other transcontinental lines; but they deny that the common control of the Central Pacific Railway Company and the said Sunset Route, which has always existed, and under which the said Southern Pacific System of lines (always included therein being the line of the Central Pacific Railway Company) were originally constructed and have subsequently grown and developed by usual and normal means, as hereinafter more fully stated, has prevented or created the power to prevent competition between said through routes or constitutes a restraint of trade or a monopoly or an attempt to monopolize trade, within the prohibition of the said act of July 2, 1890, or otherwise."

We desire to preface what we have to say under the present heading by the statement that, in undertaking to show that the inclusion of the Central Pacific lines and the other Southern Pacific lines in one system has not prevented or created an incentive or the power to prevent active, vigorous and effective competition between the two through routes in question, we are going beyond the necessities of our case. We have already shown that the competition referred to in the petition is "natural" competition between the original nucleus of the system and parts constructed after the formation of the system, and that is sufficient to dispose of the case. The Federal Anti-Trust Act has nothing in it analogous to the after-acquired property clause of a mortgage in virtue of which a union of railroads, lawful originally because between non-competitive lines, becomes unlawful whenever at any subsequent stage of development lines are constructed which under independent ownership might have competitive relations with other parts of the system. Such a construction of the law, if not itself condemned by the rule of reason, would condemn to disintegration every railway system in this country. It would be equally fatal to large industrial enterprises, all of whom have doubtless constructed plants in different states which under independent ownership might compete with each other.

Hence, by undertaking to show that the inclusion of the Central Pacific lines in the Southern Pacific System has not prevented the competition referred to or intended to be referred to in the Government's petition, and that its separation from the system would not benefit the public by any appreciable addition to the general stock of railroad competition, we must not be understood as conceding that the possibility or even certainty of an addition to existing competition in the field of influence of the Southern Pacific System to result from its proposed disruption would suffice to make out the Government's case or even to put the Company on the defensive.

We enter upon the discussion of the effects upon competition of the Southern Pacific System, with the Central Pacific lines included, the more willingly because it will show that in the remote contingency of the decision of this case ultimately depending upon the question—Does the Southern Pacific System, as at present constituted and under the existing transcontinental shipping conditions, constitute such a monopolistic aggregation, such an undue and unreasonable restraint of trade, as to come within the condemnation of the Federal Anti-Trust Act, irrespective of the date and manner of its origin and of the character of its growth and development—the Government cannot expect to secure the necessary affirmative answer. Of course the date and manner of the origin of the Southern Pacific System and the character of its growth and development are facts which cannot be disregarded, and which, when regarded, afford adequate defense against the Government's attack. But the impossibility of answering the above question in the affirmative, and so the impossibility of the Government making out any part of a case under the Sherman Law, becomes manifest when, in addition to showing that from very small beginnings the system grew from within gradually by construction to its present dimensions, we further show that the competition it is charged with destroying, that between two alternative routes in each of which portions of its system participate, happens to be of such character as, notwithstanding such participation, to enjoy an active, vigorous and effective existence.

That the union under one control and management of the Central Pacific lines and the other Southern Pacific lines in one system has never prevented actual competition, "sharp, well defined and vigorous", between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route, is established by the record in the following ways:

(1) It is admitted in the Government's petition.

In the last paragraph of Clause IV, on page 8, Vol. I, of the petition, quoted above, it is alleged that the Central Pacific Railroad Company was operated prior to 1885 in connection with the Union Pacific and eastern connections in competition with the lines now operated by the Southern Pacific Company. This is tantamount to the allegation that the Ogden route was being operated prior to 1885 in competition with the Sunset-Gulf route, which was opened for business in 1883. But according to all the witnesses, including those of petitioner who were questioned on the subject (see testimony of Monroe, I Vol., pp. 386-7), the Central Pacific lines and the lines composing the Sunset-Gulf route, from the date of the opening of the latter route, were operated under a common control and management and were then just as much parts of one system as they were under the Southern Pacific lease after 1885. The only difference was the change of name from Central Pacific System to Southern Pacific System. Hence, the allegation referred to is a judicial admission that a common control and management of the Central Pacific lines and of the lines composing the Sunset-Gulf route is not incompatible with the operation of the Ogden route, including the Central Pacific line, and the Sunset-Gulf route in competition with each other.

It must be presumed that by "competition" the Government meant actual, beneficial competition, the kind of competition which it would be satisfied to have continue after 1885. Well, it has continued according to all the witnesses.

(2) It is conclusively established by the record in the Union Pacific Merger Case.

We have already shown that in the former case the Government asserted in its petition, and the Union Pacific and its owned Southern Pacific denied in their answers, that prior to the merger in 1901 there was active competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route; that the Government in its brief argued that it had proved by practically unanimous testimony that such competition existed and that "there was the same incentive to active, energetic competition between these lines that there would have been had the Southern Pacific not owned the line between Ogden and San Francisco" (p. 39 of Brief on the Facts); that this Court, adopting the Government's contention, held that prior to the merger there had been competition, "active, well defined and vigorous" between the two routes, notwithstanding the Southern Pacific's ownership of the Central Pacific lines, which competition was effectually destroyed by the merger; and, wholly or partly because of such holdings, the merger was declared unlawful.

Now a fact which in the former suit the Government alleged in its pleadings, proved by evidence, and contended for in argument, and which the Court decided, and the decision of which was one of the material steps to the final conclusion of the Court, cannot be denied by the Government in this suit. Hence, we have offered the record in the former suit as conclusive evidence of the fact that the ownership of the Central Pacific lines by the Southern Pacific Company had not prevented sharp, vigorous and well defined competition for traffic via Ogden and via the El Paso routes and had not created the motive or power to prevent such competition, up to the time of the merger in 1901 (Vol. III, p. 932).

If such competition existed prior to the merger, it exists now, for the uncontradicted evidence is that the competition is even more active since the unmerger than it was before the merger. As to the absence of motive or power to prevent the competition, the Supreme Court so held when it declared, for reasons stated, that the competition in question did not exist by the mere grace or sufferance of the Southern Pacific Company.

Counsel for the Government will hardly question the correctness of our statements as to what was decided by the Supreme Court in respect to the existence of competition for through business via Ogden and via the Sunset-Gulf route and the destruction of that competition by the merger of the two systems. But that such was the decision of the Court will clearly appear when the opinion is read in the light of the pleadings and the brief of counsel for the Government. We have seen that in its petition the Government alleged the existence of the active competition between the Ogden and the Sunset-Gulf routes and its elimination by the merger of the two systems, and supported its allegations by the testimony of numerous witnesses. In its opinion the Supreme Court referred to the

Ogden route as the route over which the Union Pacific's through traffic to California was carried (226 U. S., p. 89), and said (p. 93), that the Ogden route was the one used largely, if not exclusively, by the Union Pacific for traffic to and from California. Hence, it was undoubtedly referring to competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route when it declared (pp. 86-7)

> "A large amount of the testimony in this voluminous record was given by railroad men of wide experience, business men and shippers, who, with practical unanimity, expressed the view that prior to the stock purchase in question the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems were in competition, sharp, well-defined and vigorous, for interstate trade. To compete is to strive for something which another is actively seeking and wishes to gain. The Southern Pacific, through its agents, advertisements and literature had undertaken to obtain transportation for its 'Sunset' or southerly route across the continent, while the Union Pacific had endeavored in the same territory to have freight shipped by way of its own and connecting lines, thus securing for itself about 1,000 miles of the haul to the coast."

And traffic for which the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route offered alternative routes was in the mind of the Court when it said (pp. 88-9):

> "Before the transfer of the stock this traffic was the subject of active competition between these systems, but by reason of the power arising from such transfer, it has since been placed under a common control. It was by no means a negligible part, but a large and valuable part, of interstate commerce which was thus directly affected.

"The fact that the Southern Pacific had a road of its own from the Gulf to the Pacific Coast did not prevent competition for this traffic. The Union Pacific and its connections were engaged in the same carrying trade, and as a matter of fact were competing for that trade, by all the usual means of competition resorted to by rival railroad systems. As this court said, speaking by Mr. Justice Holmes, in Swift & Co. v. United States, supra, 398: 'Commerce among the States is not a technical legal conception, but a practical one, drawn from the course of business.' That commerce, as conducted from the East to the Pacific Coast, was in a substantial part the subject matter of rivalry and competition between these two systems. Since the stock transfer the companies have common officers and the rival soliciting agencies have been for the most part abandoned."

The decision of the Supreme Court as to the absence of domination by the Southern Pacific Company over the Ogden route has lost none of its effect by reason of any subsequent change in conditions. The changes which have taken place all tend to confirm the conclusion reached in the former case. The control of the San Pedro line to Los Angeles has doubled the retaliatory powers of the Union Pacific. The completion of the Western Pacific gives it a connection paralleling the Central Pacific. The amendments to the Interstate Commerce Act empowering the Interstate Commerce Commission, not only to compel the making of through routes and joint rates by connecting lines, but to fix the divisions of the joint rates, and requiring the issuance of through bills of lading and the observance of shippers' routing directions, have reduced to a negligible quantity the control over a through line by a railroad company owning a link thereof. And such control is reduced to the vanishing point in view of the plenary powers over connecting lines conferred on the Commission by the Transportation Act, 1920.

It is now the well settled construction of the Federal Anti-Trust Act that it prohibits only contracts and combinations which amount to an unreasonable or undue restraint of trade in interstate commerce. Can a restraint resulting from the common control complained of in this case be said to be unreasonable or undue, when it does not prevent or create a motive or power to prevent competition, "sharp, well defined and vigorous"? If the competition which existed unrestrained by the inclusion of the Central Pacific line in the Southern Pacific system was sufficient to make the elimination thereof an unreasonable or undue restraint of trade, does not this of itself show that the competition had not been previously eliminated to any unreasonable or undue extent?

Is there not a fatal inconsistency between a suit claiming that certain prior existing competition had been eliminated by a certain combination, and a second suit claiming that such competition had already been eliminated by a preceding combination? In its first suit the Government charged that the competition existing prior to 1901 between the Ogden route and the "Sunset route" had been eliminated by the merger of that year. In the present suit the Government charges that the competition between the two routes was eliminated by the Southern Pacific's control of the Central Pacific, which took place years prior to 1901. The existence of such competition in 1901 was an essential part of the first case. Its destruction long prior to 1901 is an essential part of the present case.

(3) It is established by the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission in its report upon the application of the Southern Pacific Company to be permitted to continue to operate the water line part of the Sunset-Gulf route (supra).

(4) It is established by the unanimous testimony of a large number of witnesses specially qualified to testify on the subject.

It was established by indisputable evidence that as a matter of fact there had been at all times (except during the merger) active, vigorous and successful competition between the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes, and that as a matter of fact there had never been any attempt to use the common control of the Central Pacific line and the Sunset-Gulf line to prevent or blunt the sharpness of the competition (supra, 17). It was further shown by competent and uncontradicted testimony that this common control did not create a motive or incentive to prevent or reduce this competition. Mr.

Kruttschnitt and Mr. Spence testified with convincing clearness on this point, and no attempt was made to contradict them (II Vol., 733-4, and III Vol., 1407. See to same effect Chambers, III Vol., pp. 950 ffg.). Even under conditions existing in 1901 and prior thereto the Supreme Court found that the active competition then existing between the two routes was not merely permissive on the part of the Southern Pacific Company. To close the Ogden gateway by refusing to join in through rates or to make reasonable divisions is legally impossible under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act and the Pacific Railroad Acts. To impair the service over the Central Pacific line or to fail to keep it up to the highest standard would be suicidal, since the benefit to the Southern Pacific Company in respect to the comparatively small proportion of traffic competitive between the two routes would be nil and the injury to it in respect to the immensely larger volume of traffic, non-competitive with the Sunset-Gulf route but the subject of intense competition between the Ogden route and other all-rail lines, would be certain and very great. Either course, moreover, would excite the Union Pacific to retaliatory measures, and would divert to rival roads the enormous volume of westbound traffic which that company now delivers to the Southern Pacific line at Ogden.

The direct testimony on the subject is corroborated in many ways. For example, the fact that the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line is, in the opinion of the witnesses, the strongest and best maintained of the transcontinental lines is a tribute to the standard of service maintained. The evidence showing the satisfactory relations which have always existed between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific in respect to the operation of the through line via Ogden strongly negatives any neglect of service over the part west of Ogden. The successful efforts of the all-rail lines, including the Central Pacific-Union Pacific and eastern connections, to meet the initial success of the Sunset-Gulf route, due to its unified management, affords convincing proof both of the existence of actual competition between the two routes and of the beneficial effects to the public of such competition in the way of constantly improving service. Finally, there is Mr. Lovett's refusal to support the theory of the Government (which, after such refusal, it made no further effort to support) that the separation of the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific System would be followed by better service west of Ogden or increase of traffic over the Ogden route (infra, pp. 144, 147).

In the face of such testimony it seems hardly necessary to call attention to the comparatively small extent of territory and traffic for which the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route afford alternative routes. It is restricted territorially to traffic between Northern and Central California and the Atlantic Seaboard. It is further restricted by the fact that a large part of this traffic will not stand transshipment, and hence cannot move over the mixed rail and water line. As to all the remainder of the traffic, it is the subject not only of active competition with other all rail lines and the Santa Fe-Mallory line, but of competition by the water lines through the Panama Canal, a competition which has come into existence since this suit was instituted, and the revolutionary effects of which were not known when the testimony for petitioner was taken. These Panama Canal carriers, at the time defendants' testimony was taken, dominated the situation (Spence, III Vol., 1066-8). No one reading Mr. Spence's testimony can fail to see how absurd it is to talk of any domination or control, or even of any appreciable influence, over the only traffic competitive between the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes which the Southern Pacific Company can exercise by reason of its ownership of the Central Pacific line, and how far from the truth it is to contend that such ownership can have any effect upon rates or upon competitive service in respect to traffic between California and Atlantic Seaboard territory.

Considering the foregoing, in connection with the interests of the Southern Pacific Company as the owner of the stock of the Central Pacific and the guarantor of its bonded debt, we submit that it must be taken as a fact, established beyond controversy in this case, that the common ownership or control complained of has not prevented competition or created an incentive or motive or the power to suppress competition or deprived the public of the benefits of competition in respect to service or otherwise. How essentially it differs in this respect from the combination of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems is too clear for comment.

Neither the record in the former suit nor the evidence in the present suit permit counsel for the Government to contend that such competition as prior to the merger of 1901 existed between the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes continued thereafter unimpaired by the amalgamation of the two systems. When such a contention was urged by the Union Pacific, it was unmercifully ridiculed by the then counsel for the Government, who styled it "a fanciful idea * * * born out of the necessities of this extraordinary situation", "absurd on its face", etc. (Government's Brief on the Facts, p. 319, quoted from above under the heading of "The Brief and Argument of the United States", supra, p. 57).

It follows from the foregoing that there are two answers to the argument that the decision in the Union Pacific Merger case, inasmuch as it holds that the Union Pacific, being a link in the Ogden route, stood in a competitive relation with the Southern Pacific Company as owner of the Sunset-Gulf route in respect to traffic competitive to the two through routes, and inasmuch as it holds that the combination in 1901 between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific Systems destroyed this competition and thus violated the Sherman Law, is an exact precedent for a similar holding in the present case. If this argument is based on the assumption that the essential facts of the two cases are the same, that there is no essential difference, in respect to nature, purpose, effect on competition or otherwise, of the merger between the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems and the formation of the Southern Pacific System by gradual, normal growth and development, with the Central Pacific lines as the original nucleus, then we answer that the argument is based on a false assumption, and rely upon what has been already written to show that practically the only feature in common between the two cases is that there was in each case a common control of a through line and of a part of another through line, the two through lines being capable of competing with each other. If the argument is based on the assertion that the mere fact of a common control of a through line and of a link in another through line which may or does compete with the first line constitutes of itself, without more, a restraint of trade within the prohibition of the Federal Anti-Trust Act, the answer is that the argument is based on an erroneous proposition of law, and we rely upon the manifest unreasonableness of such a construction, which would condemn every railroad system in the country (supra, p. 24, and infra, p. 127), and upon the implications of the Panama Canal Act Amendment and of the Acts of Congress authorizing the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to construct and operate lines to form links in two competing transcontinental lines (supra, pp. 32-33, and infra, pp. 126 ffg). Whether a railroad system which includes a divergent stem, forming in connection with other lines a through route that may compete for some traffic with the parent system, is unlawful or not depends upon the particular facts and circumstances of each case. The most important of these facts is the nature of the origin and development of the system; the effect on competition between the two routes may be an important feature, if the circumstances under which the divergent stem became a part of the system do not of themselves afford a complete justification. It would be difficult to think of any circumstances tending to disprove an unlawful restraint of trade which have not been shown in this case to exist in favor of the Southern Pacific System. This is true in respect to its origin, the manner of its growth, and its effect on transportation conditions.

In this connection we call attention to the testimony of Mr. Spence to the effect that it is quite a common characteristic of the railroad systems of this Company to have included in one system lines which form parts of alternative and competing routes of traffic, thus duplicating in all essentials the situation resulting from the inclusion in the Southern Pacific System of the Central Pacific line to Ogden. For illustration he took up seriatim the different systems of railroads which participate in the transportation of traffic across the continent and showed that each system included within itself different lines which form parts of competing routes for transcontinental traffic. In connection with his testimony there were filed in evidence maps of each system to which he referred. (Defendants' Testimony, III Vol., pp. 1070-7, and Defendants' Exhibits, numbered 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94; see testimony of Mr. Kruttschnitt, II Vol., pp. 737 ffg.) If the Government is right in its contention that the inclusion in one system of lines of railroad which form parts of competing through routes is in violation of the Federal Anti-trust Act, then, to be consistent and impartial, the Government should at once institute suits to disrupt the numerous railroad systems which in like manner violate the law. Such a crusade to un-group the railways of the existing railroad systems of this country would be in startling contrast with the public policy announced in Section 407 of the Transportation Act, 1920 (Kruttschnitt, II Vol., p. 773).

(d) and (e) The separation of the Central Pacific lines from the Southern Pacific system would not benefit but would injure the public, and would be accompanied by consequences most injurious and unjust to the Southern Pacific Company.

It has been established by an overwhelming amount of testimony that the proposed disruption of the system would increase the cost and greatly decrease the value of the service which the public now receives from the Southern Pacific System, both in respect to through and in respect to local traffic. The lines and properties of both sets of lines enter into the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route. The service via neither through route would be as efficient after the separation. The local service would be deranged and impaired. Operated indiscriminately as parts of one system, the two sets of lines avoid congestion by affording alternative routes, shorten distances, and make a one-line haul of what, after a separation, would be two or three-line hauls. Their separation would necessitate duplication of facilities at enormous cost and by no feasible arrangement could the service equal in cost or efficiency the existing service. This is the natural consequence of the separation of two sets of lines which were constructed as interdependent parts of one system (Kruttschnitt, Vol. II, pp. 740-752, 799-800; Spence, Vol. III, pp. 1015, 1039, 1069; Chambers, Id., pp. 946-950, 987-991).

That such would be the consequences of the proposed dissolution was not testified to only by officers of the Southern Pacific Company, although their testimony was accompanied by convincing detail. The opinion of the railroad officials is shared by unusually competent representatives of the shipping public, Mr. Eshelman, for a long time president of the California Railroad Commission (III Vol., pp. 877 ffg.; pp. 882 ffg.), and Mr. Lynch, who spoke not only for the merchants of San Francisco, but for the shipping interests generally of the State (II Vol., pp. 835, 865). There was no attempt to rebut the testimony of these witnesses. Hence, it must be accepted as an established fact in this case that the separation of the Central Pacific lines from the other lines of the Southern Pacific system would result in impaired service to the public rendered at greater cost. That it is neither required nor desired by the public may be inferred both from the testimony in the record as well as from the failure of the Government to produce as a witness a single shipper to complain of existing conditions or to advocate a change.

The evidence is barren of any suggestion of any compensating advantages to the public. The vast preponderance of the evidence is to the effect that the separation would not bring about any increase of competition or have any tendency to decrease rates. As to the effect of a separation upon rates, there was no attempt to contradict the proof offered by defendants, that local rates would probably be increased by the separation, and that through rates would not be affected. Mr. Spence demonstrated the absence of any effect on through rates when he showed that all the traffic competitive between the Ogden and the Sunset-Gulf routes was also competed for by the water carriers through the Panama Canal, who were the rate-making factor and who had already reduced the rates so low between California and Atlantic Seaboard territory as practically to put the all-rail lines out of the business (III Vol., pp. 1066 ffg.).

As to increase of competition to result from the separation, all that the Government has to rely upon is the opinion of Mr. Munroe and of a soliciting agent of the Union Pacific in Cincinnati territory, Mr. Connors, and the only reason for their opinion is the general theory, the more railroads the more competition! Mr. Lovett cannot be said to have directly committed himself either way; but his statements in respect to the unlikelihood of improvement in the service or business over the Ogden route to result from an independent or even a Union Pacific-owned Central Pacific is an indirect negation of the Government's contentions.

Any increase of competition is at most problematic, theoretical and improbable. It is opposed to the testimony of the host of witnesses who vouched for the present existence of active, vigorous and effective competition between the Ogden route and Sunset-Gulf route, to the testimony of numerous witnesses who told of the splendid service maintained on the Central Pacific line, as open to the public now as it could possibly be after a separation, to the testimony that the army of solicitors seeking to route traffic over the line through Ogden could offer better facilities and service to induce the public to patronize that route now than after a separation, and to the positive testimony of Mr. Kruttschnitt and Mr. Spence, supported by facts and reasons, that no increase of competition could reasonably be expected to follow a separation. If there was any doubt on the subject before, there is certainly none now since the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the application of the Southern Pacific Company for permission to continue to operate the steamship line constituting an essential part of the Sunset-Gulf route (supra, p. 26). The Commission has unsurpassed information concerning trans-continental lines and traffic. It has declared that, notwithstanding the common control complained of, there exists "active and vigorous competition" between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route, and that the continued ownership and operation by the Southern Pacific Company of the railroad between San Francisco and Ogden and of the whole of the Sunset-Gulf route will not exclude, prevent or reduce competition. And by the requirements of the statute the Commission was considering not only actual but possible competition.

It does seem absurd to contend for a dissolution of a railroad system, which was formed, as the Southern Pacific System was, without the destruction of any previously existing competition, on the theory that, by the disintegration of the system, it was possible, though not probable, that some increase of competition might result!

Because the Court was dealing with a combination between two great systems which had been competing in several fields, which had the effect of destroying that prior existing competition, which, being without justifying cause, was presumed to have had for its dominant purpose the elimination of competition, which was shown by the affirmative testimony of numerous shippers to operate to the prejudice of the public interest, which might be regarded as a part of a scheme to acquire a dangerous domination over commerce in respect to transportation, the Union Pacific Unmerger case is worthless as a precedent for the relief sought by the Government in the case at bar.

To secure an authority for the proposed dismemberment of the Southern Pacific System, the Government must find a case condemning as an undue and unreasonable restraint of trade a union of railway lines in one system which resulted from the original construction of the lines as parts of a system, which destroyed no prior existing competition, which was not shown to have prevented any competition that would otherwise have existed, which, on the contrary, produced and continuously applied a competitive spur of peculiar efficacy, which did not tend to create monopolistic conditions or trade-restraining control, which was not complained of by any one except the Department of Justice, and the dissolution of which was shown by competent uncontradicted testimony would result in impaired service at greater cost, without any compensating advantages. The quest for such a case is manifestly hopeless, and so, we submit, is the Government's success in this suit.

V. The Government's case reviewed.

An analysis of the petition in this case makes it evident that the main reliance of the Government when it instituted this suit, and doubtless the reason which accounts for the suit, was the belief of the Department of Justice in the truth of the charges that prior to the common control complained of, alleged to have been effected by the lease of 1885, the Central Pacific lines and the other lines covered by the lease were competing lines or systems and that the purpose and effect of the common control was to destroy such competition. But it has now been shown that the common control began at least as far back as 1870, a date not only prior to the construction but prior even to the conception of the lines composing the Sunset-Gulf route. The authority of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to build to Yuma was obtained in 1871. The idea of extending that line to El Paso and thence by connections to the Gulf was the slow product of developments in after years. Hence the common control not only destroyed no existing competition, but it is not chargeable with having been formed for the purpose of preventing expected competition. Moreover, defendants have been able to show that the Department of Justice was not only misinformed as to the origin of the common control which it was attacking but that it was also mistaken as to its destructive effect on competition. We need not repeat what has been written above as to the evidence in this case establishing the actual existence, with full vigor and effect, of the competition which the Government alleged had been destroyed. In view of the contentions of the Government in the Union Pacific Unmerger case and the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the application of the Southern Pacific Company for permission to continue to operate the through Sunset-Gulf route, notwithstanding its ownership of the Central Pacific lines, it cannot be said that the evidence upon which we rely represents simply the peculiar and erroneous views of the witnesses on the subject of competition.

The defense based on the origin and nature of the common control complained of is the defense which prevailed in the court below. It is independent of the question whether or not the inclusion of the Central Pacific lines in one system with the other Southern Pacific lines has prevented or reduced any competition. It is only in the event that the Government overcomes this defense and the several other defenses presented in the main brief that the question of the present effect of the common control on competition will become material. Assuming now, solely for the sake of argument, that the Government has surmounted all the other defenses, and that the controlling question in the case is whether or not the effect of the common control on competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route is such as to constitute an undue and unreasonable restraint of trade, the inquiry arises whether the Government can meet the evidence in this case, which is all against it and which is supported by the Government's own contentions in a former suit and by findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Will it avail the Government to contend that the competition which it referred to in the former suit, the competition which the Interstate Commerce Commission was dealing with in its report, and the competition which the witnesses were dealing with in this case, was competition between the Sunset-Gulf route and the Ogden route as a whole, whereas the competition the destruction of which it now complains is the competition of the Central Pacific part of the Ogden route?

This contention admits of several answers. It is not true that in the former case the Government left out of consideration the effect on competition between the two routes of the Southern Pacific Company's control of the line between San Francisco and Ogden, because in its Brief of Facts (p. 39) it said that "there was the same incentive to active, energetic competition between these lines that there would have been had the Southern Pacific not owned the line between Ogden and San Francisco". It is not true that the Interstate Commerce Commission was not dealing with the competition between the two routes which the Central Pacific line did or might contribute. On the contrary, it was dealing mainly, if not solely, with the competition which any rail lines owned by the Southern Pacific Company might make with the line between the Gulf ports and New York. It is not true that the testimony of the witnesses in this case as to the existence of active, vigorous, and effective competition between the two routes is consistent with the contention that in estimating the sum total of such competition the contribution of the line between Ogden and San Francisco must be regarded as a minus quantity, a handicap rather than an aid in securing the movement of traffic over the Ogden route.

In these days competition between rail carriers consists largely, if not altogether, of competition in service. Now the service over the line between San Francisco to Ogden, whether offered to secure the vast volume of transcontinental traffic for which the Sunset-Gulf route does not offer an alternative route or to secure the less than 16% of the remaining transcontinental traffic which may move over the Sunset-Gulf route, is competitive service. No part of the traffic could be obtained except after the fiercest competition, and it was impossible, as well as against the interest of the Southern Pacific, to discriminate in respect to such service between traffic open to and traffic not open to the Sunset-Gulf route. Mr. Lovett was unable to say that the separation of the Central Pacific lines from the Southern Pacific System would be followed by any improvement in the service or any increase of traffic over the Ogden route, and this is tantamount to an admission that the service over the line between Ogden and San Francisco and the competitive striving for traffic over the Ogden route has not been handicapped by the Southern Pacific Company's ownership of the Central Pacific lines. The admission is by no means a generous one, when we consider that the deficiencies of the Central Pacific line between Sacramento and San Francisco are supplied by rail lines and facilities belonging to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, without which the Ogden route would be seriously handicapped in the fierce struggle for traffic participated in by many powerful competitors. In a case of this kind the Court will look at the substance of things. What the public are really interested in is the benefits resulting from the Ogden route being an actual and effective competitor for all transcontinental business it is capable of moving. Under present conditions such competition exists with a maximum efficiency of service and with consequent maximum results. With the Central Pacific separated from the Southern Pacific system the resulting competition would be conducted with greatly impaired service and naturally with a corresponding lessening of beneficial results, the only additional factor being the presence among the now forty or fifty solicitors for the Ogden route of a new man with "C. P." on his cap, and this would not be a real increase in numbers if "U. P." were joined to "C. P." Such an addition to the soliciting force would hardly compensate for the subtraction of facilities and lines essential to efficient service and effective competition. Can it be said that the maintenance of the present conditions and the prevention of the conditions which will follow the proposed separation amount to an undue and unreasonable restraint of trade?

The Government is forced by the necessities of its case to find some weapon which will overcome both the defense based on the nature and origin of the common control and the defense that, irrespective of its nature and origin, the common control does not operate an undue and unreasonable restraint of trade. It attempts to do this by the contention that whenever it is shown that one railroad company owns a part or a link in each of two competing through lines, or whenever it is shown that some part of a railroad system forms, by connection with other railroads, a through line which is a competitor of the parent system, then, without more, a violation of the Sherman Law is conclusively established. The approval of such a proposition would be equivalent to finding that the railroad systems of this country, practically each and all, constitute unlawful restraints of trade (Spence, III Vol., pp. 1070-7). If, by wholesale pruning or dismemberment, a condition in harmony with such construction of the law were brought about, either the railroads would have to cease to build feeders or lateral extensions or the law requiring such branches and extensions to form connecting lines with other railroads would have to be repealed, or every few years the pruning process would have to be repeated; for a railroad company cannot have branches or divergent stems or lateral extensions without the formation of one or more through lines competing with that railroad and formed in part by one of its branches or extensions. Such a construction of the law would convict the Congress of the United States of authorizing, and encouraging by grants of land, the making of restraints of trade; for Congress authorized the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, by the act of July 27, 1866 (14 Stat., 292, sec. 18), to construct and operate a line from San Francisco to Needles, to form part of the transcontinental line along the 35th parallel of latitude, and by the act of March 3, 1871 (16 Stat., 573, sec. 23), to construct and operate a line from San Francisco to Yuma, to form part of a transcontinental line along the 32nd parallel of latitude. And there is good reason for believing that Congress knew at the time that the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific Railroad companies were then under common control. That the Government had not, prior to the institution of this suit, found anything objectionable in the common control of or interest in a transcontinental line and a link in any other such line, is shown by a reference in the 1913 report of the late Attorney-General to the permitted acquisition by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company of some $38,000,000 of the stock of the Southern Pacific Company in exchange for Baltimore & Ohio stock. "No new combination in restraint of trade was created by the exchange, since the Pennsylvania and the Southern Pacific systems are non-competitive, and the same is true of the Union Pacific and Baltimore and Ohio." (Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1913, p. 17.) We call attention to the similar relations between the "Sunset route", which reaches New York by the Morgan line of steamships, and the Pennsylvania Railroad, whose main line to Chicago forms the eastern link of a through all-rail route across the continent, on the one hand, and the

"Sunset route", terminating at San Francisco, and the Central Pacific, whose line to Ogden forms the western link of the same all-rail through route, on the other hand. In other words, the Pennsylvania line stands in the same relation to the Sunset-Gulf route on the east as the Central Pacific's Ogden line does on the west.

As the evidence shows that there are no peculiar objections to the inclusion in the Southern Pacific System of the Central Pacific line to Ogden, which may be regarded as a divergent stem or tangential off-shoot of the main line from Portland via San Francisco to El Paso and beyond, but, on the contrary, shows the presence of every condition which would make its inclusion unobjectionable, it is fair to subject the contention under discussion to the test of generalization, as we have done. We submit that its unreasonableness becomes manifest when it is expressed in general terms or when it is generally applied. Before the Southern Pacific System can be condemned because of the inclusion therein of the line to Ogden the Court must be prepared to condemn as unlawful all the class of railway systems having divergent stems.

With the element of destruction of prior existing competition out of the case, with the element of the prevention of competition subsequent to the alleged combination out of the case, with the element of power or motive to prevent competition out of the case, in the absence of any monopolistic absorption or trade-restraining control, is there enough material left wherewith to construct a case of unlawful restraint of trade?

The Government essays to make out such a case on the theory that if the Central Pacific and the "Sunset route" had not been built by the same people, if they had not been developed as parts of the same system, if they had belonged originally to different owners, or if they were now separated and placed under different managements, there might have been or might be more active and beneficial competition in respect to transportation from and to points on the Pacific Coast than now exists. This, then, is what remains of the Government's case —an alleged contingent, uncertain, indirect, possible restriction of hypothetical competition. The argument in its support involves a pyramid of assumptions, based on no evidence, which is capped by an assumption in conflict with the evidence.

PART II.

DISCUSSION OF THE CASE UNDER THE PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

Here again it is not the purpose of this argument to cover the whole case. But, on account of the importance and novelty of the questions involved, it is believed that something of value may be contributed to the presentation of the case by a discussion of some of the main points from more than one point of view. We shall endeavor first, by a consideration of the pleadings and the general scope of the evidence, to arrive at the precise question for decision; next, to point out the provisions of the law to be construed and applied; and then to show that the construction of the statute upon which the Government's case essentially depends is not justified by the language of the law and is not only not necessary to accomplish the purpose of the law but would give it a meaning and effect clearly not within the contemplation of Congress. It will be brought out in the course of the argument that the conditions now complained of as prohibited by the Pacific Railroad Acts have been in existence for over thirty years and during that period have been frequently brought to the attention of Congress and the Department of Justice through Congressional investigations and otherwise, but that it had never occurred to any one prior to the institution of this suit that such conditions, repeatedly the subject of public scrutiny and comment, were violative of the express requirements of the acts. The meaning now sought to be given the statutes was not discovered by successive Committees of Congress on Pacific Railroads or by successive Attorney-Generals, including the one in charge of the Unmerger Suit, or by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the supposed sufferer for many years from the alleged illegal acts, and remained hidden and unsuspected until brought to light in the search for grounds upon which to divorce the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific System.

I. The Government's case as defined by the pleadings and further restricted by the evidence.

The respects in which the Pacific Railroad Acts are violated, as charged in the petition, may be thus summarized (Vol. I, pp. 10-11):

(1) "In respect to traffic between points on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and tributary territory, it is to the interest of the Southern Pacific Company to carry, and by reason of its control of the Central Pacific it has the power to and does carry, as much of such traffic as possible via its 'Sunset route', sending through the Ogden gateway only such portion thereof as it is unable to control for the 'Sunset route', thereby 'discriminating against the Central Pacific Railway Company'."

(2) "By reason of its greater interest in the 'Sunset route', the Southern Pacific Company, in the operation of the Central Pacific from San Francisco to Ogden as a part of a continuous line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, does not give to such line equal advantages and facilities as required by the Pacific Railroad Acts but discriminates against it by forwarding via the 'Sunset route' traffic originating or ending on the lines of the Central Pacific or in territory tributary thereto."

(3) "Through its control of the Central Pacific Railway Company the Southern Pacific Company prevents joint traffic or prorating arrangements between the former and the Union Pacific Railroad Company, naturally its most important transcontinental and interstate connection."

(4) "The Southern Pacific Company so adjusts its freight rates and passenger fares on traffic originating in the Central Pacific territory north of San Francisco as to discriminate against transportation eastward over the joint transcontinental route of the Central Pacific and Union Pacific railroads and other eastern connections, thereby preventing competition and denying equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation."

(5) "Maintenance by the Southern Pacific Company of Central Pacific Company's properties, moreover, compared with that of the 'Sunset route', is so inefficient as to discourage eastern travel and transportation via the Ogden route, and does not afford and secure thereto equal advantages and facilities as to time and transportation."

(6) "The Southern Pacific Company has heretofore, and does now, control, maintain and operate said Central Pacific Railway Company in the interest of its 'Sunset route' and adverse to the interest of the Central and Union Pacific companies, and has not and does not afford or secure to said Central and Union Pacific companies equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, all in violation of the Pacific Railroad laws."

Although the Government produced as witnesses the head of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, its Vice-President and chief traffic officer and its soliciting agents, and Mr. Schumacher, who was connected in early times with the Traffic Department of that Company in California, no attempt was made to prove by those witnesses, or by any other witness, that the Southern Pacific Company had ever, through its control of the Central Pacific Railway Company or otherwise, prevented or attempted to prevent joint traffic or prorating arrangements between the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific, or that the Southern Pacific Company had ever adjusted its freight rates and passenger fares on traffic originating in Central Pacific territory north of San Francisco, so as to discriminate against transportation eastward over the joint transcontinental route of the Central Pacific and Union Pacific railroads, or that the maintenance by the Southern Pacific Company of the Central Pacific Company's properties, compared with that of the "Sunset route", was ever so inefficient as to discourage eastern travel and transportation via the Ogden route. The contrary was proved by defendants by an overwhelming amount of uncontradicted testimony. We may, therefore, treat as abandoned charges numbered 3, 4 and 5.

Charge No. 6 is nothing more than a general conclusion from the more specific charges by which it is preceded, and is of no assistance or effect in determining precisely what is relied upon as constituting a violation of the Pacific Railroad Acts.

By this process of elimination the Government's case is reduced to charges numbered 1 and 2 above, which will now be subjected to further analysis. In both the violation of the law charged is discrimination, and the discrimination alleged is forwarding over the "Sunset route" some traffic which might move over the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line via Ogden. In the first charge or count the alleged discrimination is against the Central Pacific Railway Company and in respect to traffic moving between the Atlantic and Pacific coast; in the second the alleged discrimination is against "both the Central Pacific and Union Pacific lines" and in respect to traffic originating or ending on the lines of the Central Pacific Railway Company or in territory tributary thereto. In the second charge it is expressly stated that the discrimination is in favor of the "Sunset route"; in the first, it is a necessary inference that the discrimination is in favor of the "Sunset route". Considering the pleadings alone we are unable to determine whether the pleader originally intended to present in charges or counts 1 and 2 independent or materially different kinds of prohibited discrimination. In the light of the evidence it would seem that the Government regards the two charges as amounting to a single charge of discrimination against the "Ogden route" in favor of the "Sunset route" resulting from the preferential solicitation of certain traffic for the latter route.

One of the questions to be decided in this case is whether the provisions of the statute alleged to be violated by the discrimination charged are applicable to any other cases of discrimination than those resulting from one of the several companies authorized to construct the railroads mentioned in the Pacific Railroad Acts refusing to give to another of such companies advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation equal to those it affords any other of such companies or resulting from any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any of said companies or adverse to the road or business of any of "the others". In other words, the mandate against discrimination is addressed to the railroad companies forming the group or family of railroads who were authorized to construct the railroads described in the acts. It prescribes a rule of conduct only for members of the group or family, only in respect to their treatment of each other, and only in respect to railroads forming part of the through line to the Missouri River. The provisions prescribing the facilities which members of the family should afford each other and the physical and operating conditions which should be maintained on their respective roads, and enjoining equality of treatment of each other, have no application to outside lines or companies. No outside railroad or company can claim, by force of the provisions in question, from any of the Pacific Railroad Acts companies facilities and advantages equal to those accorded to any of that group or family. By the same token no one of the family can make out a case of discrimination under the statute against another one of the family based on denial to it of advantages or facilities accorded an outside railroad, nor can any outside railroad be guilty of any discrimination prohibited by the acts.

The question just indicated will be discussed hereafter. It is stated now in order that the Court may see the significance of the fact that the discrimination on which the Government's case is based is not a discrimination by one of the Pacific Railroad Acts companies in refusing to another of such companies advantages or facilities afforded others of the family or in giving to one of the family advantages and facilities denied the others. It is based on a discrimination made by or in favor of the "Sunset route", an outside railroad, which forms no part of the railroads authorized to be constructed by the Pacific Railroad Acts. It would seem that whether the railroads composing the "Sunset route" have discriminated in favor of or against any of the Pacific Railroad Acts companies or whether any of the latter companies have discriminated in favor of the "Sunset route" railroads, is a question to be determined by the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, which, as amended, deals very fully with the rights and obligations of connecting railroads, prohibits discrimination in their treatment of each other and provides adequate machinery to enforce its requirements and to establish all proper through routes, under reasonable joint rates and divisions. Hence, it would seem that the discrimination charged is not within the purview of the Pacific Railroad Acts. It is no answer to say that the allegations of the petition may be construed as leveled against the Central Pacific Railway Company and as charging that member of the Pacific Railroad Acts family, under the dominance of the Southern Pacific Company, with discriminating against the Union Pacific Railroad Company, another member of the family. For the discrimination is not based on the Central Pacific Railroad Company treating another member of the family more favorably than it treats the Union Pacific Railroad Company, but it is based on treatment accorded railroads not embraced in the Pacific Railroad Acts. The Pacific Railroad Acts do not require equality of treatment except in the family. Just as facilities and advantages which members may afford each other are not made the measure of the facilities and advantages which must be afforded outside railroads, so what is afforded outside companies by any Pacific Railroad Acts company is not the criterion of what the acts require that company to afford other members of the group.

Returning now from the digression we have made to suggest the point, to be hereafter discussed, namely, that the discriminations charged are not within the purview of the Pacific Railroad Acts, a point not essential to defendants' case, but, if sustained, fatal to the Government's case, let us consider the evidence as it bears upon this branch of the case, in order that, by ascertaining the facts upon which the Government relies as constituting a violation of the requirements of the acts in question, we may see more clearly upon just what construction of the statutes the Government depends. We shall find that the issue on this branch of the case is reduced to a very narrow compass.

In order that the Court may have in mind what the Pacific Railroad Acts require of the companies named therein, we shall anticipate the more detailed summary of the statutes to follow by stating that they require the roads in contemplation to be constructed of a uniform gauge with prescribed maximum grades and curves, and the several companies authorized to construct the same are required to operate and use said railroads for all purposes of travel and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, and in such operation or use to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others.

It clearly appears from the evidence that the efforts of the Government were mainly directed to showing (indeed, it may be fairly said they were limited to showing) that the Southern Pacific organization did not strive to persuade shippers to route via the Ogden route every pound of transcontinental traffic which might reach its destination over that route, but that, as to a part of such traffic, the Southern Pacific organization actively solicited shippers to direct the routing thereof over the "Sunset route", meaning the Sunset-Gulf route, the mixed rail and water line from San Francisco to the port of New York. In other words, when there is traffic to be moved from or to, say, points in Northern or Central California to or from Atlantic Seaboard territory, the Southern Pacific agents go to the shipper or consignee or both and try to secure the routing of the traffic via the Sunset-Gulf route, provided it is traffic which will stand transshipment from car to boat at Galveston, and again from boat to car, if destined elsewhere than to New York City. At the same time the shipper or consignee, whichever controls the route, is solicited by agents of the Union Pacific and its numerous connections (over forty of which maintain agencies for the purpose throughout California and the Pacific Coast generally, as well as in the East) to favor the Ogden route, and at the same time the agents of the Santa Fe and the agents of the Rock Island system and the agents of the Western Pacific and of the Gould system, etc., etc., as well as the agents of the various Panama Canal lines, seek to secure the shipment for their respective lines. When the traffic about to move belongs to the very much larger class of traffic having origin or destination in the vast territory west of a line from Toronto, through Buffalo and Pittsburg, to Bristol, Tennessee, the western boundary of Atlantic Seaboard territory, or when it belongs to the very large class of seaboard territory traffic which will not stand transshipment, the Southern Pacific joins forces with the Union Pacific and its connections in striving to secure the traffic for the Ogden route.

There was no evidence showing that, by reason of the Southern Pacific Company's interest in the "Sunset route", the effort to secure traffic for the Ogden route was hampered or handicapped in any way by any failure to operate the road west of Ogden in connection with road east thereof as one continuous line or by any withholding of any advantages or facilities in respect to rates, time or transportation or in any other way. Whenever any shipper concluded to prefer the Ogden route and issued his instructions accordingly, it is not claimed (the evidence certainly does not support any claim) that either the shipper or the Union Pacific ever complained or had cause to complain of the through service over the Ogden route either as to its continuity or as to rates, train schedules, maintenance of track or equipment or as to any other matter relating to time or transportation or to anything connected with the use and operation of the line through Ogden as a through line for any purpose of travel or transportation.

The sole ground afforded by the evidence for charging defendants with violating the Pacific Railroad Acts is that, as to certain transcontinental traffic, it is more to the interest of the Southern Pacific Company to move such traffic over the "Sunset route" than the Ogden route, and it accordingly solicits the same preferentially for the "Sunset route".

The record is not only barren of evidence showing disobedience of any of the express requirements of the statutes, but there is abundent competent and uncontradicted evidence affirmatively showing compliance therewith. At all times since the through line was completed in 1869 a through service via Ogden has been maintained up to the highest standard, the service keeping pace with railroad development and, hence, constantly improving. There are joint through rates and divisions thereof, satisfactory to the Union Pacific, through contracts of carriage (tickets and bills of lading), through billing, through cars and through trains under satisfactory schedules. There have always been the most friendly relations between the representatives of the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific and the closest co-operation to make the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line in its use and operation one continuous through line for all purposes of travel and transportation. The charges of discrimination and unfair treatment of the Union Pacific contained in the Government's petition make queer reading in connection with the testimony showing that the Union Pacific had never complained of its treatment at the hands of the Southern Pacific Company. From 1901 to 1913 the Union Pacific absolutely controlled the Southern Pacific Company, including the line between Ogden and San Francisco. Yet it does not appear that it could add anything to the arrangements existing prior to the merger for the use and operation of the lines west and east of Ogden as one continuous line. The arrangements for through service as they were at the termination of the merger in 1913 continue to exist. In respect to the use and operation of the roads, for all purposes of travel or transportation, as one continuous line, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, it is clear that neither the Southern Pacific Company nor the Union Pacific Company know how to improve upon the existing arrangements. The same is true in respect to the "advantages and facilities" now being afforded "as to rates, time and transportation". For the rates are mutually satisfactory and the service has not been complained of in any respects. The only attempt of the Government to show that an improvement in the service on the Central Pacific end of the through line might result from a separation of the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific System met with failure, when Mr. Lovett stated in substance that that part of the through line was so efficiently operated by the Southern Pacific Company that he could not say that it would be better operated if placed in other hands (Vol. I, p. 297).

In considering the general bearing of the Pacific Railroad Acts upon the situation created by the inclusion of the Central Pacific lines in the Southern Pacific System, the following facts and circumstances should be borne in mind:

1. It is not true that the portion west of Ogden of the through line to the Missouri River is composed entirely of the Central Pacific Railroad, and much less is it true that it is composed of the bond-aided line, which is the line authorized and aided by the Pacific Railroad Acts and is the line to which the requirements of the acts apply. Essential parts of the line west of Sacramento belong to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. By "essential" we mean necessary to make the through line an efficient and successful competitor for transcontinental traffic. The bond-aided line from Sacramento west, with a five mile break at Brighton, passes through Stockton, Lathrop, Tracy and Niles and ends at San Jose. It does not now afford a practicable line for the transcontinental traffic in question. To meet the standard of efficiency necessary for successful competition, as well as to avoid congestion, the bond-aided line west of Sacramento has been replaced, in the actual operation of trains, by the Sacramento-Elmira-Benicia line (the property of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company), the Sacramento-Tracy-Martinez line (the property of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company from Tracy to San Francisco), and the Sacramento-Tracy-Niles line continuing via the Dunbarton cut-off to Redwood City, from which point it reaches San Francisco over the coast line of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company (Spence, Vol. III, pp. 1017, 1039; Kruttschnitt, Vol. II, pp. 742-3, 751).

2. It is not true that the Southern Pacific Company's ownership of the Central Pacific and of the "Sunset route" gives it control of Atlantic Seaboard territory traffic, with power to route as much of it as it chooses over the "Sunset route". Notwithstanding the Southern Pacific Company's interest and its effort to secure such traffic for the "Sunset route", the proportion of Atlantic Seaboard territory traffic, having origin or destination in territory on the Pacific coast constituting the field of competition between the two routes, secured by the Ogden route in the year ending June 30, 1914, was over two and a half times the amount secured for the "Sunset route". (See Defendant's Exhibit 80, Vol. VI, p. 2255.) This statement is still true if we deduct from the traffic over the Ogden route all that had origin or destination in Nevada, which is shown by Exhibit 70 (VI Vol. of Defendant's Exhibits, p. 2251) to amount to only 30,372 tons. The deduction of Nevada traffic reduces the territory in the west (covered by Exhibit 80) to points in Northern and Central California, which Mr. Spence's testimony shows to be the Pacific coast territory to which the competition between the two routes is naturally confined. Hence, in the strife between the Ogden route and the "Sunset route" for Atlantic Seaboard territory traffic, the Ogden route is very far from being under the control or at the mercy of the Southern Pacific Company.

3. It is not true that the Central Pacific Railroad, under the control of the Southern Pacific Company, is not holding up its end of the through line or that the through line is handicapped in the strife for traffic by the inclusion of the Central Pacific in the Southern Pacific System. This point has probably been sufficiently covered in the discussion of the case under the Sherman law. We call attention, however, to Mr. Spence's testimony showing that the amount of eastbound traffic delivered to the Union Pacific at Ogden exceeds the amount of westbound traffic received from the Union Pacific (Spence, III Vol., pp. 1062-3), and to Mr. Lovett's statement that the business of the Ogden route would not be increased by the separation of the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific System (Lovett, I Vol., pp. 295 and 300).

4. It is not true that the proportion of transcontinental business which it is to the interest of the Southern Pacific Company to move by the "Sunset route" is so large as to characterize the relation of the Southern Pacific Company to the Ogden route as antagonistic. In respect to by far the larger proportion of transcontinental traffic there is no natural competition between the "Sunset route" and the Ogden route. As to all such traffic the Union Pacific is the preferred connection of the Southern Pacific Company. It is sufficient in volume and value to create the strongest motive and inducement in the Southern Pacific Company to maintain the highest possible standard of service on its end of the Ogden route, and to do everything required by the Pacific Railroad Acts. Competition between the Ogden route and the "Sunset route" is naturally confined to traffic between Atlantic Seaboard territory and points in Northern and Central California, and is further restricted by the fact that a large part of this traffic will not stand transshipment and hence will not move over the "Sunset route". Now, it is shown by the testimony of Mr. Spence that all the Atlantic Seaboard territory traffic passing over the Ogden route (including that which will not stand transshipment) is only 16.3 per cent. of the transcontinental traffic moving via that route (Spence, III Vol., p. 1048).

5. It is not true that so much of the traffic in question as is secured for the Sunset-Gulf route represents traffic which has been "diverted", to the prejudice of the public, to a more expensive route with inferior service. Such a contention is contrary to the evidence in this case.

6. Since the Government instituted this suit, and since its testimony was taken and the statistics as to the movement of transcontinental traffic were prepared, the Panama Canal has been opened for business, and the effect, present and prospective, on that part of the Atlantic Seaboard territory traffic for which the Ogden route and the "Sunset route" were competing of the all-water carriers through the Canal has been revealed. The testimony shows that these carriers have not only enormously reduced the takings of this traffic by the lines over which it formerly moved, but that they have reduced the rates to such an extent that the eastern connections of the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line and of the other all-rail lines are not willing to meet them. The result is to put the Ogden route practically out of business in respect to the only traffic upon which the complaint under the Pacific Railroad Acts is based (Spence, Vol. III, pp. 1065-1068). How can the Cen- tral Pacific-Union Pacific through line be discriminated against or prejudiced in any way by the Southern Pacific Company soliciting for the "Sunset route" traffic for which the Ogden route, through no fault of the Southern Pacific Company, is practically out of the market? How can the public be benefited or any useful purpose be subserved by impairing the efficiency (through separation therefrom of its Central Pacific elements) of practically the only through line which remains to compete with the all-water carriers? (See supra, pp. 21-22, 111-112.)

II. Provisions of the Pacific Railroad Acts imposing obligations upon the railroad companies subject thereto in respect to operation and use of their roads.

The title of the act of July 1, 1862, declares its object to be to aid in the construction of "a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean", and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military and other purposes. Section 18 further defines the object to be accomplished, namely, "to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times (but particularly in time of war) the use and benefits of the same for postal, military and other purposes".

The enterprise to receive Government aid is sometimes referred to, as in the title and in section 18, in the singular as a railroad from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and sometimes in the plural, as in Section 15 hereafter quoted, as the railroads authorized to be constructed. What the acts really contemplated was, not one straight single railroad, but a number of railroads constructed by numerous independent companies, the whole to result in railroad connection between the river and the ocean. It was probably expected at the time that the western part would be a single or trunk line and the eastern part composed of a number of forks. In other words, it was possible, if not actually expected, under the terms of the acts, that the result of the railroad construction would be a number of lines of the shape of a fan, the handle toward the west and the fan part proper composed of numerous lines radiating therefrom, each in connection with some other of the lines forming a through line from the Pacific Ocean to the Missouri River. One of the problems which Congress had before it was to prevent family quarrels between these various railroads, and to secure arrangements between the component parts of the various possible through lines necessary to cause them to be operated as through lines, and especially to prevent the main stem or handle of the fan from discriminating in favor of or against any of the contemplated radiating lines. Discrimination in respect to rates, time or transportation might result in preventing one of the lines from securing any traffic and this would operate unfairly against the territory served by it. For instance, a discrimination in favor of the line to Omaha or against the line to Kansas City would be likely to give just cause for complaint to the merchants of Kansas City and of the country farther east dependent upon the line through Kansas City.

Congress solved this problem, not by requiring single ownership, control or management, or a partnership of interests, but by the provisions of the acts upon which the present suit is based, section 12 of the act of July 1, 1862, as amended by section 15 of the act of July 2, 1864, with the additions thereto made by the act of June 22, 1874.

Section 12 of act of 1862 (12 Stat., 489) is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That whenever the route of said railroad shall cross the boundary of any State or Territory, or said meridian of longitude, the two companies meeting or uniting there shall agree upon its location at that point, with reference to the most direct and practicable through route, and in case of difference between them as to said location the President of the United States shall determine the said location; the companies named in each State and Territory to locate the road across the same between the points so agreed upon, except as herein provided. The track upon the entire line of railroad and branches shall be of uniform width, to be determined by the President of the United States, so that, when completed, cars can be run from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast; the grades and curves shall not exceed the maximum grades and curves of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; the whole line of said railroad and branches and telegraph shall be operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and government are concerned, as one connected, continuous line; and the companies herein named in Missouri, Kansas, and California, filing their assent to the provisions of this act, shall receive and transport all iron rails, chairs, spikes, ties, timber and all materials required for constructing and furnishing said first-mentioned line between the aforesaid point, on the one hundredth meridian of longitude and western boundary of Nevada Territory, whenever the same is required by said first-named company, at cost, over that portion of the roads of said companies constructed under the provisions of this act."

Section 15 of the act of 1864 (13 Stat. 356) provides:

"And be it further enacted, That the several companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads are hereby required to operate and use said roads and telegraph for all purposes of communication, travel and transportation, so far as the public and the government are concerned, as one continuous line, and in such operation and use to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the other, and it shall not be lawful for the proprietors of any line of telegraph authorized by this act, or the act amended by this act, to refuse or fail to convey for all persons requiring the transmission of news and messages of like character, on pain of forfeiting to the person injured for each offence, the sum of one hundred dollars, and such other damages as he may have suffered, on account of said refusal or failure, to be sued for and recovered in any court of the United States, or of any State or Territory of competent jurisdiction."

The act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat. 111) adds to Section 15 of the act of 1864 as follows:

"And any officer or agent of the companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads, or of any company engaged in operating either of said roads, who shall refuse to operate and use the road or telegraph under his control, or which he is engaged in operating for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the government are concerned, as one continuous line, or shall refuse, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each of said roads equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, or transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of, or adverse to, the road or business of any or either of said companies, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, and may be imprisoned not less than six months. In case of failure or refusal of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or either of said branches, to comply with the requirements of this act and the acts to which this act it amendatory, the party injured or the company aggrieved may bring an action in the district or circuit court of the United States in the territory, district, or circuit in which any portion of the road of the defendant may be situated, for damages on account of such failure or refusal; and, upon recovery, the plaintiff shall be entitled to judgment for treble the amount of all excess of freight and fares collected by the defendant, and for treble the amount of damages sustained by the plaintiff by such failure or refusal; and for each and every violation of or failure to comply with the requirements of this act, a new cause of action shall arise; and in case of suit in any such territory, district, or circuit, process may be served upon any agent of the defendant found in the territory, district or circuit in which such suit may be brought, and such service shall be by the court held to be good and sufficient; and it is hereby provided that for all the purposes of said act, and of the acts amendatory thereof, the railway of the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company shall be deemed and taken to be a part and extension of the road of the Kansas Pacific Railroad, to the point of junction thereof with the road of the Union Pacific Railroad Company at Cheyennne, as provided in the act of March third, eighteen hundred and sixty-nine."

The act of June 22, 1874, does not add to the requirements of section 12 of the act of 1862 or section 15 of the act of 1864. It simply provides penalties for disobediences of the earlier acts. But it confirms what we have said in respect to the purpose and scope of the provisions requiring the different railroads participating in the construction of the through line to form through lines and accord to each other equal and non-discriminatory facilities and advantages in respect to rates, etc. It was evidently aimed at the Union Pacific, and was provoked by its failure to accord to the through line via Cheyenne and Denver and thence over the then Kansas Pacific Railroad Company to Kansas City the same through rates, etc., which prevailed over its road to Omaha, the latter part of which is designated in the Pacific Railroad Acts as the Iowa Branch. All of these roads belonged to the Pacific Railroad Acts family of roads, and the object which the provisions of sections 12 and 15 were intended to accomplish had been frustrated by the failure of the Union Pacific to make through arrangements with the Kansas City branch. Subsequently the Union Pacific acquired the Kansas Pacific.

The objectionable conduct which gave rise to the legislation of 1874 may be inferred from its terms. It is made clear also in the debates in the Senate which preceded its passage. The Union Pacific had practically closed the through line via the Kansas Pacific. (Congressional Record, 43rd Congress, First Session, pp. 5021 to 5026.) If the testimony before the Pacific Railroad Commission, annexed to its report of 1887, can be regarded as before the Court for any purpose, there will be found on page 132 of the report the statement of Mr. Adams, chairman of the Union Pacific's Directors, that the act of 1874 was the result of efforts of the Kansas Pacific to enforce its rights on the subject of through passenger and freight rates.

Section 16 of the act of 1862 and the same numbered section of the act of 1864 gave any two or more of the companies named in the acts the right to consolidate. But consolidation was authorized, not required. The acts permitted and contemplated, not only construction of the railroads, but the subsequent ownership and operation thereof, by many independent corporations of different States. This involved separate control and management and diverse interests, the only restriction being the construction of the various roads so as to form, by connections at various junction points, a through line or through lines of uniform gauge, and the subsequent use and operation thereof as continuous lines according to each other equal and non-discriminatory facilities in respect to rates, time and transportation. Physical and transportation continuity was required; but, provided these requirements are met, the railroad companies in question are free to form such other connections or affiliations as they may see fit to form. They are not tied to each other in any other way than is involved in the formation, physically and by appropriate equal traffic arrangements, of the contemplated through line or lines. They may operate through other gateways, by direct extension or by connections. They may become more interested in other through lines. They run counter to the Pacific Railroad Acts only when they break up the through lines therein provided for, by a physical break in connection, by refusing to give the necessary through service or to make the necessary through rates, etc., or by discriminating in rates, time or transportation in favor of one of the through lines so as to put the others out of business or by discriminating against one or more of the through lines so as to close them. Preferential solicitation through some other junction or gateway than the one where connection is made with a Pacific Railroad Acts company is not a violation of the statutes, since such conduct does not break the continuity of the through line or lines described in the acts, and does not interfere with the existence over such lines of equal and nondiscriminatory rates, time schedules and every other element of through service. The Ogden route has flourished, notwithstanding the preferential solicitation complained of.

III. The provisions of the Pacific Railroad Acts requiring the railroad companies authorized to construct the through line or lines from the Pacific to the Missouri River to accord each other equal and non-discriminatory facilities and advantages in respect to rates, time and transportation will not support a charge of discrimination against said through line in favor of an outside line.

The charge we have to meet is that the Southern Pacific Company, as operator of the Central Pacific, discriminates against the Union Pacific, or that, as operator of the "Sunset route", it discriminates against the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line, the discrimination being in favor of the "Sunset route" and consisting of the preferential solicitation of some traffic for the "Sunset route."

Pretermitting for the present the question whether a case of discrimination otherwise within the meaning of the Pacific Railroad Acts has been made out, we now suggest for consideration by the Court the preliminary question, whether discrimination by or in favor of a railroad line or a railroad company not included among the railroads or railroad companies mentioned in the Pacific Railroad Acts is covered by the provisions of the acts prescribing the rule of equality in respect to rates and service accorded. A decision of this question in defendants' favor is not essential to their case, but is fatal to the case of the Government.

We submit that it is clear from the language of the law that the requirements in question must be considered as a family rule to secure impartial treatment of each other by different members of the group of railroads authorized to connect the Pacific Coast with the Missouri River. The equal advantages and facilities required by section 15 are commanded to be afforded only by "the several companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads" and only to some one or more of such companies. The equality required to exist is equality between the different members of this same group of railroads. The statute does not concern itself with the advantages and facilities which may be afforded to some outside railroad. It does not make the character of the advantages and facilities afforded an outside railroad a standard of comparison for determining what shall be afforded to the companies included in the statute or a test for determining the existence of the equality required. We can no more read into the statute that each one of the Pacific Railroad Acts companies must furnish to the others advantages and facilities equal to those afforded any outside railroad, than we can read into it a requirement, for the benefit of outside railroads, that they shall be afforded by any member of said group advantages and facilities equal to those which it affords to any other member of the group.

So the complementary prohibition against discrimination is confined to discrimination by any member in favor of or against any member or members of the family of railroads authorized to participate in the construction of the railroad and its numerous branches

III. The equal advantages and facilities required by section 15 are commanded to be afforded only by "the several companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads" and only to some one or more of such companies. The equality required to exist is equality between the different members of this same group of railroads. So the complementary prohibition against discrimination is confined to discrimination by any member in favor of or against any member or members of the family of railroads authorized to participate in the construction of the railroad and its numerous branches and extensions between the Pacific coast and the Missouri river. The prohibition is not violated by discrimination in favor of an outside railroad against a member of the family any more than it is violated by discrimination against an outside railroad in favor of one of the family. We repeat the provisions of section 15 in respect to discrimination constitute a family law to prevent partiality as between members of the family.

The Attorney-General was doubtless misled as to the purpose and scope of the provisions in the Pacific Railroad Acts regulating the operation and use of the railroad authorized to be constructed by regarding those provisions as exclusively or mainly concerning the relations between the Central Pacific Railway and the Union Pacific Railroad. As the Union Pacific was the only connection of the Central Pacific at Ogden there was little room for violation of the provisions, especially in regard to discrimination, unless a much broader meaning was given to the words of the statute than their literal or usual significance would justify. Hence the temptation to unduly extend the scope of the requirements. But abundant raison d'être for the provisions appears, and abundant scope for their operation will be seen to exist, when we consider that the requirements apply, not only to the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, but to the numerous other companies and through lines to be formed by their connections with each other and with the Union Pacific Railroad. These provisions must be construed to be applicable to any system of railroads which might have come into existence under the authority of the acts; that is, if the roads authorized had been constructed and had made connections with the Union Pacific Railroad at any of the places contemplated by the acts.

For instance, there was the Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Company (Kansas Pacific) authorized to construct a railroad from Kansas City to connect with the Union Pacific Railroad either at a point on the 100th meridian or east or west of the 100th meridian (sections 9 and 10 of the act of 1862) and even, under certain contingencies, to meet and connect with the Central Pacific Railroad (section 12 of the act of 1864). And there was the line authorized to be constructed by the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company to connect with the Kansas Company's line or with the line from Omaha (the Iowa branch) or with the main line at the point on the 100th meridian (section 13 of the act of 1862). And there was the line to be formed by the connection between the Kansas Company and the Pacific Railroad Company of Missouri (sections 9 and 10 of the act of 1862). And there was the Sioux City branch to be constructed from Sioux City to a connection with the Iowa branch or with the main line at the 100th meridian (section 14 of the act of 1862). This road was first required to be built by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, but another company was afterward authorized to construct it (section 17 of the act of 1864). There was also the line which the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company was authorized to build from the Missouri River south of the Platte River to connect with the Union Pacific Railroad not farther west than the 100th meridian (section 18 of the act of 1864). Finally, there were the connections with the Iowa branch and the Kansas City branch formed by the railroad of the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company between Denver and Cheyenne, which probably occasioned the passage of the act of June 22, 1874 (act of March 3, 1869, section 2, and act of June 22, 1874). Moreover, there was the general permission in section 15 of the act of 1862, authorizing any railroad, then or thereafter incorporated, to connect its road with the road and branches provided for by the act. And, again, as the act contemplated that different companies might construct the railroad in the different States and territories, many other connections might result (section 12 of the act of 1862).

It appears from the foregoing that the acts contemplated several branches east of the 100th meridian, and many, if not all, of these branches might connect at the point on that meridian. The Union Pacific Railroad was accordingly required not to discriminate for or against any of these connections. The necessity for such requirements is shown by the explanation, supra, of the passage of the act of June 22, 1874.

The construction for which we are contending does not tend to weaken the provisions looking to the formation of a through line or through lines which shall be continuous, physically and in their operation, for all purposes of travel and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned. The requirements in respect to through lines and through service are absolute. The requirements of equal and non-discriminatory advantages and facilities in respect to rates, time and transportation are from their nature relative. The railroad companies mentioned in the act are under the absolute obligation to accord each other such advantages and facilities as are necessary to the maintenance of uninterrupted through service, and, in complying with this obligation, they are under the further obligation of not discriminating against each other. The relations of the numerous Pacific Railroad Acts companies with other railroad companies are governed by general laws.

IV. The mere fact that the Southern Pacific Company, to the extent and in the manner shown by the evidence, preferentially solicits for its "Sunset route" some traffic which might otherwise pass over the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line does not constitute a violation of the Pacific Railroad Acts.

That the preferential solicitation in favor of the "Sunset route" is not inconsistent with the existence of a through route via Ogden operated as one continuous line is too clear for argument. Such preferential solicitation has been going on since 1883; it has not interfered with the Ogden route becoming in the meantime the strongest and most efficient through all-rail line between the Pacific Coast and the Missouri River and beyond. Res ipsa loquitur. The position of the Government seems to be that such solicitation amounts to a prohibited discrimination, and to this claim we shall now direct the argument.

The contention involves an extension of the obligations of the Pacific Railroad Acts far beyond the making of proper and usual arrangements between the group of railroads included in the acts for uninterrupted service under nondiscriminatory joint rates, with divisions mutually satisfactory. To support the Government's case Section 15 must be construed as imposing the further requirement upon each one of the Railroad Companies authorized to construct any part of the railroad and its branches from the Pacific Coast to the Missouri River, not only to afford such facilities and advantages, without discrimination as to rates, time or transportation, to any other of such companies, but, after having done so, to abstain from soliciting the movement of any freight over any other route, or from having any interest or affiliations with any other lines which would give it an interest in the routing of any traffic adverse to the through line constructed under the Pacific Railroad Acts. Such a construction would practically limit each of such companies as a part of a joint transcontinental line to a connection with some other of the group of railroads mentioned in the acts. It would tie the Central Pacific to the Union Pacific and compel it to deliver to that connection all the traffic which it could secure and which could be further transported by that line; and, by parity of reason, it would tie the Union Pacific in like manner and to like extent to the Central Pacific—a tie or obligation inconsistent with the Union Pacific's ownership of the lines from Ogden to Portland and from Ogden or Salt Lake City to Los Angeles.

This contention involves, moreover, an extension of the obligations imposed by the Pacific Railroad Acts unwarranted by the plain meaning of the language employed. Neither the obligation to operate and use the roads for all purposes of transportation, so far as the use thereof by the public and the United States is concerned, as one connecting continuous line, nor the additional obligation to accord to each other in such operation and use equal and non-discriminatory advantages and facilities in rates, time and transportation, include or involve the additional obligation, in cases where any of the public is indifferent as to the routing of certain traffic, to forward such traffic by the route formed by its connection with one of the Pacific Railroad Acts companies instead of by some other route. Nor is there anything in the obligations imposed which expressly or impliedly prohibits any railroad company subject thereto from soliciting the privilege of selecting the route over which traffic offered shall move or from exercising the privilege thus obtained in favor of any route it may select. So long as the public and the United States have open to them through service under through rates, with all the other usual arrangements for uninterrupted interchange of traffic, over the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line, such line is being operated and used, so far as they are concerned, as one continuous, connected line. So long as the Union Pacific Railroad Company is afforded satisfactory or reasonable arrangements as to service, rates and divisions for interchange of traffic, and so long as those arrangements are equal to those afforded to any other of the companies or railroads covered by the Pacific Railroad Acts, the Union Pacific cannot complain of discriminatory treatment in respect to "advantages and facilities" in the matter of "rates, time or transportation" accorded it by the Central Pacific Railway Company. And it has never complained. It may be said of the existing arrangements that they go beyond the requirements of the acts, in that they are not only as favorable as those accorded any of the Pacific Railroad Acts family of roads, but as favorable as those accorded any other connection at the junction point of the two roads and as favorable as those made with any line of railroad at any point. That they are sufficient to admit of the successful operation of the two lines as a through route from the Pacific to the Missouri River and beyond is conclusively shown by the amount of competitive traffic moving over that route, whether this amount be considered absolutely or in comparison with similar traffic passing over competitive routes.

Let us scrutinize closely the language of the statutes in order to arrive at the exact meaning of the "advantages and facilities" which must be afforded. Neither the adjective "equal" nor the complementary provision as to discrimination serve to define the terms "advantages and facilities". Their effect is to require that the "advantages and facilities", such as are required, shall be impartially afforded. But there are other expressions which qualify and define the words whose scope we are seeking to determine. And we shall now examine those defining or qualifying expressions to see whether they include the idea of solicitation or preferential routing. That is to say, whether they require or justify the Court in holding that a violation of the law results from simply exercising the option, secured by solicitation or by indifference of shippers, of routing traffic by forwarding the same or a part of it by some other gateway or connection than that formed by connection with some other of the railroads covered by the acts. The Government in this case demands even more

It claims that the statute forbids any railroad company subject thereto from even having any connection or affiliation with any other carrier which would give it an interest in the movement over the line of such carrier of any traffic which might otherwise pass over the line formed by it and one of the group of railroads mentioned in the Pacific Railroad Acts. Immediately qualifying the words "advantages and facilities" is the expression "as to rates, time and transportation". Neither "rates" nor "time" nor "transportation" involve the idea of soliciting traffic. Equal advantages or facilities in respect to "rates" means simply that the through rates shall be the same by the different connections, and the divisions thereof arranged on the same basis. Equal advantages or facilities as to "time" refer simply to time schedules for through movement of cars or freight. Equal facilities and advantages as to "transportation" relate simply to the physical movement of traffic including equipment, switching arrangements, etc.

The words "without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others" constitute an adjective clause which relates back to the nouns "advantages and facilities" which are themselves qualified or limited by the words "as to rates, time and transportation". They are the negative complement of the adjective "equal". The law-makers might, with the same effect, have said—equal and non-discriminatory advantages and facilities—if they had not wished to emphasize the prohibition and at the same time confine it to the companies authorized to construct the railroads in question. The words "without discrimination of any kind", etc., do not constitute an independent sentence but a dependent qualifying clause which must be construed with what precedes. So construed the discrimination prohibited is a discrimination in respect to "advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation". They do not enlarge or add to the character of the facilities or advantages which are to be non-discriminatory. These are determined by the words "as to rates, time and transportation", and by what is necessary or usually incident to the operation of a continuous through line. They simply forbid discrimination in the matter of such advantages and facilities. The use of the word "business" does not enlarge the scope of the law so as to include the entire corporate business or interests. "Business" manifestly means the business or traffic tendered by one line to another for through transportation. It was not intended to impose upon the railroad companies included in the acts an alliance covering all their corporate interests and business, an alliance which would be violated when any of such companies formed connections or affiliations which gave rise to interest or policies opposed in any way to the interests or policies of other members of the through lines. The requirement that advantages or facilities as to rates, time and transportation shall be without discrimination, etc., we repeat, does not affect the nature or extent of the advantages or facilities. They are still limited to the matter of rates, time and transportation.

The other qualifying expression, "so far as the public and the government are concerned", certainly does not indicate any intention to protect interests peculiar to the railroad companies. The Government is here regarded as a user of the railroad, not as a creditor. Its interests as a creditor were taken care of by other provisions, and it no longer has any interest as a creditor. If the railroads are so operated and used that the Government or any of the public are afforded the opportunity to ship goods over the through line under a through bill of lading upon joint rates in through trains, the rates, etc., being equal to those afforded by any other line, the Government and public are not concerned, and certainly not prejudiced, by having another alternative route open to them and by being solicited at times to make use of such alternative route.

We submit that we have shown that section 15 does not expressly prohibit the Central Pacific or the Union Pacific or any other of the several railroad companies referred to from owning or having affiliations with other lines which would create an interest in the movement over such other lines of traffic that might otherwise pass over the through line which was to be constructed under the acts of 1862 or 1864, or from routing or soliciting the routing of any such traffic over such other lines. It remains to consider whether a prohibition against such affiliation or preferential routing is a necessary or proper implication from what is expressly required or prohibited. This depends upon whether having an interest in an alternative route, or preferential routing of some traffic by another line or gateway, is inconsistent with the requirement that the line constructed under the statute shall be operated and used, so far as the Government and the public are concerned, as one continuous line, etc.

In providing how the many forked line or lines between the Missouri River and the Pacific Coast should be operated and used Congress contented itself with requiring (1) operation and use for all purposes of communication, travel and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one continuous line, and (2) impartiality and equality of treatment of each other by each of the roads forming part of the lines in respect to advantages and facilities extended to each other as to rates, time and transportation. There was no attempt to enumerate or define the advantages and facilities to be afforded. Obviously and necessarily they are such, and such only, as are usual and necessary for the operation and use of the railroads concerned, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line for all purposes of communication, travel and transportation. In other words, neither the requirements of the law nor its implications go beyond what is necessary or usually incident to the formation and operation of a continuous through line. We believe we can safely leave to counsel for the Government the impossible task of showing that, among the necessary and usual incidents of the formation and operation of a continuous through line, is the condition that neither of the connecting railroads can have any interest in another line or gateway or solicit the movement of freight by any other route, but must work exclusively for each other and must make what has been referred to in the testimony as a 100 per cent. interchange at the junction point. (See testimony of Mr. Schumacher, Vol. I, pp. 172-3.)

We shall endeavor to show hereafter that the contention of the Government in this case in respect to the Pacific Railroad Acts is inconsistent with its position and the decision of the Supreme Court in the Union Pacific Merger case. We shall say in this connection, however, that the declaration or intimation of the Court in that case that the statute did not require only physical connection or physical continuity but might be construed as requiring such facilities as joint rates and other usual arrangements for through transportation, is not in conflict but in harmony with the argument we have advanced. There is certainly nothing in the language of the Court to support the contention that the law required facilities or advantages or anything else beyond what would be necessary or usually incident to the formation and operation of a continuous through line. The operation of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific Company as well as its operation of the "Sunset route", and all the essential facts now relied on to show the existence of conditions inconsistent with the requirements of the Pacific Railroad

Acts, were then before the Court. There was also before it the affiliation of the Union Pacific with the two lines reaching the Pacific coast at Portland and at Los Angeles. If either the then Attorney-General or this Court had considered the Pacific Railroad Acts to mean what the present Counsel for the Government are claiming, neither would have failed, in such an appropriate case as was then up for decision, to make known their views. The construction of the statute now contended for would have suggested and led to a decree which would have accorded to the Government in the former suit all the relief it seeks in this suit under the Pacific Railroad Acts.

The construction of the statute upon which the Government's case essentially depends is such an obvious attempt to enlarge the provisions beyond the plain meaning of the language used that further argument is hardly necessary. But a consideration of the subject matter of the Pacific Railroad Acts and of the consequences which would result from the adoption of the construction we are combatting will still further discredit the Government's contention.

Additional light will be thrown upon the requirements in question when we remember that in 1862 and 1864 there was no law requiring physical connection between railroads which met each other or requiring connecting railroads to make any arrangements for through service or through rates. The provisions in the Pacific Railroad Acts anticipated requirements of like character now common in the railroad laws of the different States and now applicable to railroad companies generally through the requirements contained in the amended Interstate Commerce Act and the powers given to the Interstate Commerce Commission. We pointed out above that to construe the provisions in question as applicable solely or mainly to the connection at Ogden between the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific might mislead one into reading into the statute more than the language used would justify, and that a corrective to this misleading tendency would be afforded by considering the many other connections to which the provisions were applicable and for which they were mainly intended. So now we suggest that to construe the acts with reference to the present state of the law in regard to connecting railroads will mislead one into stretching the scope of the provisions, and that a proper corrective is to consider the provisions in question with reference to the state of the law when the Pacific Railroad Acts were adopted. If it be true that, in the course of the development of the law and of improvements in through rail transportation, connecting railroads now, voluntarily or by compulsion of law, co-operate as closely in giving through service as the companies named in the Pacific Railroad Acts were required to do, this circumstance would afford no reason for now extending those requirements beyond the scope which would otherwise be given to the language employed.

If the members of Congress who drafted and who voted for those acts could have foreseen how through freight and passengers are carried over the through route formed by the Union Pacific-Central Pacific lines and the mutually satisfactory arrangements for the handling of through business under which the two roads have been for so long operated as one continuous connecting line, can it be doubted that they would have been perfectly satisfied with such compliance with their mandates and equally satisfied with the results?

We challenge the Government to produce any precedent or authority for the contention that the requirement imposed upon the railroad companies mentioned in the Pacific Railroad Acts to afford to each other equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation, without any discrimination for or against any other of such companies, means that, after making reasonable, equal and non-discriminatory arrangements for through routes, joint rates, etc., none of such companies may preferentially route any traffic by any other connection (even at some other gateway) than the one it may make with one of the other Pacific Railroad Acts companies, not even in case of its own line. Certainly no such precedent or authority is found in the construction placed upon the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, as those provisions have been amended from time to time with the same general purpose which Congress had in view in framing section 12 of the act of 1862 and section 15 of the act of 1864. Considering the amendments in 1906 and 1910 to section 15 of the Interstate Commerce Act, giving the Commisssion full power to establish through rates;

the Carmack Amendment in 1906 to section 20, requiring the issuance of through bills of lading; the power conferred upon the Commission by amendment in 1906 to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which through routes shall be operated; the amendment of 1910 making it the duty of all interstate railroads "to establish through routes and just and reasonable rates applicable thereto; and to provide reasonable facilities for operating such through routes, and to make reasonable rules and regulations with respect to the exchange, interchange and return of cars used thereon, and for the operation of such through routes, and for providing for reasonable compensation to those entitled thereto"; and the provisions of section 13 for complaint to the Commission for anything done or omitted to be done in contravention of the act, and section 15, empowering the Commission to make appropriate orders upon the hearing of such complaint—in connection with sections 3 and 7 of the act forbidding discrimination between connecting lines—it cannot be doubted that under the Interstate Commerce Act, either by its direct requirements or through order of the Commission, connecting railroads may be required to do as much as is required by the Pacific Railroad Acts of the companies therein mentioned. Yet it has never been intimated in any decision of any court or in any complaint before the Commission that we have been able to find that, if a railroad connects with two other railroads, both reaching by their connections the same territory, one through Gateway A and the other through

Gateway B, that the railroad having these two connections may not preferentially forward traffic by the road reaching Gateway A or solicit the privilege of forwarding traffic that way. It has never been charged that such conduct would amount to a discrimination as to rates, time or transportation against the road leading to Gateway B or a denial to it of equal advantages or facilities in respect to rates, time or transportation.

Since the institution of this suit the Transportation Act, 1920, has been enacted. This Act confers upon the Interstate Commerce Commission practically unlimited powers over all that concerns connecting lines of railroad and the operation thereof as continuous lines, &c., including the matter of through routes, joint rates, reasonable divisions thereof, car service, use of terminals, &c. Had the Interstate Commerce Act as amended by the Transportation Act, 1920, been in existence in 1862 and 1864, the provisions in the Pacific Railroad Acts to secure the operation of the connecting lines of the Central Pacific and of the Union Pacific as one continuous line, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, without discrimination as to rates, time and transportation, &c., would have been unnecessary. It is within the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to secure for the Union Pacific all that it is entitled to under section 12 of the act of 1862 or section 15 of the act of 1864, and more. There is no necessity or reason for the United States, even if it has the right, which we deny, to invoke the provisions of the Pacific Railroad Acts on behalf of the Union Pacific, and to insist upon the disruption of the Southern Pacific System, a Draconian remedy, to insure the operation of a through line via the Ogden gateway. Neither the Union Pacific nor any of the public have ever complained of the manner in which the Southern Pacific Company has fulfilled its obligations in the premises. And the rights and interests of both in the future are amply protected by the present plenary powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It is a fair test of the correctness of the Government's construction of the requirements in question to apply it to conditions which were contemplated or authorized by the terms of the Pacific Railroad Acts. As we have seen, it was contemplated that there would be several branches, probably radiating from a point on the 100th meridian. One of these branches, the one to Omaha, referred to as the "Iowa Branch", was to be constructed by the Union Pacific. Another, the one to Kansas City, was to be constructed by the Pawnee, Leavenworth and Western Railroad Company (afterwards the Kansas City). And there were several others. After such construction the Union Pacific would own a continuous line from point of connection with the Central Pacific to Omaha. If we should impose upon the Union Pacific, in respect to the extension of its own line and to the other branch roads, at the contemplated meeting point on the 100th meridian, the obligation, not only to make fair and equal arrangements for interchange of traffic, but not to solicit eastbound traffic via Omaha or to prefer its own line in the forwarding of such traffic, we would be construing the act consistently with the Government's contention as to the obligation of the Central Pacific to the Union Pacific; but would we not have a reductio ad absurdum of that contention?

Suppose the Union Pacific should complete its through line to the Coast by the purchase of the Western Pacific. Would it have to observe a position of impartial neutrality as between its own line west of Ogden and the line of the Central Pacific? Would the mere preferential routing of traffic over this part of its own line constitute a violation of the Pacific Railroad Acts? Is this Court prepared to declare unlawful any voluntary routing of traffic by the Union Pacific over the Western Pacific? Is it willing to render a decision which would prevent the Union Pacific from acquiring the Western Pacific?

In determining whether the requirements of those acts have been violated the case stands just as it would stand if the Southern Pacific Company and the Sherman Law were out of the case and the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company were owned by the same persons who owned the stock of the other railroad companies composing the Southern Pacific System, or as it would stand if the Central Pacific Railway Company had in its own name constructed and owned or was operating the "Sunset route." The case is not altered in any sense by the introduction of the Southern Pacific Company. The terms of section 15 of the Pacific Railroad Acts do not acquire a different meaning or a wider scope or application from the fact of the common ownership by one company of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company and of the stock of the companies owning the "Sunset route". The meaning of the words "equal advantages and facilities" or non-discrimination in respect to rates, time or transportation remains the same.

Now, suppose the Central Pacific Company, after the construction of its road to Ogden, had built a road along the route now occupied by the lines composing the "Sunset route," would it have been a violation of the Pacific Railroad Acts for the Central Pacific, after according to the Union Pacific Railroad the arrangements for through service, rates, etc., it now accords, to have favored, in the way the Southern Pacific now does, its own road via Yuma, El Paso, Galveston, etc.? Or again, is there anything in the Pacific Railroad Acts which would have prevented the Central Pacific, after connecting with the Union Pacific, from building a line of its own eastward to or towards the Missouri River, or which would have prevented the Union Pacific Railroad Company after such connection from extending its line to the Pacific coast. Would it be a violation of those acts now for either company to construct or acquire railroads competitive with the lines of the other? If the Central Pacific, after connecting with the Union Pacific at Ogden, had extended its line eastward, say to Denver, would the Pacific Railroad Acts require it to observe an attitude of strict neutrality in respect to solicitation of traffic as between its own line and the line of the Union Pacific Railroad? An affirmative answer to these questions would condemn the acquisition by the Union Pacific Railroad Company of its line from Ogden to Portland and its line from Salt Lake City to Los Angeles. This Court in the Unmerger Case found nothing objectionable in the ownership and operation by the Union Pacific of either of these lines, both of which compete with the Central Pacific Railway Company, and the Court expressly approved the control of the line to Los Angeles. It is absurdly inconsistent for the United States under these circumstances to proceed to enforce, on behalf of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, a line of conduct for the Central Pacific so utterly at variance with the conduct of the Union Pacific towards the Central Pacific.

The petition in this suit justifies the belief that the construction of the Pacific Railroad Acts now asserted is of such recent origin that the effect of its general application has not been considered. A part of the Central Pacific Railway Company is a railroad from Roseville to the Oregon boundary line, a land grant railroad, formerly the California and Oregon Railroad Company, constructed under the act of Congress of July 25, 1866 (14 Stat. 239). One of the railroads operated by the Southern Pacific Company is a continuation of this line to Portland, also constructed under the California and Oregon Grant of July 25, 1866, by the Oregon and California Railroad Company. Section 7 of that act imposes upon these two railroads the same obligations as did the acts of 1862 and 1864 upon the railroads mentioned therein, requiring that the owners thereof operate and use them so far as the public and the Government are concerned as one connected and continuous line, with equal advantages and facilities, without discrimination, etc. How utterly inconsistent with the Government's construction of the obligations resulting from such provisions upon the Central Pacific with reference to the Union Pacific is the contention that the two lines constructed under the California and Oregon Grant could or would have been extended to parallel and compete with each other, had they not fallen under common control, and that the resulting operation of the two lines as one continuous, connecting line is contrary to public policy and a restraint of trade.

Equally inconsistent is the charge now made of discrimination against the Union Pacific with the contention which characterized, as we shall see, the Government's argument in the Union Pacific Unmerger Suit, namely, that the Union Pacific had always received fair treatment and had no cause to complain of the arrangements under which the two lines had been operated as a through route.

To construe the acts as they must be construed to support the Government's contention would tend to discourage all of the several railroad companies mentioned in the act from extending or constructing their lines of railway, since they would not be free to work for their own lines or to make advantageous arrangements in reference to interchange of traffic or divisions of rates with other systems of railroads. The obligation never to be interested in the routing of freight in any other way than by the line of railroad authorized to be constructed by the Pacific Railroad Acts and never to solicit the privilege of forwarding freight by any other route, would forever hamper and discourage the development of these companies. We submit that such a construction is not justified by the plain significance of the terms of the statutes, nor by their general purpose, nor by the particular reasons for the requirements in question, nor by the construction which has been given to similar provisions now applicable as a general rule to all connecting lines of railway.

The conditions complained of as being violative of the requirements and subversive of the purposes of the Pacific Railroad Acts have been in existence for over thirty years. It may be truly said that the lines have never been used or operated under any other conditions. It is passing strange that their unlawful character was not suspected until, in the search for weapons with which to disrupt the Southern Pacific System, the hitherto unnoticed scope and effect of sections 12 and 15 were discovered. The relations and mutual obligations of the Central Pacific and Union Pacific under the Pacific Railroad Acts have been the subject of repeated investigation by successive committees of Congress. The resulting reports have discussed and commented upon the operation of the Central Pacific and the other Southern Pacific lines as part of one system. They have called attention to the forwarding over the "Sunset route" of traffic which might otherwise have moved over the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line; but it has never been charged that this was a discrimination within the prohibition of the Pacific Railroad Acts. At the time of these investigations the United States was a creditor of both the Central Pacific and Union Pacific, dependent upon their revenues for payment of its debt, with a right to receive directly a certain percentage thereof. The Government then had a direct interest, other and stronger than any interest it now has, in discovering and enjoining any unlawful diversion of traffic. While the potentialities of the union under one management of the Central Pacific and "Sunset route" were commented on, it was never urged that anything in the Pacific Railroad Acts gave the United States, although a creditor, any right to separate the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific System, and it was never even intimated that sections 12 or 15 of the act of 1864 or the act of 1874 were being violated.

We refer particularly to the report of the Pacific Railway Commission of 1887, the most extensive and thorough of the reports, which furnished the material that was largely drawn upon by subsequent reports. Senate Executive Documents, 1st Session, 50th Congress, 1887-8, Vol. II, pp. 1 ffg. At the time of this Commission's investigation the proportional movement of transcontinental traffic via the "Sunset route" was very much larger than at present or at any date in the near past. In commenting upon this, it was said (p. 115):

> "In the judgment of the Commission the controlling motive, which has lead to this alteration in the transit of freight, has been the question of convenience and public advantage. It has not arisen from an intention to reduce the net earnings applicable to the percentage due to the United States. In the report of the Postmaster-General it is stated that this same diversion is practised by his department, and that he selects the best and the quickest routes because he thereby promotes public convenience."

The rights and interests of the United States as a creditor of the Central Pacific and of the Union Pacific are one thing, and the obligations inter sese of those railroads as to the operation and use of their lines under sections 12 and 15, as amended, are another and quite a different thing. The Pacific Railway Commission was required by the act which created it (act of March 3, 1887, 24 Stat., 488) to investigate and report as to whether the aided railroads had observed all the obligations imposed upon them by the Pacific Railroad Acts. If, in the opinion of the Commission, the forwarding of such a large amount of traffic as was then moving over the "Sunset route" constituted a forbidden discrimination it would have so reported. But it did not do so. It reported the fact, commented on the possibilities of prejudice therefrom to the interests of the United States as creditor, but did not even on that score find anything therein contrary to the statute. It even justified the forwarding of traffic by the "Sunset route", as is shown by the quotation supra and by the observation contained in the following paragraph of the report (p. 115):

> "It appears to us that this question of the diversion of traffic must be regulated by the interest and demands of the people who use the railroads. Trade will always find the easiest and most natural channel."

The only violation of the provisions in respect to discrimination found by the Commission was that practised by the Union Pacific against the Kansas Pacific in refusing "to prorate through business, east or west" (pp. 109-114).

The failure of any Congressional Committee, in investigations and reports made from time to time during a long period of years, to find anything violative of sections 12 or 15, as amended, in the relations between the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific Company or in the influence which such relations had or might have upon the movement of traffic, justifies the statement that Congress never construed the requirements of the Pacific Railroad Acts as does the Attorney General in the present suit. And the same may be said of the Executive Department of the Government. We may add that the Department of Justice was likewise in darkness as to the scope and effect of the provisions in question until the exigencies of the instant case cast a new light upon the statutes. It was to the interest of the Government in the Union Pacific Unmerger suit to have the fullest effect given to the requirements of section 12 and of section 15, as amended. If the United States then believed that the mere union of the Central Pacific line to Ogden and of the "Sunset route" in one system was forbidden by the Pacific Railroad Acts, it would and should have said so. For it could thus not only have completely removed the Union Pacific's justification for the merger, but have put a stop to such violation of the law. But the contention of the Government was that the Pacific Railroad Acts would prevent the Southern Pacific Company or the Central Pacific from closing the Ogden gateway by refusing to make through routes and joint rates with the Union Pacific, and that the Union Pacific had no reason to complain of its treatment by the Central Pacific or the Southern Pacific Company in respect to the Ogden route, and, hence, could not justify the merger attacked on the ground of self-preservation.

This suggests a consideration of the decision in the Union Pacific Unmerger suit.

V. The pleadings, argument and decision of the Court in the Union Pacific Unmerger Suit considered with reference to their bearing on the Pacific Railroad acts.

The members of this Court who participated in the decision of the unmerger suit do not need to be informed that that case was not prosecuted or defended on the theory that the Southern Pacific Company, as owner of the Central Pacific and of the "Sunset route", had been guilty of discrimination or any other objectionable conduct in its treatment of the Union Pacific. The Pacific Railroad Acts figured in the case only in connection with the question whether it was necessary for the Union Pacific to acquire the Central Pacific in order to insure a continuance of the fair treatment it had always received. However, when in the course of the direct-examination of Mr. Connor in this case, counsel for the Government expressed his opinion that preferential solicitation of some transcontinental traffic for the "Sunset route" constituted "systematic and preconcerted discrimination" against the Union Pacific, we were warned that the opinion in the unmerger case would be relied upon to support the Government's contentions on this branch of the case. As the Government in the former suit characterized the conduct of the Southern Pacific Company as fair treatment of the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line, as the Union Pacific was not aware that it was, and had been since 1883, the victim of an unlawful discrimination, this Court did not have before it any argument in favor of or against the construction of the Pacific Railroad Acts which the Government now urges upon this Court. We shall endeavor to show that it did not intentionally, or even casually and unwittingly, decide in favor of the Government the questions presented in this case under the Pacific Railroad Acts.

It is well to bear in mind throughout this case that the Union Pacific dominated the defense of the unmerger suit. Hence, when the Government took and maintained the position that the Southern Pacific ownership of the Central Pacific had not prevented competition between the Ogden route and the "Sunset route" and was not inconsistent with observance of the requirements of the Pacific Railroad Acts, the Union Pacific, in fighting to preserve the union of the two systems, naturally emphasized the importance to it of the Central Pacific and ignored the greater importance of that property to the Southern Pacific system. The result was that the rights and interests of the Southern Pacific, when separated from the Union Pacific, received no consideration. The Court's attention was not called to the genesis of the Southern Pacific system, to the essential part played by the Central Pacific lines in that system, to the impairment in the service which would result from a separation, etc. There was nothing in the record in the former suit to prevent this Court from being left with the impression that it might give general satisfaction to turn over the Central Pacific to the Union Pacific. But we submit that there is certainly enough in the present record to completely obliterate such an impression. Even if the question whether the Southern Pacific or the Union Pacific should have the Central Pacific depended upon which needed the property more or upon how the public interests would be served under one ownership or the other, the decision would be for the Southern Pacific. But a person canot be deprived of his property because it would be more useful to another. Whether the Southern Pacific Company shall be deprived of the Central Pacific depends, so far as the Pacific Railroad Acts are concerned, upon whether such ownership is prohibited by those acts.

The petition of the United States in the Unmerger Suit contains in the recitals or narrative part a reference to the acts of 1862 and 1864 and a quotation from section 15 of the latter act; but the acts are not afterwards mentioned in the petition. The defendants simply referred to the Pacific Railroad Acts for their answer to the allegations of the petition in respect thereto. There is therefore nothing in the pleadings to indicate what claims either side intended to base upon these acts of Congress.

The majority opinion rendered by the Circuit Court refers to the contention that the Pacific Railroad Acts obligated the Union Pacific and Central Pacific to the establishment of through routes and maintenance of joint rates, and took these roads out of the operation of the rule announced in the case of Southern Pacific Company v. Interstate Commerce Commission (200 U. S.

536), and declares that the Court does not so interpret them.

> "These acts," says the Court, "were obviously intended to secure a permanent physical connection between the roads and to provide generally for equal accommodation to the public on the basis of independent carriers; but we discover in them no provisions or machinery by which the Southern Pacific, as successor to one of them, could have been compelled by the courts or otherwise to make agreements governing interchange of traffic or through rates, or fixing the division of the through rates between the two roads. Section 15 of the act of 1864 is not substantially different, so far as the matter under consideration is concerned, from section 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887 (24 Stat., 380). They both forbid discrimination in rates between connecting lines. Section 3 has been held by the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the Court of Appeals of this Circuit not to invest the Commission or the courts with power to compel carriers to make contracts or agreements for through billing of freight or for joint rates" (p. 113).

The dissenting opinion does not refer to the Pacific Railroad Acts.

The contention made by the Government in its brief filed in the Circuit Court was that the Act of 1884 "insured the Union Pacific a connection with California without discrimination of any kind in favor of any road. Therefore, it was unnecessary for the Union Pacific to buy the Southern Pacific Company in order to have its cars and freight transported on a 'continuous line.'" (See Brief on the Law, p. 14.) Accordingly, in its Brief on the Facts, the Government declared:

> "Under the laws of Congress, as we will show in our brief of the law, the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific lines were required to be operated as a continuous line without discrimination; but irrespective of the law, the Southern Pacific, as a matter of self-preservation, was always compelled to and did gladly interchange business with the Union Pacific, accepting for its share of the through haul the division of the through rate accorded to it by consent, from 1870 down to the present time, as testified to by Mr. Stubbs" (Brief of Facts, p. 268).

This Court had before it the contention made by the Union Pacific, that the control of the Central Pacific's line between San Francisco and Ogden gave to the Southern Pacific the power to close the Ogden gateway to the Union Pacific by refusing to make arrangements for through routing, joint rates, etc., or by discriminations in respect to such arrangements against the Union Pacific. In combating this contention, and the argument based on it, that the acquisition of the Central Pacific was justifiable on the plea of self-protection, the Court said:

> "Nor do we think it can be justly said that because of the connection with the Rio Grande road at Ogden the Southern Pacific was in position to discriminate at will against the Union Pacific in such wise as to greatly impair the latter road's carrying trade upon eastbound freight. In this connection it is said that since the consolidation, notwithstanding the former published rates are maintained, the favoring attitude of the Southern Pacific to the Union Pacific practically destroyed the carrying trade from Ogden to the East for the Rio Grande System and necessitated the construction by the latter road of a new connection for California points, and that such would have been the fate of the Union Pacific upon disagreement as to rates with the Southern Pacific. In reference to this point we think it is pertinent to consider the acts of Congress known as the Pacific Railroad Acts. These acts required the two roads, the Central Pacific and Union Pacific, to be 'operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel and transportation, so far as the public and government are concerned, as one connected, continuous line' (12 Stat., 489, 495, act of July 1, 1862, c. 120, Sec. 12), and in such operation and use 'to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others. * * *' (13 Stat. 356, 362, act of July 2, 1864, c. 216, Sec. 15.) They also authorized the consolidation of the roads. These acts, it is said, are only intended to secure the permanent physical connection of the roads and to provide for equal accommodations upon the basis of independent carriage, and outline no method by which the two roads can be compelled to make a joint through rate, and that at the time of the stock transfer there was no such provision in the Interstate Commerce Acts. Therefore, it is said that the Union Pacific, no less than the Rio Grande, would have been practically at the mercy of the Southern Pacific in the favorable or unfavorable treatment which might have been accorded to it in the matter of through business to be transported eastwardly. The purpose of Congress to secure one permanent road to the coast so far as physical continuity is concerned is apparent, but we do not think the acts stop with that requirement. It is provided that facilities as to rates, time and transportation shall be without any discrimination of any kind in favor of either of said companies or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others, and the purpose of Congress to secure a continuous line of road, operating from the Missouri River to the Pacific Coast as one road, is further emphasized in the act of Congress of June 20, 1874, c. 331, 18 Stat., 111, making it an offence for any officer or agent of the companies authorized to construct the roads or engaged in the operation thereof, to refuse to operate and use the same for all purposes of communication, travel and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one continuous line, and making it a misdemeanor to refuse, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each of said roads equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of or adverse to any or either of said companies. Such practices of systematic and preconcerted discrimination as are said to have destroyed the Rio Grande's carrying trade as a connection for the East for business at Ogden would have violated the statute as discriminations adverse to the Union Pacific and be equally violative of the letter and spirit of the acts of Congress. Certainly such discriminations could be restrained by the courts (Union Pacific Railway Co. v. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co., 163 U. S., 564, 603, 604), and might possibly have resulted in a forfeiture of all rights under the acts of Congress. The obligation to keep faith with the Government continued, as did the legislative power of Congress concerning these roads, notwithstanding changed forms of ownership and organization. Union Pacific Railroad Company v. Mason City, &c., Railroad Co., 199 U. S., 160."

The questions decided by the Supreme Court were (1) That it cannot justly be said that "because of the connection with the Rio Grande road at Ogden the Southern Pacific was in a position to discriminate at will against the Union Pacific in such wise as to greatly impair the latter's carrying trade upon eastbound freight". (2) That the Pacific Railroad Acts require not only permanent physical connection between the roads which they authorized to be constructed by the several railroads named therein, but also required that "facilities as to rates, time and transportation shall be without discrimination of any kind in favor of either of said companies or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others". And the conclusion was that "Such practices of systematic and preconcerted discrimination as are said to have destroyed the Rio Grande's carrying trade as a connection for the East for business at Ogden would have violated the statute as discriminations adverse to the Union Pacific and be equally violative of the letter and spirit of the acts of Congress".

These questions were decided solely with reference to the point made in argument, that acquisition of Central Pacific line was the only way by which the Union Pacific could be assured of adequate arrangements for the operation of the line between Ogden and San Francisco, in connection with its line to Omaha, as a continuous line for through transportation under through rates, etc. There is no warrant for the claim that such preferential solicitation for the Sunset Gulf route as this record discloses is of the same character as "such practices of systematic and preconcerted discrimination" as the record in the Unmerger Suit disclosed to have been practiced against the Denver & Rio Grande with the effect of destroying that road's business through Ogden, and, hence, that this Court has already decided that such preferential solicitation is a violation of the Pacific Railroad Acts. We do not know, and this Court cannot know in deciding this case, what the record in the former suit disclosed as to the facts in reference to the treatment of the Denver & Rio Grande. We have as a part of this record the Brief of the Government on the Facts, filed in the former suit. We doubt if that brief can be referred to except as to the plea of estoppel, and then only to show the position of the Government upon the question of competition between the Ogden and the Sunset-Gulf route. But in the remote contingency that it becomes necessary to try to ascertain what were the traffic relations between the Southern Pacific and Denver & Rio Grande during the merger, referred to in the above quoted paragraph, the Court will find on pages 372 and following, of the Government's brief, enough to convince it that the discriminating practices against the Denver & Rio Grande went far beyond routing unrouted traffic preferentially over the Union Pacific, and extended to refusal to agree to divisions of through rates, discrimination in rates, refusal to allow equipment of Southern Pacific to be loaded for freight consigned via the Denver & Rio Grande.

It remains to consider whether the decision in the former suit covers the questions presented in the instant case. These questions are:

(1) Has the Central Pacific, or the Southern Pacific as owner of the Central Pacific, failed or refused to accord to the Union Pacific the equal non-discriminatory facilities and advantages required by the Pacific Railroad Acts?

This question was certainly not decided in the affirmative by this Court in the former case. On the contrary, it was not denied by either party, and was assumed by the Court, that the past conduct of the Central Pacific had given the Union Pacific no cause for complaint. The Government referred in its Brief of Facts to "the fair treatment always extended to the Union Pacific by the Central Pacific line" (p. 303). The Court simply decided that this fair treatment was not a mere concession or favor on the part of the Southern Pacific, but was required by the Pacific Railroad Acts, and that its continuance was secured and could be enforced under those acts.

(2) Are the requirements of the Pacific Railroad Acts violated if either the Central Pacific or the Union Pacific forwards over some other line traffic, the routing of which it controls, which could move over the through line formed by them, or is it a violation of the acts for either of those companies to have connections or affiliations which would make it to the interest of either to forward any traffic, the routing of which it controls, over such connections or affiliated line, when such traffic could otherwise move over the line formed by the two companies?

This Court certainly did not decide either of these questions in the affirmative. On the contrary, the affirmative answer to these questions, which the Government now contends for, is inconsistent with the pleadings and argument of the Government and of the decision of the Court.

The connection between the Southern Pacific Company and the Central Pacific Railway Company existed, to the knowledge of the Government, at the time of the Unmerger Suit and for many years prior thereto. The connection and affiliation between the Central Pacific line and the "Sunset route" have always existed, and the routing over the "Sunset route" of some traffic which might move over the Ogden route has always been practiced, except possibly during the period when the Union Pacific controled both lines. The object of the Unmerger Suit being to relieve the Central Pacific-Union Pacific transcontinental line from all unlawful restraints, it would have been appropriate for the Government, if the control of the Southern Pacific Company over the Central Pacific and the "Sunset route" or the practices of the Southern Pacific Company in respect to solicitation or routing of traffic, amounted to an unlawful discrimination against the Ogden route, to have so charged in its petition and asked for a decree terminating such unlawful conditions or practices. That it did not do so clearly indicates that it did not believe that the existence of such control or the manner of its exercise were unlawful. There can be no doubt that after all the evidence was in, the Government believed that the Union Pacific's rights under the Pacific Railroad Acts had not been violated by the Southern Pacific or the Central Pacific.

The Court would not have referred to the use which the Union Pacific might have made of its line to San Francisco via Portland or sanctioned the arrangement by which the Union Pacific obtained control of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company (the Portland and the San Pedro lines being competitors, on either side, of the Central Pacific) if that Court had construed the Pacific Railroad Acts as forbidding the Central Pacific, and hence the Union Pacific, from forwarding or having an interest in forwarding over some other line traffic which might move through the Ogden gateway over the line of the other. Would it be consistent with the reasoning or conclusion of the Court in the former case to assert that the Union Pacific may not lawfully forward by its Portland line or its San Pedro line any traffic which might otherwise move over the Central Pacific line?

The Court referred in its opinion to the statement in the lease of the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific in 1885, that the acquisition by the Union Pacific of a line to the coast through the Oregon Short Line gave it an interest adverse to the Central Pacific. Its subsequent control of a second route to the coast through the San Pedro line has doubled this adverse interest. Can it be possible that the Pacific Railroad Acts created a one-sided partnership, requiring the Central Pacific to work exclusively for the Union Pacific, without liberty to solicit the forwarding of freight by other connections, while the Union Pacific is permitted to prefer its affiliated lines to the north and south of the Central Pacific? What public interest will be subserved by thus neutralizing any competition between the Central Pacific line and the two lines on either side of it?

There is a fundamental inconsistency between the attitude of the Government in the two cases, the present case and the one against the Union Pacific, both in respect to the effect of the operation of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific and as to the legality under the Pacific Railroad Acts of the conditions resulting from the union under one management of the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific route. In the former suit it was urged that the Union Pacific had alwas been treated fairly and had nothing to complain of under the operation of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific, and that the Pacific Railroad Acts insured a continuance of such treatment. In the present suit it is urged that the Union Pacific is being discriminated against under the operation of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific within the prohibition of the Pacific Railroad Acts. In one case the Pacific Railroad Acts are invoked as securing a continuance of conditions, which are approved of and characterized as constituting fair treatment of the Union Pacific. In the other case the Pacific Railroad Acts are invoked as prohibiting the same conditions, which are declared to constitute discrimination against the Union Pacific.

There has been no change in conditions since the unmerger suit which can account for the change in the attitude of the Government in respect to the requirements of the Pacific Railroad Acts or their observance by the Southern Pacific Company. There has been no change in the arrangements for the operation of the through line or for the rates, fares, facilities, etc., in connection therewith. They have continued to be mutually satisfactory and apparently leave nothing to be desired. The Union Pacific was never less at the mercy of the Southern Pacific in the matter of through traffic via Ogden than at the present time. When it sought to justify its merger with the Southern Pacific on the ground that it had no assurance that their satisfactory relations as connecting lines would continue, the Central Pacific line was its only outlet to San Francisco, the initial railroad absolutely controlled the routing of through traffic and the Interstate Commerce Commission had no power to establish through routes or to fix joint rates and the divisions thereof. The Western Pacific has since been constructed and affords another direct line to San Francisco. Shippers' routing directions are now controlling. The Interstate Commerce Commission has now, under the Transportation Act, 1920, such complete jurisdiction and powers over the whole subject of connecting lines, through routes, joint rates and reasonable divisions thereof, proper facilities, undiscriminating treatment, etc., as to insure to the Union Pacific from the Southern Pacific as owner of the Central Pacific all that the public interest demands and more than was contemplated when Congress formulated Section 12 of the Act of 1862 or Section 15 of the Act of 1864. During the long period of years when the Central Pacific line was the Union Pacific's sole direct connection with the coast, when shippers had no right to prescribe the routing of through traffic, when the Interstate Commerce Commission had no power to establish or regulate through routes and service, neither the Union Pacific nor the public nor the Government found any conflict between the inclusion of the Central Pacific lines in the Southern Pacific System and the due observance by the Southern Pacific of the requirements of the Pacific Railroad Acts. It is hard to understand why at this time, when the continued observance of such requirements are insured by new legislation and changed conditions, the Government should demand further assurance in the form of the dismemberment of the Southern Pacific System. It is equally difficult to find in the provisions of the Pacific Railroad Acts any legal support for such a demand.

In Conclusion.

This supplemental brief can now speak for itself, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to repeat that it does not cover the whole case for the defense. The questions not discussed have been omitted, not from want of faith in defendants' contentions in respect thereto, but because they are fully presented in the main brief, and because it did not fall within the proposed compass of this supplemental argument to deal with matters of defense, the presentation of which involved citation and discussion of authorities. It is believed that a decision in favor of defendants will follow from the application of well-settled principles of law to facts, undisputed or established beyond dispute.

To make out its case under the Federal Anti-trust Act the Government must convince the Court that the Southern Pacific System is a prohibited combination which for more than thirty years has been continuously guilty of an undue and unreasonable restraint of trade, although its origin involved no destruction of existing competition, its development was by normal and natural growth, without absorption or elimination of competitors, and its present status has no element therein of monopolization or trade control; and this upon a record which not only fails to show that any increased competition, improved service or other public benefit will follow the disruption of the system, but contains very strong evidence to the contrary; upon a record, moreover, showing absence of any complaint by any competitor of unfair treatment or by any patron of unsatisfactory service or charges, and opposition of the communities served by the system to its dissolution.

To make out its case under the Pacific Railroad Acts the Government must establish the contention that certain conditions are inconsistent with or destructive of the purposes of the Acts, when thirty years of experience has demonstrated the contrary. It must be able to persuade the Court to accept a construction that escaped the frequent scrutiny to which the statutes have been subjected from time to time by different departments of the Government and remained unsuspected for over thirty years, until suggested by the exigencies of this case, a construction which involves an addition to the plainly expressed requirements of the Acts, not necessary to make the expressed requirements effective and not justified by the context, a construction moreover which, if accepted by this Court, will convict of ignorance or disregard of the law successive committees of Congress who undertook from time to time to investigate the matter of compliance with the statutes in question, the President of the United States and the Cabinet members who in 1899 arranged the settlement of the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the Department of Justice, which failed to bring the acts now complained of to the attention of the Court on the opportune occasion of the suit to unmerge the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific.

As might naturally be expected of a litigation from fourteen to thirty years behind time, this suit is out of date, uncalled for, anachronistic; and, fortunately for the public as well as defendants, the Government has failed to show that it is entitled to the relief prayed for.

"ORDER.

"At a General Session of the INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION, held at its office in Washington, D. C., on the 12th day of May, A. D., 1917.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY'S OWNERSHIP OF ATLANTIC STEAMSHIP LINES.

No. 6606.

APPLICATION OF SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 5 OF THE ACT TO REGULATE COMMERCE AS AMENDED BY THE PANAMA CANAL ACT IN CONNECTION WITH ITS OWNERSHIP OF THE ATLANTIC STEAMSHIP LINES.

It appearing, That on February 18, 1914, the Southern Pacific Company filed an application under section 5 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended by section 11 of the Panama Canal act, seeking authority to continue the ownership and operation beyond July 1, 1914, of the Southern Pacific Company-Atlantic Steamship Lines; and a full investigation of the matters and things involved having been had, and the Commission, on January 24, 1917, having made and filed a report containing its findings of fact, which said report is hereby referred to and made a part hereof, which said report contained findings that the petitioner's rail lines may and do compete with its Atlantic Steamship Lines operating between New York and New Orleans and between New York and Galveston, that under present conditions an extension of the time during which the petitioner may continue to operate or have an interest in these steamship lines will neither exclude, prevent nor reduce competition on the routes by water, and that the correction of certain objectionable practices which were enumerated would leave no basis of record to justify the withholding of the requisite finding, under the act, that the existing service of these steamship lines between New York and New Orleans and between New York and Galveston is in the interest of the public and of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people;

And it further appearing, That the petitioner by the filing of appropriate tariffs now effective from New York, N. Y., and points in Atlantic seaboard territory to Galveston and interior Texas points has corrected the objectionable practices above referred to:

It is ordered, That the application of the Southern Pacific Company for an extension of time beyond July 1, 1914, within which it may continue the operation of its Atlantic Steamship Lines between New York and New Orleans and between New York and Galveston be, and it is hereby, granted, subject to such further order or orders as may hereafter be entered by the Commission.

It is further ordered, That all rates, fares, schedules and regulations aplying to the transportation of persons and property by the petitioner's Atlantic Steamship Lines between New York, N. Y., and New Orleans, La., and between New York, N. Y., and Galveston, Tex., subject to the act, be filed with this Commission and posted as required by the act to regulate commerce and regulations of the Commission on or before July 1, 1917.

By the Commission:

(SEAL) GEORGE B. MCGINTY,
Secretary."

OCTOBER TERM, 1921.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant,
v.
SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, UNION TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK, et al. } No. 5.

APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF UTAH.

REPLY BRIEF FOR APPELLANT.

In March and April, 1921, a brief for the appellant, a brief for the appellees, and a supplementary brief for the appellees were filed in this case. No reply brief was filed. The case was argued beginning April 18, 1921. It has been ordered for reargument.

The briefs in the case already filed are long. They deal with the evidence and with the arguments in detail. Most of the arguments for the appellees have been anticipated in the briet originally filed for the appellant. Therefore an effort will be made not to repeat, but to make this reply as far as possible by reference to the original brief.

The facts are outlined at pages 9–18, and the case is summarized at pages 283–286, of the appellant's original brief.

In this reply brief, the appellant submits that—

I. The combination pursuant to the agreement of February, 1899, was a restraint of trade.

II. These were two railroads and not one.

III. The lease was void.

IV. The control exercised before the Sherman Antitrust Act became law would not justify a combination to perfect and to perpetuate such control thereafter.

V. The competition of the Union Pacific Railroad and its eastern connections did not justify the suppression of the competition of the Central Pacific Railroad.

VI. The action of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the water lines of the Southern Pacific Company is not inconsistent with the appellant's position.

VII. The United States did nothing in 1899 authorizing the appellees to restrain trade.

VIII. The Pacific Railroad laws have been violated.

IX. The principle of the decision in United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S. 61, requires a dissolution of the combination between the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad.

X. The lapse of time is not a bar.

I.

THE COMBINATION PURSUANT TO THE AGREEMENT OF FEBRUARY, 1899, WAS A RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

It appears not to be disputed by the defendants (1) that the Central Pacific Railroad with its eastern connections, and the Southern Pacific Railroad with its water lines and eastern connections, are competitive lines of railroad and have been so since 1883; (2) that the area as to which they are competitive is large and the volume of the competitive freight substantial; and (3) that the two companies owning these railroads do not compete and that competition between them, as now related, is impossible.

The vast amount of competitive freight and wide extent of territory of competition (Appts. Br. pp. 23 to 33) may not be conceded, but that the competitive area is large and that the volume of competitive freight is substantial, are no longer in dispute.

The total absence of competition between the two railroads in their present control is indisputable on the evidence. (Appts. Br. pp. 136 to 162; pp. 33 to 109.)

The evidence that the combination creates a monopoly as to certain areas and as to certain classes of freight has not been met and can not be met. (Appts. Br., pp. 109 to 118.)

The burden of the argument for the appellees appears to be—first, that these were one railroad and not two; and, second, that the competition of the Union Pacific Railroad and its eastern connections with the Southern Pacific Railroad excuses the destruction of any competition by the Central Pacific Railroad. Neither argument is well grounded. (Infra, sections II, III, and V.)

II.

THESE WERE TWO RAILROADS AND NOT ONE.

The briefs for the appellees repeatedly assert that the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad were a single railroad. This is argumentative assertion only. The evidence is clear. Nowhere is there any denial of the facts which show that these were two railroads (Appts. Br. pp. 196 to 234) separately projected by separate and unrelated groups of men; separately aided by gifts of public lands and loans of the public credit under acts of Congress to promote them as two separate competitive systems of railroad; separately owned by separate corporations organized by separate groups of men; separately constructed at the expense of these separate corporations for these separate corporations; separately leased by them under separate leases, making the amount of the rent dependent on the net earnings of the separate railroads; separately controlled by boards of directors, some of whom were always diverse, and a majority of whom were diverse in all but five years between 1865 and 1899; and separately stock-owned always to a substantial extent, and from 1883 to 1899 to the extent of more than a majority of the capital stock in each separate corporation held by widely scattered stockholders in the United States and in Europe.

These were not separate subsidiaries commonly owned by a single corporation or by a single group of men. They were always separately owned. They were separately conceived and separately Government-aided. Such measure of control as was obtained by one over the other prior to 1899 was obtained because competition was foreseen and in order to prevent it (Appts. Br. p. 45; pp. 201 to 206.) This de facto control was through a lease only, which was void when made and in danger of being terminated in 1899 by the foreclosure of the underlying liens. (Appts. Br. pp. 40 to 42; pp. 252, 253.)

III.

THE LEASE WAS VOID.

The briefs for the appellees do not disclose any right or power in the Central Pacific Railroad Company to make the lease of February 17, 1885. In 1885 it was void for lack of authority from the Legislature of California and for lack of authority from Congress. (Appts. Br. pp. 237 to 249.)

The lease was cancelled expressly in 1893. The new lease in 1893 was equally void, and was also in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. (Appts. Br. pp. 249 to 251.)

IV.

THE CONTROL EXERCISED BEFORE THE SHERMAN ANTITRUST ACT BECAME LAW WOULD NOT JUSTIFY A COMBINATION TO PERFECT AND TO PERPETUATE SUCH CONTROL THEREAFTER.

The appellees seem to concede that a control of two separately owned competing railroads before 1890 would not justify the continuance of such a combination after 1890. They seek to avoid the application of the principle by contending that prior to 1890 there was more than a control—namely, that there was a common ownership. This contention is merely a repetition of the arguments that these were one railroad, and that the lease of the Central Pacific Railroad to the Southern Pacific Company in 1885 put the ownership of the Central Pacific Railroad in the Southern Pacific Company. The answer is that already given—namely, that these were two railroads and not one, and that the lease was void.

Even if the lease had not been void, it would not have justified the more complete combination which was made in 1899 under which the Southern Pacific Company acquired all the stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company and its successor, the Central Pacific Railway Company. (Appts. Br. pp. 253 to 258.)

V.

THE COMPETITION OF THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD AND ITS EASTERN CONNECTIONS DID NOT JUSTIFY THE SUPPRESSION OF THE COMPETITION OF THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The appellees refer repeatedly to the competition between the Ogden route and the El Paso route. By this they mean the competition of the Union Pacific Railroad and its eastern connections for freight through the Ogden gateway and the competition of the Southern Pacific Railroad for freight through the El Paso gateway. They do not mean—and the evidence would not permit of such a contention—that the Central Pacific Railroad competes against the Southern Pacific Railroad for freight through the Ogden gateway. The Union Pacific Railroad and its eastern connections get what they can for the Ogden gateway. The effort of the Southern Pacific Company, and of the Central Pacific Railway Company under its control, is directed toward the El Paso gateway. There is no competition by the most powerful element in the Central line toward the development of the Central line against the Southern line. (Appts. Br. pp. 34 to 40; pp. 136 to 162.)

This suppression of the competition of the Central Pacific Railroad for the Ogden gateway against the El Paso gateway was accompanied by the usual evils resulting from the suppression of competition. (Appts. Br. pp. 64 to 118.)

This illegality, this injury, is not overcome by the fact that some other competitive railroads remain in a part of the field. (Appts. Br. pp. 52 to 64.)

VI.

THE ACTION OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION AS TO THE WATER LINES OF THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY IS NOT INCONSISTENT WITH THE APPELLANT'S POSITION.

The appellees make an extended argument based on the decision as to facts, made by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the application of the Southern Pacific Company for permission to continue to operate its water lines from New Orleans and Galveston to New York. This decision is not in the record in the case at bar. It was made after the decree in the case at bar was entered. It was made on evidence and arguments not in this record. If the decision were injurious to the position of the appellant in the case at bar, it would become necessary to determine whether it can properly be brought to the attention of the court, in the case at bar; but the decision is not injurious to the appellant's position.

Under the terms of the act, on the application of the Southern Pacific Company for permission to continue to operate its steamship lines notwithstanding the competitive rail routes through El Paso and through Ogden, the Interstate Commerce Commission was called upon to determine whether the operation of these steamship lines by the Southern Pacific Company would exclude, prevent, or reduce competition "on the route by water" (i. e., by these steamship lines) or would operate to the disadvantage of the public. The commission decided that it would not.

So, far from being inconsistent with the position of the appellant in the case at bar, this decision is favorable to that position. The record in this case shows that the Southern Pacific Company is putting forth its greatest efforts—and has done so for years—in favor of the southern route with its water connections to New York. The thing now complained of is the suppression of the countervailing effort which should exist on the part of the Central Pacific Railroad in favor of the central route. There is nothing in this situation which would lead the Southern Pacific Company to go slack in the operation of the water lines which form the eastern end of its southern route. To deprive the Southern Pacific Company of that necessary part of the southern route would not increase any competition over either route. On the other hand, it would make the Southern Pacific Company a less efficient and less serviceable competitor of the Union Pacific Railroad and of any other railroad competing for transcontinental business against the Southern Pacific Company.

VII.

THE UNITED STATES DID NOTHING IN 1899 AUTHORIZING THE APPELLEES TO RESTRAIN TRADE.

The appellees fail to meet the position expressed by Judge Carland in the minority opinion below. (Appts. Br. p. 164.) The action of the Settlement Commission has no bearing on the question of whether or not these two railroads were competitive railroads, or whether or not the combination of them would suppress competition. The evidence in this case shows indisputably that they were competitive and that the combination suppressed this competition. The action of the Settlement Commission can not throw light on these facts or overcome this evidence.

The commission's only action was to consent to the refunding of the debt. This was a concession to the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The debt was adequately secured. If the concession had not been made, the road would have been acquired by the United States or by some other purchaser on foreclosure. The guaranty of the bonds was a proposal of the reorganizers to make them more salable. It was not demanded by the commission. It was not included in the written agreement. It was not thought to be of enough importance to be mentioned in the report which the commissioners made on February 20, 1899, to Congress. It was mentioned incidentally months later in the annual report of the Attorney General. It was never reported to Congress that the Southern Pacific Company was to become the owner of the Central Pacific Railroad or of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company. The railroad always has been and now is amply sufficient to pay the amount of the bonds. There is nothing from which it can be said that Congress, or any officers of the United States for it, gave the Southern Pacific Company permission to violate the Sherman Antitrust Act. (Appts. Br., pp. 162 to 196.)

VIII.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD LAWS HAVE BEEN VIOLATED.

The appellees do not meet the evidence which shows the discrimination which has been practiced by the Southern Pacific Company in the operation of the Central Pacific Railroad against the Union Pacific Railroad. (Appts. Br. pp. 136 to 162.) It is urged for the appellees that the Government is contending that the Pacific Railroad laws required the Central Pacific Railroad Company to give one hundred per cent of its transcontinental freight to the Union Pacific Railroad. This is not the contention. Such a contention is unnecessary. The Government contends that the Pacific Railroad laws required the Central Pacific Railroad Company to abstain from discriminating against the Union Pacific Railroad. As stated by this court in the Union Pacific case—practices of systematic and preconcerted discrimination in the solicitation and routing of freight adversely to the Union Pacific Railroad violated the Pacific Railroad laws. (Appts. Br., pp. 119 to 132.)

The appellees suggest that this discrimination against the Union Pacific Railroad is "ancient history," and has ceased. All the evidence is against this suggestion. This discrimination was unabated in 1901. From 1901 to 1913 it was tempered somewhat by the Union Pacific Railroad Company's control of the Southern Pacific Company. Even in this period, discrimination continued as to California-Atlantic seaboard freight. This was because the Union Pacific Railroad Company's 46 per cent ownership of the Southern Line, having the whole of the haul, gave a greater return than its 100 per cent ownership of the Union Pacific Railroad, having less than a third of the haul. On the dissolution of this combination in 1913 the Southern Pacific Company returned to its pre-merger policy. (Appts. Br., p. 159.) Only two years elapsed thereafter before the evidence in the case at bar was closed (May, 1915). In this period the Southern Pacific Company was restrained by the knowledge that Attorney General Wickersham had informed them in January, 1913, that this suit was to be brought. It was brought in February, 1914. If the period of danger were ended by a decision of this court to the effect that the Southern Pacific Company could continue to hold the Central Pacific Railroad, there is no reason to doubt that the Southern Pacific Company would continue the practices of systematic and preconcerted discrimination in violation of the terms and purposes of the Pacific Railroad laws as defined by this court in the Union Pacific case. The owners and officers of the Southern Pacific Company are human. The old incentive remains. A combination which furnishes a powerful and controlling incentive to such a discrimination, and facilitates it, is in itself in violation of those laws. (Appts. Br., pp. 132 to 136.)

IX.

THE PRINCIPLE OF THE DECISION IN UNITED STATES v. UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, 226 U. S. 61, REQUIRES A DISSOLUTION OF THE COMBINATION BETWEEN THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD AND THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The appellees urge at length that the Government contended in the Union Pacific case, and that the court found, that prior to 1901 there was vigorous competition between the Ogden gateway and the El Paso gateway. They urge that such a position and decision are inconsistent with the position now taken by the Government. There is no such inconsistency. (Appts. Br., pp. 259 to 271; p. 34.) On the contrary, the Government now relies on the decision in the Union Pacific case as establishing principles which are conclusive in favor of the petitioner in the case at bar. The competition which was relied on and which was found to exist in the Union Pacific case was the competition between the Southern Pacific Company promoting the use of the El Paso gateway, and the competition of the Union Pacific Railroad promoting the use of the Ogden gateway. It was not contended that the Central Pacific Railroad, under the control of the Southern Pacific Company, was promoting the use of the Ogden gateway.

On the other hand, the decision in the Union Pacific case established that the Central line, made up of the Central Pacific Railroad, the Union Pacific Railroad, and its eastern connections from California to the Middle West and Atlantic seaboard, was competitive with the Southern Pacific Railroad and its connections between the same territories, and that it was unlawful for a portion of one of the through lines to control the operations of the other through line. This applies to the Central Pacific part of the route just as much as it does to the Union Pacific part of the route. This implication of the decision was apparent to Attorney General Wickersham as soon as the decision was rendered. (Record, vol. 2, p. 785.) Hence this suit. The appellees have failed to point out any distinction in principle between the two cases.

X.

THE LAPSE OF TIME IS NOT A BAR.

The appellees contend that they have made out the defense of laches. This overlooks the fact that the combination was criminal and that there is no defense of laches in such a case. (Appts. Br. pp. 274 to 283.) The Union Pacific combination, which was dissolved by this court, was only two years later (1901), and the Reading combination, which was dissolved by this court in 1920, was three years earlier (1896), than the combination in the case at bar (1899).

There were special reasons for not bringing this suit between 1901 and 1913, because during that period the Union Pacific combination overrode the Southern Pacific combination. (Appts. Br. p. 273.)

Respectfully submitted.

No. 21.
October
Term 1920.

BRIEF FOR UNION (NOW CENTRAL UNION) TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK, APPELLEE.

This suit was brought upon the theory that the ownership by the Southern Pacific Company of the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, and the lease by the latter of its lines to the former, constitutes a combination in restraint of trade; and the petitioner has requested that the said Southern Pacific Company be directed to dispose of the said capital stock which was pledged long ago with the said Union Trust Company, as trustee for bondholders.

Facts.

The facts bearing upon the issue as to whether the ownership of the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company by the Southern Pacific Company constituted a combination in restraint of trade under the terms of the Sherman Anti-trust Act will be set forth in the brief submitted on behalf of those parties.

The facts relating to the pledge and present situation of the said stock are as follows (the references, unless otherwise indicated, being to the pages of the printed record): On August 1st, 1899, a mortgage or deed of trust was made by and between Southern Pacific Company and the Union Trust Company of New York by the terms of which the said Southern Pacific Company agreed to pledge and deposit with the said Union Trust Company of New York certificates of the preferred stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company to the amount at its face value of $12,000,000, and certificates of the common stock of said company to the amount at its face value of $67,274,200, the said certificates to be assigned in blank with irrevocable powers to transfer the same; and it was provided and agreed that the certificates so pledged and deposited should be held by the said Union Trust Company of New York, subject to the terms and conditions expressed in said instrument, upon trust for the benefit of the persons who should become holders of the bonds to be issued under said mortgage, to secure to such holders the punctual payment of the said bonds and the interest thereon as it should become due; and it was further provided and agreed that additional preferred stock of said

Central Pacific Railway Company, not exceeding in the aggregate $8,000,000, should be deposited in a similar manner, and upon the same terms, conditions and trusts, with the said Union Trust Company of New York when delivered from time to time to the said Southern Pacific Company. (Mortgage, Defendants' Exhibit No. 98, pp. 2304-25).

Pursuant to the terms of said instrument the said Southern Pacific Company has deposited with the said Union Trust Company of New York, as trustee as aforesaid, certificates of preferred stock to the amount at its face value of $17,400,000, and certificates of common stock to the amount at its face value of $67,274,200, of the said Central Pacific Railway Company, the said certificates being assigned in blank with irrevocable power to transfer the same.

Bonds secured by the said mortgage have been issued and there are now outstanding such bonds secured by said mortgage to the amount of $34,-218,500 (1220-21) which bonds will not become due until August 1, 1949.

It should be noted that since this appeal was taken (i. e., on June 18, 1918) the respondent Union Trust Company of New York was merged into the Central Union Trust Company of New York.

Pleadings.

The bill of complaint sets forth as against the trustee only the execution of the mortgage by the Southern Pacific Company to Union Trust Company of New York to secure $36,818,500 of bonds, the pledge of practically all of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company to secure the payment of said bonds, and the holding by the said trustee of said stock as collateral security for said indebtedness (2, 5). There is, of course, a prayer for general relief; but no specific relief against the trustee is asked for, although it is prayed that the Central Pacific Railway Company be enjoined "from recognizing as valid any transfer, mortgage, pledge or assignment of such stock by said Southern Pacific Company," etc. (11, 12).

The answer of the trustee prayed that if any relief should be granted to the petitioner, the decree should "not in any way affect the lien of the mortgage" (80).

POINT I.

This court should affirm the decision of the court below and should not direct that the stock be sold.

That the ownership of the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company by the Southern Pacific Company is not contrary to the terms of the Sherman Anti-trust Act will be argued fully in the brief submitted on behalf of the Southern Pacific Company. There seems to be no occasion, therefore, for this trustee to do more than to point out that its position on this subject is the same as that of the Southern Pacific Company since the interests of the bondholders which it represents are opposed to such a sale.

The said stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company is pledged with this trustee to secure absolutely, or at any rate as far as possible, the repayment to the bondholders in the year 1949 of the sum of $34,218,500, advanced by them, and the interest thereon. So long, therefore, as this stock has a market value of well over $34,218,500 the bondholders will be protected. Still further, the Central Pacific Railway Company would seem to be such an important part of the system now operated by the Southern Pacific Company, that the latter Company, and any successor, can not permit the stock of the Central Pacific Company to be sold by the trustee under any circumstances. If, however, it should be decreed that the Southern Pacific Company must sell this stock, and cannot thereafter repurchase it, it would follow, in the event of a foreclosure of the mortgage, that the stock would have, practically speaking, no "market" value at all, since the only probable purchaser would be the Union Pacific Railroad Company; and we may be reasonably sure that the Union Pacific Railroad Company would not pay as much for the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, if bidding alone, as it would in competition against another company.

If therefore we are right in thinking that a decree directing that this stock cannot now or hereafter be owned by the Southern Pacific Company would be equivalent to a decree that the stock must be owned by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, then it follows, we urge, that such a decree would very greatly impair the value of the stock which has been pledged with this trustee.

POINT II.

If this court should reverse the decision of the court below and direct a sale of the stock, the interests of the bondholders should be fully protected.

A. IF THE STOCK IS TO BE SOLD IT SHOULD BE SOLD SUBJECT TO THE LIEN OF THE DEED OF TRUST.

It seems hardly conceivable that the Government, in seeking to compel the Southern Pacific Company to sell this stock, should attempt also to destroy the lien of the bondholders; and no such claim has been made in the bill of complaint, or in the court below, or in the brief for the Government in this court. It has happened, however, that the requests of the trustee that the Government disclaim any intention to ask that the lien be destroyed, or stipulate to that effect, have been refused. It seems necessary, therefore, to make a brief statement of the position of the trustee. This is so especially, because to both the Government and the Southern Pacific Company the tremendous question is whether the stock shall be sold, and the question whether if sold the sale shall be subject to the lien of the trustee is to them of comparatively trifling interest. That question, however, is of great importance to the bondholders as we have intimated above.

The Southern Pacific Company, as the owner of this stock, had the power to sell it, and therefore to pledge it. If, instead of raising money by pledging this stock, the Southern Pacific Company had sold some of it, the situation of the purchaser would be the same, in substance, as that of the pledgee here. The Government in that case would hardly attempt, for reasons of convenience or otherwise, to compel the purchaser to sell back his stock to the same person who had bought, or might wish to buy, the balance of the stock. So here, the Government if it had made out a case, might have asked this court to direct the Southern Pacific Company to sell whatever interest it still had in the stock, but not, of course, any interest with which it had already parted. To be sure the trustee has been made a party to this suit; but the reason for compelling the Southern Pacific Company to dispose of its interest (or equity) in the stock has no application whatever to the Central Union Trust Company of New York and its interest in (or lien upon) the stock.

If this suit, instead of being brought for the purpose of requiring the Southern Pacific Company, (because a competitor of the Union Pacific Railroad Company) to dispose of its interest in the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, had been brought in the exercise of the power of eminent domain to enable the Government to obtain the ownership of this stock for itself, then the trustee would have been a proper party, and the decree might determine the amount which should be paid to it in satisfaction of its lien upon the property.

In the case at bar, however, since the Southern Pacific Company has power only to sell its undisposed of interest in the stock, that is all that this court could have been asked to compel that Company to do. But if it is conceivable that the Southern Pacific Company may be required to sell an interest which it has disposed of already, there is no occasion to make a direction that the stock be sold free from the lien, as a purchaser of the stock should be willing to take it subject to the trust deed.

We have urged above, in substance, that even if the Government had asked to have the stock sold free from the lien of the mortgage, such relief could not under any circumstances be granted. The facts are, however, that the Government in its complaint did not pray to have the lien of the trustee destroyed, and that, although the position of the trustee on that subject was at once asserted in its answer, the Government has not made any claim to the contrary, either in the court below or in its brief in this court. It has thus waived any right to such relief.

B. If the stock is to be sold, and free from the lien of the mortgage, it should be only at a price sufficient to pay the indebtedness secured by the stock with interest to the date of maturity of the bonds.

While, as we have said above, this is not a condemnation proceeding, and the trustee ought not therefore to have its rights in this stock taken from it without its consent, or sold in any way except under its direction, yet, if its right to control the time and terms of sale of the pledged property should be thus taken from it, the decree should provide—at least—that the sale be made only upon such terms and with such safeguards as will absolutely insure the payment of all indebtedness to the bondholders and all interest to the date of its maturity.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

OCTOBER TERM, 1920.

No. 21.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, APPELLANT,

vs.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, ET AL., APPELLEES.

OUTLINE OF ORAL ARGUMENT FOR APPELLEES.

Introduction.

The date of the alleged conspiracy to suppress competition is February 20, 1899. The outstanding events which occurred on that day were these:

(a) The Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of the Interior, and Attorney General, as a Commission created by the act of July 7, 1898, reported to both Houses of Congress the settlement of the Central Pacific debt amounting to $58,812,715.48 under an agreement between the United States of America, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and Messrs. Speyer & Company, dated February 1, 1899, and executed February 15 and 16, 1899, by President McKinley and the three Cabinet officers. A copy of the agreement was appended to the report. (See Report, Main Br.,* p. 176; also Agreement, which is a part of the Answer, I. R., 47.)

(b) Speyer & Co. put out to the world the plan of reorganization of the Central Pacific properties, dated February 8, 1899, upon which the agreement with the Government was based, and in that plan stated that under an agreement with the Southern Pacific Company, copies of which were available to persons in interest, the latter company had agreed to buy the common stock and the preferred stock of the proposed new company and to guarantee the payment of two issues of bonds of the new company, i. e., (a) an issue of one hundred million, whereof fifty-eight million were allocated as security for the payment of the Government debt, and (b) an issue of twenty-five million, applicable immediately, with other assets, to the discharge of the general bonded indebtedness of the old company. (See Plan, in Answer, I. R., 60.) The agreement and the plan of reorganization were integral parts of a single transaction (Main Br., 149-176, 294-302) which was long the subject of negotiation as shown by the fact that there were twenty or thirty revises of the plan (Main Br., 180).

The Department of Justice now urges that this transaction, participated in, as we have seen, by the President of the United States and three members of his Cabinet, was an unlawful conspiracy for the suppression of competition.

*Brief for Appellees.

The argument is made that the Southern Pacific suppressed competition by preventing it from coming into existence, and that it accomplished this result by the payment to the Government of its debt. The argument is that, had the Government not been paid its debt, it would have foreclosed and, as a purchaser at foreclosure, would itself have become a competitor, or the property might have passed into the hands of third persons who would have become competitors. In other words, the Department of Justice discovers an illegal prevention of competition from coming into existence in the fact that the Government chose to accept payment instead of foreclosure. The Department of Justice, therefore, is seeking to nullify Government action of the most formal and important character and to do so by most attenuated argument—by an argument indeed which all the time overlooks the fact that, as the holder of the leasehold interest in the properties of the Central Pacific, the Southern Pacific would have been entitled to bid at the foreclosure sale or to have redeemed in protection of its theretofore lawfully acquired interest.

Outstanding Propositions in the Case.

There are several outstanding propositions upon which we think this case should turn, and which lend themselves readily to oral argument. We here enumerate seven of these propositions, noting that the lower court sustained our position in respect of each of them:

(1) Reading the record in the light of the history of the railroad systems of the country, viewing this particular system in the light of its own history and considering the physical aspect of the system by an inspection of the map, it is immediately apparent that the lines here sought to be divorced present the case of a single system of railroads. The case, therefore, does not involve any combination of competitive units or any combination at all, inasmuch as the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific lines were projected and built and have been operated since their origin as one property.

(2) At the time of the passage of the Anti-trust Act (July 2, 1890) the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific lines were owned by a single proprietor, although the Central Pacific lines were held under a 99-year lease, made February 17, 1885, instead of in fee; but "it is obvious that in principle the right of a lessee is the same as that of a purchaser in fee" (224 U. S., 565).

(3) In view of the proceedings in Congress during the period 1885 to 1898 (covering both administrations of President Cleveland, the administration of President Harrison, and the first fifteen months of the first administration of President McKinley) respecting the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific lines, and considering that during this same period Congress was fully acquainted with the existence of the lease of 1885 and subsequent modifications, and had frequent occasion to deal therewith, and with the relations between the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific, it is plain to see that the act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat., 652, 659), creating the Commission for the settlement of the Central Pacific debt, contemplated as natural, if not inevitable, the agreement subsequently made; and by its own terms the statute invested the Commission with full authority to agree to the plan which was adopted for the payment of the indebtedness, including (a) the provision by which the Southern Pacific acquired the stock of the Central Pacific, and (b) the provision taking account of the lease made to the Southern Pacific in 1885 and subsequent modifications, whereby it was provided that all leases should be subordinated to the lien of the new mortgage to secure the bonds which were to be delivered to the Government as collateral for the notes given in settlement of the debt.

(4) Considering that the settlement dated February 1, 1899, but executed February 16, 1899, under the act of July 7, 1898, and all the details thereof were matters of public history and necessarily within the knowledge of Congress (see Report made to both Houses of Congress February 20, 1899, the plan publicly issued by Speyer & Co. February 20, 1899, and the publication of the full details thereof in The Commercial & Financial Chronicle of February 25, 1899), the acts of March 3, 1899, and March 3, 1901, are to be treated as Congressional confirmation and recognition of and acquiescence in the settlement as made. This argument is fortified by the circumstance that from February 20, 1899, to the commencement of this suit, February 11, 1914 (fifteen years), no suggestion was ever made that the settlement was beyond the power of the Commission in any of its details, or that the Government had been overreached in respect of any of the provisions therein involved.

(5) The control of the Central Pacific lines by the Southern Pacific Company does not constitute or give rise to an undue restraint of commerce, for the following reasons:

(a) As stated by Mr. Justice Holmes in the Swift case quoted by Mr. Justice Day in the Union Pacific case, "commerce among the States is not a technical legal conception, but a practical one, drawn from the course of business" (Supp. Br.,* 107), and judged by conditions which had their origin thirty-six years ago (1885), it is established as a fact that the ownership by the Southern Pacific of the Sunset-Gulf route and the Central Pacific does not involve an undue restraint of commerce.

(b) This very argument upon this question of fact was successfully made by the Government in the Union Pacific case (Main Br., 318-320), but the Government now seeks to establish the very contrary.

(c) The fact that the railroad system under consideration involves no undue restraint of commerce is established by the direct testimony of witnesses of experience whose testimony is in harmony with the Government contentions in the Union Pacific case.

(d) This testimony is corroborated and confirmed by evidence that it is impossible to dismember the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system without substantial deterioration in the service (Main Br., 375-380), as shown by a finding to that effect by the Railroad Commission of California, which declared that it was problematical whether such a dismemberment would at all improve interstate commerce, and that it was certain to inflict material injury upon commerce moving wholly in California—a view with which the court below agreed (Main Br., 380).

"The Central and Southern Pacific Railroads are so thoroughly bound together that no man can foresee the result of tearing them asunder" (The President of the University of California, in The Outlook, 1914, Vol. 106, p. 609).

(6) There was no violation of the Pacific Railroad Laws because:

(a) "The proofs show no foundation in fact for this contention" (Hook, J., quoted, Main Br., 372).

(b) The argument that the Pacific Railroad Laws forbid one of the constituent roads to compete with another constituent road, or become the property of a competitor, has no foundation whatever in the statute.

(c) As held below, "the Government and the public were being served adequately." The Central Pacific, in point of maintenance and operation, ranks with the best railroads of the country, and although the Government called the Union Pacific officials as witnesses, they could not testify that service could be improved by dismemberment or that the Union Pacific would get any more traffic or revenue after dismemberment than they now obtain.

(d) The argument of the Government respecting the Pacific Railroad Laws flies in the face of that portion of the Union Pacific decision which affirmed the validity of the ownership by the Union Pacific of the Granger-Portland route and the acquisition of a fifty per cent interest in the Ogden-San Pedro route (Main Br., 267, Maps XIII and XIV).

(e) The Government's contentions respecting the requirements of the Pacific Railroad Laws is contrary to long-continued administrative construction. Indeed every department of the Government has, at one time or another, declined to regard as violative of the statutes the very conditions and conduct which in this suit are charged to be prohibited.

(f) The cause of action under the Pacific Railroad Laws when analyzed does not present the Government in the light of a person aggrieved but suggests a liability over to the Union Pacific (see quotations from Acts of 1862, 1864 and 1874, Supp. Br., 152-155) which that company shows no disposition to pursue and which, if the liability existed, would be remediable through the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, if need be, in a District Court upon petition by the Interstate Commerce Commission—all as provided in the Transportation Act of 1920 (Supp. Br., 177, 202).

(7) In its last analysis the relief sought by the appellant is experimental and not judicial in its nature. The Government does not seek the destruction of a new and unlawfully created condition which took the place of an old and natural one; it seeks the destruction of an old and natural condition in order that it may create, by a new and untried experiment, a condition which has no prototype.

The Government's Petition and Incorrect Definitions Respecting Fundamental Matters.

The petition or bill of complaint presents a two-fold case (a) under the Anti-trust Act and (b) under the Pacific Railroad Laws.

(1) The case under the Anti-trust Act is based upon the allegations (a) that prior to 1885 competitive conditions existed between the Ogden route (meaning the C. P., U. P. and eastern connections) and El Paso (meaning the Sunset Gulf route); (b) that by the lease of 1885 this competition was suppressed, and (c) that the stock acquisition of 1899 was an additional means for the suppression of competition. There is no suggestion in the petition that either the lessor or the lessee was wanting in authority to execute the lease of 1885, or that there was any infirmity therein save that which arose from the allegation that at the time of the execution of the lease the lines of the lessor were, and before that time had been, in competition with the lines of the lessee.

(2) The case under the Pacific Railroad Laws may be separated into two compartments (a) an alleged cause of action grounded in the idea that the Pacific Railroad Laws were violated by the fact alone that one of the constituent Pacific Railroads (the Central Pacific) became the property (through the lease of 1885, followed by the stock purchase in 1899) of a company (the Southern Pacific) which was a competitor of another constituent Pacific Railroad (the Union Pacific), thereby creating a status which without more was unlawful; (b) an alleged cause of action based upon the claim that the operation of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific violated the Pacific Railroad Laws by not affording to the Union Pacific "equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation without any discrimination of any kind." (See Act quoted, Supp. Br., 153.) Here, again, there is no suggestion in the petition that either the lessor or the lessee was wanting in authority to execute the lease of 1885, or that there was any infirmity therein save that which arose from the allegation that at the time of the execution of the lease the lines of the lessor were, and before that time had been, in competition with the lines of the lessee.

In the proofs the Government totally failed to show any improper practice upon the part of the appellees in respect of a denial or withholding of facilities or of any discrimination whatsoever, but on the contrary (as we have already stated) it was shown that in maintenance and in operation the Central Pacific had attained and maintained an excellence comparable with the best railroads of the country and far better than most of them.

The Government, however, argues that there has been a withholding of facilities from the Union Pacific and discriminatory practices against that company, on account of acts which we say do not fall within any definition of either of those terms. The Government contends that there has been such a withholding of facilities and such discriminatory practices because the defendants (a) have withheld cooperation with the Union Pacific in a one hundred per cent exchange of business and (b) because the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific has caused the Central Pacific to be indifferent to or opposed in interest to an increase in traffic and earnings of the Union Pacific-Central Pacific line.

The argument, therefore, as we have seen, is that the lease of 1885, followed by the stock purchase in 1899, created an unlawful status under the Pacific Railroad Laws. This argument, as we have also seen, flies in the face of that portion of the decision in the Union Pacific case which affirmed the validity of the ownership by the Union Pacific of the Granger-Portland route, and the acquisition of a fifty per cent interest in the Ogden-San Pedro route (Main Br., 267, Maps XIII and XIV).

Furthermore, this argument denies to the Union Pacific the power to parallel the Central Pacific from Ogden to the Pacific Coast (say, by purchase of the present Western Pacific or by independent construction) and it also denies to the Central Pacific the power, even if divorced, to parallel the Union Pacific line from Ogden to the Missouri River (either through purchase or by construction).

It is to be noted further that the cause of action under the Pacific Railroad Laws is not grounded in the idea that there has been any violation of these laws "so far as the public and the Government are concerned" (see Act quoted in Supp. Br., 153). The Government's contention under the Pacific Railroad Laws is really, in its final analysis, an attempt to maintain a cause of action which if it exists at all is not in favor of the Government, but of the Union Pacific Company, which that company, however, has elected not itself to assert, even though there has been an act since 1874 providing for suits by persons and companies aggrieved by violations of the Pacific Railroad Laws (Supp. Br., 1854), and although the cause of action, if it exists at all, first arose as early as 1883, more than thirty years ago.

Indeed, the obligations of the Central Pacific as a connecting carrier have in the course of years been enlarged by modern legislation applicable to all of the connecting carriers in the country—and it is plain that had these laws of our time been in force in 1862, the special provisions in the Pacific Railroad Laws would not have been introduced. Under the Transportation Act of 1920 every connecting carrier is bound to afford to its connections all of the facilities, etc., which were secured to the constituent Pacific Railroads by the Act of 1862 and amendments, and in addition there are other important facilities provided in the Act of 1920, which were not provided for in the Act of 1862 and amendments, or in any acts of those early days. Moreover, the Act of 1920 provides ampler and fuller legislation in matters of procedural law, as well as substantive law, and affords machinery whereby one carrier may have redress against another before the Interstate Commerce Commission for a violation of its substantive provisions, and furthermore provides that the awards of the Commission may be enforced by a District Court upon petition by the Commission.

In our briefs (Main Br., pp. 253-259; Supp. Br., 26-34) note is taken of two decisions made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, one before and one after the decree was entered below. (The decisions were in January and May, 1917, and the decree was entered in March, 1917.) These decisions arose out of an application by the Southern Pacific to the Interstate Commerce Commission under Section 11 of the Act of August 24, 1912, for permission to operate its steamers from the Gulf to New York, because it was a carrier having lines in competition, i. e., one through Ogden and the other through El Paso, and the Interstate Commerce Commission dealt with these lines as in competition, but held that public interest justified the granting of the permission to maintain the steamers. If these lines had not been in competition, the permission of the Interstate Commerce Commission would not have been necessary.

We have already spoken of the incorrect use of the phrases respecting "facilities" and "discriminatory" practices which underlie the argument of the Government relating to the Pacific Railroad Laws. We come now to the incorrect use of terms underlying the argument based upon the Anti-trust Act. The Government speaks of "a natural competitor" (Petition, I. R., 12), meaning thereby not "a competitor" at all, but two units which might be made competitive by dismemberment. The Government also uses the word "combination," not to indicate an artificial joinder creating a new condition in place of one which existed before, but as indicating a single proprietorship of units which never existed independently but which the Government contends are capable of separation and could be operated competitively if in diverse ownership.

Chronological Outline of Facts (1846-1921).

CALIFORNIA.—Military authorities of the United States took possession of California (1846). Mexico ceded California to United States (1848). California admitted to Union (1850). Memorials addressed to Congress by California Legislature for transcontinental road (1850-1859). Inaction of Congress due in part to dispute over location of route and problematical effect of transcontinental line on slavery question. Discussion of thirty-third and thirty-fifth parallels of latitude as probable line of future railroad.

OREGON.—The country called Oregon from Pacific Ocean to the Rocky Mountains between forty-second parallel (now southern boundary of Oregon) and forty-ninth parallel (now northern boundary of State of Washington) acknowledged to be territory of this country in settlement of northwest boundary dispute with Great Britain (1846). Oregon created a territory with boundaries above mentioned (1848), which boundaries now embrace the states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, etc. Oregon admitted to the Union (1859).

1861-1872—Central Pacific, Its Incorporation, Congressional Aid, and Lines Built by It.

Fort Sumter fired on in April, 1861. Incorporation under laws of California of Central Pacific Railroad Company of California (June 28, 1861), by four Californians—Leland Stanford, C. P. Huntington, Mark Hopkins and Charles Crocker. Act of Congress, July 1, 1862, created Union Pacific as federal corporation, incorporating one hundred and fifty-eight individuals and certain departmental officers of the Government. C. P. Huntington was one of the persons. The act authorized the Central Pacific to build eastward from Sacramento or the Pacific Ocean to meet the Union Pacific coming westward, and provided for Government bond aid and land grants, etc. The Act of 1864 enlarged the land grant and authorized the issuance of bonds having priority over the Government lien for advances in aid of construction. Central Pacific assigned to Western Pacific a portion of the construction which it was authorized to make, i. e., from Sacramento to San Jose; and this assignment was approved by Congress (1865).

The Pacific Railroads were constructed from the Missouri River to the Pacific Coast (1864-1869):—(a) Omaha to Ogden by Union Pacific, (b) Ogden to Sacramento by Central Pacific, and (c) Sacramento to San Jose by Western Pacific (Maps II and III). Non-bond-aided lines, (a) Niles to Oakland, (b) Lathrop to Goshen, and (c) Roseville to Redding (en route to Oregon), were constructed in California (1869-1872). (See Map IV.)

In 1870, the Central Pacific absorbed in consolidation, (a) the Western Pacific, which built from Sacramento to San Jose, (b) the Alameda Company which built from Niles to Oakland, (c) the San Joaquin Company which built from Lathrop to Goshen, and (d) the California & Oregon Company then building from Roseville north en route to the Oregon line.

1865-1872—Southern Pacific, Its Incorporation, Congressional Aid, and First Fifty Miles of Road Built by It.

Southern Pacific Railroad Company, incorporated under laws of California (1865), to build southerly from San Francisco on a line between the Pacific Ocean and the Coast Range for, say, 100 miles (to Tres Pinos), thence through the Coast Range into the heart of the San Joaquin valley, say, to Goshen, thence, say, to Yuma (32° 40′) via San Diego (32° 40′). (See Map V.)

This proposed route was evidently predicated upon the idea that Congress would authorize a transcontinental line along approximately the thirty-third parallel, reaching California at Yuma. Congress, however, did not at that time authorize such construction but passed the Atlantic and Pacific Act (1866) providing for a road along the thirty-fifth parallel, and authorizing the Southern Pacific to construct from San Francisco to a junction with the Atlantic and Pacific at the place where the line would cross the California boundary—a point which later turned out to be Needles (34° 50′, Map VI). The Southern Pacific Railroad Company then abandoned the line of its proposed route south of Mojave, substituting therefor the line Mojave to Needles.

In fulfilment of the conditions imposed by the Atlantic and Pacific Act, the Southern Pacific (a) acquired the local company which had constructed by 1864 the fifty miles from San Francisco to San Jose; (b) was the proprietor of a second company which built the thirty miles from San Jose to Gilroy in the year ending June 30, 1870, and (c) likewise became the proprietor of a third company which built the twenty miles from Gilroy to Tres Pinos in the year ending June 30, 1871. This hundred miles (San Francisco-Tres Pinos) is the only line of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company between the Pacific Ocean and the Coast Range referable to the Atlantic and Pacific Act. The only other construction by the company under that act was the line Goshen-Mojave-Needles, and 61 miles built westward from Goshen via Huron to Alcalde on the eastern slope of the Coast Range (Map VIII). The section from Tres Pinos to Alcalde was never built (Main Br., p. 36 foot-note). The construction under the Atlantic and Pacific Act was completed to Needles in 1883, when the Mojave-Needles section was leased to the Santa Fe, and later sold to it in 1911.

The precise date at which Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker became connected with the Southern Pacific is not known but we do know that C. P. Huntington was interested therein as early as 1868, and it is undisputed that these four men were in control of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in 1870, when it absorbed by consolidation the companies which had constructed the lines (a) San Francisco to San Jose; (b) San Jose to Gilroy, and (c) Gilroy to Tres Pinos.

We now pass from the construction under the Atlantic and Pacific Act of July 27, 1866, to the construction under the Texas and Pacific Act of March 3, 1871. This act authorized the Texas and Pacific Company to construct a road along the thirty-second parallel through Yuma and into California, and authorized the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to build from Mojave through Los Angeles to Yuma, in the expectation that it would there make a junction with the Texas and Pacific building west. Thus the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, by lines diverging from Mojave, would connect San Francisco with two transcontinental roads (Map VI).

The two outstanding facts of this early period are these: (a) When Congress passed the Texas and Pacific Act, authorizing the Southern Pacific to build to Yuma, Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker were publicly known to be in control of both the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific; and (b) the Southern Pacific Railroad Company did not at this time own any trackage, and had not constructed any mileage, except the 100 miles from San Francisco to Tres Pinos (fifty miles purchased, and fifty miles built). The main line through the San Joaquin Valley (Goshen to Mojave under the Atlantic and Pacific Act) was not begun by the Southern Pacific until 1871, when in that year Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker began building south from Goshen, the point where their Central Pacific line had stopped (Main Br., 36, 42). We deal with this construction in the next period.

1872-1883—Southern Pacific Construction, Lease of Operative Units to Central Pacific as Soon as Built, and Operation Thereof Under Name of Central Pacific and Leased Lines.

This period is devoted to Southern Pacific Railroad Company construction (a) from Goshen via Mojave to Needles under the Atlantic and Pacific Act, and (b) from Mojave via Los Angeles to Yuma under the Texas and Pacific Act, and (c) from Yuma eastward.

As already stated, the line to Needles was completed in 1883, and the Mojave-Needles section was leased to the Santa Fe in that year and sold to it in 1911. In 1877 the line from Mojave via Los Angeles reached Yuma, but there was no Texas and Pacific construction there to form a junction, and hence the Southern Pacific Railroad carried on through Arizona and into New Mexico, where it made its first junction. This occurred at Deming in 1881 when connection was made with the Santa Fe. Thence the construction proceeded through El Paso, where connection was later made with the Rock Island, to Sierra Blanca, Texas, where it met the Texas and Pacific in 1882. It then continued south and east by construction and the acquisition of two Texas and two Louisiana railway companies, opening the line to New Orleans in 1883.

It is to be noted that the Sunset-Gulf line here under review became a through line of the Southern Pacific Railroad not because originally so designed, but in consequence (either wholly or partially) of the fact that it was not met as contemplated by Texas and Pacific construction coming westward.

When the Sunset-Gulf route was opened to New Orleans in 1883, Central Pacific lines formed a part of that route and it was not until eight years afterward (1891) that it was possible to travel from San Francisco to New Orleans over Southern Pacific rails alone. This first became possible by reason of the building by the Southern Pacific of a second line of trackage through the San Joaquin valley for purely local purposes in 1891 (Map X). The now well-known Coast route from San Francisco to Los Angeles via Santa Barbara was not opened until 1901, eighteen years after the completion of the line to New Orleans (Map IX).

This summarizes the history of construction during the period 1872-1883. Two important facts remain to be noted.

(a) The Southern Pacific Railroad lines were built by the same crews and engineers as the Central Pacific; the equipment was interchangeable throughout the entire system; and there was identity of management in both construction and operation.

(b) As soon as the Southern Pacific Railroad operative units were constructed, they were turned over to the Central Pacific to be operated, and the system was everywhere known as "Central Pacific and Leased Lines."

1883-1885—The Completed Central Pacific-Southern Pacific System Operated as "Central Pacific and Leased Lines."

For two years after the opening of the Sunset-Gulf route, the entire Central Pacific-Southern Pacific system continued to be operated as "Central Pacific and Leased Lines." (See table of this leased mileage in Central Pacific v. United States (21 Ct. Cl., 180 [1886]; aff'd 118 U. S., 235 [1886].) The Southern Pacific Railroad lines had, however, become the larger part of the system and this circumstance led to the events with which we are now to deal.

Southern Pacific Company of Kentucky was incorporated March 17, 1884. A few months later, Senator Stanford, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Crocker, and Mr. Timothy Hopkins, adopted son of Mark Hopkins (d., 1878), met in New York and agreed among themselves upon the leasing to the Southern Pacific of Kentucky of all the railroad lines then in operation under the name of Central Pacific and Leased Lines, etc. These conferences (of which formal minutes were kept), resulted in the leases of 1885, i. e., the lease of the Central Pacific lines, dated February 10, 1885, effective that day, and the lease of the Southern Pacific Railroad lines on February 17, 1885, effective April 1, 1885.

1885-1899—Southern Pacific of Kentucky as Proprietor of Southern Pacific-Central Pacific System, and Congressional Proceedings Appertaining Thereto.

Throughout this period, the Southern Pacific of Kentucky operated the entire Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system under the leases of 1885, and the modifications of the Central Pacific lease of 1888, 1893, 1894, and 1897. (The report of the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1885 [p. 50], records the execution of the Central Pacific lease of 1885.) Congress had occasion frequently to review and consider the lease of 1885 and the above-mentioned modifications and the relations of the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific lines, as shown, in part, by the following events:

(a) January 27, 1886. House of Representatives called for all Southern Pacific Company leases, etc. (Main Br., 125).

(b) February 5, 1886. The President submitted to the House of Representatives all outstanding leases (Main Br., 125).

(c) March 3, 1887. Act passed creating United States Pacific Railway Commission to investigate the affairs of the Pacific Railroads (Main Br., 127).

(d) January 17, 1888. Report of the Commission, consisting of one volume accompanied by evidence taken (in ten volumes) (Main Br., 127).

(e) February 17, 1890. Report of Special Committee of the Senate upon report of United States Pacific Railway Commission, for convenience called the Frye-Davis Report (Main Br., 129).

(f) July 21, 1894. Report of House Committee on Pacific Railroads, for convenience called Reilly Report (Main Br., 131).

(g) January 28, 1895. Report of Senate Committee on Pacific Railroads, for convenience called the Brice Report (Main Br., 131).

(h) April 17, 1896. Mr. Gear introduced Senate Bill 2894, providing, among other things, for the refunding of the debt of the Central Pacific and for the guarantee thereof, etc., by the Southern Pacific Company (Main Br., 133).

(i) April 25, 1896. Introduction of H. R. 8189 by Mr. Powers, with a report in support thereof from the House Committee of Pacific Railroads, for convenience called the Powers Report, calling for, among other things, the assumption of the obligations of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific Company (Main Br., 134).

(j) May 1, 1896. Report of the Senate Committee on Pacific Railroads in support of Senate Bill 2894 above mentioned, for convenience called Gear's 1896 Report (Main Br., 136).

(k) January 13, 1897. Mr. Gear, Chairman Senate Committee on Pacific Railroads, submitted copies of Southern Pacific leases furnished at Mr. Gear's request by C. P. Huntington in letter January 8, 1897 (Main Br., 138-139).

(l) January 13, 1897. Mr. Gear introduced Senate Bill 3522 providing for a commission and containing other provisions similar to those later incorporated in the act of July 7, 1898 (Main Br., 139-140).

(m) March 16, 1897. Mr. Gear introduced Senate Bill 119 to similar effect (Main Br., 140).

(n) April 1, 1897. Report of Senate Committee on Pacific Railroads in support of Senate Bill No. 119, called for convenience Gear's 1897 Report (Main Br., 140).

(o) July 12, 1897. Mr. Hepburn introduced H. R. 3750, providing for settlement of debt by commission of cabinet officers (Main Br., 146).

(p) December 7, 1897. Mr. Gear introduced an amendment to Senate Bill 119, making it more nearly conform to the later enactment of July 7, 1898 (Main Br., 146).

(q) June 29, 1898. Senate Committee on Pacific Railroads, through Mr. Morgan, offered certain amendments; some adopted and some rejected, whereupon Mr. Morgan announced his support of the measure for the appointment of the commission (Main Br., 147).

(r) June 29, 1898. Amendment suggested by Senator White of California and agreed to (Main Br., 148).

(s) July 6, 1898. Amendment suggested in the House by Mr. Barham of California and debate closed by remarks of Speaker Cannon in support of the bill. Bill passed (Main Br., 148).

(t) July 7, 1898. President approved the bill and the commission became created by law (Main Br., 148).

Throughout the reports, the following points were repeatedly made:

(a) The Central Pacific had no practicable entrance into San Francisco; (b) the lien of the Government did not extend to the non-bond-aided lines; (c) the security possessed by the Government was inadequate because the Central Pacific, without the Southern Pacific lines to supplement it, was an incomplete property; (d) in any settlement the lease by the Central Pacific would have to be subordinated to the claims of the Government; and (e) the Southern Pacific should guarantee the payment of the Central Pacific debt.

1899-1901—The Settlement of the Central Pacific Debt, the Reorganization of the Company, and Confirmatory Legislation: Death of C. P. Huntington and Purchase of Control of Southern Pacific by Union Pacific.

February 16, 1899. Execution of agreement between United States of America, Central Pacific Railroad Company, and Speyer & Co., which included, among other provisions, one which required the outstanding leases of the Central Pacific properties to be subordinated to the new issues of securities. This was later done.

February 18, 1899. The Commercial & Financial Chronicle published a summary of the reorganization (VI R., 2258).

February 20, 1899. Report to both Houses of Congress by Commission created by act of July 7, 1898, to settle Central Pacific debt, subject to approval of the President. Agreement accompanied report.

February 20, 1899. Speyer & Co. made public plan of reorganization of Central Pacific Railroad Company, on which agreement with Government was based. Notes of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States of America of the face value of $58,812,715.48 in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury as reported by the Commission.

February 25, 1899. Full details of Speyer & Co.'s plan of reorganization published in The Commercial & Financial Chronicle (VI R., 2258-2268).

March 3, 1899. Act of Congress approved by President whereunder Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to sell any of the notes of the Central Pacific Railroad Company received by the Government—an act necessary to consummation of the provision in the agreement of February 1, 1899 (executed February 16, 1899), whereby Speyer & Co. agreed to purchase from the Government the four earliest maturing notes of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and to pay therefor $11,798,314.14.

March 10, 1899. Purchase by Speyer & Co. of these four notes and payment of $11,798,314.14 therefor.

July-October, 1899. Reorganization of Central Pacific, issuance of bonds, subordination of lease from Central Pacific to Southern Pacific, guarantee of bonds by Southern Pacific, delivery to the Government of bonds, par for par, with Southern Pacific guaranty, to secure the sixteen unpaid Central Pacific notes then in the Government's hands.

March-October, 1899. The Commercial and Financial Chronicle contained articles dealing with settlement of debt and recording progress of reorganization (VI R., 2268-2279).

December, 1899. Attorney General's report showing settlement of the debt and reciting guarantee by Southern Pacific.

December 31, 1899. Reorganization of Central Pacific fully achieved before this date.

August 13, 1900. C. P. Huntington died, his associates having predeceased him: Mark Hopkins, March 28, 1878; Charles Crocker, August 14, 1888, and Leland Stanford, June 13, 1893.

March 3, 1901. Act of Congress (31 Stat., 1010, 1023) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit against the notes of the Central Pacific Railroad Company held in the Treasury of the United States interest on judgments which had been recovered for Government transportation by the Southern Pacific Company and Central Pacific over non-bond-aided lines.

1901. Union Pacific purchased Southern Pacific stock theretofore held by C. P. Huntington and shortly afterward acquired other stock, building its total holding up to forty-six per cent of the Southern Pacific stock outstanding.

1901-1913—The Union Pacific Merger.

During this period of twelve years, the Union Pacific controlled the Southern Pacific, including the Central Pacific. In 1913, the control came to an end in consequence of the decree in United States vs. Union Pacific R. Co., 226 U. S., 61 (1912). The action just mentioned was commenced in 1908, and was based upon the fact, among others, that until 1901 the lines operating through Ogden (C. P. and U. P.) were in "sharp, well-defined and vigorous" competition with the Sunset-Gulf route owned by the Southern Pacific; that the Southern Pacific was helpless to destroy that competition; that there was the same incentive for the competition that there would have been had the Southern Pacific not owned the Central Pacific; and that the Southern Pacific as a matter of self-preservation was compelled to co-operate with the Union Pacific (Main Br., pp. 192-200, 318-320; Supp. Br., 45-122). This theory of the Government was adopted by this court and is the basis of its decision in the Union Pacific case (226 U. S., 61).

1913-1914—The Failure of the Plan for Union Pacific Acquisition of the Central Pacific.

Upon the going down of the mandate in the Union Pacific case, it became necessary to devise a plan for the Union Pacific to dispose of its stock in the Southern Pacific. In seeking a solution of this problem, the then Attorney General took the position that it was unlawful for the Southern Pacific to hold the Central Pacific and he declared that unless the Southern Pacific sold the Central Pacific to the Union Pacific he would bring a suit to dissolve the "combination" under the Anti-trust Act; but on the other hand, if the Southern Pacific would agree to part with the Central Pacific, he would see to it (a) that the Union Pacific paid a higher price therefor than could reasonably be expected at forced sale; and (b) that the Southern Pacific would be permitted to retain certain Central Pacific trackage indispensable to the Southern Pacific in a peculiar degree (Kruttschnitt, II R., 753, 755, 786). In these circumstances, the Southern Pacific, still under the control of the Union Pacific, and with a threatened suit in sight, took up negotiations with the Union Pacific for the acquisition by it of the Central Pacific. Terms were arranged which required the submission of the plan to the Railroad Commission of California, which refused to approve the same except upon conditions specified by it, which were not agreeable either to the Union Pacific or the Southern Pacific. The plan accordingly broke down and this action was brought in the following year. The plan broke down because the Union Pacific was not prepared to buy the Central Pacific unless it obtained in connection therewith important trackage facilities over rails of the Southern Pacific without which, it may be said, the Central Pacific is an incomplete property. The Railroad Commission was unwilling to give a preferential and exclusive privilege to the Union Pacific over Southern Pacific rails and the Southern Pacific was unwilling to throw open its trackage to all railroad carriers.

In the course of their decision upon this subject, reviewing the traffic problems appertaining to the Central Pacific lines, both interstate and intrastate, the Commission said it was very doubtful whether interstate traffic would be improved by the dismemberment, but it was absolutely certain that intrastate commerce would be injured. They declared in terms "that there is room for grave fear that if the agreement is carried out this State will, instead of securing two strong competing lines, secure one dominant line and one much impaired line" (Main Br., p. 263).

1914-1921—Pendency of Present Suit.

This suit was brought February 11, 1914, heard December 1, 1915, and dismissed by decree filed March 9, 1917.

The Interstate Commerce Commission gave the Southern Pacific permission to continue to use its steamers from New Orleans to New York in January and May, 1917, under Section 11 of the Act of August 24, 1912, i. e., Panama Canal Amendment to Interstate Commerce Act.

Also, in this period, the Transportation Act of 1920 has become a law, enlarging the duties of connecting carriers as amongst themselves and providing for redress through the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is empowered to apply to the District Courts in aid of their authority. The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to prevent discriminatory practices, to compel the furnishing of facilities, and generally to enforce mandatory and prohibitive provisions of a much more comprehensive nature than those contained in the Pacific Railroad Laws.

(38) Conclusion 281

ARGUMENT

I. This case does not involve any combination of competitive units, or any combination at all, for the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific lines were projected and built and have been operated since their origin as one property..... 282

II. At the time of the passage of the Anti-trust Act (July 2, 1890) the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific lines were owned by a single proprietor, although the Central Pacific lines were held under a 99-year lease made February 17, 1885, instead of in fee; but "it is obvious that in principle the right of a lessee is the same as that of a purchaser in fee." (224 U. S. 565)..... 288

III. The Act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat. 652, 659) creating the commission for the settlement of the Central Pacific debt, contemplated as natural if not inevitable, the agreement subsequently made, and it invested the commission with full authority to agree to the plan which was adopted for the payment of the indebtedness, including the provision by which the Southern Pacific Company acquired the stock of the Central Pacific Company..... 294

IV. In any event the Government is estopped by its conduct to question the legality of the unified control of the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific lines 302

V. The present status of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific lines was confirmed by the Acts of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1245), and March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1023)..... 312

VI. It is established by the opinion and decree in United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S. 61 (1912), that up to the time of the Union Pacific merger in 1901, "sharp, well-defined and vigorous" competition existed between the Ogden and El Paso routes, notwithstanding the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific; and it is here in proof that the competitive conditions of 1901 and before were restored after the unmerger in 1913..... 318

VII. It is thus apparent that we may draw upon the three departments of the Government of the United States for support in our position that the Southern Pacific may and does lawfully control and operate the Central Pacific and that no violation of the Anti-trust Act is involved in such control and operation..... 320

VIII. Irrespective of the considerations already dealt with, and considering the matter as an open question, traffic conditions between the El Paso and Ogden routes are such that the control of the Central Pacific line by the Southern Pacific Company, does not constitute an undue restraint of commerce 323

IX. The Government, by reason of the position taken and claims urged by it in the Union Pacific case, is estopped from questioning the validity of the ownership and control of the Central Pacific Railway Company by the Southern Pacific Company 337

X. The final decree in the case of the United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Southern Pacific Company, and others, is a bar to all relief sought by the Government in this case..... 349

XI. No violation of the Pacific Railroad Laws is presented in this case..... 362

XII. The construction which the Government attempts to put upon the Pacific Railroad Laws is inconsistent with the position which has always been taken by the three departments of the Government concerning the control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific..... 372

XIII. Even though a violation of the Pacific Railroad Laws were proved in the case, the remedy would not be dismemberment, but would be injunction of restraint or of command to comply with the provisions of the acts.....373

XIV. There is no evidence whatever of any attempts at monopoly or monopolistic practices..... 374

Page

XV. It is impossible to dismember the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system without substantial deterioration in the public service..... 375

XVI. It is not necessary here to consider whether properties which had been operated together as one from their origin continuously down to July 2, 1890, under say, tenures at will, could or could not thereafter be legally unified by purchase, lease, etc., because at the time of the passage of the Anti-trust Act, as we have elsewhere shown, the properties here involved were owned by a single proprietor, although the tenure under which a part of the properties was owned was a 99-year term and not a fee..... 381

XVII. Considering that (a) these lines were operated as one from their origin, and that (b) on July 2, 1890, the Central Pacific lines were held under a 99-year term expiring April 1, 1984, it is clear that the lease of December 7, 1893, which cut down the term three months, viz: to January 1, 1984, is entirely lawful, leaving out of view the argument next to be made that, even if the lease were unlawful, the lessee, Southern Pacific Company, would be deemed to hold under the original term created February 17, 1885..... 383

XVIII. If the lease of December 7, 1893, were invalid as one executed after the passage of the Anti-trust Act, the Southern Pacific Company would nevertheless be treated at law and in equity as the holder of the 99-year term which it acquired under the lease of February 17, 1885 notwithstanding the provision of cancellation contained in the lease of December 7, 1893..... 384

XIX. We here argue but only briefly the point that the Anti-trust Act did not make unlawful the operation by a single proprietor of lines owned by him at the date of the passage of the act which were not then competitive but which could be made competitive if divorced..... 391

XX. The argument of counsel for the Government in this case overlooks the value and importance to the Government of the guaranty of the bonds by the Southern Pacific Company in 1899..... 394

XXI. Both sides seem to be agreed, although for different reasons, that the Government cannot be said to have been an accomplice in the violation of its own laws: the appellees contending that no laws were violated, and counsel for the Government asserting either that (a) the Government did not know the facts; or (b) was unconscious of the law; or (c) in final analysis had no power through its own officers to violate its own laws.. 397

XXII. The argument of counsel that the 99-year lease of the Central Pacific lines to the Southern Pacific Company, dated February 17, 1885, was or is invalid, is without merit..... 402

XXIII. This case does not come within any rule or supposed rule dealing with the prevention of competition coming into existence..... 413

XXIV. The purely theoretical nature of the present suit is shown by the complete absence of complaint on the part of shippers or the public generally.... 417

XXV. In its last analysis the relief here sought is experimental and not judicial in its nature. The Government does not seek the destruction of a new and unlawfully created condition which took the place of an old and natural one; it seeks the destruction of an old and natural condition in order that it may create by a new and untried experiment a condition which has no prototype..... 418

XXVI. Matters of subsidiary importance..... 419

(a) The price paid in 1899 by the Southern Pacific Company for Central Pacific shares was not excessive 419

(b) Neither the Northern Division of the Southern Pacific Railroad nor its Coast Line opened in 1901 bears upon the issues here involved.. 420

(c) In considering the estoppels against the Government arising out of the settlement of 1899, it is of no consequence whether the provisions thereof which were designed to protect the Government were in the first instance suggested by Mr. Speyer or by the Government itself 422

Page

(d) The powers of the Commission under the Act of July 7, 1898, were limited in those particulars only which are expressed in the act. In respect of matters not so limited the Commission had what the act gave it, "full power" in the matter..... 423

(e) Because of the 30 years' de facto unification of the properties, this case is in a class apart.. 425

(f) Testimony contained in Report of Pacific Railroad Commission is not competent evidence of facts therein narrated..... 426

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner and Appellant,

vs.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, UNION TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK, WILLIAM SPROULE, JULIUS KRUTTSCHNITT, ROBERT GOELET, CORNELIUS N. BLISS, WALTER P. BLISS, HENRY W. DE FOREST, J. HORACE HARDING, CHARLES W. HARKNESS, HENRY E. HUNTINGTON, JAMES N. JARVIE, LEONOR F. LOREE, LEWIS J. SPENCE, ERIC P. SWENSON, JAMES N. WALLACE AND OGDEN MILLS.

No. 21

Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the District of Utah (Sanborn, Hook and Carland, C. JJ.).

BRIEF FOR APPELLEES.

This is a suit brought February 11, 1914, heard December 1, 1915, and dismissed by decree filed March 9, 1917. The Government has appealed and herein seeks to dismember the Southern Pacific Company's system of railroads by requiring the Southern Pacific Company to divest itself of its proprietary interest in that portion thereof known as the Central Pacific lines, upon the ground that this interest violates (a) the Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, and, (b) the Pacific railroad laws.*

The system thus sought to be destroyed has existed in its present form from the construction of the roads, which began as to the Central Pacific during the Civil War and as to the Southern Pacific as early as 1870-72, and ended, we may say for present purposes, on February 1, 1883, when the Sunset-Gulf line† of the Southern Pacific was opened to New Orleans; i. e., Central Pacific construction may be said to have occupied the period 1861 to 1870-72, and Southern Pacific the period 1870-72 to 1883.

*Act of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. 489); Act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 356); Act of March 3, 1865 (13 Stat. 504); Act of July 3, 1866 (14 Stat. 79); Act of June 25, 1868 (15 Stat. 79); Resolution of April 10, 1869 (16 Stat. 56); Act of June 20, 1874 (18 Stat. 111); Act of June 19, 1878 (20 Stat. 169).

The Acts of 1862 and 1864 provide that the roads which constitute the line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean shall be operated and used "as one connected, continuous line," and that each of the constituents of the road from the Missouri River to the Pacific Coast shall afford and secure to each of the other constituents of that line equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of the others. The Government contends that the unification of the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific violates these Pacific Railroad laws, not for a failure to afford advantages or facilities nor for discrimination, but upon the ground that no constituent of the Pacific roads can be interested in or united with any railroad property which is competitive with any other constituent of that line.

†The Sunset-Gulf line of the Southern Pacific Company is the name given by and used in that company to describe the rail line from San Francisco to Galveston and New Orleans and thence by water to New York.

The Sunset line of the Southern Pacific Company is the name given by and used in that company to describe the rail line from San Francisco to New Orleans and thence by rail connections to the Atlantic Coast. In the record, however, the line by rail to New Orleans and thence by water to New York is spoken of sometimes as the Sunset line and sometimes as the Sunset-Gulf line.

The present proprietary interest of the Southern Pacific in the Central Pacific line, so sought to be terminated, arises out of (a) a 99-year lease of those lines, made early in 1885, several times modified in particulars not important here, and (b) the ownership of all of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company acquired by the Southern Pacific Company in 1899 as an essential part of the settlement and payment of the Central Pacific debt to the Government, amounting to $58,812,715.48, made under the authority of and in conformity to the Act of July 7, 1898. (30 Stat. 652, 659.)

It appears from this that the proprietary interest of the Southern Pacific in the Central Pacific lines antedates the Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, by more than five years. It appears, too, that a second form of ownership was acquired in 1899, in a transaction with the Government, authorized by an act of Congress, and, as we shall see, executed and approved by President McKinley and three members of his cabinet: Secretary of the Treasury Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Interior Cornelius N. Bliss, and Attorney General John W. Griggs, and confirmed by two Acts of Congress.

Moreover, the history of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system from the time of its construction—indeed, from the time the lines were projected—shows that the system is the outcome of a normal natural growth, and that the constituent lines were built to constitute one system, that in point of fact they were constructed as one system, and that, since their construction, they have always been operated as one system.

The present proprietary relation of the Southern Pacific Company to the Central Pacific Company has been stated. It should be emphasized, however, that the unification of these companies, which takes its present form from the lease of 1885 and the subsequent modifications (not to mention the stock ownership), did not arise for the first time with the lease of 1885, nor is it the result of any artificial, latter-day joinder. The lease of 1885 was but a step in the adjustment of the relationship of the two companies, which have been so intimately and naturally connected from the outset in one form or another, in the ownership, construction and operation of the system, that they have always been regarded as two companies with a single identity.

One of the claims put forward in this suit is that the operation of these lines as one system of railroads constitutes a violation of the Pacific railroad laws. The Government has allowed this alleged violation of the Pacific railroad laws to go unchallenged since the system was first operated. It is now, therefore, under obligation to show that the operation it has permitted for nearly a third of a century (1883-1914) has been for all that time illegal and in violation of the laws of Congress.

It is also to be noted that, inasmuch as the system of railroads here involved was built to be and always has been one system, there never has been a time when the lines were operated except as one system; and hence, there never has been a time at which it may be said that a combination of these lines was effected with a view to the suppression of competition, or, indeed, that a combination of the lines was effected at all.

Again, so far as the cause of action of the Government is based upon the Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, the suit is not brought to destroy a combination effected to suppress competition, but it is maintained by the Government to dismember a system of railroads constructed and operated as a unified whole. The suit is based upon the claim that one part of this system "is a natural competitor" (I. R. 12) of another part of the system, and that therefore the sum total of competitive traffic would be increased if these parts were no longer allowed to remain component parts of a system which, as we have said, is the outcome of a normal, natural growth, and which was projected and constructed, and has always been operated as a unit.

In its last analysis the relief sought by the appellant is experimental and not judicial in its nature. The Government does not seek the destruction of a new and unlawfully created condition which took the place of an old and natural one; it seeks the destruction of an old and natural condition in order that it may create by a new and untried experiment a condition which has no prototype.

Obviously, the claims of the Government here put forward constitute a new departure and a very marked advance in Government interpretation of the office and function of the Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890. If these claims can be sustained in respect of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system of railroads, no one can forecast the consequences of such a doctrine applied to all the systems of railroads in America.

The opinion of the District Court (per Hook, C. J.), shows that the case is as we have stated it in the foregoing summary. We reproduce a syllabus of the decision taken from 239 Fed. 998:

> "Where the relation of lessor [Southern Pacific] and lessee [Central Pacific] between two railroad corporations, whose lines had been originally constructed as part of the same general system and continuously operated under one management, was reversed in 1885 by the surrender of the leases and a [99-year] lease [made] of the lines belonging to the former lessee [Central] Pacific to the former lessor [Southern Pacific], and that lease was superseded by a new lease in 1893 for the balance of the term of the lease of 1885, the new lease making only immaterial changes in the former lease, neither of those transactions affected the exemption from the operation of Sherman Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, of the proprietary relations existing prior to the passage of that act.
> That a lease of railroad lines was not authorized by state statutes does not render it subject to the Anti-Trust Act, since that act deals with actual conditions affecting interstate commerce, whether they are authorized by state statute or not.
> Where there had been since 1870 a continuous common control of the railroads owned by two corporations [Central Pacific and Southern Pacific], effected by leases and unquestioned by the state, so that there never had been from the time of their construction any existing competition between them, and the lessee [Southern Pacific] in 1899 purchased the stock of the lessor company [Central Pacific], the Anti-Trust Act does not apply, though two of the lines would be competing if the relationship were dissolved, since that act was not intended to create competition that had never before existed by destroying a proprietary relationship existing at the time of its passage.

The settlement of the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States, arranged by a commission consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General, appointed by Congress to arrange such a settlement after Congress had knowledge that the lines of the Central Pacific Company had been leased to the Southern Pacific Company, in which settlement the interest of the lessee had been recognized by requiring it to guarantee the bonds given to secure the settlement notes, and which settlement had been approved by the President, is entitled to more weight than the administrative construction of a statute by ordinary public officers, subject to legislative restraint, as a construction of the Anti-Trust Act as not applying to the relation between the roads.

The Pacific Railroad Acts (Act July 1, 1862, c. 120, 12 Stat. 489; Act July 2, 1864, c. 216, 13 Stat. 356; Act June 20, 1874, c. 331, 18 Stat. 111), requiring the Central Pacific Railroad to maintain physical connection with the Union Pacific, to make a through line and to furnish equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, were not violated by the lease of the lines of the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific, and the subsequent purchase by the latter of the stock of the former, so long as the statutory requirements were observed."

The foregoing puts in broad outline the controversy here involved, and we need dwell only for a moment on the parties defendant in the case.

The defendants are three corporations and eleven individuals—the eleven individuals being directors of the Southern Pacific Company.

The three corporations are

(a) Southern Pacific Company, joined because (1) it is the lessee under the 99-year lease and its modifications, (2) it is the owner of the stock above mentioned, and (3) it operates the lines sought to be withdrawn from the system:

(b) Central Pacific Railway Company, joined because (1) it is the owner of the lines sought to be withdrawn from the system, (2) it is the lessor under the 99-year lease, as modified, and (3) it is the company whose stock is held by the Southern Pacific Company in alleged violation of law; and

(c) Union Trust Company of New York as trustee under a deed of trust for holders of an issue of bonds of the Southern Pacific amounting to $36,819,000, put out in 1899 as part of the plan for the payment of the debt due from the Central Pacific to the Government and used in acquiring the stock, preferred and common, of the new and reorganized Central Pacific Railway Company, which stock so acquired by the Southern Pacific Company is pledged to secure the payment of said issue of $36,819,000.

We may profitably begin the consideration of the case with a brief reference to the movement in the country at large and on the Pacific Coast for the building of a transcontinental railroad during the period commencing with the acquisition of the Pacific Coast by the United States and running down to the enactment of the Act of July 1, 1862, incorporating the Union Pacific Railroad Company and providing for a transcontinental line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean. From this latter date, events follow in obvious sequence.

(1) Events from the cession of upper California to the United States by Mexico under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, February 2, 1848, to the incorporation of the Central Pacific Railroad Company under the laws of California, June 28, 1861, followed by the Act of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. 489).

On July 7, 1846, during the war with Mexico, California, then of undetermined boundaries, was occupied as American territory. (See United States v. Yorba (1864), 1 Wall. 412.) California was ceded to the United States by Mexico under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo February 2, 1848, and in 1850, with its present limits between the parallels of 32° 40′ and 42° north latitude, it was admitted to the Union.

The United States became the undisputed sovereign owner of the territory between the forty-second and forty-ninth parallels by the settlement in 1846 of the Northwest boundary dispute with Great Britain. On August 14, 1848, Oregon Territory was formed, extending from the northern boundary line of California to the forty-ninth parallel, now the northern boundary line of the State of Washington and of the United States, and from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific. (9 Stat. 323.) In 1848, therefore, the whole Pacific slope had become American territory.

From 1850 to 1862 there was constant agitation for the building of a railroad or railroads to the Pacific Ocean. This agitation was evidenced by the almost annual resolutions and memorials of the California legislature urging the construction of a Pacific railroad,* and by the agitation of its senators and representatives in Congress, in season and out of season.

In the Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 728 (1879), note is taken of this fact. Speaking of an act passed by the Legislature of California facilitating railroad construction, the court said:

> "In so doing, the State but carried out it original policy in reference to the same subject-matter, for as early as May 1, 1852, an act was passed reciting 'that the interests of this State, as well as those of the whole Union, require the immediate action of the government of the United States, for the construction of a national thoroughfare connecting the navigable waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, for the purposes of national safety, in the event of war and to promote the highest commercial interests of the Republic', and granting the right of way through the State to the United States for the purpose of constructing such a road. Hittell's Laws, sect. 4791; Acts of 1852, 150. In 1859 (Acts of 1859, 391), a resolution was passed calling a convention 'to consider the refusal of Congress to take efficient measures for the construction of a railroad from the Atlantic States to the Pacific, and to adopt measures whereby the building of said railroad can be accomplished'; and at the same session of the legislature a memorial was prepared asking Congress to pass a law authorizing the construction of such a road, and asking also a grant of lands to aid in the construction of railroads in the State. Acts of 1859, 395. Nothing was done, however, by Congress until the Rebellion, which at once called the attention of all who were interested in the preservation of the Union to the immense practical importance of such a road for military purposes, and then, as soon as a plan could be matured and the necessary forms of legislation gone through with, the act of July 1, 1862, was passed."

Although definitive action was not taken until 1862, the matter played a large part in the proceedings of Congress during the preceding years, but, owing to controversies over the location of the route and to opposition due to the effect the road might have upon the question of slavery, no legislation was enacted until after the Civil War had commenced.

The matter, however, had been so settled in the minds of Californians that, before the Act of July 1, 1862 was passed by Congress and within three months after Fort Sumter had been fired upon, the Central Pacific Railroad Company was organized under the laws of the State of California. The date of its organization was June 28, 1861. Its incorporation was due to Leland Stanford, C. P. Huntington, Mark Hopkins and Charles Crocker, whose names appear in the articles of incorporation. These four men, as we shall see, and as is repeatedly shown in the record, were the pioneers who conceived, built, owned and operated the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system, and under whose unified control the system developed as a normal, natural growth from its inception.

The corporate purpose of the Central Pacific Railroad Company was to build a railroad between the places designated as follows:

"The places from and to which the proposed road is to be constructed are the City of Sacramento and the Eastern Boundary of the State of California.

The counties into and through which this road is intended to pass are: Sacramento, Placer, and Nevada." (P. Ex. 12, IV, R. 1277.)

(2) The Act of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. 489) and the construction of the bond-aided lines from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, including (a) the construction between Ogden and Sacramento by the Central Pacific, and (b) the construction between Sacramento and San Jose by the Western Pacific, which latter company was absorbed by the Central Pacific in consolidation proceedings June 23, 1870.

The Act of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. 489), created a corporation to be called "The Union Pacific Railroad Company", and to be composed of one hundred and fifty-eight persons named in the act (of whom C. P. Huntington was one), "together with five commissioners to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and all persons who shall or may be associated with them, and their successors."

The corporation so created was "authorized and empowered to lay out, locate, construct, furnish, maintain and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph, with the appurtenances, from a point . . . on the one hundredth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, between the south margin of the valley of the Republican River and the north margin of the valley of the Platte River, in the Territory of Nebraska, . . . a point to be fixed by the President of the United States . . . thence running westerly upon the most direct, central, and practicable route, through the Territories of the United States to the western boundary of the Territory of Nevada, there to meet and connect with the line of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California."

As already shown, the Central Pacific Railroad Company had been incorporated under the laws of California the year before (June 28, 1861) to construct a road between "the city of Sacramento and the eastern boundary of the State of California." In the Act of July 1, 1862, now under consideration, the Central Pacific was authorized to construct a line "from the Pacific coast, at or near San Francisco, or the navigable waters of the Sacramento river, to the eastern boundary of California" to meet and connect with the Union Pacific upon the same terms as those accorded to the latter company. It was furthermore provided that whichever company first completed its respective part of the road from the designated terminus to the eastern boundary of California was authorized to continue construction until the parts should meet and connect, and the whole line of railroad should be completed. (12 Stat. 489, sect. 10.)

The Act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 356, sect. 16), authorized the Central Pacific Railroad Company to "extend their line of road eastward (from the California line) one hundred and fifty miles on the established route, so as to meet and connect with the line of the Union Pacific road", but the limitation of one hundred and fifty miles was repealed by the Act of July 3, 1866 (14 Stat. 79), so that the Central Pacific was, as originally provided, authorized to continue construction until it should meet the Union Pacific.

It appears from the Act of July 1, 1862, that Congress contemplated that three lines would start from points on the Missouri River, viz., Sioux City, Omaha (Council Bluffs), and Kansas City, and that they would converge on the one hundredth meridian, forming the trunk line which was to be built westwardly, and that two other lines starting from points on the Missouri River, viz., St. Joseph and Leavenworth, would connect with the Kansas City line, thereby connecting five cities on the Missouri River with the main line.

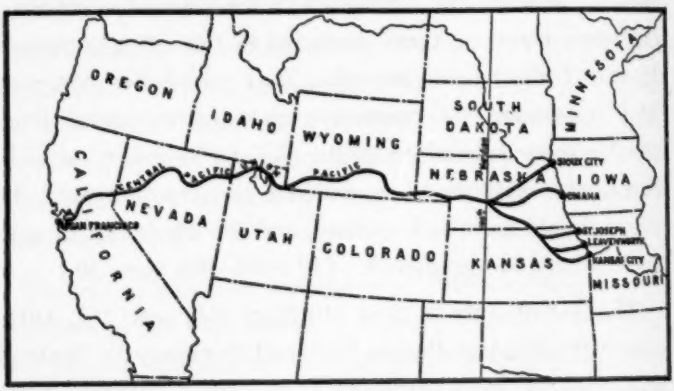
The accompanying map shows what was intended in respect of the lines from Sioux City, Omaha and Kansas City to the one hundredth meridian.



Pacific Railroads as Contemplated by the Act of July 1, 1862

The plan is described in the opinion in U. P. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343 (1876), as follows:

> "By the first section of the act of 1862, the Union Pacific Railroad Company was authorized to construct, maintain and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph, with the appurtenances, from a point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich to the western boundary of the Territory of Nevada. There it was intended to meet and connect with the line of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California (sect. 8), thus forming a continuous line to the Pacific Ocean. This was the main line. But the same act made provision also for several eastern connections. The ninth section authorized the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company of Kansas (now the Kansas Pacific) to construct a railroad from the Missouri River, at the mouth of the Kansas River (on the south side thereof, so as to connect with the Pacific Railroad of Missouri), to the point of western departure of the Union Pacific on the one hundredth meridian. Thus provision was made for an eastern connection by an unbroken line of road to St. Louis on the Mississippi. This was not all. By the fourteenth section of the act the Union Pacific was authorized and required 'to construct a single line of railroad and telegraph from a point on the western boundary of the State of Iowa, to be fixed by the President of the United States, . . . so as to form a connection with the lines of the said company at some point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude aforesaid, from the point of commencement on the western boundary of the State of Iowa'. Thus provisions were made for the Iowa eastern branch of the main line. It was doubtless intended to render possible a connection with any railroad that might thereafter be constructed from the western boundary of Iowa eastward. None was then completed; but a railroad was in progress of construction through the State, from its eastern border to the Missouri River.

The fourteenth section also made provision for another eastern connection. It enacted, that whenever there should be a line of railroad completed through Minnesota or Iowa to Sioux City, then the said Pacific (Union Pacific) Railroad Company should be authorized and required to construct a railroad and telegraph from said Sioux City, so as to connect with the Iowa branch, or with the main line, at a point not farther west than the one hundredth meridian of longitude."

It remains briefly to note what modifications of this contemplated construction were later authorized by Congress and actually accomplished.

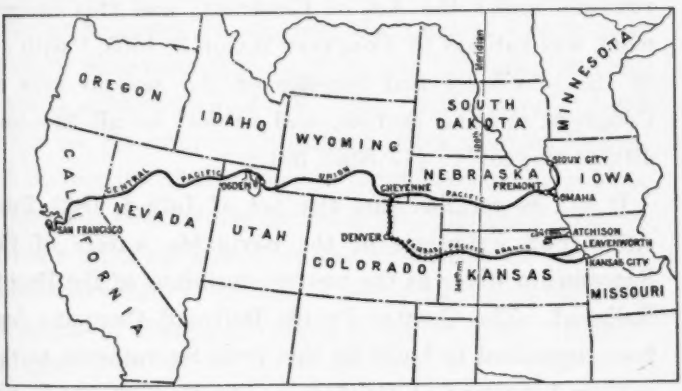
As already noted, the Act of July 1, 1862, authorized the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company of Kansas to build from Kansas City to the point of junction on the one hundredth meridian. The name of this company was changed June 6, 1863, to the Union Pacific, Eastern Division (see U. S. v. U. P. Ry. Co., (1893) 148 U. S. 562), and subsequently by the joint resolution of Congress of March 3, 1869 (15 Stat. 348) became the Kansas Pacific. The Act of July 2, 1864, having provided that any company authorized to build a line of railroad from the Missouri River to the junction on the one hundredth meridian might connect its line west of that point, the Union Pacific, Eastern Division (Kansas Pacific), determined to build to Denver. The Act of July 3, 1866 (14 Stat. p. 79) gave the company authority to connect with the Union Pacific at a point not more than fifty miles westward from the meridian of Denver. Under the Act of March 3, 1869 (15 Stat. 324), the company contracted with the Denver Pacific Railway & Telegraph Company to construct the road from Denver to a connection with the Union Pacific Railroad at Cheyenne. (See U. S. v. Union Pacific Railway Co., (1893) 148 U. S. 562). The Kansas Pacific was completed from Kansas City to Denver on September 1, 1870, and the Denver Pacific (Denver to Cheyenne) connecting the Kansas Pacific with the Union Pacific, was completed and opened January 1, 1871.*

*The Union Pacific Railway Company was formed January 24, 1880, by the consolidation of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, and the Denver Pacific Railway & Telegraph Company.

On account of the change of route just mentioned, the Central Branch of the Union Pacific—the name given to the line through Atchison, Kansas, to meet the Kansas City line as it proceeded in a northwesterly direction from Kansas City to the one hundredth meridian—was left without connection, its subsidy in Government bonds having been limited to one hundred miles by Section 13 of the Act of July 1, 1862.

In another particular the railroad construction contemplated by the Act of July 1, 1862, was modified, for, under authority of the President, the Sioux City line was also changed in its course so as to meet the Union Pacific line at Fremont, Nebraska, about forty-two miles west of Omaha, instead of at the one hundredth meridian.

A diagram map is inserted to show the system as constructed.



Pacific Railroads as Constructed

We have thus far dealt with the construction of the Union Pacific portion of the line, and shall now deal with the Central Pacific construction, or, more strictly, the construction at the western end of the line, for it was accomplished by two companies organized under the laws of the State of California, (a) the Central Pacific Railroad Company already mentioned, and (b) the Western Pacific Railroad Company of California.

It has already appeared that the Central Pacific Railroad Company was organized June 28, 1861 (a year before the passage of the Act of Congress of July 1, 1862). The Western Pacific was organized December 13, 1862, under the general railroad law of California, with power to construct a road from a point on the San Francisco and San Jose Railroad, at or near San Jose, to Sacramento and there connect with the road of the Central Pacific Company. Afterwards, the Central Pacific Company assigned to this corporation its rights to construct the road between San Jose and Sacramento under the Act of Congress; and this assignment was ratified by Congress March 3, 1865, "with all of the privileges and benefits of the several acts of Congress relating thereto, and subject to all the conditions thereof". (13 Stat. 504.)

It will be recalled that the Act of July 1, 1862, fixed either San Francisco or the navigable waters of the Sacramento River as the western terminus of the Pacific Railroad. The Central Pacific Railroad Company had been organized to build its line from Sacramento to the eastern boundary of California. As Sacramento is situated on the navigable waters of the Sacramento River, the construction of the Central Pacific line from that city would meet the requirements of the Act. The Western Pacific Railroad Company was organized with a view to the construction of a road which would reach the Pacific Ocean at San Francisco. As early as 1864 there was a railroad connecting San Francisco with San Jose and the aim of the Western Pacific Railroad Company was to connect Sacramento with San Jose, and, therefore, with the road to San Francisco.

Having sketched in a general way the construction contemplated or provided for at the western end of the through line, we may now briefly refer to the completion of the entire road.

It is established by judicial decision that the road was completed November 6, 1869 (U. P. R. R. Co. v. U. S., (1877) 13 Ct. Claims, 401; s. c., (1878) 99 U. S. 402; U. S. v. C. P. R. R. Co., (1877) 4 Sawy. 341; 25 Fed. Cas. 354; s. c., (1878) 99 U. S. 449). Early in 1869, the construction of the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific began to overlap, the Central Pacific preliminary construction being then east of Ogden and the westerly construction of the Union Pacific being at least as far as Promontory, fifty-four miles west of Ogden, and the matter of the junction point became the subject of an acute controversy between the companies. Later, whether upon agreement of the companies or not it is unnecessary here to inquire, it was provided in the joint resolution of Congress passed April 10, 1869 (16 Stat. 56) that:

> "the common terminus of the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific Railroads shall be at or near Ogden; and the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall build, and the Central Pacific Railroad Company pay for and own the railroad from the ter> minus aforesaid to Promontory Summit, at which point the rails shall meet and connect and form one continuous line."

This joint resolution was in anticipation of a meeting of the roads, which actually occurred one month later (May 10, 1869) at Promontory, and then, for the first time, there was a through rail connection between the Missouri River and Sacramento on the navigable waters of the Sacramento River.

Later, by the Act of May 6, 1870 (16 Stat. 121), Congress enacted that:

> "The common terminus and point of junction of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company shall be definitely fixed and established on the line of railroad as now located and constructed, northwest of the station at Ogden, and within the limits of the sections of land hereinafter mentioned (here nine sections are described); and said companies are hereby authorized to enter upon, use, and possess said sections which are hereby granted to them in equal shares, with the same rights, privileges, and obligations now by law provided with reference to other lands granted to said railroads."

The point of junction established de facto under the Act of May 6, 1870, was five miles west of Ogden, and later (June 13, 1875), the Union Pacific leased this five-mile stretch to the Central Pacific for a term of nine hundred and ninety-nine years at an annual rental of $20,000, and later the Union depot at Ogden came to be owned by the Union Pacific and Central Pacific in equal shares and to be the junction point between the two roads.

Late in the year 1869, the line from Sacramento to San Jose was completed, so that in that year there was rail connection between the Missouri River and San Francisco, and as early as July, 1869, there was regular train and mail service between Sacramento and the Missouri River.

The construction of the line from Sacramento to Ogden, for purposes of operation, was as follows:

Sacramento (via Roseville) to Newcastle	November 1, 1864.
Newcastle to Auburn	May 14, 1865.
Auburn to Colfax	September 11, 1865.
Colfax to Dutch Flat	July 5, 1866.
Dutch Flat to Alta	July 11, 1866.
Alta to Cisco	December 3, 1866.
Cisco to Truckee	April 3, 1868.
Truckee to Reno	June 19, 1868.
Reno to Wadsworth	July 22, 1868.
Wadsworth to Winnemucca	October 1, 1868.
Winnemucca to Elko	January 25, 1869.
Elko to Promontory	May 29, 1869.
Promontory to near Ogden	May 29, 1869.

The construction from Sacramento to San Jose, completed in the operative sense of that term, occurred as follows:

Sacramento to Galt	May 15, 1869.
Galt to Stockton	August 14, 1869.
Stockton (via Lathrop and Niles) to San Jose	September 15, 1869.

It will presently appear that in the year 1870 the Central Pacific Railroad Company absorbed the Western Pacific Railroad Company through consolidation authorized by the laws of California, so that in that year the Central Pacific Railroad Company became the owner of the line from Ogden to San Jose.

'That said Central Pacific Railroad Company of California filed in the Department of the Interior its acceptance of the terms and conditions of said Act of Congress of July 1, 1862, within the time therein designated.

'That on or about the 31st day of October, 1864, said Central Pacific Railroad Company of California sold and assigned all its rights under the aforesaid Acts to a corporation then existing under the laws of the State of California, and known as the Western Pacific Railroad Company, so far as said rights related to the construction of said railroad and telegraph between the cities of San Jose and Sacramento, in said State of California. Said assignment was ratified and confirmed by the United States by an Act of Congress passed on the 3d day of March, 1865, entitled "An Act to Amend an Act Entitled An Act to Aid in the Construction of a Railroad and Telegraph Line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to Secure to the Government the Use of the Same for Postal, Military and Other Purposes, Approved July 1, 1862, and to Amend an Act Amendatory Thereof, Approved July 2, 1864". See 13 U. S. Stat. at L. p. 504.

'That the said line of railroad from the Pacific Ocean to Ogden, in Utah Territory, was completed and put in operation in 1869, and has been in operation from that time until the present, and still is in operation, and the whole of the railroad mentioned in the said Acts of Congress has long since been completed, and is now, in accordance with the spirit and intent of said Acts of Congress, operated as one continuous line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and is so operated and maintained for the uses and purposes mentioned in said Acts.

'That in August, 1870, acting under the said Acts of Congress, said Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the said Western Pacific Railroad Company formed themselves into one corporation under the name of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Said Company is the defendant herein, and has, from the completion of said railroad as aforesaid until the present time, owned (except in the respect hereinafter stated) and operated said railroad under and by virtue of said Acts of Congress and for the uses and purposes therein mentioned.'

If we turn to the Acts of Congress referred to by the court, we shall find that franchises of the most important character were conferred on this Company. Originally, the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California had only power to construct a railroad from Sacramento to the eastern boundary of the State. Congress, by the Act of 1862, authorized the Company (in the words of the Act) 'to construct a railroad and telegraph line from the Pacific Coast, at or near San Francisco or the navigable waters of the Sacramento River, to the eastern boundary of California, upon the same terms and conditions, in all respects, as are contained in this Act for the construction of said railroad and telegraph line first mentioned (the Union Pacific), and to meet and connect with the first mentioned railroad and telegraph line on the eastern boundary of California'. Sec. 9. In the following section it was enacted, that, after the completion of its road to the eastern boundary of California, the Central Pacific might unite upon equal terms with the Union Pacific Railroad Company in constructing so much of said railroad and telegraph line and branch railroads and telegraph lines through the Territories, from the State of California to the Missouri River, as should then remain to be constructed, on the same terms and conditions as provided in relation to the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Thus, without referring to the other franchises and privileges conferred upon this company, the fundamental franchise was given, by the Acts of 1862 and the subsequent Acts, to construct a railroad from the Pacific Ocean across the State of California and the federal Territories until it should meet the Union Pacific; which it did meet at Ogden in the Territory of Utah. This important grant, though in part collateral to, was independent of, that made to the Company by the State of California, and has ever since been possessed and enjoyed. The present Company has it by transfer from, and consolidation of, the original companies, by which its existence and capacities were constituted. Such consolidation was authorized by the 16th section of the Act of Congress of July 1, 1862, and the 16th section of the Act of July 2, 1864, taken in connection with the second section of the Act of March 3, 1865, referred to in the findings of the court. The last named Act ratified the transfer by the Central Pacific to the Western Pacific of a portion of its road extending from San Jose to Sacramento, and conferred upon the latter company all the privileges and benefits of the several Acts of Congress relating thereto, and subject to all the conditions thereof. If, therefore, the Central Pacific Railroad Company is not a federal corporation, its most important franchises, including that of constructing a railroad from the Pacific Ocean to Ogden city, were conferred upon it by Congress."

We come now to the construction of the non-bond-aided lines in California.

(3) The construction of the Central Pacific non-bond-aided lines in California.

It has appeared that the bond-aided lines within the State of California, completed in 1869, commenced with the eastern boundary of the state and extended thence through Roseville, Sacramento, Lathrop and Niles to San Jose. The Central Pacific construction from a point about five miles west of Ogden to Sacramento was 737.50 miles in length; the line from Sacramento to San Jose was 123.16 miles in length.

We come now to consider three extensions to this bond-aided line: (a) from Roseville to the Oregon boundary, 296.50 miles in length; (b) from Niles to Oakland, 24.31 miles in length, and (c) from Lathrop to Goshen, 146.08 miles in length. These extensions have been generally known as the "non-bond-aided lines". A brief description of their origin and construction is necessary to a full understanding of the case.

(a) Roseville to the Oregon boundary.

The construction of the branch from Roseville to the Oregon boundary was begun by the California and Oregon Railroad Company under legislation described in Oregon & C. R. Co. v. U. S., 238 U. S. 393, 399 (1915), as follows:

> "By the act of July 25, 1866, supra (14 Stat. at L. 239, chap. 242), Congress authorized and empowered the California & Oregon Railroad Company, which had been organized under a statute of the state of California, and such company, organized under the laws of Oregon, as the legislature of that state should designate, to construct and maintain a railroad and telegraph line between the city of Portland, in Oregon, and the Central Pacific Railroad in California, as follows: The California & Oregon Company to construct that part of the railroad and telegraph line within the state of California, beginning at a point to be selected by the company on the Central Pacific Railroad in Sacramento Valley, and running thence northerly through the Sacramento and Shasta valleys to the northern boundary of the state. The Oregon company to construct the part in Oregon from Portland south through certain designated valleys to the southern boundary of Oregon, to connect with the part constructed by the first-named company. Whichever company first completed its respective part of the road from the designated terminus to the boundary line between the states was authorized to continue construction until the parts should meet and connect, and the whole line of railroad and telegraph should be completed."

The California and Oregon Railroad was absorbed by the Central Pacific Railroad August 22, 1870, in consolidation proceedings.

The construction of the line from Roseville north occurred as follows:

Roseville to Wheatland	October 28, 1867.
Wheatland to Yuba	September 19, 1868.
Yuba to Marysville	June 1, 1869.
Marysville to Chico	July 2, 1870.
Chico to Tehama	August 28, 1871.
Tehama to Red Bluff	December 6, 1871.
Red Bluff to Redding	September 1, 1872.
Redding to Delta	September 1, 1884.
Delta to Oregon State Line	October 5, 1887.

(b) Niles to Oakland.

The road from Niles to Oakland, thereby effecting communication with San Francisco, was finished in 1869 as follows:

Niles to Alameda Wharf	September 8, 1869.
Alameda Wharf to San Francisco (boat line)	December 1, 1869.

This construction was by the San Francisco, Oakland and Alameda Railroad Company, which was absorbed by the Central Pacific Railroad Company in the consolidation of August 22, 1870. (P. Ex. 12, IV R. 1281).

(c) Lathrop to Goshen.

This extension of 146.08 miles was built by the San Joaquin Valley Railroad Company (P. Ex. 12, IV R. 1282), a company which was absorbed by the Central Pacific in the consolidation of August 22, 1870, as follows:

Lathrop to Modesto	November 8, 1870.
Modesto to Merced	January 25, 1872.
Merced to Fresno	May 28, 1872.
Fresno to Goshen	August 1, 1872.

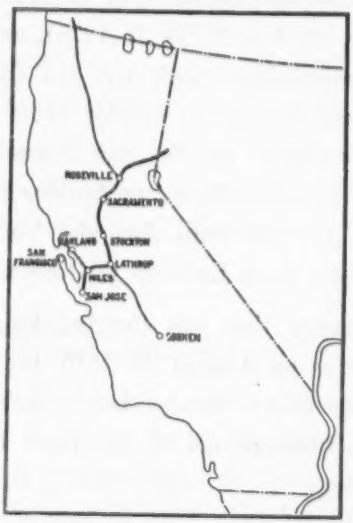
All this construction became the property of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, for on June 23, 1870, the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California consolidated with the Western Pacific Railroad Company under the corporate name of Central Pacific Railroad Company (P. Ex. 12, IV R. 1278), and on August 22, 1870, it consolidated with (a) the California and Oregon Railroad Company, builder from Roseville to the Oregon boundary; (b) the San Francisco, Oakland and Alameda Railroad Company, builder from Niles to Oakland, and (c) the San Joaquin Valley Railroad Company, builder from Lathrop to Goshen.

It thus appears that the Central Pacific Railroad Company became on August 22, 1870, the owner of all the above-described "bond-aided" and "non-bond-aided" lines, although all of the lines had not then been constructed.

The mileage, built and projected, thus vested in the Central Pacific Railroad Company in consequence of the consolidations of 1870 was as follows:

Original Company	Between	Miles of Road
	Bond-aided Roads
Central Pacific Railroad...	Sacramento to 5 miles west of Ogden	737.50
Western Pacific Railroad..	San Jose to Sacramento.....	123.16
	Non-bond-aided Roads
San Francisco, Oakland and Alameda Railroad	Niles to Oakland.....	24.31
California and Oregon Railroad	Roseville to Oregon line	296.50
San Joaquin Valley Railroad	Lathrop to Goshen.....	146.08
Total Central Pacific Railroad Company, consolidated	.....	1,327.55

The location of the road and the extensions dealt with appear in the following diagram:



Central Pacific Non-bond-aided Extensions (shown in hatched lines)

Before passing from the connection of the Central Pacific with the construction of the bond-aided and non-bond-aided lines, it is well to note that the lines to the Oregon boundary, (II R. 651, 653) and from Lathrop to Goshen were built by the same persons who controlled the Central Pacific. It appears (P. Ex. 12, IV R. 1281, 1282) that the directors named in the articles of incorporation of the companies building both lines included Leland Stanford, Mark Hopkins, Charles Crocker, Edwin B. Crocker (brother of Charles) and C. P. Huntington.

It is also of prime importance to note at this point, the part which California topography has played in the natural development of its railroad system. From the relief map, printed elsewhere herein, it appears that the interior valley of California is entirely encircled by mountains—the Coast Range on the west, and the Sierra Nevada on the east. The problem of the pioneer builders was to find outlets from San Francisco, through these mountains to the boundaries of the state. Their concern was not the building of transcontinental lines into the state; their problem was to find and develop the natural avenues of egress from the state. The relief map shows very clearly the necessities of the situation and the way they were met in the normal development of the state's railroad system.

We have spoken thus far of the direct eastern route to Ogden, and of the line to the Oregon boundary through the northern half of the interior valley. But these two lines alone left the state system incomplete. The southern valley was unprovided for, and there was no outlet at the southern border. Accordingly, the next step in the normal growth of the system was the completion of the valley line from Goshen south, and we pass now to the history of its construction by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

(4) The history of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company from its incorporation in 1865, including its acceptance on November 30, 1866, of the grant made to it by the Atlantic and Pacific Act of July 27, 1866, and its acceptance on April 3, 1871, of the grant made to it by the Texas Pacific Act of March 3, 1871, and thenceforward until its road reached Yuma, October 22, 1877.

The Southern Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated December 2, 1865, to build a line of railway in as direct a route as was feasible considering topography, etc., from San Francisco to the town of San Diego, "thence eastward through the county of San Diego to the eastern line of the State of California, there to connect with the contemplated road from the eastern line of the State of California to the Mississippi River." At this time

> "no authority had been given by Congress for the construction of any railroad from the Mississippi River to the eastern line of the state of California; although the thirty-third and thirty-fifth parallels of latitude had been publicly discussed as probable lines of future railroads, and it was, therefore, uncertain at what point of the line any road to be projected and constructed would intersect the eastern line of the state."
> Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Orton, 6 Sawy. 157, 32 Fed. 457, 460 (1879), per Sawyer, C. J.

The road which the Southern Pacific contemplated building was to run through the Santa Clara and Pajaro Valleys, thence by way of a pass through the Coast Range along the west side of the San Joaquin Valley, by as direct a route as the circumstances would allow, to the town of San Diego, which lies 32° 40′ north. The contemplated route is shown on the map. An easterly line from San Diego takes the route to a point in California on the Colorado River opposite Yuma, which also lies 32° 40′ north.

Approximate Route of Southern Pacific Line Contemplated in Articles of Association, December 2, 1865

The route designated shows that the Southern Pacific planned from the outset to include as a part of its road the line from San Francisco to San Jose (a distance of fifty miles), which was in operation as early as 1864.

Next came the Atlantic and Pacific Act of July 27, 1866, providing for a railroad from Springfield, Missouri, to the Pacific Coast (14 Stat. 293). This line was to be built "along the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude, as near as may be found most suitable for a railroad route, to the Colorado River, at such point as may be selected by said company for crossing (into the State of California); thence by the most practicable and eligible route to the Pacific". The line of definite location filed by the company laid out a route which crossed the Colorado River at Needles (34° 50′ north); thence across California to San Buenaventura (now Ventura) which lies 34° 17′ north. (See United States v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1892) 146 U. S. 570; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. United States (1897) 168 U. S. 1.)

The Act authorized the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to connect with the Atlantic and Pacific "at such point, near the boundary line of the State of California, as they shall deem most suitable for a railroad line to San Francisco" (Sec. 18). The authority conferred by this Act and the land grant therein contained caused the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to alter the line of its railroad so that instead of building south to the town of San Diego (as provided in its articles of incorporation) it deflected its route so as to reach the Colorado River near the thirty-fifth parallel at Needles, which lies 34° 50′ north.

In accepting the grant, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company filed a map in the Department of the Interior on January 3, 1867, changing its route as above stated. By an act of the California Legislature passed April 4, 1870 (Stats. Cal. 1869-70, p. 883), it was provided that notwithstanding the line named in its articles of incorporation of December 2, 1865, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was "authorized and empowered to change the line of its railroad so as to reach the eastern boundary of the State of California by such route as the company shall determine to be the most practicable and to file new and amendatory articles of association".

On June 28, 1870, Congress passed a joint resolution (16 Stat. 382), which provided "that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California may construct its road and telegraph line, as near as may be on the route indicated by the map filed by said company in the Department of the Interior on the third day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven".

Under the terms of the Atlantic and Pacific Act, the Southern Pacific was required to build fifty miles of road before July 27, 1868, and fifty miles additional each year thereafter. By the act of July 25, 1868 (15 Stat. 187), Congress extended the time for the construction of the Southern Pacific line, requiring the completion of the first thirty miles by July 1, 1870, and subsequent construction of at least twenty miles annually.

The first thirty miles were constructed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company under the name of the Santa Clara and Pajaro Valley Railroad, by July 1, 1870, the construction being from San Jose to Gilroy, a distance of thirty miles; and the second item of construction was finished by June 30, 1871, by the building of the road from Gilroy to Tres Pinos, a distance of twenty miles. The remainder of the construction of the Southern Pacific was from Goshen south,* and the first section of twenty miles, mentioned in the testimony of Strobridge (II R. 402), was completed by July 1, 1872. The construction periods of the line from Goshen to Mojave were as follows:

Goshen to Tipton	July 25, 1872.
Tipton to Delano	July 14, 1873.
Delano to Sumner	October 26, 1874.
Sumner to Caliente	April 26, 1875.
Caliente (over Tehachapi) to Mojave	August 9, 1876.

The construction from Mojave to Needles, a distance of two hundred and forty miles, was finished June 22, 1883 (II R. 421), but, as that stretch of the road became the property of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe long before the commencement of this action, the details of the construction were not offered in evidence.

Speaking of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, Mr. Kruttschnitt said (II R. 761):

> "Their advent to Southern California was marked by a lease from the Southern Pacific Railroad of the line from Needles to Mojave. . . . It was prior to the early part of 1883, because their line was opened at that time. That line was leased to them up to, I think, 1911, when it was sold to them."

*The line of the Southern Pacific Railroad as originally projected was to Tres Pinos, thence through the Coast Range to Goshen, and thence southerly. The line was built to Tres Pinos as above shown. A branch line was also built westwardly from Goshen via Huron to Alcalde, a distance of sixty-one miles. The line was surveyed between Tres Pinos and Alcalde but never built because the country was too forbidding. (Hood II R. 456; Kruttschnitt, II R. 799-800; see also California v. Central Pac. R. Co. (1888), 127 U. S. 1, 42, which mentions the unfinished section between Tres Pinos and Huron.) Furthermore, other routes to San Francisco, both built and projected, more than answered the requirements of the situation.

We shall now pass from the construction under the Atlantic and Pacific grant to the Texas Pacific Act of March 3, 1871, and the action taken thereunder.

In the meantime, however, it is important to note that although there is no proof in terms of the interest of Leland Stanford, C. P. Huntington, Mark Hopkins and Charles Crocker in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company until 1870, nevertheless it is clear that they were interested in this company before that year, for the record contains the following self-explanatory letter written by Mr. Huntington to the Secretary of the Interior September 25, 1868 (D. Ex. 23, V R. 1704):

"Office
CENTRAL PACIFIC R. R. of California.
No. 54 William Street

C. P. Huntington, V. P.
NEW YORK, Sept 25 1868.

Hon. O. H. BROWNING
Secretary of the Interior
Washington, D. C.

DR SIR

Herewith I have the Honor to hand you the Annual Report of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as required by the Acts of Congress in relation thereto & of which please acknowledge the receipt.

Resply Yours
C. P. HUNTINGTON"

This letter was received by the Department of the Interior on September 26, 1868, and is endorsed as having been received that day from C. P. Huntington, New York City (D. Ex. 23, V R. 1706). The report enclosed in the letter was required by the Act of June 25, 1868, 15 Stat. 79 (P. Ex. 7, IV R. 1262).

On October 12, 1870, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was consolidated under the laws of California with three other companies; (a) San Francisco and San Joaquin Railroad Company, the owner of the railroad in operation in 1864 from San Francisco to San Jose, fifty miles; (b) Santa Clara and Pajaro Valley Railroad Company, the owner of the constructed road from San Jose to Gilroy, thirty miles, and (c) California Southern Railroad Company, organized to construct a railroad from Gilroy to Salinas, Monterey County, California. As already stated, this consolidation became effective and a matter of public record in California October 12, 1870. By that public record it was shown that the directors of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company were Lloyd Tevis, Leland Stanford, Charles Crocker, C. P. Huntington, Mark Hopkins, Charles Mayne, and Peter Donahue.

It is important to note at this point the relation which Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker bore as early as 1870 to the railroad situation in California. They were the presumptive owners, being then in control, of the three roads in California authorized to run to the boundaries of the State; (a) the Central Pacific, crossing to Ogden; (b) the Roseville road to the Oregon line, and (c) the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, authorized to meet the Atlantic and Pacific at Needles so that it might connect the Atlantic and Pacific with the Southern Pacific line to San Francisco (Act of July 27, 1866; 14 Stat. 292, Sect. 18).

It is in the light of these facts that we are next to consider the Texas Pacific Act of March 3, 1871.

On March 3, 1871, Congress passed an act (16 Stat. 573) to incorporate the Texas Railroad Company with authority and power to construct a railroad

> "from a point at or near Marshall, county of Harrison, State of Texas; thence by the most direct and eligible route, to be determined by said company, near the thirty-second parallel of north latitude, to a point at or near El Paso; thence by the most direct and eligible route, to be selected by said company, through New Mexico and Arizona, to a point on the Rio Colorado, at or near the southeastern boundary of the State of California; thence by the most direct and eligible route to San Diego, California, to ship's channel in the bay of San Diego, in the State of California, pursuing in the location thereof, as near as may be, the thirty-second parallel of north latitude."

In United States v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 146 U. S. 570, 572, 574 (1892), it is said:

> "On March 3, 1871, Congress passed an Act (16 Stat. at L. 573) to incorporate the Texas-Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, the 23d section of which Act reads:
>
> 'That for the purpose of connecting the Texas Pacific railroad with the city of San Francisco, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California is hereby authorized (subject to the laws of California) to construct a line of railroad from a point at or near Tehachapa Pass, by way of Los Angeles, to the Texas Pacific railroad at or near Colorado river, with the same rights, grants and privileges, and subject to the same limitations, restrictions, and conditions, as were granted to said Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California by the Act of July 27, 1866; Provided, however, That this section shall in no way affect or impair the rights, present or prospective, of the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company, or any other railroad company'.

On April 3, 1871, just a month after the passage of the Act of March 3, the defendant, the Southern Pacific Company, filed a map of its route from Tehachapa Pass by way of Los Angeles to the Texas Pacific railroad, and proceeded to construct its road, and finished the entire construction some time during the year 1878."

The Texas Pacific filed its map of general route in August, 1871. (Southern Pacific R. Co. v. U. S., (1903) 189 U. S. 447, 449.)

The acceptance on behalf of the Southern Pacific was made by Charles Crocker, its president, as follows (P. Ex. 76, IV R. 1673-4):

"To Hon. C. Delano, Secretary of the Interior, and Hon. Willis Drummond, Commissioner of General Land Office.

Please to take notice that this Map is filed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the Department of the Interior for the purpose of designating by the heavy red line traced thereon, the general route of the line of Railroad as near as may be 'from a point at or near Tehatchapa Pass, by way of Los Angeles to the Texas Pacific Railroad at or near the Colorado River', adopted by the said Southern Pacific Railroad Company in pursuance of the power and authority granted to said company by the 23d Section of the Act of Congress of the United States entitled 'An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road and for other purposes', approved March 3d, 1871, and in pursuance of the provisions of the Act of July 27th, 1866, referred to in said 23d Section, and for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the provisions of said acts of Congress.

CHAS. CROCKER,
President Southern Pacific Railroad Company."

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
WASHINGTON, D. C.
April 3d, 1871.

SIR:

The 23d section of the Act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad, and for other purposes, approved March 3d, 1871, authorizes 'the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to construct a line of railroad from a point at or near Tehachapa Pass, by way of Los Angeles, to the Texas Pacific railroad at or near the Colorado River', with the same rights and privileges, and subject to the same limitations and restrictions, as were granted to said Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California, by the Act of July 27, 1866.

The accompanying map designating the route of said road from Tehachapa Pass, by way of Los Angeles to the Colorado river, has been filed by Charles Crocker Esq. President of the Company, with a request, that the lands may be withdrawn, as provided in the 12th Section of said Act, 'from preemption, private entry and sale'.

You will issue the necessary order for a withdrawal of the lands, within twenty miles, and along the route designated on said map.

Very respectfully,
Your Obt. Servant
WALTER H. SMITH,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. WILLIS DRUMMOND
Commissioner of the General Land Office."

It is to be noted that the Texas Pacific was to cross the Colorado River into California in the southeastern portion thereof as near as might be to the thirty-second parallel. The point answering this requirement was agreed to be Yuma, which lies 32° 40′ north, on the Colorado River in Arizona opposite the southeast corner of California. The construction of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company from Goshen to Mojave passed through Tehachapi Pass, as will be observed by reference to the table at page 36, supra. The Act of March 3, 1871, authorized the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to construct "from a point at or near Tehachapa Pass, by way of Los Angeles, to the Texas Pacific railroad at or near the Colorado river". The construction referable, therefore, to the Texas Pacific Act may be said to be from Mojave to Yuma, via Los Angeles. This construction occurred at the times mentioned in the following table, arranged geographically and not chronologically, as follows:

Mojave to Tunnel	September 6, 1876.
Tunnel to San Fernando	January 1, 1876.
San Fernando to Los Angeles	April 15, 1874.
Los Angeles to Spadra	April 15, 1874.
Spadra to Colton	July 16, 1875.
Colton to Indio	March 29, 1876.
Indio to Colorado River (near Yuma)	May 23, 1877.
Yuma	October 22, 1877.

The construction by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company under (a) The Atlantic and Pacific Act, and

(1) Sacramento-Ogden: Act of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. 489).
(2) Roseville-Oregon Line: Act of July 25, 1866 (14 Stat. 239).
(3) Goshen-Mojave-Needles: Act of July 27, 1866 (14 Stat. 292).
(4) Mojave-Los Angeles-Yuma: Act of Mar. 3, 1871 (16 Stat. 573).

——— Central Pacific.
——— Southern Pacific.

In reading the map, it will be remembered that the construction from Goshen via Tehachapi Pass to Mojave, thence to Needles, was under the Atlantic and Pacific grant, and that the construction from Mojave via Los Angeles to Yuma was under the Texas Pacific grant.

This map, considered in connection with the topographic map elsewhere reproduced, is of marked importance. It depicts the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system as projected and as constructed under state and

Congressional authorization; and it gives a graphic illustration of the natural continuity of the lines, and the normal development of the project to provide northern, eastern and southern outlets for California traffic.

We have aimed to give a brief but adequate history of the legislation under which the Southern Pacific Railroad Company became a corporation and built the road with which we are dealing in this action. It may be helpful, however, here to quote the history of that legislation set down in an exhaustive way by Circuit Judge Sawyer in Southern Pacific Railroad Co. v. Orton, 6 Sawy. 157, 32 Fed. 457 (1879):

> "The Southern Pacific Railroad Company became duly incorporated under the general statute of the state of California of 1861, providing for the incorporation of railroad companies, (St. 1861, 607) by filing its articles of association in the office of the secretary of state on December 2, 1865. The act requires, among other things, the articles of association to state 'the place from and to which the proposed road is to be constructed, and the counties into and through which it is intended to pass, and its length as near as may be'. Id. 608, Sect. 2" (p. 459).
> "The said articles of association, filed December 2, 1865, set forth that the corporation was formed 'for the purpose of constructing, owning, and maintaining a railroad from some point on the bay of San Francisco, in the state of California, and to pass through the counties of Santa Clara, Monterey, San Luis Obispo, Tulare, Los Angeles, and San Diego, to the town of San Diego, in said state; thence eastward, through the said county of San Diego, to the eastern line of the state of California, there to connect with a contemplated railroad from the eastern line of the state of California to the Mississippi river'. . . . At this time, also, no authority had been given by congress for the construction of any railroad from the Mississippi river to the eastern line of the state of California; although the thirty-third and thirty-fifth parallels of latitude had been publicly discussed as probable lines of future railroads, and it was, therefore, uncertain at what point of the line any road to be projected and constructed would intersect the eastern line of the state.

This being the condition of things, congress, on July 27, 1866, passed 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the state of Missouri to the Pacific coast'. 14 Stat. 294. By the first section, the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated and authorized to construct a railroad from the town of Springfield, in the state of Missouri, to the western boundary line of the state; thence 'to the head-waters of the Colorado Chiquito, and thence along the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude, as near as may be found suitable for a railway route to the Colorado river, at such point as may be selected by said company for crossing; thence by the most practicable and eligible route to the Pacific.' Section 3 provides as follows: 'And be it further enacted that there be, and hereby is, granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific coast, . . . every alternate section of public land . . . not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from pre-emption or other claims or rights, at the time the line of said road is designated by a plat thereof, filed in the office of the commissioner of the general land-office. . . . . And section 18 is as follows: 'And be it further enacted that the Southern Pacific Railroad, a company incorporated under the laws of the state of California, is hereby authorized to connect with the said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, formed under this act, at such point near the boundary line of the state of California, as they shall deem most suitable for a railroad line to San Francisco, and shall have a uniform gauge and rate of freight or fare with said road; and in consideration thereof, to aid in its construction, shall have similar grants of land, subject to all the conditions and limitations herein provided, and shall be required to construct its road on the like regulations, as to time and manner, with the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, herein provided for.'

In pursuance of the third section of the said act of congress, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company filed a plat of the line of railroad adopted by it in the office of the commissioner of the general land-office on the third day of January, 1867. The line as laid down on the plat filed, commences at a point near the southern end of the bay of San Francisco, and passes through the counties of Santa Clara, Monterey, Fresno, Tulare, Los Angeles (as the counties of Tulare and Los Angeles were constituted when the company was incorporated), and San Bernardino to the Colorado river, to a point on the river near where the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude crosses said river; thus passing through all the counties named in the certificate of incorporation except San Luis Obispo, which was avoided by a deflection to the eastward, and San Diego, which the line did not go far enough south to reach. The deflection carried the line through Fresno and San Bernardino, instead of San Luis Obispo and San Diego counties, but it passes through all the other counties named in the articles of incorporation. The northern portion of Los Angeles county through which the line passed, as the county was constituted at the date of filing the articles of association, is now the southern part of Kern county. Before the filing of said plat the road had not been finally located, and no map or profile thereof had been filed in the office of the secretary of state of the state of California, as provided by section 43 of the act under which it was incorporated, (St. 1861, 623); the only designation at the time being that indicated in the articles of incorporation hereinbefore set out" (pp. 460-462).

"On July 25, 1868, Congress passed an act extending the time within which the Southern Pacific Railroad Company should be required to complete the first 30 miles of its road, and requiring it thereafter to complete 20 miles each year till the completion of the road within the time required. 15 St. 187. On June 28, 1870, congress passed a joint resolution, as follows, to-wit: 'That the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California may construct its road and telegraph lines, as near as may be, on the route indicated by the map filed by said company, in the department of the interior, on the third day of January, 1867; . . .' 16 St. 382" (p. 462).

"On March 3, 1871, congress passed the act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, in which it authorized the plaintiff, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, to construct a line of railroad from a point at or near Tehachapa pass, by way of Los Angeles, to the Texas Pacific Railroad, at or near the Colorado river, with the same rights, etc., as given to it by the act organizing the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company, 16 St. 573.

On March 1, 1870, the legislature of California passed a general act authorizing any corporation organized or to be organized under the laws of the state to amend its articles of association, by making and filing amended articles in the same office where the originals are to be filed. St. 1869-70, 107.

On April 4, 1870, the legislature of California passed an act as follows: 'Whereas, by the provisions of a certain act of congress of the United States of America, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from San Francisco to the eastern line of the state of California," approved July 27, 1866, certain grants were made to, and certain rights, privileges, powers, and authority were vested in and conferred upon, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of California; therefore, to enable the said company to more fully and completely comply with and perform the requirements, provisions, and conditions of the said act of congress, and all other acts of congress now in force or which may hereafter be enacted, the state of California hereby consents to said act; and the said company, its successors and assigns are hereby authorized and empowered to change the line of its railroad so as to reach the eastern boundary line of the state of California by such route as the company shall determine to be the most practicable, and to file new and amendatory articles of association; and the right, power, and privilege is hereby granted to, conferred upon, and vested in them, to construct, maintain, and operate, by steam or other power, the said railroad and telegraph line mentioned in said acts of congress, hereby confirming to and vesting in the said company, its successors and assigns, all the rights, privileges and franchises, power and authority conferred upon, granted to, or vested in said company by the said acts of congress, and any act of congress which may be hereafter enacted.'

Subsequent to the filing of said plat, on January 3, 1867, and prior to the issue of the patent to the land in question, the legislature of California passed various other acts recognizing and granting rights to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Under section 40 of the act under which plaintiff was incorporated, it was authorized to consolidate with any other railroad corporation. St. 1861, 622.

On October 12, 1870, in pursuance of the general statute, the San Francisco & San Jose Railroad Company, then owning and operating a road from San Francisco through San Mateo county to San Jose, in Santa Clara county, together with other companies, consolidated with the said Southern Pacific Railroad Company, taking the name of the main and principal company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, by which consolidation the Southern Pacific Railroad Company acquired the railroad extending from San Jose to San Francisco; thereby connecting its line as laid down on the plat filed with the commissioner of the general land-office with the city of San Francisco.

On April 15, 1871, in pursuance of the said general act of the legislature of California, approved March 1, 1870, the said Southern Pacific Railroad Company filed amended articles of association, which articles, among others, contained the following recitals: 'Whereas, by an act of the legislature of the state of California, entitled "An act relating to certificates of incorporation," approved March 1, 1870, any corporation then organized or thereafter to be organized, under the laws of the state of California, is authorized and empowered to amend its articles of association, or certificate of incorporation, by a majority vote of the board of directors or trustees, and by a vote or written assent of the stockholders representing, at least, two-thirds of the capital stock of such corporation; and, whereas, by a certain other act of the legislature of the state of California, entitled "An act to aid in giving effect to an act of congress, relating to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company," approved April 4, 1870, to enable the said company to more fully and completely comply with and perform the provisions, requirements, and conditions of an act of congress of the United States of America, entitled "An act granting land to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from San Francisco to the eastern line of the state of California," approved July 27, 1866, and of all other acts of congress then in force, or which might thereafter be enacted, the said Southern Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, were authorized and empowered to change the line of its railroad, so as to reach the eastern boundary line of the state of California, by such route as said > Company might determine to be most practicable, and to file new and amendatory articles of association: . . . now, therefore, the board of directors of said Southern Pacific Railroad Company do order and direct that the articles of association of said company be amended so as to read as follows,' etc. The object of the corporation as expressed in its amended articles is as follows: 'Art. 2. The object and purpose of said new corporation shall be to purchase, construct, own, maintain, and operate a continuous line of railroad from the city of San Francisco, in the state of California, through the city and county of San Francisco, the counties of San Mateo, Santa Clara, Monterey, Fresno, Tulare, Kern, San Bernardino, and San Diego, to some point on the Colorado river, in the southeastern part of the state of California, a distance of seven hundred and twenty miles, as near as may be; also, a line of railroad from a point at or near Taheechaypah pass, by way of Los Angeles, to the Texas Pacific Railroad, at or near the Colorado river, a distance of three hundred and twenty-four miles, as near as may be; also, a line of railroad from the town of Gilroy, in the county of Santa Clara, in said state, passing through said county, and the counties of Santa Cruz and Monterey, to a point at or near Salinas City, in said last-named county, a distance of forty-five miles, as near as may be; also, such branches to said lines as the board of directors of said new corporation may hereafter consider advantageous to said corporation, and direct to be established' " (pp. 462-464).

Before considering the construction by the Southern Pacific of its line from Yuma to New Orleans, covering the period from 1877 to 1883, we ask to have it particularly noted that the Texas Pacific Act was passed by Congress presumably with full knowledge of the fact that the grant to the Southern Pacific, authorizing the connection with the Texas Pacific, gave to Leland Stanford, C. P. Huntington, Mark Hopkins and Charles Crocker, who were then publicly known to be in control of both the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific, all lines (four in number) leading to San Francisco and crossing the boundaries of the State of California. These lines were (1) the line crossing to Nevada and Utah for connection with the Union Pacific; (2) the line from Roseville to the Oregon boundary there to connect with roads leading to Portland and the north; (3) the connection from Mojave and Needles over the thirty-fifth parallel to Springfield, Missouri, and (4) the connection on the thirty-second parallel, at Yuma, leading to Marshall, Texas.

Before passing on we also invite the attention of the court to the fact that these associates were in open control of the companies. They appeared in control of the boards of directors in the consolidations which took place in the year 1870—those of the Central Pacific June 23, 1870, and August 22, 1870, and that of the Southern Pacific October 22, 1870.*

In view of these facts, great significance attaches to the circumstance that by the terms of the act the Texas Pacific Railroad Company was forbidden to effect any consolidation with a competing through line, while no

*In Defendants' Exhibit No. 23 (V. R. 1706), containing the annual report of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company (of California) to the Secretary of the Interior, for the year ending June 30, 1871, the directors of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company are named as: Charles Crocker, Leland Stanford, C. P. Huntington, Mark Hopkins, Peter Donahue, Lloyd Tevis, Charles Mayne. The exhibit also contains the statement of C. P. Huntington, on oath, taken September 30, 1871, that he was elected to the office of President of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California on the 14th day of August, 1871, in the place of Charles Crocker whose term of office expired on that day. The significance of this should be borne in mind. See also p. 40 for Charles Crocker's letter in which as President of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, he makes acceptance of the terms of the Texas Pacific Act.

such limitation was imposed upon the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

Section 4 of the Act of March 3, 1871, reads in part:

> ". . . the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company shall have power and lawful authority to purchase the stock, land grants, franchises, and appurtenances of, and consolidate on such terms as may be agreed upon between the parties, with any railroad company or companies, heretofore chartered by congressional, State, or territorial authority, on the route prescribed in the first section of this act; but no such consolidation shall be with any competing through line of railroads to the Pacific Ocean."

Section 23 of the Act of March 3, 1871, authorizing the Southern Pacific to construct a connecting line by way of Tehachapi Pass, contains no similar limitation upon the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. By this section the Southern Pacific is given the same rights, grants and privileges, and is subject to the same limitations, restrictions and conditions as were granted to it by the Act of July 27, 1866, authorizing the Atlantic and Pacific construction. In the Act of 1866 there is no limitation imposed upon the right of the Southern Pacific to consolidate.

(5) The history of the Southern Pacific Sunset-Gulf line from the completion of the road to Yuma, October 22, 1877, under the Texas Pacific Act, to the opening of the line to New Orleans February 1, 1883.

We come now to the construction of the line from Yuma to New Orleans.

The Southern Pacific Railroad Company of Arizona was incorporated September 20, 1878, to build a railroad connecting with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California at Yuma and running "thence eastwardly following as near as practicable the thirty-second parallel of north latitude to the eastern boundary of said Territory." In the same year it commenced building eastward from Yuma and continued its construction work, with the exception of a few months' interruption in the vicinity of Casa Grande in 1879, until the line reached the eastern boundary of Arizona. From there the work was carried on by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of New Mexico, incorporated April 14, 1879, to construct a railroad across that portion of "the Territory of New Mexico between its western boundary and the Rio Grande," following as near as practicable the thirty-second parallel. The line built by this company extended to the Texas boundary at El Paso.

The road in Texas was built by two companies, the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railroad Company, which built the line from El Paso to Houston, and the Texas and New Orleans Railroad Company, which built the section between Houston and the Louisiana boundary. The construction as far as San Antonio, under the name of the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railroad Company, was a continuation of the construction under Southern Pacific control. The work was done by two construction parties, one working eastward from El Paso and one westward from San Antonio, both of which were under the supervision of William Hood, the Engineer of the Southern Pacific Company. Connection with made at the Pecos River in Texas on Christmas Day, 1882. (Strobridge, II, R. 404-5; Martin, II, R. 418-19; Hood, II, R. 435.) The construction of the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio line from San Antonio east to Houston was accomplished under the management and control of T. W. Pierce (Hopkins, II, R. 674).

The remainder of the present Sunset line was constructed and owned by the Louisiana Western Railroad Company and by the Morgan, Louisiana and Texas Railroad Company prior to the completion of the construction work in Texas. These lines having been leased and the junction between east and west having been effected at the Pecos River in the winter of 1882, the line from Yuma to the Gulf was ready for operation and was opened February 1, 1883.

It appears from this that the route from California to New Orleans was made up of the lines of eight companies: the Central Pacific; three named Southern Pacific Railroad Company, viz., of California, Arizona and New Mexico; two Texas railroad corporations and two Louisiana railroad corporations.

The companies and the sections owned by them appear in the following table, taken in part from the testimony of Mr. Kruttschnitt (II, R. 724):

(6) The operation of all the Southern Pacific lines by the Central Pacific, commencing with the construction south of Goshen in 1872 and ending April 1, 1885.

It will be remembered that in the 1870 consolidation of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and other roads already mentioned (p. 38, supra) the Southern Pacific became the owner of the line from San Francisco to San Jose, and that this line was extended from San Jose to Gilroy and from Gilroy to Tres Pinos (p. 35, supra). All of this construction was west of the Coast Range, whereas the other construction with which we have to deal, commencing with Goshen and south thereof, was east of the Coast Range. We propose now to show that as fast as the Southern Pacific built south of Goshen and the road was in order for operation, it was taken over by the Central Pacific Railroad Company and operated, so that at no moment of time until 1885 was any part of this construction of the Southern Pacific operated except by the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Frequent mention has been made of the junction at Goshen. Nothing in the entire record shows more clearly the unified construction and natural continuity of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system than the character of this junction-point. Goshen was not "any place at all (Strobridge, II, R. 413); it was "not a place of any size," and not "a natural ending place for a railroad" (Pratt, II, R. 504); "at the time we built, [it] had no name of Goshen but was simply a point" (Hood, II, R. 434).

William Hood, Chief Engineer of the Southern Pacific Company since 1885 (II R. 395), entered the employ of the Central Pacific May 3, 1867 (II R. 431), and, with the exception of about a year, 1873-1874 (II R. 434), continued in its employ until 1885, when the Southern Pacific Company became the operating company of the system, and he thenceforward, down to the present has maintained the same relation to the Southern Pacific Company that he had maintained before that time to the Central Pacific.

In his testimony (II R. 431-440) it is shown that the Southern Pacific construction was directed by Messrs. Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker, notably by the latter, and that as fast as the construction south from Goshen took place the road was taken over for operation and thenceforward operated by the Central Pacific Railroad Company as a leased line.

Mr. Hood's testimony is as follows (II R. 434-435):

"The construction south from Goshen—which at the time we built there had no name of Goshen, but was simply a point selected for the Southern Pacific Railroad from the west to turn south—continued consecutively, without cessation, and without any special line of demarcation, other than I have mentioned, to Tipton, which, I think, is about twenty miles south of Goshen, and there the construction ceased for that year; and in the early summer of 1873 I went east on private business, until July, 1874, and when I arrived back again, to go to work again, the track had just reached Bakersfield. I then took active charge of the location of the road from Bakersfield over Tehachapi Pass and south, including charge of construction as well, in the sense of going over it constantly in an advisory capacity, as I was appointed, during the progress of that work, assistant chief engineer of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and essentially acted for the chief engineer in most particulars.

This continued until some time in September, 1876, at which time the road was completed through to San Fernando station, now known, I think, as Fernando station. There was then a stretch of road already completed by a separate organization under the orders of the chief engineer, which extended from Fernando to Indio, and with which I had no personal connection, excepting that occasionally I had gone over it on trips with Mr. Charles Crocker, who was, of course, in charge of that, as of other similar matters on the Southern Pacific Railroad.

At Indio I commenced with the location of the line and carried it through to Yuma; and, without going into too many details as to other pieces of work here and there—which I can describe at length if desired—the track reached Yuma in the late summer of 1877 or thereabouts.

Construction was recommenced at Yuma in the late fall of 1878, and was carried on continuously eastward, with the exception of a few months lay-off in the summer of 1879, in the vicinity of Casa Grande; and the construction from the west was carried eastward to join the construction being carried westward from San Antonio at a point about ten miles west of the crossing of Pecos River, the tracks having joined there in the fall of 1882. In the meantime construction had been pushed westward from San Antonio, and I had made the preliminary surveys for it.

Q. For that road west of San Antonio?

A. West of San Antonio; by going to San Antonio at a certain period and working west.

Q. Yes.

A. To join the construction from the west, as above indicated, at a point between Langtry and the Pecos River crossing, to make it specific enough; that construction was done principally under the direct orders of Mr. C. P. Huntington and Mr. James Converse, chief engineer of the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railroad, whose efforts of construction, however, were entirely confined to the distance between San Antonio, Texas, and a point perhaps midway between Langtry and Pecos River crossing, it being under my supervision, however, to the extent that, under the direct orders of Mr. Charles Crocker, I would go down there occasionally and revise their line and direct line changes, and approve or veto proposed contracts.

This completed what is known as the Sunset Route as far as San Antonio, Texas. East of San Antonio, Texas, I have no knowledge of it whatever."

Upon the point of its operation, Mr. Hood testified (II R. 436):

"Q. Was this road south of Goshen to Pecos River, or near there, turned over for operation to any company as you completed sections of it?

A. At occasional intervals, as the track laying progressed and the road became ready for operation, say a stretch of 100 miles was completed, the operating organization of the Central Pacific Railroad commenced to operate it, and it continued so consecutively as the construction continued east, as far as I knew anything about it, which was at San Antonio, Texas."

ROBERT A. DONALDSON, age seventy-five years, began his employment with the Central Pacific Railroad Company in November, 1870 (II R. 623); became Assistant General Passenger and Ticket Agent of Central Pacific in December, 1877, and later General Passenger and Ticket Agent of the Central Pacific, which position he continued to hold until April 1, 1885, when the Southern Pacific Company took control of and operated the Central Pacific Railroad Company and its branches, on which date he became an employee of the Southern Pacific Company until his retirement April 30, 1912 (II R. 624).

Mr. Donaldson's testimony is as follows (II R. 624):

"Q. Do you remember the time when the Southern Pacific Railroad line from Goshen south to Los Angeles and Yuma and beyond, was being constructed?

A. I do.

Q. Do you know what company took over that road for operation when sections of it were completed from time to time?

A. From a point at or near the Goshen station, the Central Pacific Railroad Company operated the lines as they were ready for operation.

Q. The Central Pacific Railroad Company was operating its own lines from the beginning?

A. The Central Pacific Railroad Company operated its own lines during all that time, up to the opening of the line south of Goshen.

Q. How far south, if you know, did the operation of the Central Pacific Railroad Company extend over this line south of Goshen?

A. It extended over its own line to Goshen, and over the lines of the Southern Pacific Railroad of California, the Southern Pacific Railroad of Arizona, the Southern Pacific Railroad of New Mexico to the Rio Grande, at El Paso, and also over a portion of the line from El Paso, when it was completed—the line from El Paso to San Antonio, say."

He again testified (II R. 625):

"Q. From that time (1882) did the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or its officials, have jurisdiction of the entire line between San Francisco and New Orleans?

A. They did, for a period.

Q. For how long?

A. I think possibly six months or a year's time.

Q. When was that jurisdiction terminated? What was the occasion of it?

A. After the completion of the line to San Antonio and the opening of the line to service to and from New Orleans and from and to El Paso, the road between El Paso and New Orleans was handled by officials of the G. H. & S. A., the Louisiana Western, and the Morgan line. I will not undertake to say just what date that took effect, but my remembrance is that it was either late in 1883 or early in 1884.

Q. I am asking you when the Central Pacific officials exercised jurisdiction over that entire line.

A. They exercised jurisdiction over that entire line from the time it was completed.

Q. When it was opened?

A. When it was opened.

Q. And how long thereafter did they continue to do that?

A. My remembrance is that it was not much over a year, if it was that.

Q. Did they not continue until the Southern Pacific Company took charge of these lines in 1885?

A. The operating officers may have done that, but the general passenger agent did not.

Q. Did not Mr. Towne exercise jurisdiction all the way through to New Orleans until 1885, when the Southern Pacific Company took possession?

A. My recollection is that he did.

Q. You remember when the Southern Pacific Company took possession of these lines?

A. I do.

Q. And thereafter, after the Southern Pacific Company took possession, what was the southern limit of your jurisdiction on the Sunset Line?

A. It ended at the Rio Grande River."

James Horsburgh, Jr., General Passenger Agent of the Southern Pacific Company, Pacific System (II R. 629), entered the service of the Central Pacific as a clerk in the General Passenger Department in May, 1873, and continued in the Passenger Department of the system, first with the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and afterwards with the Southern Pacific Company.

He testified (II R. 629-630):

"Q. You remember the construction of the line from Goshen south to Los Angeles, Yuma, El Paso and eastward to New Orleans?

A. I do.

Q. What company first operated that line?

A. The Central Pacific Railroad.

Q. Did it take over sections of the line as they were turned over for operation?

A. As turned over by the construction department.

Q. You had jurisdiction as an official, then, over that line from the time it was operated?

A. From the time it was operated, yes.

Q. Do you remember about when this line to New Orleans was opened for operation?

A. I think about February, 1883.

Q. After it was opened for operation, how far did your jurisdiction extend toward New Orleans?

A. To New Orleans.

Q. How long did that jurisdiction continue?

A. I believe until the formation of the Southern Pacific Company and the division of the line into the Pacific system and the Atlantic system in 1885.

Q. Do you remember when you first went over the line, after its opening, to New Orleans?

A. Shortly after its opening I went to Houston and New Orleans to install our system of handling passenger business."

He further testified that all instructions came from Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker (II R. 630).

TIMOTHY HOPKINS, adopted son of Mark Hopkins who died March 29, 1878 (II R. 649), entered the service of the Central Pacific Railroad Company as a clerk in 1881. He was elected treasurer of the Central Pacific in 1882, and continued as treasurer and as a director of that company until 1892. He was also a director of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company during that period (II R. 649).

He testified (II R. 672):

"Q. Was there ever any distinction made between the lines of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company on account of their ownership? What I mean by that is, were they operated separately or were they operated together, as if they were in one ownership?

The WITNESS. They were operated as one company; no distinction made as to which line was which."

R. H. PRATT, of San Francisco, was foreman of construction and superintendent in charge of camps for the Central Pacific Railroad Company and was connected in various ways with the construction work from March, 1865, until 1871. From then until 1895, when he retired from service, his duties concerned the operation of trains and traffic management, first as division superintendent at Ogden, later at Wells, and finally as assistant general superintendent at San Francisco.

He testified (II R. 480-482):

"Q. What company built the road south of Goshen?

. . . . . .

A. The Southern Pacific.

. . . . . .

Q. When any section of that road was open for operation south of Goshen, do you know what company operated the road?

A. Well, the Central Pacific Company operated it until the Southern Pacific was formed.

Q. That is all right. I want to continue along as it was brought in, as these sections were brought in to be operated by the company operating them.

A. The Central Pacific Company.

. . . . . .

Q. From the time it was opened, that was about 1885

A. Down to 1885?

Q. Yes.

A. The Central Pacific Company.

Q. The Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember when that line reached El Paso in its progress eastward, about when?

A. I can not remember.

Q. Did the Central Pacific Railroad operate the line to El Paso at any time?

A. It did.

Q. Did it operate the road east of El Paso to New Orleans at any time?

A. It did.

Q. Do you remember when the line was opened between New Orleans and San Francisco, or about when?

A. I am unable to give the date.

Q. Was it prior to 1885?

A. I am unable to state the date, but I know the road was completed and connected with San Antonio.

Q. Did the Central Pacific Railroad Company operated trains at any time between New Orleans and San Francisco?

A. It did.

Q. Was it doing that at the time that line was taken over by the Southern Pacific Company; that was in 1885?

A. Yes, sir, 1885; early in 1885.

Q. How long before that had it been operating that through road between New Orleans and San Francisco?

A. About two years, I think; it was about two years it was open.

Q. So it was probably about 1883 or 1882?

A. Yes, sir, about 1883.

Q. That the New Orleans line was opened?

A. Yes, sir."

He again testified (II R. 482):

"Q. Was it not a fact that as fast as the road was built and opened for operation south of Goshen to Los Angeles, El Paso, San Antonio and on to New Orleans, as soon as that through line was opened for operation that the Central Pacific Company operated it?

A. It was.

Q. It was the first company that operated that line?

A. The first company.

Q. And your jurisdiction then extended all the way to New Orleans?

A. All the way to New Orleans."

William Henry Norton, Assistant Superintendent of the Southern Pacific Company's electric lines in Oakland, began in the employ of the Central Pacific Railroad Company in 1876 as a telegraph operator in Oakland. From 1879 to 1901 he was a train despatcher in Oakland.

He testified (II R. 550):

"Q. After it reached Goshen, and as sections of the road south of Goshen were opened for operation, what company took possession?

A. The Central Pacific.

Q. The Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Yes."

W. W. Slater began employment with the Central Pacific Railroad Company in 1869 as receiver of material for building. He was moved to various places on the Central Pacific line up to 1871, and in 1875 was employed as train despatcher in Oakland. Since 1885 he has been master of the signal system there.

He testified (II R. 527):

"Q. Do you know what company operated the road prior to 1885, prior to the advent of the Southern Pacific Company—what company operated those lines you have mentioned?

A. The officers were under the Central Pacific Railroad.

Q. The Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Yes.

Q. It operated the line to Mojave, as well as the line to Sacramento?

A. Well, it was under one set of officials, under one division superintendent, the men that I reported to.

Q. Do you know what company operated the line south of Mojave to Los Angeles?

A. It was under the same company, under the same general management.

Q. Were you ever over the line to Los Angeles?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever go over the line south of Los Angeles to El Paso?

A. After 1885 I did.

Q. Did you know, prior to 1885, how far the jurisdiction of the Central Pacific Railroad Company extended down south?

A. Under the general management of one set of officers, who were located at Fourth and Townsend Streets—I don't know whether they were Central Pacific or Southern Pacific at that time.

Q. So far as you know, there was only one set of officials?

A. One set of officials.

Q. They were the officials of what company?

A. Of the Central Pacific prior to 1885, and of the Southern Pacific Company after that time."

In addition to the foregoing excerpts, evidence of a similar nature may be found in the testimony of the witnesses Martin (II R. 420), Englebright (II R. 467), Luckett (II R. 541), Railton (II R. 571), Sheedy (II R. 597), Klink (II R. 599), Lister (II R. 531) and Richardson (II R. 635).

The following exhibits (circulars issued from the office of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, announcing the opening of different sections of the Sunset-Gulf line) are evidence of the Central Pacific Railroad Company's operation of that line prior to 1885:

(7) The leasing of the Southern Pacific lines to the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

It has already appeared that the Central Pacific Railroad Company operated the lines of the Southern Pacific from Goshen south from the time that they were constructed and ready for operation. The leases under which these Southern Pacific lines were held and operated by the Central Pacific Railroad Company have not been introduced in evidence because they were destroyed in the San Francisco fire of 1906. There is ample evidence in the record, however, of the existence of the Central Pacific Railroad Company's leases. The first line of evidence has already been detailed in showing the operation and possession of the Southern Pacific lines by the Central Pacific, and we shall now refer to the testimony in which specific mention is made of the Central Pacific Railroad Company's leased lines.

We have already spoken of the line from San Francisco south to Gilroy. It will be recalled that, in its early history, it was simply a local line tapping valleys south of San Francisco, and was separated from the Northern Division of Southern Pacific.

Northern Division ▬▬▬
S. P. - C. P. Arterial System ———

Southern Pacific construction south by the intervening Coast Range. This line, depicted in the accompanying map, was called the Northern Division of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's lines, and it was not embraced within the system operated under the name of "Central Pacific and Leased Lines." (See testimony of Hood, II R. 456; Redington, II R. 564; Railton, II R. 569; Klink, II R. 600; Richardson, II R. 635; and Hopkins, II R. 650.) According to the testimony of William Hood, the officers of the Northern Division of the Southern Pacific reported directly to the executive officers of the company and not to A. N. Towne, General Superintendent of the Central Pacific and its leased lines. In last analysis, therefore, the Northern Division of the Southern Pacific reported directly to Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker. Whether the operation was de jure by the Central Pacific or the Southern Pacific is not made clearly to appear, and is "unimportant" (239 Fed. 1000, foot; VI R. 2330, top).

With the exception of the Northern Division of the Southern Pacific, all the Southern Pacific lines were controlled by the Central Pacific Railroad Company from the time of their construction up to 1885.

H. B. Breckenfeld, a member of the Efficiency Committee of the Southern Pacific Company, was in the service of the Central Pacific Railroad Company in 1870 in the capacity of telegraph operator. From 1875 to 1906, his duties included the compilation of the working time tables for the Sacramento Division.

He testified (II R. 459):

"Q. . . . Who were operating the lines before the Southern Pacific Company took possession; what company?

A. The Central Pacific Railroad.

Q. It was operating its own lines?

A. It was operating its own lines, and also the lines which it had leased.

Q. Did that include the lines of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Yes."

C. H. REDINGTON was Assistant Treasurer at the general offices of the Southern Pacific Company in San Francisco at the time of the fire in 1906, and, in that position, was familiar with the Treasurer's records.

He testified (II R. 564):

"Q. The lines of the Southern Pacific of California, or of Arizona or of New Mexico, so far as they were operated by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, up to April 1, 1885, were operated by that company as a lessee?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on the stationery that has been put in, the significance of the words 'Central Pacific Railroad and leased lines' was the lines which I have described, which were owned by the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the lines of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company which had been leased to the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir."

TIMOTHY HOPKINS testified (II R. 649-650):

"Q. Your jurisdiction as treasurer of the Central Pacific Railroad Company extended from 1882 to 1885, over what lines of railroad?

A. Over the Central Pacific main lines and its leased lines; all of the property of the Central Pacific Railroad.

Q. Generally, what lines did the Central Pacific Railroad Company lease?

A. Various subsidiary lines; a line from Goshen down the San Joaquin Valley to the south.

Q. How far did the line extend from Goshen south?

A. To Yuma; likewise, the Northern Railway of California, from Oakland to Lathrop, and quite a number of other subsidiary lines. The reports will show.

Q. The Central Pacific Railroad Company, during that time, until the Southern Pacific Company took possession in 1885, was also operating all these lines as lessee?

A. It was the operating company for all the lines.

Q. Was it lessee of the lines south of Yuma, or east of Yuma?

A. Yes.

Q. How far did its jurisdiction extend as lessee?

A. Its jurisdiction extended as lessee through the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of Arizona, the S. P. of New Mexico, running through to El Paso. During the first years of my connection with the company the line was finished through to New Orleans, and I think the Central Pacific operated the line as far south as the Pecos River, and perhaps a little beyond. I do not now recall whether we went through to San Antonio on that operation or not."

He again testified (II R. 685):

"Q. In the operation of the Southern Pacific Railroad and of the Central Pacific Railroad up to the spring of 1885, the Central Pacific Railroad Company acted as the operating company, did it not?

A. Yes.

Q. It operated the Central Pacific Railroad as its own, and the Southern Pacific Railroad as a lessee?

A. Yes; it was the Central Pacific Railroad and Leased Lines.

Q. And the Central Pacific Railroad Company, in operating those lines, operated them as one railroad would naturally operate any several railroads over which it held a lease or leases?

A. It operated it as one system, if that is what you mean."

HENRY CLAY MARTIN, who had started work in the Central Pacific shops at Sacramento during the construction of the line to Ogden and who continued as engineer and conductor during most of the southern construction work and up to 1890, testified as follows (II R. 425-426):

"Q. Mr. Towne was general manager of the Southern Pacific Railroad and of the Central Pacific Railroad, was he not?

A. Yes, sir. Well, the passes and letterheads were headed 'Central Pacific Railroad Company and leased lines'."

. . . . . .

Q. How late did the Central Pacific Railroad continue to operate both those lines?

A. I could not tell you. I could not tell you that; but while I was working on the road, I know that their letterheads and passes that were issued were headed 'Central Pacific Railroad Company and leased lines.' "

R. H. PRATT testified (II R. 523):

"Q. The Central Pacific operated the part of the line from San Francisco to Goshen as the Central Pacific property, did it not?

A. It did.

. . . . . .

Q. And the line from Goshen to New Orleans as the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's property under lease to the Central Pacific, is that correct, as far as the Southern Pacific's rails extended? Is that correct, Mr. Pratt?

A. That is correct.

Q. From the ultimate extension of the Southern Pacific's rails to the eastern boundary line of New Mexico to tidewater at New Orleans. To put the matter simply—from El Paso to New Orleans, did the Central Pacific Railroad Company operate that property as well?

A. They did."

He also testified (II R. 489-490):

"Q. That letterhead, as we call it, was the letterhead you officials were using for the Central Pacific Railroad Company, was it?

A. It was.

Q. And the only change was stamping across it in red ink 'Southern Pacific Company'?

A. That is all the change."

. . . . . .

The letterhead which the witness so described, was dated San Francisco, April 6, 1885. The printed form of the heading was as follows:

"CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD CO.
and LEASED LINES
Office General Passenger and Ticket Agent.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agent.
R. A. DONALDSON, Asst. Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agent."

The words "Southern Pacific Company" were stamped over the words "Central Pacific Railroad Company," the Southern Pacific having become the operating company six days before the date of the letter.

JULIUS KRUTTSCHNITT, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Board of Directors of the Southern Pacific Company, entered the railroad service in 1878 as engineer on construction of the Morgan, Louisiana and Texas Railroad and Steamship Company. In 1883 he became superintendent of that road, and in 1885 he was assistant general manager of the Atlantic System of the Southern Pacific Company. In 1895 he was made general manager of the entire Southern Pacific Company, and in 1913 he assumed his present office (II R. 705).

He testified (II R. 709):

> "Q. Do you remember seeing, during this period (1883-1885), any bulletins posted at La Fayette?
> A. Yes; the bulletins of the west end were always posted on the bulletin boards at La Fayette.
> Q. How were they headed?
> A. They were headed generally 'Central Pacific Railroad Company and Leased Lines'."

The following exhibits (circulars issued from the office of the Central Pacific Railroad Company prior to 1885) are headed "Central Pacific Railroad Company and Leased Lines":

Defendants' Exhibit No. 9 (V, R. 1678).
Defendants' Exhibit No. 10 (V, R. 1679).
Defendants' Exhibit No. 15 (V, R. 1681).
Defendants' Exhibit No. 16 (V, R. 1682).
Defendants' Exhibit No. 18 (V, R. 1682).
Defendants' Exhibit No. 19 (V, R. 1683).

Defendants' Exhibit No. 14 (V, R. 1681) contains a reference to the Central Pacific Railroad Company and Leased Lines.

(8) Identity of management and equipment in the construction and operation of the Central Pacific-Southern Pacific system and its control by Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker.

Frequent mention has been made of the fact that the Southern Pacific lines were operated by the Central Pacific Railroad Company as soon as they were constructed. In addition to this evidence of unified management, the record contains abundant testimony to the effect that the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific lines were built by the same people and managed by the same interests.

JAMES HARVEY STROBRIDGE, eighty-eight years of age, who started work for the Central Pacific Railroad Company in 1864 and was superintendent of construction for that company during the time when most of the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific lines were built (II R. 398), testified as follows:

"Q. Was it the same on the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as it was on the Central Pacific Railroad Company? That is the question I would ask.

A. It was the same.

Q. Did you use the same outfit, the same implements on the one line that you did on the other?

A. Yes.

Q. In doing all this work, didn't you move substantially that same outfit around on the different sections of line that you have described?

A. Always.

Q. In other words, you did not have one outfit for the Southern Pacific and another outfit for the Central Pacific?

A. No, sir. Lots of the tools and horses that we used on the Central went on to the Southern.

Q. And back again when you did work for the Central at last?

A. They came right back, moved back." (II R. 409) . . .

"Q. In giving orders to you and instructions concerning this work, what individuals controlled it?

A. Well, Mr. Crocker more particularly; sometimes C. P. Huntington and sometimes Leland

Stanford and sometimes Mark Hopkins did. (II R. 399) . . .

Q. Did you make any reports of the progress of that work [Texas construction] to anyone, and if so, to whom?

A. Yes; I reported to C. P. Huntington . . . about the time we commenced work at Casa Grande I got instructions from Mr. Huntington to report the track laying to him at New York every night, which I did. (II R. 405) . . .

Q. You had worked on the Central Pacific line, main line; . . . also on the Southern Pacific, main line from Goshen to Pecos River. Was there any difference in the people you were working for in one line as contradistinguished from the other?

A. No, sir; I took my orders from Charles Crocker, Leland Stanford, Mark Hopkins, and C. P. Huntington, and no one else. Their order, from any of them, was always good to me. (II R. 408-9) . . .

Q. From time to time you used to get working directions from Mr. Crocker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And sometimes you would get working directions from Mr. Huntington?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the same way from Mr. Stanford or Mr. Hopkins?

A. Yes, sir. As I say, not from Mr. Hopkins, because Mr. Hopkins had died prior to the organization of that company.

Q. When any one of those gentlemen gave you directions, you did not care particularly whether he was doing it as president of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company or the Central Pacific Railroad Company or the Contract & Finance Company or the Pacific Improvement Company?

A. They were authoritative.

Q. Then you did not know at any particular time in which capacity they might be talking with you?

A. They talked to me as owners" (II R. 411-412).

HENRY CLAY MARTIN, a locomotive engineer in the early period of the Central Pacific Railroad Company's history, testified (II R. 420-422):

"Q. Did you see him [Mr. Charles Crocker] during the time of this work from Yuma to Pecos River?

A. Yes. He used to come down very often.

Q. Did he have anything to do with the work?

A. Yes, sir; we thought that he was the whole head of the outfit.

Q. Did you know Mr. Leland Stanford?

A. Yes.

Q. Did he have anything to do with this?

A. Yes. He was not down there as often as Mr. Crocker was.

Q. Did you know Mr. C. P. Huntington?

A. Yes. . . .

Q. Did you have anything to do with building any part of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's line from near Soledad?

A. Yes.

Q. What part of it?

A. From Soledad to San Margarita.

Q. What year was that, if you remember?

A. I think that was in 1886, if I recollect correctly, or 1887.

Q. Who were you working for down there?

A. The same outfit. No change.

Q. The same men?

A. Yes, sir; the same officials.

Q. The same men you were working for in Arizona, New Mexico and Texas?

A. Yes.

Q. The same men you were working for from Redding to Ashland?

A. Yes.

Q. And you had the same outfit?

A. Yes.

Q. It was just a continuation of the same outfit of engines, and so forth?

A. Yes; all Central Pacific equipment.

Q. It was all Central Pacific Railroad?

A. Yes.

Q. Who was your paymaster during all of this work?

A. The same paymaster. Part of the time he was Mr. Hanford, and sometimes it was C. H. Redington.

Q. What company were they acting for?

A. We did not know any other but the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

WILLIAM HOOD, in describing the construction done in Texas under the name of the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railroad Company, said (II R. 435-436) that the work was

"under my supervision, however, to the extent that, under the direct orders of Mr. Charles Crocker, I would go down there occasionally and revise their line and direct line changes, and approve or veto proposed contracts.

This completed what is known as the Sunset Route as far as San Antonio, Texas. East of San Antonio, Texas, I have no knowledge of it whatever.

Q. You spoke of Mr. Crocker having to do with the construction of that line to San Antonio?

A. Yes.

Q. What did he have to do with it?

A. Well, you understand I mean between San Antonio and a point midway between Langtry and the Pecos River crossing.

Q. You have spoken of him as having to do with this line—I mean the line all the way from Goshen to San Antonio.

A. He had to do with it in this way—just to illustrate: I received a telegram from him by messenger from the military telegraph station to go quickly to the vicinity of the mouth of Devil's River, at the Rio Grande River, and see what was doing, whether the contract should be let, whether the route was right, and in general, to tell them what to do; and I went and did it, of course.

Q. He gave instructions as to that also, just as he had done on the Central Pacific?

A. Exactly the same.

The WITNESS. That is, my relations with Mr. Charles Crocker were, on the entire construction that I had to do with between Lathrop, California, and San Antonio, Texas, of the same character as my relations with Mr. Charles Crocker on the construction of the Central Pacific Railroad and its branches."

He also testified (II R. 436-437):

"Q. What arrangements were used to pay these forces while you were doing the work, from time to time?

A. In general, they were paid from the same pay car that paid the operating force, train men, shopmen and section men.

Q. The pay car of what company was that?

A. The Central Pacific Railroad.

Q. The pay car that came down over the part of the line that was being operated by the Central Pacific Railroad Company would continue on to the front and pay the construction forces?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who, if you remember, were in charge of that pay car?

A. Major Hanford was in charge a great deal of the time. . . .

. . . . . .

Q. What position did Major Hanford hold?

A. He was known to us as paymaster.

Q. Of what company?

A. Of the Central Pacific Railroad Company."

Again (II R. 438):

"Q. But the final authority in these matters was held by what men?

The WITNESS. I would take orders, during their lifetimes, without question, on any matter, from either Mr. Mark Hopkins, Mr. Charles Crocker, Mr. Leland Stanford, Mr. C. P. Huntington, and after Mr. Charles Crocker's death, from Charles F. Crocker."

H. ENGLEBRIGHT has been employed by the Central Pacific Railroad Company since 1871, as blacksmith, round-house foreman and master car repairer. He testified (II R. 466-467):

"Q. Do you know about the use of engines and equipment of these different companies, the Central Pacific, the Southern Pacific of California, the Southern Pacific of Arizona, the Southern Pacific of New Mexico, and the G. H. & S. A.? Were those engines, those locomotives, used indiscriminately over the different lines?

A. Yes, they were used indiscriminately over the different lines, with reference to the classes of the different types that were needed.

Q. State whether or not you have seen engines and rolling stock labeled 'S. P. of Mexico', for example, or 'S. P. of Arizona', in use on the California lines?

A. Yes.

Q. Also Central Pacific rolling stock in use on the lines of the Southern Pacific Railroad in California?

A. Yes, we had them C. P., S. P., S. P. Cal., Northern Railway, S. P. of Arizona, New Mexico, and so forth. They were used indiscriminately on the western division at that time.

Q. Do you remember the two large locomotives, supposed to be large at that time, No. 229 Central Pacific and No. 237 Central Pacific?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you know about them?

A. I know that they were being built at the Sacramento shops, and I made a number of visits up there to look at them while they were under construction; and they were taken south and used on the Southern Pacific, on the Tehachapi hill."

Again (II R. 468):

"Q. What do you know about the company that was operating the Southern Pacific Railroad line south of Goshen to Los Angeles prior to the time the Southern Pacific Company took it in 1885 or 1886, as you have stated?

A. It was all operated under one head, the same managers.

Q. What head was that?

A. The Central Pacific Railroad."

R. H. PRATT testified (II R. 483):

"Q. Now, from the beginning, Mr. Pratt, who were the controlling officials and stockholders, as you saw them in everyday life and in your business, of the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Leland Stanford, C. P. Huntington, Charles Crocker and Mark Hopkins.

Q. Did you know each of those gentlemen yourself?

A. I knew them personally.

Q. Did you ever have to do with them, or any of them, in your official business while operating the Central Pacific Railroad?

A. Quite often; more especially with Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Crocker, in my history of the road.

Q. Did you receive instructions from them?

A. I did receive instructions.

Q. And obeyed them?

A. Always, if I could.

Q. How long did that status continue of their control, or, as you observed it, from the time you began with the company?

A. As long as I was connected with the company, except two who died previous.

Q. Who were they?

A. Charles Crocker and Mark Hopkins.

Q. During the lifetime of Mr. Hopkins and during the lifetime of Mr. Crocker they each continued actively in the management of the Central Pacific Railroad?

A. They did.

Q. Who were the gentlemen that determined finally the questions that had to be decided for the Central Pacific Railroad in its financial and executive department?

A. Leland Stanford, Charles Crocker, C. P. Huntington and Mark Hopkins.

Q. How do you know that? I want to get at what facts you base that statement on.

A. I know it from taking their orders from them and working for them and with them; that is, they were on the work frequently, one of them, almost one or the other of them was always at the work and the other in the office."

Again (II R. 510):

"Q. You did not understand that those gentlemen (Huntington, Hopkins, Stanford and Crocker) were owners in any sense except as they were stockholders in the corporation?

A. I did. I understand that they were owners.

. . . . . .

Q. Owners of what?

A. Owners of the road they were building."

Again (II R. 524):

"Q. Speaking now from your intimate and direct connection with the properties as assistant general superintendent, is it not the fact that the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at all times within your related experience when the two properties were in concurrent existence, is it not the fact that at all times they were operated as a unified property?

The WITNESS. It is a fact."

EDGAR MELVILLE LUCKETT started work for the Central Pacific Railroad Company in 1873 in the Sacramento shops, where he was employed as a journeyman up to 1875 (II R. 532). He built engine No. 237 which was used on the Tehachapi mountain (II R. 533). He was made general foreman of the Sacramento shops and held that position up to 1893.

The witness testified (II R. 533-535):

"Q. During the time you were in the Sacramento shops, for what roads did you do work, building locomotives, and the like?

A. We did work for all the roads, that is, several of the S. P.'s and the C. P.'s, and did some work for the Oregon road, and we did a lot of work for the S. P. of Cal., S. P. of A.—S. P. of Arizona—the G. H. & S. A.—all the roads.

Q. When you say 'C. P.' you mean Central Pacific?

A. Yes.

Q. And 'S. P.' is Southern Pacific?

A. Yes.

Q. And G. H. & S. A. means Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio?

A. Yes.

Q. Where is the road of that company located?

A. Down in Texas.

Q. Do you remember the Southern Pacific Railroad of New Mexico, having anything to do with that?

A. Yes, we built locomotives for them. They were commonly called S. P. of N. M.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the building of pumping stations along those lines?

A. Yes, down on the desert of Arizona we built several new pumping stations. They had to haul water there for years, and we built several quite extensive pumping stations there.

Q. Did you have anything to do with furnishing track supplies and materials to those lines?

A. Yes, we furnished, I guess, all the spikes and bolts and fish plates that were used on the Southern Pacific, that is, most all of them; we could furnish them cheaper than we could buy them at that time.

Q. Do you remember at any time running overtime or extra time in doing this work?

A. Yes; there was a portion of the time, in doing a portion of the work on the Southern Pacific, that we had to work night and day to keep up with our orders for bolts, spikes and nuts.

Q. What roads?

A. Down in Arizona, the S. P. of A., when they were building that.

Q. Did you have anything to do with, or ever set up any locomotives for the G. H. & S. A.?

A. Yes, all of the engines that came out for those different roads came to Sacramento, towed out in a train and put together there and set up and shipped to the different places, or consigned to wherever they needed them the worst.

. . . . . .

Q. That was the only general shop?

A. That was the only general shop that the company had.

Q. And that supplied all these roads you have mentioned?

A. Yes, with material of all kinds, and locomotives.

Q. The general repairs were made to those locomotives at what point, at Sacramento?

A. All divisions shipped their engines in there for general repairs; that is, what we called heavy general repairs. There was nothing but small division shops on the different divisions, both south and east.

Q. What sort of repairs did you make at those division shops?

A. Light repairs, running repairs; but never did any heavy work.

Q. Did you know anything about furnishing enginemen and journeymen mechanics, and employees of that sort to the different divisions of those roads, both the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What about that?

A. Well, if we had a surplus of men on any division on the C. P., and the S. P. had a rush of business and they wanted more men, we would send them down there, transfer them, and when they got through we would bring them back; and the same way with mechanics, if we had a surplus of mechanics; these different divisions when they wanted mechanics or engineers, always called on Sacramento, called on the general master mechanic; that is, if they could not pick them up themselves.

Q. From what you say, these shops at Sacramento seemed to be practically as much a shop for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as for the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Was there any distinction made with respect to the ownership of those lines?

A. No, sir."

Again (II R. 539):

"Q. After 1885 what company operated the Pacific system?

A. The Central Pacific. Well, I guess it was the S. P. then, but it was the same men.

Q. I wanted to find out what company it was; which one was it?

A. Well, after that the S. P.; our stationery and everything came out more with 'S. P.'

Q. Don't you know, after 1885, which company was operating the lines west of El Paso?

A. I did not know any difference between S. P. and C. P. It was all managed by the same men, and there wasn't any more men or any less men; all that we knew was that we were working for the same men, and getting our pay from the same pay car."

And again (II R. 543):

"Q. As a matter of fact, through all this time you did not particularly know which of these various railroad companies or other companies were employing you, or operating these various railroads, did you?

A. When I first came to work for the company, of course, there was no S. P. to speak of, but it was C. P. Everything was C. P., C. P., and as long as I worked for them, if anybody asked me where I was working, I would say I was working for the C. P., and I might have been working for the S. P. It was all one company, one set of officers, bosses."

C. H. Redington testified (II. R. 553-5):

"Q. What was the business, as far as you know, of the Contract & Finance Company, the Western Development Company and the Pacific Improvement Company?

A. Constructing railroads.

Q. In a general way I will ask you to state the roads that you know they constructed, or that were constructed through the instrumentalities of those companies.

A. The Central Pacific Railroad to Goshen; railroads, I think, south of Goshen; and I know they did south of Spadre. Also they built the branch line from Saugus to Santa Barbara. They built the line through Arizona and New Mexico and through Texas to Pecos River. They built the lines to Needles from Mojave.

Q. While you were paymaster did you see that construction work, or any part of it?

A Yes, sir

Q What was the occasion of your being out to the front, as we call it?

A. I was assistant paymaster of the Central Pacific Company, but I also paid off the construction men for these construction companies. I would go to the end of the track with the pay car, and then take teams and pay the construction men at sometimes thirty or forty miles from the end of the track.

Q. How often did you go out to the front?

A. Sometimes once a month, and sometimes only once in two months.

Q. Did you, at the same time this line was being built from Goshen south, go over the main Central Pacific line in the same way and pay off the men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the construction of the road south of Goshen all the way to El Paso, as I understand it, you were paymaster of the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. I surely was, since they built south of Bakersfield."

. . . . . .

"Q. Did you go as far as El Paso?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go beyond El Paso?

A. Yes, sir; I went as far as Pecos River."

Again (II R. 565):

"Q. And prior to April 1, 1885, did the Central Pacific Railroad Company occupy the same position as bankers for all the companies?

A. So I understood, yes.

Q. As the payments were made, they were made more or less after a clearing house method, and charged to the various companies to which the particular payments were chargeable?

A. Well, I don't know; I am more familiar with the Pacific Improvement Company. I do not think they had any bank account themselves. At times they borrowed a large amount of money, and would turn it over to the Central Pacific and later the Southern Pacific; that is, if they wanted money, they would draw on the Central Pacific or the Southern Pacific Company, and if they had any amount of money, they would turn it in to the treasurer of the Central Pacific, until after 1885, and then to the Southern Pacific."

EDWARD M. RAILTON was in the employ of the Central Pacific Railroad Company from 1869 to 1885, first as telegraph operator and later as master of transportation. He testified (II R. 573-574):

"Q. Did you personally know C. P. Huntington, Leland Stanford, Charles Crocker and Mark Hopkins?

A. Yes, I knew each and every one of them.

Q. Did they have anything to do with these roads we have been talking about?

A. Yes; we recognized them as being the practical owners.

. . . . . .

Q. What did they have to do, these gentlemen or either of them, with these roads, the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad, that you know of your own knowledge?

A. Well, I know that their instructions, as regards operations of any kind, were followed.

Q. What did Charles Crocker have to do, especially, if anything?

A. Mr. Charles Crocker, more particularly than any of the others, took charge of construction and operation."

Again (II R. 575-576):

"Q. What was the practice of routing trains? Did you consider the ownership of the lines, or did you take the most practicable and best route for trains, without reference to ownership?

The WITNESS. There was no regard paid to the ownership of the various companies. We routed trains by whichever was the best and most direct route.

Q. Can you give instances where that was done?

A. Yes; trains were diverted, directed to go, if you please, via Port Costa and Benicia to Sacramento, or via Antioch and Tracy, or, if you please, by way of Livermore and Tracy. Train service was maintained without any regard to the actual mileage made, in order to meet the exigencies of the occasion."

And again (II R. 576-577):

"Q. Do you know where the general repairs were made to cars and locomotives on all these lines under your jurisdiction from 1880 to 1885?

A. Sacramento principally, construction and general repairs, overhauls; also at Oakland.

Q. That is, the Sacramento shops of the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Yes.

Q. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company had no shops there?

A. No, sir.

Q. And those shops made repairs for the Southern Pacific Railroad line all the way to El Paso, just as it did for the Central Pacific line to Ogden?

A. Those were our general repair shops, for both cars and locomotives.

Q. Now, as to the equipment purchased for use on those lines, were they allotted to the ownership of different companies?

A. As far as the marking of the cars was concerned, some were marked 'Southern Pacific' and some of them marked 'Central Pacific'.

Q. Did you ever see any G. H. & S. A.?

A. Freight cars, yes; and occasionally passenger cars. So far as freight cars were concerned, there were innumerable markings.

Q. Did you ever mark any cars 'S. P. of A.'?

A. S. P. of A., and S. P. of N. M.

Q. Were those cars and locomotives marked in this way used on the particular line for which they were marked, or were they used indiscriminately?

A. Indiscriminately; locomotives marked 'S. P. of New Mexico' would haul trains between Sacramento and Oakland, and engines marked 'Central Pacific' would be hauling trains out of Los Angeles, in both passenger and freight service.

Q. So the equipment was used wherever it was suitable?

A. Indiscriminately.

Q. Without reference to its marking?

A. Without any reference to it whatever.

Q. And all these lines were operated as one system?

The WITNESS. Yes."

JOHN E. FOULDS, who entered the service of the Central Pacific Railroad Company in August, 1871, and after January, 1876, acted as attorney for that company and its allied and subordinate corporations (II R. 578-579), testified (II R. 579-582):

"Q. Did you know Leland Stanford, C. P. Huntington, Charles Crocker, and Mark Hopkins?

A. Very well.

Q. In your work that you have mentioned, did you meet those gentlemen?

A. I met them frequently.

Q. Did you meet the gentlemen you have mentioned at any time for purposes of conference or in your work as attorney for the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and afterwards the Southern Pacific Company?

A. Quite a number of times; sometimes there were two or three of them present, at other times I conferred, perhaps, with but one of them.

Q. Do you know whether or not they gave instructions or directions concerning the corporate action of any of those companies?

A. I very frequently got instructions from them as to business that they desired to execute, and in proper cases, where it required some action by the board of directors of those companies, I would draw the necessary resolutions and advise their adoption.

Q. But ordinarily was the practice to put those matters before the board of directors, or were they disposed of by these gentlemen or some of them?

A. Well, practically they were disposed of by these gentlemen personally, or some of them."

. . . . . .

"Q. Before that time (1885) what company operated all of these lines; all of the companies mentioned, except the northern division?

A. The Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Q. And what you have said concerning the control or authority exercised by the four gentlemen you have mentioned, or their successors, refers to the Southern Pacific Company as well as the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Q. And does it also refer to the construction companies, the Contract & Finance Company, the Western Development Company and the Pacific Improvement Company?

A. All of those companies.

Q. And the Southern Pacific Railroad Company?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Q. Under whose instructions were you acting when you organized the Pacific Improvement Company?

A. I think under the instructions of Governor Stanford.

Q. Did you attend to business arising on all these lines and any of them, the Southern Pacific Railroad, the Central Pacific, or any of these corporations in California, or the Pacific Improvement Company?

A. Oh, yes; we treated them as all belonging to our regular law department business.

Q. The law department covered all of the lines?

A. All of those lines.

Q. And you were just as much attorney for the Southern Pacific in Arizona as you were for the Central Pacific Railroad in Nevada?

A. Practically."

Again (II R. 587-588):

"Q. I will ask you whether the actions of those men had any reference to whether they were an officer or director of any particular corporation.

The WITNESS. I cannot say that they had; but it was always assumed that they had the necessary authority to order the operations directed by them.

Q. For instance, I remember that neither one of those gentlemen was an officer at all of the Pacific Improvement Company, and yet, within your knowledge, did not those gentlemen control and direct that corporation, just as much as any other of those corporations mentioned?

The WITNESS, Yes."

And again (II R. 589):

"Q. And yet was there any distinction in the supervising control or authority of these men exercised as to the corporations they were directors or officers in, as compared with those in which they were not?

A. They controlled them all in the same way.

Q. During the lifetime of Mr. Huntington, Mr. Crocker and Mr. Stanford, did you notice any lessening of the control or influence they had over the Central Pacific or the Southern Pacific?

The WITNESS. No, I cannot say that I did."

PATRICK SHEEDY has been in the employ of the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific Companies as machinist, foreman, and Superintendent of Motive Power since 1868. He testified (II R. 593-595):

"Q. Did you or did you not repair engines that were used on that line in Arizona, New Mexico and even in Texas?

A. I do not recall any coming from Texas; but I repaired engines from west of El Paso. We sent engines into Texas.

Q. Did you or did you not furnish any material that was used in the construction of the Sunset Line, we will call it, from Goshen to El Paso?

A. I had nothing to do with the furnishing of material. I did not furnish any.

Q. Do you remember whether any engine men were detailed from the shops to go to that line?

A. I remember; engine men were detailed to go with the engines and take them down there.

Q. Do you remember the engines labeled '229 C. P.' and '237 C. P.'?

A. I do.

Q. Where were those engines built?

A. They were built in Sacramento.

Q. At the shops in Sacramento?

A. At the Central Pacific shops in Sacramento.

Q. And where were those engines used?

A. They were used on the Tehachapi Mountain.

Q. On the Southern Pacific line?

A. Yes, on the Southern Pacific line.

Q. To what company did those engines belong?

A. They were marked 'Central Pacific'.

Q. Did you notice any engines marked 'S. P. R. R. of Cal.' at any time?

A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. Do you know to what company those engines belonged.

A. I presumed they belonged to the same company that owned all the engines, and were simply marked that way to designate them from others that were assigned to other districts.

Q. Your knowledge consisted merely of the marking of the engines? Did you have occasion to go further, and to know exactly where the ownership of those engines resided, whether in one company or another?

A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. Do you remember any engines marked 'S. P. of A.'?

A. I do.

Q. What did that label mean?

A. Southern Pacific of Arizona.

Q. Do you remember any engines marked 'S. P. of N. M.'?

A. I do.

Q. What did that label import?

A. Southern Pacific of New Mexico.

Q. Were those two last mentioned engines used on the California lines in California?

A. They were, when required.

Q. Do you know about the distribution of this rolling stock, as to how it was distributed; whether or not there was any regard paid to the ownership of the lines?

The WITNESS. I never knew that there was any distinction made in distributing the engines."

GEORGE T. KLINK became a clerk in the accounting department of the Central Pacific Railroad Company in 1883. He was appointed Auditor of disbursements for the Southern Pacific Company in 1895, and held that position until 1904. He testified (II R. 609):

"Q. Was there any interchange of rolling stock between the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the northern division of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in those days prior to April 1, 1885?

A. I believe that there was, to a limited extent, anyway.

Q. Was that charged and credited on some per diem or mileage basis?

A. No, sir; I think not."

Again (II R. 612):

"Q. The lessee company was practically, in all fiscal matters, the banker for all the different companies?

A. Yes.

. . . . . .

Q. There were material differences in the personnel of the officers and directors of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company?

A. A great many of them were the same individuals. There were exceptions. For the most part, the directors or the owners of the property, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, were also directors of the Southern Pacific Company."

JAMES HORSBURGH, JR., said (II R. 629) that at that time the jurisdiction of the General Passenger Department of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company extended to New Orleans.

He further testified (II R. 630-631):

"Q. Did you know Leland Stanford?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know C. P. Huntington?

A. Yes.

Q. Charles Crocker?

A. Yes.

Q. Mark Hopkins?

A. Yes.

Q. Did they have anything to do with these lines?

A. We considered them the owners; all instructions came from them.

Q. Did you receive instructions from those men, or any of them?

A. Yes, from each of them."

TIMOTHY HOPKINS (II R. 649):

"Q. Your jurisdiction as treasurer of the Central Pacific Railroad Company extended from 1882 to 1885, over what lines of railroad?

A. Over the Central Pacific main lines and its leased lines; all of the property of the Central Pacific Railroad."

He further testified (II R. 651):

"Q. Did you, as treasurer of the Central Pacific, have anything to do with the Pacific Improvement Company?

A. Yes.

. . . . . .

Q. Did you have anything to do with obtaining moneys for the Pacific Improvement Company to pay its expenditures?

A. Yes. Do you want the process, Mr. Herrin?

Q. Yes.

A. The Pacific Improvement Company was the constructing company and had large expenditures to make. Money was deposited with me as treasurer of the Central Pacific Railroad Company up to 1885, and as treasurer of the Southern Pacific Company thereafter. They drew drafts against these amounts deposited with me, and they generally had a large balance on hand, running into heavy amounts. Occasionally they might run short, but the drafts were paid just the same; and in these rare instances when the money would not be on hand to meet the drafts, I personally would go out and borrow the money of somebody in San Francisco to make good.

Q. You would borrow the money for what company?

A. For the Pacific Improvement Company. I had no official connection with that company, nor was I an officer of it, but it was a part of my duty to keep alive the notes that were outstanding."

Again (II R. 654):

"Q. Was there, at any time, in any of these meetings, any adverse vote or votes in opposition to the wishes of the Huntington, Stanford and Crocker interests?

The WITNESS. During the time that I was a director there was never a meeting of the stockholders or directors in which there were adverse interests. Everything was unanimous and directed by the four parties in interest."

Again (II R. 669):

"Q. Did the fact that Messrs. Stanford, Huntington, Crocker and yourself were not directors in any of these subordinate companies, affect in any way your control or management of the property owned by those companies?

A. Not at all. The companies were managed as a unity. The directions given by the four parties in interest were irrespective as to whether they were directors in that corporation or not. I know that was my action. I never stopped to consider whether I was a director of any company. When there were things to be decided and done, I gave my instructions and they were followed accordingly."

Again (II R. 672):

"Q. Was there ever any distinction made between the lines of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company on account of their ownership? What I mean by that is, were they operated separately or were they operated together, as if they were in one ownership?

The WITNESS. They were operated as one company; no distinction made as to which line was which.

Q. Do you know who were the owners of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company at the time it began its operations in 1885?

A. Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker owned most, if not all, of the stock. I, for the moment, do not recollect whether Mr. Pierce, through the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Company and eastern lines there, received some of that stock or not.

Q. I think these minutes show that he did.

A. That is my impression, that he did, and that it was owned by S. H. H. C. and Pierce, and I think some of the Morgan people took a little of the stock also, but I will not be certain as to that feature of it.

Q. State whether or not at all times that you have mentioned the H. H. S. & C. interests were the owners of a clear majority of the Southern Pacific Company's stock.

A. Yes, undoubtedly, a great majority."

Again (II R. 678):

"Q. So far as the exact ownership of the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company at that particular date (1884) is concerned, you really know nothing except the fact that it is in Mr. Brown's handwriting?

A. Yes. I do know this, that the control of the Central Pacific was in the hands of the 'big four' interests, Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker. The exact number of shares that each held in their own name, or in the names of others, I cannot recall; but that there was a control of the company by those four interests, there was never any question as to that.

Q. You mean a voting control?

A. A voting control, absolute control, and a managing control."

And again (II R. 689):

"Q. Is not that about the situation?

A. The control of the Central Pacific was likewise in the hands of the four interests at the time. The Central Pacific had been the leasing company, and in the changing of those relations, which were of course satisfactory to the stockholders at the time—or it would not have been done—I think that it was considered to be a proper thing to put that company beyond any peradventure of criticism upon a change that might have appeared sudden to some of the outside stockholders. To that extent your question is pertinent and right.

Q. That is, the southern lines, using that to describe the line through El Paso which I have mentioned, was not only controlled as a corporate voting matter, but was very nearly entirely owned by these same interests that were coming into the Southern Pacific Company?

A. Yes.

Q. So that they were, so to speak, the whole thing on both sides of the trade, so far as the lease was concerned?

A. All of those companies were controlled by the same parties, including the Central Pacific."

Julius Kruttschnitt testified (II R. 706-707):

"Q. At or about the opening of this through line, in 1883, had you any reason for believing that Mr. Huntington and his associates owned or controlled the Morgan Company? And if so, state what those reasons were. By 'Mr. Huntington and his associates' I mean Mr. Huntington, Leland Stanford, Charles Crocker and the Hopkins estate.

A. The first time I had any reason to suspect ownership or control by Mr. Huntington and associates was a visit of Mr. William Mahl, who was one of his confidential men, in the spring of 1882. Mr. Mahl came and looked over the property, which he did in great detail, and I was detailed to go over the property with Mr. Mahl and show him everything he wanted to see. From that I inferred that something was going to happen, or possibly had happened. Shortly after that I met Mr. Charles F. Crocker and went over part of the road with him, and also met Governor Stanford; I think it was probably the only time, or the second time, that I had ever seen him. I was also detailed to go over the line with him. The first time I ever saw Mr. Huntington himself was in 1884.

Q. How did Mr. Huntington act with reference to the road; as an outsider or as one interested in it?

A. Of course I never came in direct contact with him, except on this one occasion, but I was in continual conference with Mr. Hutchinson, and I knew by instructions that he gave me and letters that he showed me that he was receiving instructions from Mr. Huntington.

Q. The letters he showed you were from Mr. Huntington?

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Huntington was not at that time an officer of the Morgan Company?

A. No.

Q. Did Mr. Hutchinson obey the instructions of Mr. Huntington?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. That was in 1883 and 1884?

A. And 1884."

He further testified (II R. 710-711):

"Q. Was there anything in those early times in the construction of the G. H. & S. A. which you observed, the materials used or otherwise, to show a connection with the Central Pacific Railroad Company? If so, what were those evidences of connection with the Central Pacific?

Q. How about the rails?

A. A great many of the rails were rolled by the same makers. There was one maker in particular that I heard Mr. Huntington speak of, Cammel of Sheffield, who, he said, had made him the best rails for the Central Pacific he had ever gotten, and that he had ordered rails from him for the G. H. & S. A. They were the same weight, the same cross section and the same length as the Central Pacific rails. The switches and frogs were actually Central Pacific, because they were made in Sacramento and were shipped down to the line of the G. H. & S. A.

Q. How about the train rules?

A. The train rules for the lines west of La Fayette were the Central Pacific rules. In all of my correspondence with the officers of the lines west of La Fayette I never remember their using any letterheads except 'Central Pacific and Leased Lines'."

H. B. BRECKENFELD testified (II R. 458):

"Q. In arranging these time tables and routing trains, was any attention paid to the ownership of these particular lines, or were they regarded as one property?

The WITNESS. The time tables were compiled with the idea of performing the best service; there was no attention paid to the corporate boundaries."

ARCHIE LISTER, a train dispatcher in Oakland from 1872 to 1900, testified as follows (II R. 531):

"Q. You handled the trains during certain hours as far as Mojave?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Needles as well?

A. Yes; when they opened that line.

Q. And you were working for what company when you did that?

A. The Central Pacific, western division. That was called the Western Pacific when I started in, when I first started in.

Q. You were working on what was called the Western Pacific then?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did you continue to work for the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Well, until they retired me, as far as I know 1910.

Q. You never heard of the Southern Pacific Company?

A. Only just about 1885, or somewhere in that neighborhood, the cars and locomotives and so on were initialed S. P., and some C. P.

Q. Did you ever work for the Southern Pacific Company?

A. Well, it was all the one thing to me. I did not know the difference, in fact."

Reference may also be made to testimony to similar effect given by the witnesses Johnson (II R. 548), Richardson (II R. 637) and Jackson (II R. 642).

(9) Steps taken between March 17, 1884, and April 1, 1885, for the organization of the Southern Pacific Company, for the termination of the leases to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and for the leasing of the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific Lines to the Southern Pacific Company.

March 17, 1884, an act to incorporate the Southern Pacific Company became a law of Kentucky (Acts Ky. 1883-4, Vol. I, p. 725).

The history of the organization of the Southern Pacific Company in 1885 under this law is detailed in the testimony of Timothy Hopkins, who was summoned from San Francisco in the summer of 1884 to attend a meeting in New York with Messrs. Huntington, Stanford and Crocker. The minutes of this meeting, written by W. E. Brown, who was appointed secretary, have been introduced as Defendants' Exhibit No. 21 (V R. 1688). The organization plan and the conferences of Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker, at their meetings in New York in the autumn of 1884, may be found in these minutes and in the testimony of Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. Hopkins testified (II R. 655):

> "Q. Please state how you came to attend those meetings?
> A. I received a telegram from Senator Stanford, then in New York, asking me to go on, in the summer of 1884. I think it was in the latter part of July when I proceeded to New York. I found there Senator Stanford, Mr. Huntington and Mr. Crocker, and it was explained to me that the meeting was desired in order to go over our affairs generally, and likewise to take up the question of the organization of a new company for the purpose of holding and operating the railroad companies that were owned by the interests and controlled by them, both those under the management of the Central Pacific and those east of El Paso in Texas and Louisiana."

The first business of the meeting was to formulate a basis of settlement with Thomas W. Pierce of Boston (II R. 657), who was largely interested in the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railroad, and the Louisiana Western Railroad, as a stockholder. He was likewise a stockholder in the Southern Development Company, which had constructed the line in Texas between El Paso and San Antonio. Mr. Pierce held one-fifth of its capital stock, the other four-fifths being held by Huntington, Stanford, Hopkins and Crocker. As part of the agreement Mr. Pierce was to sell certain of his shares of the capital stock of the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railroad Company and of the Texas and New Orleans Railroad Company, and he was to be credited for the same on the books of the Southern Development Company. In addition, Mr. Pierce agreed to put in 28,059 shares of stock of the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railroad Company, receiving 150 shares of the Southern Pacific Company for each 100 shares of the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio stock (II R. 658).

After the adjustment of interests between Mr. Pierce and Mr. Stanford and his associates, the organization of the Southern Pacific Company was planned.

We quote the following from the testimony of Mr. Hopkins (II R. 660-665):

> "Q. . . . I will call attention to the minutes of September 10th, which read:
>
> 'I, E. Gates and W. E. Brown were appointed a committee to examine all securities on hand in New York and all that are used as collaterals for the payment of the liabilities of S. H. H. & C.
>
> 'To ascertain what securities are available, and generally to make such an examination of the properties of S. H. H. & C. in New York, as they would make if examining for an executor of one of the parties, and to make out a schedule of all securities belonging to S. H. H. & C. in New York, so that the several parties in interest can sign the schedule as of date as being correct on that date.'

Do you recall that transaction?

A. I recall that action.

Q. Will you state what it was? What was the purpose of it?

A. Well, this meeting was primarily for the purpose of organizing the Southern Pacific Company. There were a lot of preliminary matters which were first taken up, and an inventory of securities in New York was one of those preliminary matters, in order to ascertain what our resources were and where they were. The four interests—by that I mean Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker—were large borrowers of money, and as the money market was in New York, they always maintained there a large number of securities in order to take care of the collaterals upon these loans. These matters were all in Mr. Huntington's hands, and he operated them, and at this meeting, and while we were all together, it was one of the times when we checked up to see where we stood.

Q. I call attention to the minutes of September 11th:

'It is agreed that the order of consideration of affairs shall be as follows:

1st. Consolidation of all the lines of Southern Pacific System in one company.

2d. Separation of Central Pacific business from the Southern Pacific business.

3rd. Leasing of Central Pacific System to Southern Pacific System. (New organization.)

4th. General consolidation of lines from San Francisco to Newport News.'

Do you remember that meeting?

A. Yes.

Q. You said a while ago that the main object was to consider that?

A. The organization of a new holding company to take over and operate the through line from New Orleans to California.

Q. What was the reason for doing that? Was not the Central Pacific Railroad Company and leased lines a satisfactory organization, or what reason was there, as you recall it?

A. The Central Pacific leased lines system had become very much smaller than the Southern Pacific Company interests had become; in fact, the Southern Pacific lines, when completed through to New Orleans, were at least twice as long as that of the Central Pacific main lines, and we considered it advisable that as long as the larger interests were concentrated in the Southern Pacific Company, it should be the operating line, and accordingly we discussed and arranged what was considered a fair and equal manner of doing it, and we put it into effect.

Q. . . . you did decide to locate the general offices of the Southern Pacific Company at San Francisco?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was afterwards done?

A. That was afterwards done.

Q. And you did decide to have S. H. H. & C., those four interests, convey to the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific Companies the property in San Francisco owned by them which was used for terminal facilities?

A. Yes; and that was done.

Q. I call your attention to the minutes of October 1st, which state:

'Assembled at 11 A. M.

'Leland Stanford was appointed a committee of one to formulate his proposed method of leasing the several roads forming the through line of Southern Pacific Company.

'It was decided to take immediate action towards raising the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company to 100 millions, and to have temporary certificates of stock printed, to be exchanged hereafter when steel plate certificates can be prepared.'

Did you increase the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company to one hundred millions?

A. Yes; the Southern Pacific Company had been organized the previous spring in Kentucky. At that meeting it was agreed upon that it should be raised, and it was afterwards so done, and the temporary stock certificates issued.

. . . . . .

Mr. HERRIN (reading). 'It is agreed that the directors of the Southern Pacific Company when permanently organized, shall consist of seven, viz.: C. P. Huntington of New York, T. W. Pierce of Boston, and five others to be selected, from San Francisco, and that the general offices be located in San Francisco.'

By Mr. HERRIN:

Q. You recall that meeting, do you?

A. Yes; that was done.

. . . . . .

Q. It is unnecessary to go through these minutes in detail, because they speak for themselves, I think. I will ask you, however, as to the minutes of November 5, which read:

'The question of leasing the Central Pacific system of roads to the Southern Pacific Company came up.

'It was agreed to lease the properties and temporarily to fix the lease at Fixed Charges, and a guarantee of 2% interest on capital stock, and all the earnings of the Central Pacific system over and above that percentage, until the amount reached 6% on its capital stock per annum. After 6% all profits to go to the Southern Pacific Company.'

Was that the basis upon which you finally made the lease of the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific Company?

A. Yes. That was afterwards carried out by proper corporate action."

Pursuant to this arrangement, the Southern Pacific Company was fully organized, and on February 10, 1885, entered into an agreement (D. Ex. 20, V R. 1683), whereby it became the lessee, for a term of ninety-nine years from the date last named, of all the railroad properties of the seven companies whose roads, with the Central Pacific from Tracy via Lathrop to Goshen, make up the Sunset-Gulf route of the Southern Pacific Company.

February 17, 1885, the Central Pacific Railroad Company leased all of its properties to the Southern Pacific Company for a term of ninety-nine years from April 1, 1885. (See Exhibit "A" to Petition. I R. 13.)

This lease contains the following clauses:

> "And the said Central Pacific Railroad Company hereby assigns to the said Southern Pacific Company all the leases which it now holds of railroads and other property situated in said State of California, and lying and being north of the Town of Goshen, in the County of Tulare, with the right to take, hold, operate, maintain, and enjoy said railroads and other property in the same manner as the said Central Pacific Railroad Company holds, operates, enjoys, and maintains the same under the said leases, and with the right to receive the rents, issues, and profits thereof.
> And the said Central Pacific Railroad Company hereby releases the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation formed and existing under the laws of the United States and of the State of California, and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation formed and existing under the laws of the Territory of Arizona, and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation formed and existing under the laws of the Territory of

New Mexico, and each of them, from all and every obligation under or by virtue of any and every lease made by said three last-mentioned railroad companies, or either of them, to the said Central Pacific Railroad Company, and transfers and surrenders unto the said Southern Pacific Company the possession of all the property in said leases, or any of them mentioned or described, with the right to receive the rents, issues and profits thereof free from all claims of the said Central Pacific Railroad Company to the same or any part thereof."

By these leases, the Central Pacific-Southern Pacific system passed into the control and ownership of the Southern Pacific Company and was thenceforward the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system.

At or about the same time in 1885 the Southern Pacific Company acquired the whole or substantially all of the capital stock of the said seven companies whose lines with those of the Central Pacific, make up the Sunset-Gulf Route, namely, the Southern Pacific Railroad Companies of California, Arizona, New Mexico, the two Louisiana railroad corporations, and the two Texas railroad corporations named in the Petition (I R. 3). (Klink, II R. 666-668.)

The manner in which this change of legal ownership of the Central Pacific properties through lease, and the Southern Pacific Railroad properties through lease and stock ownership, was carried into effect, is now to be shown.

(10) The change from Central Pacific operation to Southern Pacific operation March 1, 1885, to April 1, 1885.

On February 27, 1885, a circular notice was issued from the office of the President of the Southern Pacific Company, announcing that the lease had been arranged. This circular [Defendants' (Pratt) Exhibit No. 2, II R. 491-492] is as follows:

"CIRCULAR NOTICE.
SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY,
Office of the President.
SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 27th, 1885.

Arrangements having been effected by the various railway companies interested between San Francisco and New Orleans, comprising the following roads, namely: The Southern Pacific, of California, Southern Pacific, of Arizona, Southern Pacific, of New Mexico, Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio, Louisiana Western, Texas and New Orleans and Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railway and Steamship lines, and roads controlled by the said companies, for a unification of their joint administration, and with a view to a more economical working of the properties, it has been decided that on and after March 1st, 1885, these properties will be operated under one general organization, known as the Southern Pacific Company, with headquarters at San Francisco, Cal., divided into two sections; all west of El Paso will be known as the Pacific System and all east thereof as the Atlantic System.

The organization for the administration of the general conduct of the business of the Company will be briefly as follows:

Under the direction of the President the General Managers will attend generally to the business of the Company, having the supervision and direction of all the departments of the service of the Company within their respective jurisdictions, the financial and accounting departments excepted, and their orders will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

The Secretary and Controller will have charge of all books and accounts, and will, subject to confirmation by the President, nominate and fix the compensation of suitable persons for the heads of the various offices of the accounting department.

The Treasurer will have charge of all revenues of the Company, and will appoint, subject to confirmation by the President, such assistants as may be necessary for the conduct of the business.

The General Traffic Manager, under the direction of the General Manager of the Pacific System, will be charged with the handling of all through business of the Company, and that interchanged by, or which may be competitive as between, the Pacific and Atlantic Systems.

OFFICIALS OF THE LINE.

A. N. TOWNE, General Manager Pacific System, San Francisco, Cal.

A. C. HUTCHINSON, General Manager Atlantic System, New Orleans, La.

J. C. STUBBS, General Traffic Manager, San Francisco, Cal.

All other officers and agents will be continued on the various roads and divisions as under the previous organization until further notice by the General Managers.

LELAND STANFORD, President."

A second circular notice [Defendants' (Pratt) Exhibit No. 3], issued from the General Manager's office of the Pacific System of the Southern Pacific Company, dated April 1, 1885, announces the lease of the Central Pacific lines to the Southern Pacific Company. This circular was read into the record at page 493, and is as follows:

"SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY,
Pacific System.
General Manager's Office.
SAN FRANCISCO, April 1, 1885.

TO ALL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES:—

Announcing the lease, by the Southern Pacific Company, of the Central Pacific Railroad and lines heretofore under lease to the last-named Company, taking effect this day, it is the purpose of this Circular to advise all officers, agents and employees of the various roads and lines comprising the system that they will, until further notice, continue in the performance of their various duties as heretofore, sending reports and correspondence regarding the affairs of the Company to the heads of the various offices as formerly.

Respectfully,
A. N. TOWNE,
General Manager."

There is frequent reference in the record to the change from Central Pacific to Southern Pacific operation in 1885.

H. B. BRECKENFELD testified (II R. 462-463):

"Q. On the 28th of February, 1885, we have the only operating organization, the organization of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, do we not?

A. Yes.

Q. There was not any new organization put into the field in that spring, was there?

A. Any new operating organization?

Q. Yes.

A. Why, in the spring of 1885 the Southern Pacific Company was organized, and its functions were announced in this general circular to all the employees.

Q. And it took over the entire operating organization of the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it did it at one time?

A. Well, it did it at one time, except that it was my recollection that there was a slight interval—whether that is of any moment or not—my recollection is that there was a slight interval in the dates of the announcements of the two transactions, something like a month.

Q. You, on the 28th of February, 1885, were doing some work connected with operations over the Central Pacific Railroad, and some work connected with operations over the Southern Pacific Railroad, were you not?

A. Yes, sir. If these branch lines at that time had been taken over by the Southern Pacific—of which I am not sure now. Those ran along, and they were acquired by the Southern Pacific Railroad at various times, with which I am not entirely clear.

Q. Did you enter the employ of the Southern Pacific Company as to some lines, yourself, at a different date from that at which you entered it as to the lines of the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. There was no ceremony. I did not enter the employ of the Southern Pacific Company in that sense. I simply received this information, that the Southern Pacific Company had taken over these various lines, and that all employees would continue the same as they were doing at that time; so that I just kept on working.

Q. Did you receive two different circulars yourself, one as to one lot of lines and one as to another lot of lines?

A. My impression is that there were two circulars; but as to that I am not entirely clear. I think there were two."

He also testified (II R. 459):

"Q. Do you remember when the Southern Pacific Company took possession of the Central Pacific lines?

A. April 1, 1885. How I remember it is that there was a circular issued by the officials of the Central Pacific indicating that such would be the case.

Q. Do you remember when the Southern Pacific took possession of the Southern Pacific lines?

A. It was about the same time; I think perhaps a little sooner."

Again (II R. 460-461):

"Q. The Central Pacific Railroad Company continued to operate the Central Pacific Railroad up to April 1, 1885?

A. Yes.

Q. Did the Central Pacific Railroad cease to operate the Southern Pacific Railroad before it ceased to operate the Central Pacific?

A. Such is my recollection."

Edgar Melville Luckett testified (II R. 536):

"Q. Do you remember when the Southern Pacific Company, the present company that is operating these lines, took possession of them?

A. Not exactly, I do not. I think it was around 1885 or 1886, somewheres around in there. I remember the time, but I can not recall dates."

William Henry Norton testified (II R. 550):

"Q. Do you remember when the Southern Pacific Company was substituted in place of the Central Pacific Railroad Company as an operating company?

A. Yes; I believe that was April 1, 1885.

Q. You remember that time, do you?

A. Yes."

He further testified (II R. 551):

"Q. Was this change of operation, when the Southern Pacific Company began to operate on April 1, 1885, applied over all the different lines?

A. That is my understanding, yes.

Q. That is, up to April 1, 1885, the Central Pacific Railroad Company had been operating all these various lines that you have described, both the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad, and on that date the operation was changed over to the Southern Pacific Company; is that correct?

A. The best way I can answer that is this: I am only on one division, and I do not know what is doing on the others; but my understanding was that on that date the line was turned over, in a matter of form only."

C. H. REDINGTON testified (II R. 565):

"Q. And on the stationery that has been put in, the significance of the words 'Central Pacific Railroad and leased lines' was the lines which I have described, which were owned by the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the lines of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company which had been leased to the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, as of date of April 1, 1885, all those leases were cancelled and the Southern Pacific Company took up the operation of the various lines, as a lessee company?

A. Yes, sir; I am not familiar with the leases, but that was the operation."

EDWARD M. RAILTON testified (II R. 575):

"Q. I would like to ask about the creation of what they call the Atlantic system and the Pacific system. Would you know about that?

A. Well, at the time of the formation of the Southern Pacific Company, when the Southern Pacific Company took possession, the line was divided at El Paso. The Rio Grande River, as a matter of fact, was always regarded as El Paso, and the operating officials from the New Orleans end took charge of that, while the officials from San Francisco retained charge as far as the Rio Grande River.

Q. But the Southern Pacific Company extended itself over the whole line from New Orleans to San Francisco?

A. Yes."

He further testified (II R. 577):

"Q. The Southern Pacific Company took possession in 1885. Can you tell me whether the date was April 1st?

A. It was during April. Whether it was the 1st of April or not, I do not know."

PATRICK SHEDDY testified (II R. 593):

"Q. Do you remember when the Southern Pacific Company, the company at present operating these lines, took possession and succeeded the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. I do.

Q. What year was that?

A. In 1885."

GEORGE T. KLINK testified (II R. 598):

"Q. Do you remember when the Southern Pacific Company, the present company operating these lines, took possession of them?

A. Yes, sir; it was in 1885."

The witness, after enumerating all the lines which comprised the southern division of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of Arizona, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of New Mexico, and numerous branch lines, summarizes (II R. 601):

> "Those corporate properties, in the lines which I have mentioned, constituted the Pacific system of the Southern Pacific Company in 1885."

He further testified (II R. 604):

> "Q. Do you remember, at the time of the lease of the Southern Pacific Company, a copy of which is marked 'Exhibit 20', and also of the lease of the Central Pacific lines to the Southern Pacific Company, a copy of which is annexed to the bill or petition, and which took effect April 1, 1885, if there was any inventory or schedule prepared of property, rolling stock or other physical property, which was taken over by the Southern Pacific Company?
>
> A. Yes; there was a very complete inventory taken at that time."

Robert A. Donaldson testified (II R. 625):

> "Q. Did not Mr. Towne exercise jurisdiction all the way through to New Orleans until 1885, when the Southern Pacific Company took possession?
>
> A. My recollection is that he did.
>
> Q. You remember when the Southern Pacific Company took possession of these lines?
>
> A. I do."

He further testified (II R. 627-628):

> "Q. Do you remember the operating officials of the Central Pacific Railroad Company at the time the Southern Pacific Company took possession?
>
> A. I do.
>
> Q. Will you name them?

A. Mr. Towne, Mr. Fillmore——

Q. What was Mr. Towne?

A. Mr. Towne, at the time the Southern Pacific took possession, was general manager.

Q. General manager of what?

A. General manager of the Central Pacific Railroad.

Q. The Central Pacific Railroad Company and leased lines?

A. And leased lines, or branches.

Q. Who were the other officials?

A. Mr. Fillmore.

Q. J. A. Fillmore?

A. J. A. Fillmore was, as I remember, general superintendent of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and its branches and leased lines. They were the two chief operating officials.

Q. Who was the general passenger agent?

A. T. H. Goodman.

Q. Were they the same officials for the Southern Pacific Company, when it took possession?

A. When the Southern Pacific Company took possession on the 1st of March, 1885, of the lines south of Goshen, the persons I have named continued in the same capacity with reference to the Southern Pacific Company.

Q. They became officials for the Southern Pacific Company?

A. Yes.

Q. That was what date?

A. March 1, 1885.

Q. Then, as to the lines north of Goshen, those gentlemen were officials of the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. They were.

Q. And south of Goshen they were officials of the Southern Pacific Company?

A. They were practically officials of the Southern Pacific Company, because they were operating the properties, with the single exception of what is now known as the Coast Division and was then known to us as the Northern Division of the Southern Pacific road, the local line leading from San Francisco southward toward Gilroy, Tres Pinos and Monterey.

Q. That has no significance here; we are talking about these two lines. Now, on what date did the Southern Pacific Company take possession of the lines of the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

A. April 1, 1885.

Q. What individuals became the operating officials and general officials of the Southern Pacific Company for that line?

A. Under a circular issued by Mr. Towne, as general manager, the officials of the Central Pacific Railroad Company were continued as officials of the Southern Pacific Company."

G. F. RICHARDSON testified (II R. 635):

"Q. How long did the Central Pacific Railroad continue to operate those lines?

A. Until the organization of the Southern Pacific Company in the early part of 1885.

Q. When the Southern Pacific Company took all the lines, and has since continued to operate them?

A. Yes."

R. H. PRATT testified (II R. 481):

"Q. Did the Central Pacific Railroad Company operate trains at any time between New Orleans and San Francisco?

A. It did.

Q. Was it doing that at the time that line was taken over by the Southern Pacific Company; that was in 1885?

A. Yes, sir; 1885; early in 1885."

Again (II R. 493):

"Q. What is the first date at which you had anything to do with the Southern Pacific Railroad?

A. It must have been about 1885, under the Southern Pacific lease.

Mr. HERRIN. It was after the lease?

The WITNESS. After the lease was made, of course."

Petitioner's Exhibit No. 28 (an excerpt from page 223 of the "Travelers' Official Guide" for June, 1885) enumerates the lines controlled and operated by the Southern Pacific Company, as follows (P. Ex. 28, IV R. 1522):

"Central Pacific R. R.	1254.24	miles
Northern Ry.	153.63	"
San Pablo & Tulare R. R.	46.51	"
Berkeley Branch R. R.	3.84	"
California Pacific R. R.	115.44	"
Stockton & Copperopolis R. R.	49.00	"
Amador Branch R. R.	27.20	"
Southern Pacific R. R. of California	552.85	"
Southern Pacific R. R. of Arizona	384.25	"
Southern Pacific R. R. of New Mexico	167.30	"
Galves'n, Harrisburg & San Antonio Ry.	936.74	"
Mexican International R. R.	171.00	"
Texas & New Orleans R. R.	105.10	"
Louisiana Western R. R.	112.00	"
Morgan's Louisiana & Texas R. R.	281.00	"
Sabine & East Texas R. R.	104.00	"
Los Angeles & San Diego R. R.	27.60	"
Los Angeles & Independence R. R.	16.83	"
Southern Pacific R. R. of Cal. (No. Div.)	202.50	"
Total Rail Lines	4711.03	miles"

Coincident with the evidence which has just been cited to show the change to Southern Pacific operation in 1885, the witnesses testify, as part of their description of the change, that it produced no alteration whatever in the operating organization or in the managing officials.

The testimony of Mr. Pratt (II R. 489) is typical:

"Q. So one day you were an official of one company and the next day you became the same official of the Southern Pacific Company?

A. I did.

Q. In making that change, was there any change in the organization or change in salary or change in duties of any official, so far as you know?

The WITNESS. No changes whatever."

Evidence of a similar nature may be found in the testimony of witnesses Breckenfeld (II R. 460), Englebright (II R. 469), Pratt (II R. 482, 487, 524), Slater (II R. 528), Lister (II R. 531), Luckett (II R. 541), Sheedy (II R. 597), Klink (II R. 601), Horsburgh (II R. 632), Richardson (II R. 635), and Kruttschnitt (II R. 712).

---

(11) The operation of the lines and the intercorporate relations of the corporations comprising the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific System, from April 1, 1885, to the filing of the petition herein February 11, 1914.

A few facts in relation to the operation of the lines of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system, and of the intercorporate relations between the corporations whose lines make up that system, tell everything of importance during the period of nearly twenty-nine years prior to the filing of this suit.

The operation during the entire time was by the Southern Pacific Company.

May 14, 1888, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company (of California) absorbed by consolidation proceedings seventeen local lines within the State of California. (See consolidation No. 4, in Petitioner's Exhibit No. 13, IV R. 1288.)

April 14, 1898, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company (of California) absorbed by consolidation proceedings three other lines within the State of California. (See consolidation No. 5, in Petitioner's Exhibit No. 13, IV R. 1301.)

March 10, 1902, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company (of California) absorbed by consolidation proceedings the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of Arizona and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of New Mexico, whereupon the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California became the owner of the line extending through California, Arizona and New Mexico.

We reserve for later consideration the acquisition in 1901 of forty-six per cent. of the outstanding stock of the Southern Pacific Company by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, dealt with in United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co. (1912), 226 U. S. 61, as that had nothing to do with the operation of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system as such, nor with the intercorporate relations of the companies whose lines made up the system.

During the period with which we are now dealing (1885-1914), by acquisition of roads, construction, etc., the Southern Pacific Company became able to send its trains from San Francisco to Los Angeles over its own rails. This first occurred in 1891 with the opening of the west side line in the San Joaquin Valley (Kruttschnitt, II R. 723), and next with the completion of the Coast line in 1901.

The fact that the Southern Pacific was unable to reach Los Angeles over its own rails until eight years

(1883-1891) after the Sunset-Gulf route was opened, is of outstanding importance in the case. It is also significant that it became able to do so, not by the construction of a through line, but by the completion of a strip in the San Joaquin Valley which was built to relieve local congestion. We later deal more fully with the opening by the Southern Pacific of the west-side line in the San Joaquin Valley and the coast line to Los Angeles.

Only one other matter requires notice here. In the settlement of the Government debt of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, with which we shall deal hereafter, it became necessary (a) for the Southern Pacific Company to subordinate its lease to the lien of a bond issue on the properties of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, made necessary by the settlement of the Government debt, and (b) for a new corporation to be created, Central Pacific Railway Company, defendant here, to which the properties of the old Central Pacific Railroad Company were conveyed.

As the result of these changes, the lease to the Southern Pacific Company became subordinated to the bond issue, and the new Central Pacific Company which is defendant here became the proprietor of the leased line.

In no other respect was the operation of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system affected in any important particular during the twenty-nine years which preceded the commencement of this suif; nor was there any change in the intercorporate relations of the corporations whose lines make up that system.

(12) Governmental action—congressional and executive—between April 1, 1885, and the passage of the act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat. 652, 659), creating the commission for the settlement of the Central Pacific debt.

The Pacific Railroad laws, the Thurman Act of May 7, 1878 (20 Stat. 56), and the Act of June 19, 1878 (20 Stat. 169), which created a bureau of the Interior Department in charge of an Auditor of Railroads (whose title was changed by the Act of March 3, 1881 (21 Stat. 409), to "Commissioner of Railroads"), all required, in terms or by necessary implication, that the Central Pacific Railroad Company make periodical accounting of its earnings to the Government. From April 1, 1885, the earnings of the Central Pacific lines were derived under the lease to the Southern Pacific Company of February 17, 1885, and it was necessary, of course, that a copy of this lease should be transmitted as a part of the accounting to the Commissioner of Railroads, and, therefore, that it should be among the files of the Interior Department.

Without proof in terms, therefore, it must be taken as a fact that some time in the year 1885 the Interior Department came into possession of a copy of the lease from the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific, bearing date February 17, 1885.*

On March 4th of that year (1885) President Cleveland began his first term, and the Senate was in session from March 4, 1885, to April 2, 1885. Congress,

*The Report of the Pacific Railway Commission, October 27, 1885, p. 17, describes the entire transaction of 1885 including the Central Pacific lease to the Southern Pacific.

however, was not in session until December 7, 1885, when the long session of the 49th Congress commenced.

On January 27, 1886, the following resolution was adopted in the House of Representatives (Congressional Record 1885-6, Vol. 17, Part I, p. 926):

> "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby requested to furnish this House with copies of any and all contracts or leases which are to be found on file in said Department between the Southern Pacific Company and any and every railroad or railroads to which land grants were made or which received any subsidies from the United States; also a copy of the charter of incorporation of the Southern Pacific Company; also, all and every contract or contracts on file between the Pacific Steamship Company and any and every land grant or subsidized railroad company or companies."

February 5, 1886, the following appears in the proceedings of the House of Representatives (Congressional Record, 49th Congress, First Session, 1885-6, Vol. 17, Part 2, p. 1172):

> "PACIFIC RAILROADS.
>
> The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads and ordered to be printed:
>
> 'The Speaker of the House of Representatives:
> Sir: In response to House resolution of January 27, 1886, "that the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, requested to furnish this House with the copies of any and all contracts or leases which are to be found on file in said Department between the Southern Pacific Company and any and every railroad or railroads to which land grants were made, or which received any subsidies from the United States, also a copy of the charter of incorporation of the Southern Pacific Company, also all and every contract or contracts on file between the Pacific Steamship Company and any and every land-grant or subsidized railroad company or companies", I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, dated the 2nd instant, inclosing the copies required.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Executive Mansion,
February 4, 1886."

As printed, this communication from the Secretary of the Interior with its enclosures became Executive Document No. 60 (House Executive Documents 1885-6, 49th Congress, First Session, Vol. 30), comprising the following papers:*

(1) Communication above, President Cleveland to the Speaker of the House, February 4, 1886.

(2) Communication L. Q. C. Lamar, Secretary of the Interior, to the President, February 2, 1886.

(3) Lease Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California to Central Pacific Railroad Company January 1, 1880, for five years from date.

(4) Lease Central Pacific Railroad Company to Southern Pacific Company February 17, 1885, for ninety-nine years from April 1, 1885.

(5) Act of Legislature of Kentucky March 17, 1884, incorporating Southern Pacific Company.

(6) Lease Southern Pacific Railroad Company of New Mexico to Central Pacific Railroad Company, November 17, 1880, for five years from November 1, 1880.

(7) Lease Southern Pacific Railroad Company of Arizona to Central Pacific Railroad Company November 10, 1880, for five years from November 1, 1880.

*Executive Document No. 60 above has not been offered in evidence but we draw upon it as available for our use notwithstanding its absence from the record.

(8) Agreement between Union Pacific Railroad Company, Central Pacific Railroad Comany, and Pacific Mail Steamship Company January 17, 1879.

(9) Agreement between same parties August 6, 1877.

(10) Agreement between Transcontinental Association and Pacific Mail Steamship Company June 1, 1885.

It appears from the foregoing that a copy of the lease of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company of date February 17, 1885, was laid before Congress twenty-eight years, less six days, before the commencement of this suit. We proceed to show that this lease was frequently referred to in congressional proceedings thenceforward until the passage of the Act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat. 652, 659), creating a commission to settle the Central Pacific indebtedness to the Government.

On March 3, 1887, an act was passed authorizing the appointment of three Commissioners to investigate the affairs of such railroads as had received aid from the Government. The Commissioners made their report to the President on December 1, 1887, E. Ellery Anderson and David T. Littler returning the report of the Commission, and Robert E. Pattison, a minority report. These reports were laid before Congress by the President, January 17, 1888, and constitute Executive Document No. 51, 50th Congress, First Session. The report, including evidence (in ten volumes), was introduced in this case by the petitioner and is a part of its Exhibit 22. The report itself (in one volume) was also offered in evidence as Defendants' Exhibit 31. Pages 22 and 23 of the report are devoted to the Central Pacific Railroad Company and to the leasing of the lines of that company to the Southern Pacific Company in 1885.

In the report consideration is given to the question whether the properties of the bond-aided lines of the Central Pacific were sufficient to pay the bonds thereon and also the lien of the United States. Upon this subject it was said (p. 23):

> "Taken as a whole, the evidence does not disclose in the subsidized line a capacity for net earnings (meaning thereby the earnings remaining after deducting from gross earnings only operating expenses, taxes, betterments and improvements) which will exceed $3,000,000 per annum. The interest on the first mortgage bonds applicable to the aided road, with a reasonable allowance for new construction and betterments, will amount to $2,000,000 per annum. The report of Colonel Morgan, based on an examination of the physical condition of the road, and after a careful scrutiny of its earning capacity, has led him to the conclusion that a fair valuation of this property (meaning thereby the entire Central Pacific Railroad as at present consolidated, its equipment, terminals, and shops), is $110,000,000. This estimate, in the judgment of the Commission, is excessive and out of proportion with the cost of reproduction as fixed by Colonel Morgan, which is $50,863,540.
> The statutory lien given to the United States, under the case cited above (United States against the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, 99 U. S., p. 455), is limited to that portion of the railroad in consideration of which the bonds were issued—that is to say, it applies only to the road between Ogden and San Jose, and has no application to any of the branches or leased lines. All that has been said in regard to the unsatisfactory nature of the statutory lien in the case of the Union Pacific Railway Company applies with equal force to the Central Pacific Railroad Company."

Again, at page 25, it was said:

> "In the judgment of the Commission the value of the property subjected to the statutory lien, taken by itself and without the auxiliary aid to be derived from the connecting lines, would not be sufficient to more than pay the indebtedness which is prior to the claim of the United States."

The report just mentioned, known as the Report of the U. S. Pacific Railway Commission, was referred to a special committee of the Senate, which submitted a report, February 17, 1890, consisting of 78 pages—pages 1 to 24, presented by Mr. Frye, and pages 25 to 78, presented by Mr. Davis. For convenience we shall hereafter refer to this report as the Frye-Davis Report (D. Ex. 32; Sen. Doc. 293, 51st Cong. 1st Sess., Feb. 17, 1890).

The portion of the Frye-Davis Report dealing with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company commences at page 25; a copy of the lease from the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific, dated February 17, 1885, appears at page 52; and a copy of the modification of that lease, dated January 1, 1888, appears at page 55.

At page 48, mention is made of the Railway Commission report that the bond-aided lines of the Central Pacific Railroad Company were not equal in value to the outstanding bonds and the lien of the Government thereon. At page 51 reference is made to "various plans and suggestions for the adjustment of the financial relations of the United States" with the Central Pacific Railroad Company, among others that "all the associated lines forming the Southern Pacific Company (and those include the Central Pacific as consolidated) become parties to obligations" for the refunding of the debt.

At page 52, the Committee says:

> "The committee is of the opinion that the present security of the United States upon the property of the Central Pacific Railroad Company is inadequate; that such property in case of the foreclosure of the first mortgage thereon will be substantially exhausted in satisfaction thereof, and that it is inexpedient for the United States to redeem the property from said first mortgage or to become the owner of such property through process of redemption and foreclosure.
> That it is expedient, necessary, and practicable to adjust and secure the indebtedness to the United States by a security upon extended time and at a reduced rate of interest within the ability of the company to pay the debt upon such terms 'as to advance the development of the country through which said roads pass, and afford the inhabitants thereof reasonable rates of transportation for passengers and freight'."

And at page 61, speaking of the suggestion that the Southern Pacific Company should guarantee the refunded debt of the Central Pacific, the Committee says that:

> "In view of possible guaranties being made by the associated lines, it is of importance to know the earning power and prior obligations of these lines, with a view of estimating the value of the security for any guaranties made by them."

The Report thereupon deals with the accumulated surplus, etc., of the Southern Pacific Company, with a view to showing that with the guaranty of the Southern Pacific Company the indebtedness to the Government would be fully safeguarded.

On October 13, 1893, receivers for the Union Pacific were appointed, and on that day a resolution was passed by the Senate, evidently without knowledge of the fact that receivers had that day been appointed, authorizing its Committee on Pacific Railroads to investigate the question as to whether receivers had been appointed for the Union Pacific and related matters, under which the so-called Brice Report, hereinafter mentioned, was made.

The next matter is the report of Mr. Reilly from the House Committee on Pacific Railroads, dated July 21, 1894, known as H. R. 1290, 53rd Congress, Second Session, which is Defendants' Exhibit 34. This report recommended the passage of a pending bill to refund the Union Pacific and Central Pacific debts, and it dwells upon the impracticability of foreclosure and the inadequacy of the property to pay the bonds and lien of the Government thereon.

Next came the Brice Report, which is Defendants' Exhibit 33, Senate Report 830, 53rd Congress, Third Session, submitted January 28, 1895, by Mr. Brice on behalf of the Committee on Pacific Railroads under the Resolution of October 13, 1893. It was intended to lay before Congress all matters respecting the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroads, in advance of concrete recommendations. This report (pp. 95-7) refers to all of the leases between the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific which are attached to the petition herein except that of April 15, 1897, which had not then been executed.

The report says (p. 101):

> "The security possessed by the United States for the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company is, as shown by the table above, a second mortgage on the line of road from a point 5 miles west of Ogden to Sacramento, together with the rolling stock, fixtures, etc., and a like mortgage upon the old line of the Western Pacific Railroad Company from Sacramento down to San Jose, the connection between these lines of road being made over an unsubsidized piece of road about 5 miles long on which the Government has no lien at all. Just what this lien is worth, under the circumstances and in view of the depressed condition of business, it is difficult to state. As in the case of the Union Pacific, the Government lien is not on any of the valuable terminal properties of the company. It does not reach San Francisco at all. In fact, the traffic of the Central Pacific to and from the east at San Francisco, including the United States mail, does not go over the old line of the Western Pacific at all, but is taken by the Southern Pacific Company, over its leased line of the California Pacific, from Sacramento to Vallejo, and thence by steamers to San Francisco, or vice versa; or, the traffic if it goes at all over the old Western Pacific line, leaves that line at Niles and goes thence over the unsubsidized lines of the Central Pacific to Oakland and San Francisco, or vice versa. So that, without the necessary terminal facilities at San Francisco, the value of the road upon which the Government lien exists is hard to estimate."

On April 17, 1896, 54th Congress, First Session, Mr. Gear introduced Senate Bill 2894 (D. Ex. 36) to refund the debts of the Pacific Railroads (both Union Pacific and Central Pacific).

Section 19 of this bill reads as follows (D. Ex. 36, V R. 1935-1936):

> "That the said Central Pacific Railroad Company shall arrange for having the lease now existing between it and the Southern Pacific Company modified so that the Southern Pacific Company shall guarantee the payment by the Central Pacific Railroad Company during the continuation of such lease of the interest on, and the installments on account of principal of, the bonds issued under the tenth section of this Act, as prescribed in the tenth and eleventh sections hereof, and so that in case the Southern Pacific Company should consent to the termination of such lease before the maturity of all such installments payable on account of principal of said bonds, it shall, in that event, guarantee the payment by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of such interest and installments on account of principal while any bonds issued under the tenth section of this Act shall remain outstanding, and so that said Southern Pacific Company shall consent that the sums amounting in the aggregate to about two million four hundred and thirty-nine thousand dollars, standing credited on the books of the Treasury of the United States to the Central Pacific Railroad Company as compensation for services upon non-aided lines (a portion of which is now in judgment in favor of the Southern Pacific Company), shall be forthwith applied to the payment and cancellation of the highest numbered bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company issued under the provisions of said tenth section of this Act, and the filing with the Secretary of the Treasury of a duplicate original of such modified lease, duly executed by the officers of both said companies by authority of their boards of directors, shall constitute an essential part of the acceptance by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of this Act. In the event of the termination of such lease by act of the parties thereto, or any abrogation or cancellation of such lease, the principal of the bonds issued under the tenth section of this Act shall, at the option of the President of the United States, immediately mature."

April 25, 1896, 54th Congress, Second Session, Mr. Powers introduced H. R. 8189 (D. Ex. 38, V R. 1939), a bill with similar object, i. e., to refund the Union Pacific and Central Pacific debts. This bill contained a section similar to the section of the Gear bill, just quoted.

On April 25, 1896, Mr. Powers, on behalf of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, submitted a report, H. R. 1497, 54th Congress, First Session (D. Ex. 37), in which it was recommended that H. R. bill 8189, above mentioned (D. Ex. 38), do pass. This last mentioned report, which we shall call the Powers Report, reviews the whole situation in respect of the indebtedness of the Pacific Railroads to the United States and, as an argument for the refunding of the indebtedness with supplementary security, it is pointed out, among other things, that the properties of the Central Pacific are not sufficient to pay the bonds and lien of the Government thereon.

In respect of the provision of the recommended bill relating to the Central Pacific, the Powers Report says (p. 9):

"In the case of the Central Pacific the Government's lien is extended so as to include within the properties mortgaged as security for the new bonds the non-aided line extending from Niles to Oakland (on the Bay of San Francisco), together with the local lines, terminal properties, and real estate in San Francisco, Oakland, and Alameda, steamers, ferryboats, and equipment of ferries, which constitute the great terminals of the Central Pacific Railroad Company in and near San Francisco, and so as to include the great feeders and distributers for the main line of road—that is to say, the line extending northerly from the main line at Roseville to the Oregon boundary, about 296 miles in length, and the line extending southerly from Lathrop to Goshen, about 146 miles in length, and also the interest of the Central Pacific Railroad Company in its land grant under the acts of 1862 and 1864. The provisions of the bill will thus substitute a lien upon the complete and finished road with all its terminal facilities and its great feeders and distributors north and south of the main line for the existing lien, which rests only upon a headless and armless trunk extending from a point near Ogden to San Jose.

OBLIGATIONS TO BE ASSUMED BY SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY.

As the average of the net earnings of the Central Pacific property is less than the amount imposed by this bill, the committee has required, as one of the terms of the settlement, that the lease of the Central Pacific Railroad to the Southern Pacific Company should be so modified as to require, first, that the Southern Pacific Company should guarantee the full payment of the requirements imposed upon the Central Pacific under this act so long as it should remain lessee of the property; and, second, that if the Southern Pacific Company should consent to the termination of the lease before the maturity of all installments payable under the act, it should in that event guarantee the payment by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of all requirements imposed upon it by the act, and has provided that in case of any abrogation or termination of the lease the principal of all the bonds issued under the act should, at the option of the President of the United States, immediately mature."

On May 1, 1896, Mr. Gear, on behalf of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, submitted to the Senate a report known as S. R. 778, 54th Congress, First Session, in which the Committee recommended the passage of the above-mentioned Senate Bill 2894 (D. Ex. 36). This report by Mr. Gear, which we shall hereafter call "Gear's 1896 Report", is Defendants' Exhibit 35.

In the course of this report (Gear's 1896 Report), it is said (p. 3):

> "Some time after the Government commenced its payments of the interest upon the subsidy bonds the question arose whether the companies were not bound to reimburse the Government currently for this payment. The Supreme Court decided the question in the case of The Union Pacific Railroad Company v. United States (91 U. S. 72), holding that nothing beyond the one-half of the compensation for transportation service and the 5 per cent. of net earnings was payable to the United States on account of interest until the maturity of the respective bonds.
> Soon after this the Thurman Act, of May 7, 1878 (20 Stat. L. 56), was passed. In substance, this provided that the whole compensation for Government services should be retained; one-half to be applied to the bond and interest account, the other half to go into a sinking fund, to which sinking fund should also be paid certain prescribed sums or so much thereof as should make the whole Government requirement at least equal to 25 per cent. of the net earnings of the road.

The provisions of this act have been fully complied with by both the Union and Central Pacific railroad companies.

The sinking fund, however, has not met public expectation. It was principally invested in Government bonds, bought at an excessive premium, some as high as 135; in fact, up to about 1887 the sinking fund lost money, and the amount thereof was less than the absolute amount which the companies had paid in; but since then, as the fund has been invested partly in the first-mortgage bonds of the companies, there has been a small increase in the fund above the amount of cash paid into it by the respective companies."

The Committee then recommends that there be an extension of time for the payment of the debt due by the companies to the Government, and says (p. 7):

> "In prescribing the amounts to be paid by the companies the committee has fixed amounts as large as could, in its judgment, be expected to be paid out of the reasonably anticipated earnings of the companies. We have not desired to fix amounts in excess of the earning capacity of the properties, as we have considered it desirable and in the highest degree important that the arrangement made now should be a final one, but the amounts have been determined according to the best estimates which could be made of the earning capacity of the properties, and, while we believe that the amounts required by this bill can be met and borne, we are satisfied that these amounts could not be materially increased without exceeding the limits of reasonable safety.

The committee has, however, made in the case of the Central Pacific Railroad Company the special requirement that the lease of its properties to the Southern Pacific Company should be so modified as to provide as follows:

First. That the Southern Pacific Company shall guarantee the payment, during the continuance of the lease, of the amounts payable under the bill.

Second. That in case the Southern Pacific Company should consent to the termination of the lease before the maturity of all amounts payable under the bill it shall guarantee the payment of all such amounts thereafter to mature.

Third. That the Southern Pacific Company should consent that sums amounting in the aggregate to upward of $2,400,000, standing credited on the books of the United States Treasury to the Central Pacific Railroad Company as compensation for services upon non-aided lines, should be applied to the payment and cancellation of the bonds issued under the act.

Under the latter requirement the amounts applied to the cancellation of Central Pacific bonds the first year will be about $4,000,000, and the Southern Pacific guaranty will, in the judgment of the committee, fully insure the payment of the whole Central Pacific debt according to the provisions of the bill reported by the committee."

On January 8, 1897, C. P. Huntington wrote a letter reading as follows:

"Hotel Normandie, WASHINGTON, D. C.
January 8, 1897.

Dear Sir: As heretofore requested by you, I send herewith a copy of the lease of the Central Pacific Railroad to the Southern Pacific Company and amendments thereto, to date, viz.:

Original lease, February 17, 1885.

Modification of lease, January 1, 1888.

Modification of lease, December 7, 1893.
Modification of lease, March 22, 1894.

I remain, yours truly,
C. P. HUNTINGTON.

Honorable J. H. Gear,
Chairman Railroad Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C."

(The lease and amendments are those which are set forth as an exhibit to the petition in this case.)

This letter from Mr. Huntington to Senator Gear is Defendants' Exhibit 41 and constitutes Senate Document 61, 54th Congress, Second Session, submitted to the Senate by Mr. Gear on January 13, 1897, and introduced in evidence in that form (III R. 922).

On January 11, 1897, in the closing days of the 54th Congress, Mr. Powers H. R. Bill 8189 (D. Ex. 38), mentioned supra, page 134, came to vote on final passage, and was defeated by a vote of yeas 103, nays 168, not voting 84 (Congressional Record, 54th Congress, Second Session, Vol. 29, Part I, pp. 689-90).

It had become apparent at this time that the opposition to extending the debts of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific for a long period of time and the details of such an adjustment presented a problem so complicated that it would be impossible for Congress to take direct or immediate action upon the subject.

Therefore, on January 13, 1897, Mr. Gear presented a bill for the appointment of a commission to settle the debts of all the bond-aided Pacific railroads, the commission to be composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General. This is Senate Bill 3522, 54th Congress, Second Session (D. Ex. 44); it died with the ending of the session.

On March 4, 1897, the 54th Congress and the second administration of President Cleveland came to an end, and the administration of President McKinley began. Immediately after his inauguration, the President ordered a special session of Congress, which convened March 15, 1897.

On March 16, 1897, Mr. Gear introduced Senate Bill 119 for the appointment of the Commission consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General, to settle the debt of the bond-aided Central Pacific railroads.*

On April 1, 1897, Mr. Gear presented the report of the Committee on Pacific Railroads in support of his Senate Bill No. 119. This report, which we call the Gear 1897 Report, is the first part of Senate Report 20, 55th Congress, First Session, and constitutes Defendants' Exhibit 39. The second part of this same report, which is a minority report of Senator Morgan against

*It is to be noted at this point that the first measure introduced in Congress which separated the adjustment of the Union Pacific debt from the adjustment of the Central Pacific debt was Senate Bill 119, introduced March 16, 1897. By that time it had become apparent that the two roads were to be dealt with separately. Indeed, later in the same year, November 1, 1897, the Union Pacific Railroad was struck off in foreclosure for the sum of $58,448,223.75, being the total amount due to the Government (Attorney-General's Report 1897, pp. vi-vii; id. 1898, p. xv). The Kansas Pacific (Kansas City-Denver-Cheyenne line) was struck off February 16, 1898, for a sum which realized to the Government the whole amount of the principal of its debt, viz., $6,303,000, leaving the Government other means of reimbursement for the interest it had paid on the bonds and which was not recovered in the foreclosure (Attorney-General's Report 1898, pp. xvi, xvii; id. 1899, p. xxxii).

Senate Bill 119 and in favor of a measure introduced by himself March 16, 1897, is Petitioner's Exhibit 23 A.

The Gear 1897 Report, recommending the passage of Senate Bill 119, the first measure providing for the separate adjustment of the Central Pacific debt, gives the reasons for making the adjustment of the Central Pacific debt the subject of independent legislation.

The following extracts are taken from the report:

> The bill referred to the committee and reported to the Senate by it deals only with matters affecting the claims growing out of the issue of the so-called subsidy bonds of the United States to aid in the construction of the Central Pacific Railroad from Sacramento to a point 5 miles west of Ogden and the Western Pacific Railroad from San Jose to Sacramento. All matters affecting the claims arising out of the issue of subsidy bonds in aid of the construction of the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroads are now pending before the courts for judicial adjustment thereof (pp. 1 and 2).
> . . . . . .
>
> The time has passed during which it seemed practicable to deal in a single act with the liens of the United States upon the respective railroads included within the Central Pacific system and the liens upon the respective railroads included within the Union Pacific system.
>
> The Union Pacific Company, as early as 1894, made default in the payment of interest upon the coupons appertaining to its first mortgage bonds, and ever since that date has been in default in respect of payments due on account of interest or principal of its first mortgage bonds.
> As early as 1895 foreclosure suits were instituted by the trustees of the first mortgages, superior to the Government lien, and such foreclosure suits are being pressed to decree and sale. The United States, acting by its Attorney General, under directions of the President, has commenced proceedings to enforce the liens reserved to the United States to secure the repayment of the subsidy bonds issued in aid of the construction of the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroads, and has filed answers in the foreclosure suits instituted by the trustees of the paramount first mortgages thereon, and it is claimed that decrees of sale under the first mortgages and the Government liens will probably be entered in the course of the coming summer.

In the case of the Central Pacific Railroad a different course has been pursued. The coupons appertaining to its first-mortgage bonds have been regularly paid at maturity, and as each installment of first-mortgage bonds has matured, arrangements have been made with the bondholders to extend the maturity of the principal of each installment of bonds until January 1, 1898, at which last mentioned date, under existing arrangements, first-mortgage bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the amount of $25,883,000 will mature. The first-mortgage bonds of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, secured by a first mortgage upon its bond-aided line, and aggregating $1,970,000, will mature on the 1st day of July, 1899.

While the earnings of the Central Pacific Railroad Company have been such as to enable it to meet its operating expenses and the interest upon the first-mortgage bonds upon its aided line and the liens upon its non-aided lines (upon which the lien of the mortgage in favor of the United States does not attach), they have been and are of course, wholly insufficient to enable it to provide for the vast debt to the Government, secured by a second lien upon the aided line. The institution of proceedings for foreclosure of the lien of the United States would undoubtedly be followed, from the necessities of the case, by the institution of suits to foreclose the first mortgages upon the Central Pacific and Western Pacific aided lines, amounting in the aggregate, as already stated, to $27,853,000.

It is believed, however, that a result much more advantageous to the United States can be reached by agreement with the railroad company than would be reached by a foreclosure of the second lien held by the Government, subject to this large first-mortgage lien or by the foreclosure of the first mortgage and the Government liens concurrently.

The inability of the Pacific railroad companies to provide for the repayment to the United States of the principal and interest of its subsidy bonds has been long fully anticipated and foreseen, and for many years Congress has had under consideration, at each session, measures designed to provide for a readjustment or extension of the indebtedness upon terms which it was supposed would be within the earning capacity of the various companies to meet. The subject has been carefully considered from time to time by various Congressional committees, which, on several occasions, have reported bills for this purpose, which received the cordial support of the committees which had given consideration to the subject, and investigated the existing situation, and ascertained the earnings and resources of the companies, upon which the character of the provisions to be made in respect to the matter were necessarily dependent.

In each instance, however, the proposed bills have failed, either on account of failure of the Houses of Congress to reach them for consideration, or on account of adverse action, which it is believed was predicated, to a controlling extent, upon the conviction that Congress, with the vast multiplicity of matters constantly demanding its attention, could not devote the requisite time to the careful consideration of the many diverse elements affecting this question and necessarily affecting any specific plan devised for its adjustment.

So far as Congress may be considered to have spoken at all in reference to this question, it has only been to the extent of indicating that, in its judgment, the conditions affecting the determination of the question involved were so complicated that it had been unable to reach a conclusion satisfactory to itself in respect thereto.

The committee, therefore, considering the history of previous measures affecting this subject, has concluded that it would probably best express the wishes of Congress in respect to the matter if a plan were reported which would permit three executive officers of the Government, subject to the approval of the President, to reach an adjustment with the owners of the property in respect to the settlement of this indebtedness. This conclusion has been reached with no disposition to forestall or prevent determinate action by Congress itself in respect to specific plans, but only after Congress had itself, as it seemed to the committee, practically indicated its determination that the conditions affecting the subject were of such a character as to lead to the conclusion that the whole subject should be considered and dealt with by officers of the United States having opportunity and facility to investigate all facts bearing upon the matter, and who would be able to deal with it more directly and satisfactorily than it could be expected that the subject could be dealt with by legislative procedure; and this view of the matter commends itself to the judgment of the committee as being a suitable, wise and appropriate method for reaching, through the responsible officers of the Government, an adjustment of a matter surrounded with not inconsiderable difficulties and embarrassments (pp. 4 and 5).

The officers designated in the bill reported by the committee to act on behalf of the United States in respect to this matter are the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior (within whose Department is included the Commissionership of Railroads), and the Attorney-General, and the act proposes that these officers, subject to the approval of the President, should have power to settle, upon such terms as may be satisfactory to them, or a majority of them, the indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of subsidy bonds in aid of the construction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific railroads (p. 6).

The committee is confident that the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney-General of the United States, sitting together as a commission, can be relied upon to reach a satisfactory conclusion in the light of events as they may from time to time develop as to the result which may be reasonably anticipated from instituting proceedings for the foreclosure of the Government's lien upon the properties involved, and they may be confidently relied upon to make a settlement with the owners of the properties under the authority conferred upon them by the bill now reported only if they believe that a settlement so reached would be more advantageous to the interests of the Government than the result which may be reasonably anticipated from the institution of foreclosure proceedings. And for this reason we deem it most important that these officers should be invested with authority to make such a settlement if they should reach the conclusion that such a settlement was more advantageous to the United States than the anticipated result of judicial proceedings for the enforcement of the lien of the United States upon the properties involved, and the Government should not be forced to reluctantly commence proceedings to foreclose the Government's lien upon the properties for want of authority to make a settlement with the owners which might be obviously more advantageous to the United States than any reasonably anticipated result of foreclosure proceedings." (p. 10.)

On July 12, 1897, Mr. Hepburn introduced H. R. 3750, 55th Congress, First Session, which is Defendants' Exhibit 45. This bill also provides for the settlement of the debt by a Commission composed of the same three officers.

On July 24, 1897, the First Session of the 55th Congress (special session) adjourned without the adoption of Senate Bill 119.

On November 1, 1897, in the Union Pacific foreclosure that road was struck off for the sum of $58,448,223.75, being the total amount due to the Government (Attorney General's Report 1897, pp. vi.-vii., Attorney General's Report 1898, p. xv.), so that when the 55th Congress convened in first regular session the debt of the Union Pacific to the Government had been discharged, leaving open the debt of the Kansas Pacific (Kansas City-Denver-Cheyenne line) and the debt of the Central Pacific.

On December 7, 1897, the second session of the 55th Congress, being the first regular session, was convened, and in the course of that session, March 22, 1898*, an amendment to Senate Bill 119, making it more nearly conform to the later enactment of July 7, 1898, was introduced by Mr. Gear (D. Ex. 40, V R. 1959).

Senate Bill 119, however, was not voted on as such, for its provisions were incorporated in the Deficiency Appropriation Bill of 1898.

*The Kansas-Pacific line had already been struck off on February 16, 1898, as appears from the preceding note (p. 140).

On June 29, 1898, the Senate had the Deficiency Appropriation Bill under consideration (Congressional Record, 55th Congress, Second Session, Vol. 31, Part 7, pp. 6448, 6451, 6458). Mr. Morgan, on behalf of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, offered an amendment thereto substantially the same as the law of July 7, 1898, except (a) that it contained a provision that the funds derived from the Union Pacific settlement and to be derived from the Central Pacific settlement should constitute a fund for the building of the Nicaragua Canal (pp. 6458, 6459), (b) that it did not put a limit upon the time within which the debt of the Central Pacific should be paid, and (c) there was no provision for foreclosure if the settlement was not perfected within one year.

In the course of his remarks in support of his own proposed amendment, Mr. Morgan said (referring to the question of the time within which the payment should be made):

> "I am entirely satisfied on my own behalf to let the matter stand just as it is, and to let the President of the United States and the commission fix the time. But a time has been agreed upon on the suggestion of a Senator who is not a member of the committee, which is that in ten annual payments, as I understand it, this $59,000,000 is to be paid. Well, that is a pretty drastic movement, I know; we all know that even the greatest railroad company in the United States would find much difficulty, out of its earnings, or even out of its credit, in raising the sum of $59,000,000 in ten payments—very great difficulty. But that is neither here nor there."

Mr. Morgan's proposed amendment did not prevail, and thereupon another amendment was proposed by Mr. Gear, in the form in which the Act was approved on July 7, 1898, except in two particulars: (a) it did not limit the time within which the indebtedness should be paid to ten years; and (b) it did not provide that if the settlement were not perfected within one year after the passage of the act there should be foreclosure. At the suggestion of Mr. White of California, the provision respecting the ten-year limit was accepted by Mr. Gear and became a part of his amendment. Thereupon the amendment became a part of the Deficiency Appropriation Bill and was passed in the Senate, June 29, 1898. The amendment respecting foreclosure in the event settlement was not perfected within one year was introduced in the House (Congressional Record, 55th Congress, Second Session (first regular session), July 6, 1898, Vol. 31, Part 7, p. 6731). The amendment providing for foreclosure if the settlement was not perfected in one year was moved by Mr. Barham of California. The discussion upon the subject was closed by Mr. Cannon, and the amendment adopted by the House.

Mr. Cannon said (p. 6731):

> "Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, in the remaining two minutes that I have I want to say that the right to foreclose remains when this provision is adopted, if it shall be adopted, and it leaves the three cabinet officers, with the approval of the President, to agree with the Central Pacific Railroad on the payment of the full amount in twenty semi-annual payments, giving them discretion as to the best security they can get. They can make that arrangement with the Southern Pacific, or with the Union Pacific, or with the Rock Island, or with the Northwestern, or with anybody under God's green canopy that they choose. (Laughter.) Well, it is a question of eyesight whether the canopy is green or blue.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hour of 4 o'clock has come, and I trust that this amendment will be adopted, and this additional means taken to secure $60,000,000 to the Treasury of the United States without one danger of loss."

The amendment was adopted and the Senate concurred. On the following day, the President signed the bill; and thus the Act of July 7, 1898, became a law.

(13) The act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat. 652, 659), and the preliminary negotiations which led to the settlement of February 1, 1899 (executed February 16, 1899), together with plans for the readjustment of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, all of which immediately became matter of general and public knowledge.

The Act of July 7, 1898, was a general deficiency appropriation bill. The provision contained therein which dealt with the settlement of the Central Pacific indebtedness read as follows:

"SETTLEMENT WITH THE CENTRAL PACIFIC AND WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROADS: That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney-General, and their successors in office, be, and they are hereby, appointed a commission with full power to settle the indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds in aid of the construction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific bond-aided railroads, upon such terms and in such manner as may be agreed upon by them, or by a majority of them, and the owners of said railroads: Provided, That any and all settlements thus made shall be submitted in writing to the President for his approval or disapproval, and unless approved by him shall not be binding.

That said commission shall not agree to accept a less sum in settlement of the amount due the United States than the full amount of the principal and interest and all amounts necessary to reimburse the United States for moneys paid for interest or otherwise: And also provided, That said commission are hereby empowered to grant such time or times of payment by installment, and at such rates of interest, to be not less than three per centum per annum, payable semi-annually, and with such security as to said commission may seem expedient; Provided, however, That in any settlement that may be made the final payment and full discharge of said indebtedness shall not be postponed to exceed ten years and the whole amount, principal and interest, shall be paid in equal semi-annual installments within the period so limited, and in any settlement made it shall be provided that if default shall be made in any payment of either principal or interest or any part thereof then the whole sum and all installments, principal and interest, shall immediately become due and payable, notwithstanding any other stipulation of said settlement: Provided further, That unless the settlement herein authorized be perfected within one year after the passage of this Act the President of the United States shall at once proceed to foreclose all liens now held by the United States against said railroad companies and to collect the indebtedness herein sought to be settled, and nothing in this Act contained shall be held to waive or release any right, lien, or cause of action already held by the United States.

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, > the sum of twenty thousand dollars to defray the expenses of said commission in making the said settlement." (30 Stat. 652, 649)

Attorney General Griggs testified to negotiations which resulted in the agreement dated February 1, 1899, conducted chiefly with James Speyer, of Speyer & Company of New York; "and I recall now one occasion when the matter was discussed by Mr. Huntington, who, I think, was then president of the Southern Pacific Railroad", at the Cabinet Room in the presence of President McKinley (III R. 992-993). He testified further that President McKinley had spoken to him of "having conferred with Mr. Huntington and having seen him about the matter" (III R. 997).

Attorney General Griggs also testified that President McKinley took an active part in the settlement and kept in touch with the progress of the negotiations, as he regarded it a very important subject, and had expressed great interest therein (III R. 1009).

Secretary of the Treasury Gage testified that although he had very little to do with the negotiations, he was familiar with what was going on; that he had several conferences with President McKinley concerning the matter; that the President was active in the settlement, and that the first that Mr. Gage knew of the negotiations was the statement from the President of a visit paid to him by Mr. Huntington. Mr. Gage had frequent conferences with the Attorney General about the matter (III R. 1010).

Henry Ruhlander, a member of Speyer & Company, testified that the leading spirit in the negotiations for this settlement was C. P. Huntington (III R. 930):

James Speyer testified that he conferred with Attorney General Griggs, and that the "principal negotiations were with President McKinley personally. . . . I should say that I saw President McKinley probably half a dozen times" (III R. 1187). Mr. Speyer also testified regarding his dealings with Mr. Huntington, that:

> "My dealings with Mr. Huntington were, as I say, as to the Southern Pacific Company. I do not remember dealing with him at all as a Central Pacific stockholder" (III R. 1195).

Mr. Speyer further testified that the entire plan for the reorganization of the affairs of the Central Pacific had been all agreed upon and arranged and was ready to be put out as a public document under date of February 20, 1899, and that shortly before that time he became nervous lest the agreement should not be actually executed before February 20, 1899, and that he therefore went to Washington to see to its execution. The agreement was executed in Washington by President McKinley and Secretary Bliss and Attorney General Griggs on February 15, 1899, and in Boston by Secretary Gage on February 16, 1899 (III R. 1186, 1213-1215).

Immediately after the execution of the agreement with the Government, which is Exhibit "A" to Defendants' Answer, the Commission, consisting of Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General, transmitted to Congress their report dated February 15, 1899, setting forth in full a copy of the agreement of February 1, 1899. This report was received by the Senate and House of Representatives and ordered to be printed on February 20, 1899 (D. Ex. No. 53).

On February 18, 1899, The Commercial & Financial Chronicle published an announcement of the readjustment plan of the Central Pacific Railroad Company (D. Ex. 95, VI R. 2258).

On February 20, 1899, Speyer & Company issued the entire plan for the readjustment of the Central Pacific for the payment of the Government debt, and gave it wide publicity (III R. 1187).

On February 25, 1899, The Commercial & Financial Chronicle published an exhaustive account of all of the details of the readjustment as they were actually accomplished.

The Commercial & Financial Chronicle just mentioned is a weekly newspaper devoted to commercial and financial affairs, published weekly on Saturday in the City of New York, and has been in existence for 25 years. This paper had throughout the year 1899, and for many years before that time, a large circulation among commercial and financial people and banks in the United States of America. It is one of the leading commercial and financial papers of the country (III R. 1211).

Having narrated the circumstances of the consummation of the settlement with the Government, and the immediate publicity given to it, it is next in order to consider the settlement itself.

(14) The settlement with the Government dated February 1, 1899, but actually executed February 16, 1899.

The settlement with the Government constitutes Exhibit "A" to the Answer of Defendants, and the plan of readjustment of which the agreement was an integral part, is Exhibit "B" to the Answer.

With a view to a full understanding of the transaction it is necessary first to consider the condition of the Central Pacific Railroad Company as of February 1, 1899.

The Financial Condition of the Central Pacific Railroad Company (the old Company) as of February 1, 1899.

The condition may be briefly put as follows:

(a)	Bonded debt, made up of seven issues (for details of which see Answer, I R. 61-62)	$ 57,471,000.00
(b)	Indebtedness to the Government (Answer, I R. 51)	58,812,715.48
(c)	Par of its outstanding stock (Answer, I R. 66)	67,275,500.00
	Total	$183,559,215.48

In order that the indebtedness of the Government should be met it was, of course, necessary to reorganize the company, and a reorganization could only be accomplished by an adjustment with all interests concerned. To do this it was necessary to form a new company and for that new company to issue and, in large part, to market new securities.

It is, therefore, necessary to know what the securities of the new company were and how the reorganization was effected.

The Security Issues of the Central Pacific Railway Company (the new Company).

(a)	4% First Refunding Mortgage Gold Bonds, guaranteed unconditionally as to principal and interest by the Southern Pacific Company	$100,000,000
(b)	3½% Mortgage Gold Bonds, guaranteed unconditionally as to principal and interest by the Southern Pacific Company	25,000,000
(c)	4% Cumulative Preferred Stock	20,000,000
(d)	Common Stock	67,275,500
	Total	$212,275,500

We have thus set down the obligations of the old company and the securities to be issued by the new company. The question now arises, How could the new company with the securities just mentioned meet and discharge the obligations of the old company? This was accomplished by the intervention of the Southern Pacific Company and through its engagements made with Speyer & Co.

As already noted, the Southern Pacific Company agreed that it would guarantee unconditionally the payment of the principal and interest of the two issues of bonds of the new company; but the Southern Pacific Company did more than this. It agreed to buy the $20,000,000 issue of preferred stock and the $67,275,-500 issue of common stock.

The stock of the new company, $20,000,000 preferred and $67,275,500 common, was to be purchased by the Southern Pacific Company with 4% Gold Bonds to be issued by that Company to the amount of $36,819,000 (secured by a pledge of the preferred and common stock of the new Central Pacific, as and when acquired) and an issue of its own (the Southern Pacific) common stock to the amount of $67,275,500. The $20,000,000 issue of preferred stock was to be paid for by $20,000,-000 of the Southern Pacific 4% Gold Bonds just mentioned. The $67,275,500 issue of common stock was to be paid for by $67,275,500 of the common stock of the Southern Pacific (par for par) plus $16,819,000 of its 4% Gold Bonds. In other words, the Southern Pacific paid $125 per share for the stock of the new Central Pacific—$100 in common stock of the Southern Pacific Company at par and $25 in bonds of the last mentioned issue to be taken at par.

It is to be noted that the $20,000,000 in bonds of the Southern Pacific to be paid for the preferred stock and the $16,819,000 in bonds of that company to be paid on account of the purchase of the common stock cover the entire issue of Southern Pacific 4% Gold Bonds aggregating $36,819,000 face value.

It is also to be noted that the Southern Pacific was presently to acquire only $12,000,000 of the $20,000,000 of preferred stock and that the remaining $8,000,000 was to be acquired by the Southern Pacific from the Central Pacific Railroad Company as and when the needs of the latter company should require their sale to the former company for the 4% Gold Bonds of that company.

The plan just outlined provided a purchaser for the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company (the new company), but it did not provide cash for the stockholders in the old company if they demanded cash in place of new securities; it did not provide cash for the holders of the bonds of the old company if they demanded cash, and it did not provide cash for the Government, which did demand cash while consenting that the payments might be deferred. It, therefore, became important to procure a syndicate ready to buy and pay cash for the bonds of the old Central Pacific and for its outstanding stock, unless the holders of those bonds and stocks were minded to accept new and other securities in lieu thereof; and also ready to purchase and pay for the new securities in amounts and at times necessary to meet the requirements of the settlement with the Government. In other words, a syndicate was necessary (a) to make a market for a sufficient amount of the new securities to meet the requirements of the Government; (b) to purchase for cash the outstanding stocks and bonds of the old company, and (c) to take in lieu of the stocks and bonds of the old company so to be acquired such payment in cash and new securities as might be arranged in the readjustment plan. This was all arranged by Speyer & Co., actuated by the engagements and liabilities of the Southern Pacific Company represented in the matter by C. P. Huntington.

How the matter was worked out is easily shown.

We deal first with the settlement with the Government.

Settlement with United States Government.

The indebtedness to the Government as of February 1, 1899, amounted to $58,812,715.48. This was to be covered by twenty notes of the Railroad Company, one falling due every six months, beginning August 1, 1899, and ending February 1, 1909. The notes were to carry interest at 3% per annum, payable semi-annually, and each note was to be secured by First Refunding 4% Gold Bonds of the above issue equal in amount to the face of the note. Speyer & Co. agreed with the Government to purchase the four notes earliest in point of maturity and to pay the face thereof as soon as received by the Government, leaving in the hands of the Government notes aggregating $47,050,172.36, to secure which the Government had in hand the 4% bonds to the amount of $47,056,000.

Thus was the debt of the Government arranged and settled in 1899, leaving, of course, the payment of the notes to come about as and when they matured, of which we shall speak later.

We come now to the settlement with the bondholders of the Central Pacific.

Settlement with Bondholders of Central Pacific.

As already stated, the outstanding bond issue of the Central Pacific, composed of seven issues, aggregated

$57,471,000. It was a part of the plan that Speyer & Co. should purchase these bonds for cash if the bondholders desired cash in exchange therefor—four of the issues at par, two of the issues at 105, and one at 109, as follows (Answer, I R. 61, 62):

$25,881,000	Central Pacific Railroad Company, of California, First Mortgage Bonds, Series A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H and I	At the price of par and accrued interest in New York.
2,735,000	Western Pacific Railroad Company First Mortgage Bonds, Series A and B
6,080,000	Central Pacific Railroad Company (San Joaquin Valley Branch) First Mortgage Bonds
2,134,000	Central Pacific Railroad Company Land Bonds
56,000	Central Pacific Railroad Company Fifty-Year Six Per Cent. Bonds	At the price of 105 and accrued interest in New York.
10,245,000	Central Pacific Railroad Company Fifty-Year Five Per Cent. Bonds
10,340,000	California and Oregon Railroad Company and Central Pacific Railroad Company, successor, First Mortgage Bonds, Series A and B	At the price of 109 and accrued interest in New York.

It was provided, however, that if the bondholders desired to accept the new securities in lieu of the bonds of the Central Pacific then held by them, they should have the privilege of so doing upon the following terms (Answer, I R. 69):

Amount of Cash and New Securities which Existing Bonds were Entitled to Receive on Readjustment.

Existing Bonds.	Cash.	Each $1,000 New 4% First Refunding Mortgage Gold Bonds.	Receives New 3½% Mortgage Gold Bonds.
Central Pacific Railroad Company of California First Mortgage Bonds, Series A	$33.33	$1,000	$50
Series B to I, inclusive	29.17	1,000	50
Western Pacific Railroad Company First Mortgage Bonds, Series A and B	35.00	1,000	50
Central Pacific Railroad Company (San Joaquin Valley Branch) First Mortgage Bonds	50.00	1,000	75
Central Pacific Railroad Company Land Bonds	41.67	500	700
Central Pacific Railroad Company Fifty-Year 6% Bonds	50.00	500	900
Central Pacific Railroad Company Fifty-Year 5% Bonds	41.67	500	800
California and Oregon Railroad Company and Central Pacific Railroad Company, successor, First Mortgage Bonds, Series A and B	29.17	1,000	200

The foregoing terms, applied to all the outstanding issues, would have resulted in the payment of cash and the issuance of new securities as follows:

Table Showing Amount of Cash and New Securities which Deposited Securities were Entitled to Receive on Completion of Readjustment.

	Cash.	New 4% First Refunding Mortgage Gold Bonds.	New 3½% Mortgage Gold Bonds.

	$1,987,383.70	$51,253,500	$13,695,000

* Series A amounted to $2,995,000 and Series B to I inclusive, amounted to $22,886,000, making Series A to I inclusive $25,881,000.

In other words, the bonds of the Central Pacific, aggregating $57,741,000, were to be taken up and paid for by

(a)	Cash to the amount of	$ 1,987,383.70
(b)	New 4% Bonds to the amount of	51,253,500.00
(c)	New 3½ Bonds to the amount of	13,695,000.00
	Total	$66,935,883.70

If any bondholder wished cash, Speyer & Co. undertook to buy and pay for the bonds at par or better, as stated in the Answer, I R. 61-62. On the other hand, if a bondholder wished to take part in cash and part in each of the two new issues, he could do so on the terms stated above (Answer, I R. 69). Of course, as to those bondholders who elected to take in cash, Speyer & Co. stepped into their shoes and were to accept in lieu of the bonds of the old company so purchased by them the amount of cash and new securities provided for as above (Answer, I R. 69).

Thus were the holders of bonds in the old company to be taken care of. The plan by which they were to be taken care of involved cash to the amount of $1,987,383.70, provided for as hereinafter shown.

The arrangements with (a) the Government; (b) the bondholders of the old company, and (c) the new company in respect of the sale of its preferred and common stock, involved the disposition of the three bond issues already mentioned and one stock issue, as follows:

The $100,000,000 C. P. Issue.

Retained by the United States Government as collateral to sixteen notes aggregating $47,050,172.36	$ 47,056,000
Set apart to be exchanged for outstanding bonds of the Central Pacific as per the above table	51,253,500
Balance of issue to be purchased by Speyer syndicate to provide cash requirements of reorganization	1,690,500
TOTAL	$100,000,000

The $25,000,000 C. P. Issue.

Set apart to be exchanged for outstanding bonds of the Central Pacific as per the above table	$13,695,000
Balance of issue to be purchased by Speyer syndicate to provide cash requirements of reorganization	11,305,000
TOTAL	$25,000,000

The $36,819,000 S. P. Issue.

The C. P. stock, aggregating $67,275,500, par value, was to be acquired by the same amount of Southern Pacific stock plus 25% in bonds of the issue being here dealt with. This 25% is	$16,819,000
$12,000,000 of the preferred stock of the new C. P. was to be purchased by an equal amount of the par value of the bonds of the issue here dealt with, thereby requiring	12,000,000
The balance of the $20,000,000 issue of preferred stock was to be purchased as and when corporate needs so required by an equal amount at par value of the issue being here dealt with	8,000,000
TOTAL	$36,819,000

We come now to the stock transaction.

The Stock Transaction.

The Southern Pacific was forthwith to acquire $12,000,000 and, as and when occasion required, the other $8,000,000 of preferred stock, paying therefor its 4% bonds, par for par	$20,000,000
The Southern Pacific was to acquire $67,275,500 common stock of the Central Pacific, paying therefor its own stock, par for par, aggregating	67,275,500
And, in addition thereto, was to pay 25% of the par of the common stock of the Central Pacific in its own 4% Gold Bonds, amounting, as already stated to	16,819,000
TOTAL	$104,094,500

The Southern Pacific, therefore, to acquire the stock of the Central Pacific, was to issue ultimately $36,819,000 in bonds and $67,275,500 in stock.

Cash Requirements.

We have already shown that the syndicate was to purchase bonds of the $100,000,000 issue to the amount of	$ 1,690,500
And of the $25,000,000 issue to the amount of	11,305,000
Making a total of bonds at par	$12,995,500

The purchase of these bonds, however, would not yield sufficient cash to take care of the requirements of the reorganization because the sum estimated as needed for that purpose was $21,420,100 made up of (a) $11,762,543.12 to be paid by Speyer & Co. to the Government for the four notes of earliest maturity, and (b) $9,657,556.88 for new equipment, improvements and other purposes of the new Company, including expenses, commissions, compensation, etc., incident to the reorganization of the company, making as already stated, a total of $21,420,100 (Answer, I R. 70).

The cash requirements, therefore, of $21,420,100 could have been met by (a) $1,690,500 of the $100,000,000 issue; (b) $11,305,000 of the $25,000,000 issue; (c) $12,000,000 of the $36,819,000 issue, which $12,000,000 would be in the treasury of the Central Pacific Railway Company; and (d) such additional sum in bonds of the latter issue which would be found in the treasury of the Central Pacific Railway Company in exchange for preferred stock issues in excess of the $12,000,000.

We may now sum the matter up by showing what the Southern Pacific Company did in this transaction.

What the Southern Pacific Did.

(a) It became guarantor in respect of a bond issue of	$100,000,000
(b) It became guarantor in respect of a bond issue of	25,000,000
(c) It issued its own bonds for the purchase of $12,000,000 of the preferred stock of the new company, in the amount of	12,000,000
(d) It agreed as and when required to purchase the remaining $8,000,000 of the preferred stock of the new company with bonds in the amount of	8,000,000
(e) It agreed to issue its bonds as a part payment on the purchase price of $67,275,500 of the common stock of the new company, in the amount of	16,819,000
(f) It issued its own stock in partial payment of $67,275,500 of the common stock of the new company, in the amount of	67,275,500
Making a total of	$229,094,500

In other words, in the transaction the Southern Pacific Company (a) guaranteed $125,000,000 bonds of the new company; (b) issued, or agreed to issue, its own bonds to the amount of $36,819,000, and (c) issued its own stock to the amount of $67,275,500.

It did all of this in the plan for the payment by the reorganized Central Pacific Railway Company of its debt to the Government. Without the intervention of the Southern Pacific Company and the purchase by it of the stock of the Central Pacific and the guaranty of its bonds, it would have been impossible to make the arrangements which were made with the syndicate, and impossible to market the bonds of the Central Pacific Railway Company.

In every real and substantial sense, therefore, the Government of the United States agreed with the Southern Pacific Company that it might acquire the Central Pacific Railway Company's stock in consideration of the guaranty by the Southern Pacific of the bonds of the Central Pacific Railway Company, the marketing of which provided the funds whereby the Government was paid, as we shall show.

(15) The part which the Southern Pacific was obliged to and did take in the readjustment of the Central Pacific Railroad Company's affairs, including the subordination of its 99-year lease, without which the reorganization could not have been accompished.

In dealing with the settlement with the Government we have had occasion to review the financial obligations assumed by the Southern Pacific. We have not, however, spoken of the subordination of the Southern Pacific lease to the securities which the new Central Pacific was to issue. This we proceed to do, and to show, in addition, why the Southern Pacific was obliged to assume the obligations which it did in the readjustment of the Central Pacific affairs.

The first requirement of the agreement with the Government concerned the lease of 99 years from the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific, of February 17, 1885, and its modifications. The agreement required that the indebtedness to the Government should be secured by the refunding bonds provided for in the readjustment plan, to the par value of the unpaid notes, and the agreement in terms required (Answer, I R. 56) that the "mortgage securing such Refunding Bonds shall be prior in lien to any lease of the railroads of said Central Pacific Railroad Company or their appurtenances or any portion thereof".

The President and the members of the Cabinet, by whom this agreement was executed, were, as we have already shown, fully aware of the lease of the Central Pacific properties to the Southern Pacific Company. It is, therefore, clear that, by the above quoted provision, they required the Southern Pacific Company to agree to subordinate its lease to the lien by which the refunding bonds were secured. In conformity with this requirement of the settlement, the Southern Pacific executed an agreement whereby it subordinated its lease to the mortgage by which the refunding bonds were secured. (See Defendants' Exhibit 48, indenture of August 1, 1899, whereby the Southern Pacific subordinated its lease to the lien of the Central Pacific Railway Company's first refunding mortgage.)

Secondly, the Southern Pacific was required to guarantee the first refunding bonds. The Government notes were to be secured by these bonds, par for par, and Speyer & Company's readjustment plan required them to be guaranteed by the Southern Pacific, in order that the bonds might be salable.

Attorney-General Griggs said (III R. 996):

> "the agreement that we made provided that the bonds deposited as security should be such bonds as were described in the plan of readjustment or settlement put out by Speyer & Company, and that plan described those bonds as guaranteed by the Southern Pacific Railroad, as I recollect."

Attorney-General Griggs also testified (III R. 999):

> "My recollection is that the guaranty of the Southern Pacific on those bonds was one of the agreed parts of the negotiation, the government relying upon that as an additional security or guaranty to see that their debt would be paid, either by the new corporation that was to be formed and to issue these bonds, or by the guarantor, the Southern Pacific Company.
> Q. If your recollection were not at fault in that respect, how is it possible that you should have passed, as the final agreement, one which did not, by reference or otherwise, call for any such guaranty, but merely called for first mortgage bonds?
> A. I do not think we did. The agreement, as I recall, of February 1, 1899, provided that we were to receive as collateral security such bonds as were described in the Speyer prospectus and in that prospectus, as I understand the agreement, whatever it was, the Southern Pacific had agreed to guarantee those refunding fours."

Thereupon counsel for the Government interrogated Attorney-General Griggs in an attempt to show that the arrangement with the Government did not require the bonds to be guaranteed by the Southern Pacific. The Attorney-General replied (III R. 1000-1002):

"My understanding of that was, Speyer & Company being a party to this agreement, the deposit of the various underlying bonds and stocks and so forth being recited, the agreement of reorganization or scheme or prospectus being in our possession, showing that these bonds were to be guaranteed by the Southern Pacific, those were the bonds that we meant when we described the four per cent. refunding bonds.

I should say our assumption was that the description there related to the bonds that were described in that agreement, and it was all part of the one scheme, which we knew at the time, from negotiations with Mr. Huntington and from familiarity with that document, were actually being put through by the efforts and on the responsibility of the Southern Pacific.

Speaking of the matter as it appears in the contract, I am not prepared to argue whether we would have been entitled to reject bonds that were offered as security without the guaranty of the Southern Pacific; but, as a matter of fact, that was in the contemplation of the parties when the agreement was signed, I should say that nothing short of that would be acceptable.

That might be argued from the face of the papers, but as against that I have the very clear recollection that the bonds were to be guaranteed by the Southern Pacific, and that we thought the agreement was efficient to secure that. Whether it would have turned out, on a law suit, to be efficient or not is another matter; but that we thought it was efficient, there is no doubt.

. . . . . .

If your question is intended to ask me whether I infer that the guaranty of the Southern Pacific might have been taken out of the arrangement, I should say decidedly not. My recollection is that that was an essential part of the agreement. The arrangement was put through, it was enabled to be put through by reason of the intervention of Mr. Huntington for the Southern Pacific Company. We all recognized that at the time, and we all understood that we were getting the endorsement of his company on these bonds.

Now, whether we put it in the agreement or not may be a matter of difference of legal opinion just now; but that we were to have it, and that we did get it, is a matter of positive recollection on my part."

Mr. Speyer testified to the same effect (III R. 1182-1183, 1184-85):

"Q. Mr. Speyer, when you started to work upon that plan of readjustment did you expect and count upon the intervention and aid of the Southern Pacific Company?

A. I knew I could not carry it through without the help of the Southern Pacific; or some other railroad company, in case the Southern Pacific had not come to assist.

Q. Did you ever contemplate or work upon any plan which did not involve the intervention and aid of the Southern Pacific Company?

A. I did not.

. . . . . .

Q. Mr. Speyer, considering the terms required by the act of Congress, namely, the requirement that the entire debt of fifty-eight million eight hundred thousand dollars, in round numbers, would have to be paid in ten years, in twenty semi-annual installments, would any one at all familiar with the Central Pacific affairs know that the Central Pacific, with its own resources and credit, could not comply with these conditions?

A. He would.

Q. It would be obvious to any one at all familiar with the affairs of the Central Pacific that it could not, with its own resources and credit, comply with the terms of that act?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In making the agreement which you participated in with the United States, what did you count upon to enable you to carry out the agreement with the United States?

A. The co-operation of the security holders of the Central Pacific and of the Southern Pacific Company.

Q. As outlined in your plan of readjustment?

A. Yes.

Q. Had you formulated your plan of readjustment before you executed the agreement with the United States?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you have signed that agreement if you had not had your plan of readjustment formulated?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you have signed the agreement if you had not been reasonably assured of the operation of the plan?

A. No; I would not.

. . . . . .

Q. What effect upon the value of the bonds as security did the Southern Pacific guaranty have?

A. It increased their value.

Q. Greatly?

A. I should say so.

Q. How did the resources and credit of the Southern Pacific Company compare with those of the Central Pacific?

A. They were superior to those of the Central Pacific.

Q. Was the superiority very great?

A. I suppose the quotations of those days, which I have not before me—the quotations of the bonds and stocks, which I do not remember, would show how great the difference was, in public opinion.

Q. What is your recollection about it?

A. That it was very considerable."

Again (III R. 1205-1206):

"Q. Did either Mr. Griggs, Mr. Bliss, Mr. Gage, Mr. Root or President McKinley receive a copy of this reorganization plan that was promulgated by your circular of February 20, 1899?

A. I have no doubt they did.

. . . . . .

These whole negotiations were carried on absolutely on the table. Everything that was done was known to everybody interested, and I am perfectly satisfied that they had this plan and the provisos of it, and knew exactly what we were doing all the time. I am satisfied that they knew about the Southern Pacific guaranty, and thought it a valuable thing. I could not tell you when I gave them this plan, or how many copies they got, or who got it. I cannot remember. I do remember, however, distinctly, that everything we did, and everything I did was done just in that way; that they got everything; they knew everything we were doing; because I remember that President McKinley particularly thanked me, when it was all over—I do not want to repeat his words, but he was very flattering about the way I had conducted this negotiation. He knew everything I was doing, and he showed me the greatest confidence, and let me do it in my own way.

Q. Did you ever suggest to any of these five gentlemen their taking these bonds, or any bonds, without a guaranty?

A. Never."

Mr. Speyer also testified that the Government understood that the bonds were to be guaranteed (III R. 1185), and that if the Central Pacific bonds offered to the Government did not carry the guaranty of the Southern Pacific Company, they would not have been in accordance with the understanding (III R. 1185-6).

During Mr. Speyer's examination, counsel for the Government suggested that the Union Pacific might have underwritten the refunding obligations of the Central Pacific, but Mr. Speyer testified (III R. 1200):

> "The Union Pacific was just emerging from reorganization itself. Nobody could tell how it was to work out, and it was our judgment that we could get more assistance from the Southern Pacific Company in settling that debt, than from anybody else. . . . I was thinking: where could we get the best financial and the strongest financial backing; and the Southern Pacific backing at that time would be a great deal more valuable than that of the Union Pacific. I do not want to compare Mr. Huntington and Mr. Harriman at all; but the Union Pacific was just then emerging from the receivership."

Secretary of the Treasury Gage testified (III R. 1011-1012):

> "Q. What securities were actually taken in executing the agreement?
>
> A. They were part of an issue of one hundred millions of dollars of bonds by the reorganized Central Pacific Railroad, running during a certain time in the future—I forget the time—guaranteed by the Southern Pacific Company.

. . . . . .

The securities, as delivered; that is to say, the bonds that served as collateral to the series of notes given in settlement of the claims of the government, were in conformity to what I understood was to be the nature of the security.

Q. It was your duty, as Secretary of the Treasury, to receive and hold those notes and the collateral security?

A. That was my main duty and the main thought I had in mind.

Q. Would you have accepted the bonds without the guaranty of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company?

. . . . . .

The WITNESS. I am unable to answer that yes or no, because that proposition never came before me.

Q. But you do say that the bonds, with the guaranty endorsed, were in accordance with your understanding?

. . . . . .

The WITNESS. Yes, that is correct."

We have thus far dealt with the necessity for the participation of the Southern Pacific in the reorganization of the Central Pacific insofar (a) as it was required to subordinate its lease to the lien of the new bond issue; and (b) as it was required to guarantee the issue of refunding bonds, part of which were to go into the hands of the Government.

The third and fourth particulars in which the Southern Pacific was required to assume the burden of the readjustment plan were (a) the guaranty of the $25,000,000 issue of 3½% bonds of the Central Pacific, and

(b) the purchase of the preferred and common stock of the new Central Pacific Railway Company.

It was necessary for the Southern Pacific to guarantee the 3½% issue in order that that issue might be taken by the old security holders of the Central Pacific, or if not taken by the old security holders, in order that those bonds might be sold on the market to provide funds to take up the bonds held by them. It is clear, therefore, that the guaranty by the Southern Pacific of the 3½% issue was necessary to induce Speyer & Company to make the agreement by which the general readjustment was brought about.

This leaves for consideration the fourth particular in which it was necessary for the Southern Pacific to participate. The plan provided that the new Central Pacific Railway Company should have $20,000,000 in preferred shares and that these preferred shares, as and when sold, should be taken by the Southern Pacific at par, payable in the bonds of its issue of $36,819,000 put out in 1899. These bonds would find their way into the treasury of the Central Pacific Railway Company and be available as new funds for its corporate purposes.

This left the stockholders of the old Central Pacific to be dealt with, for their stock had to be taken over if a reorganization were to be accomplished in accordance with the requirements of the situation. The outstanding shares of the old Central Pacific were taken in by the Southern Pacific, share for share, at par, plus 25% in bonds of the $36,819,000 issue. In other words, of this issue of $36,819,000, $20,000,000 was to be used for the issue of the preferred stock of the Central Pacific, and the remaining $16,819,000 was just enough to provide the 25% in bonds which the Southern Pacific was required to add in the share for share exchange of the outstanding Central Pacific stock in the hands of private owners and amounting to $67,275,500.

It is, therefore, readily apparent that the Southern Pacific assumed the burden of the plan for the readjustment of the Central Pacific and the settlement of the Government debt.

(16) The approval by Congress of the settlement of February 1, 1899, by the passage of the Act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1245), conferring authority upon the Secretary of the Treasury to carry the settlement into effect.

It will be recalled that the settlement agreement bears date February 1, 1899. In point of fact, it was executed in Washington February 15, 1899, by President McKinley, Secretary Bliss and Attorney-General Griggs and by Secretary Gage at Boston February 16, 1899.

A copy of the agreement was laid before both houses of Congress February 20, 1899, and referred by each of them to its Committee on Pacific Railroads.

The report to the House, which is identical with the Senate report, reads as follows (H. R. Document No. 238, 55th Congress, Third Session):

Indebtedness of Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroads.

Report of the Commissioners appointed to settle the Indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds in aid of the Construction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroads.

February 20, 1899—Referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads and ordered to be printed.

Washington, D. C., February 15, 1899.

To the House of Representatives:

The undersigned commissioners, appointed by the deficiency appropriation act approved July 7, 1898, to settle the indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds in aid of the construction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific railroads, would respectfully report that they have concluded a settlement of the said indebtedness with the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the owner of the said railroads. A copy of the agreement of settlement is herewith transmitted.

The settlement is made as of the 1st day of February, 1899, at which date the amount due to the United States for principal and interest upon its subsidy liens upon the Central Pacific and Western Pacific railroads amounted to the sum of $58,812,715.48, that being the full amount necessary to reimburse the United States for the moneys paid for interest or otherwise in aid of the construction of said railroads.

Said indebtedness is, by the agreement of settlement, funded at the amount aforesaid into twenty promissory notes, dated February 1, 1899, payable, respectively, on or before the expiration of each successive six months for ten years, each note being for the sum of $2,940,635.78, which is one-twentieth of the total amount due. Said notes bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and have a condition attached thereto to the effect that if default be made in any payment of either principal or interest of any of said notes, or any part thereof, then all of said notes then outstanding, principal and interest, shall immediately become due and payable, notwithstanding any other stipulation of the agreement of settlement.

It is further provided that the payment of the principal and interest of said notes shall be secured by $58,820,000 of face value first refunding mortgage 4 per cent gold bonds to be hereafter issued by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or its successor having title to the railroads now owned by said company and specified in said agreement, such bonds to be part of an issue of not exceeding $100,000,000 in all.

Said bonds are to be secured by a mortgage upon all railroads, equipment and terminals now owned by said Central Pacific Railroad Company, which mortgage shall be the first lien upon such property, or shall be secured by the deposit as collateral security therefor of certain percentages of the now outstanding bonds upon said property, or the different divisional parts thereof. The form of such mortgage is subject to the agreement of the parties to said agreement of settlement, and has been approved by the Attorney-General.

The agreement further provides that Speyer & Co., who are a party thereto, shall, within one month after the delivery to the United States of the settlement notes, accept from the Secretary of the Treasury the four earliest maturing notes, and pay to the United States the face value thereof, with accrued interest thereon to the date of payment, without recourse further than that Speyer & Co. shall, until the delivery of the refunding bonds as collateral, be entitled to share pro rata with the United States in the lien and all proceeds of the lien in favor of the United States to secure said indebtedness.

The said agreement was submitted in writing to the President and approved by him on the 15th day of February, and the said promissory notes, have been duly delivered to the Treasurer of the United States.

Other provisions and particulars of said agreement will appear by a perusal thereof, to which reference is respectfully made.

The execution of the agreement was duly authorized by resolution of the board of directors of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and approved by the formal action and consent of a large majority of the stockholders.

The commissioners have not found it necessary to expend any part of the sum of $20,000 appropriated for the expenses of the commission.

LYMAN J. GAGE,
Secretary of the Treasury.
CORNELIUS N. BLISS,
Secretary of the Interior.
JOHN W. GRIGGS,
Attorney-General.

A copy of the agreement was appended.

Speyer's plan for the readjustment of the affairs of the Central Pacific bore date February 8, 1899, and was published February 20, 1899, in a circular bearing that date, addressed to bankers, financiers and others, in Europe and America. Thus the entire plan for the reorganization of the Central Pacific became a public document as early as February 20, 1899. In addition, The Commercial & Financial Chronicle for February 18th and February 25th, 1899, contained all of the particulars of the readjustment plan of Speyer & Company.

It is also to be noted that although the plan of readjustment, which is Exhibit "B" to the Answer here, was dated February 8, 1899, Mr. Speyer testified (III R. 1187):

> "There were no doubt numerous proofs before that, but this was the first complete, final print.
>
> . . . . . .
> There were probably twenty or thirty proofs or revises."

It will also be remembered that the agreement of February 1, 1899, contained the following clauses:

> "Within thirty days after this settlement shall become binding, by the submission thereof in writing to the President, and his approval thereof, the Central Pacific Railroad Company shall deliver to the Treasurer of the United States its twenty promissory notes, bearing even date herewith, payable respectively on or before the expiration of each successive six months for ten years, counting from the date of this agreement, each note being for one-twentieth of the foregoing sum of $58,812,715.48, and bearing interest at the rate of three per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually.
> Messrs. Speyer and Company, within one month after the delivery to the United States of the notes referred to in Article Second hereof, will, against delivery to them of the four earliest maturing notes, endorsed to their order by the Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the United States without recourse to it, pay to the United States the face value of such notes, viz.: Eleven million seven hundred and sixty-two thousand five hundred and forty-three dollars and twelve cents ($11,762,543.12), with accrued interest thereon to date of payment."

Another provision of the agreement called for the purchase by Speyer & Company of the four earliest maturing notes, and it was necessary that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized by Congress to make the sale. Accordingly, with full knowledge of all of the facts before it, and in order that the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to sell these notes to Speyer & Company, in accordance with the above agreement, might be confirmed, Congress included the following provision in the general appropriation Act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1214, 1245):

> "And authority is hereby granted to the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to dispose of, without commission, at not less than par and accrued interest, any notes or other evidence in his possession touching the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States."

By this act, Congress put its seal of approval upon the plan of readjustment.

(17) The payment of $11,798,314.14 to the Government by Speyer & Company March 27, 1899, as a part of the Central Pacific settlement.

In the report of the Commission on the settlement of the Central Pacific debt, filed with both houses of Congress February 20, 1899 (both dated February 15, 1899), it is recited that "the said promissory notes have been duly delivered to the Treasurer of the United States", so that as early as February 20, 1899, these notes were in the hands of the Government.

What next took place is told in the Attorney General's Report 1899 (D. Ex. 53, VI R. 2240), page 31:

> "The notes provided for by this agreement were duly executed and delivered to the Treasurer of the United States in conformity with the terms of the agreement. In pursuance of another provision of the agreement, the four earliest maturing notes were purchased by Speyer & Co., March 10, 1899 [the sale having been expressly authorized by Congress], and the proceeds, amounting to $11,762,543.12, and accrued interest to the date of payment $35,771.02, in all $11,798,314.14, were received and covered into the Treasury March 27, 1899, as part payment of the indebtedness of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroad companies."

---

(18) The incorporation of the Central Pacific Railway Company in August, 1899, the transfer to that company of the assets of the old company, the issuance of the securities of the new company, the purchase from the new company of its preferred stock by the Southern Pacific Company, and the purchase by the Southern Pacific Company of the stock of the old company from the holders thereof.

All of the terms of the readjustment plan were carried out in accordance with its provisions (III R. 924).

Central Pacific Railway Company, a Utah corporation, was organized under articles dated July 26, 1899, which were filed July 29, 1899 (D. Ex. 46, V, R. 1967).

On July 29, 1899, the Central Pacific Railroad Company (incorporated in California June 28, 1861) executed a deed to the Central Pacific Railway Company (incorporated in Utah July 29, 1899) whereby it conveyed all of its property to the latter company (D. Ex. 47, V, R. 1978).

Among the provisions of the deed is the following (D. Ex. 47, V, R. 1982-1983):

> "And in further consideration hereof, and in order to provide for the readjustment of the present funded indebtedness of the party of the first part (subject to which the properties of said party of the first part are hereby conveyed), and for the purpose of securing the payment of the amounts becoming due on the Notes given by said party of the first part to the United States under said Settlement Agreement, dated February 1, 1899, as in said Settlement Agreement prescribed, the party of the second part [the new company] has assumed and hereby assumes the payment of all the indebtedness and guaranties of the said party of the first part, and has undertaken, covenanted and agreed, and hereby undertakes, covenants and agrees, to and with the party of the first part, that it will issue stocks and securities and execute mortgages as prescribed in the Central Pacific Readjustment Plan and Agreement, dated February 8, 1899, issued by Speyer & Co., Speyer Brothers, Laz Speyer Ellissen, Teixeira de Mattos Brothers and the Deutsche Bank of Berlin, as Readjustment Managers, or as the same may be modified under the terms thereof and with the assent of the party of the second part, and in a certain Agreement bearing date the 20th day of February, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, by and between F. G. Banbury, Esq., M. P., John B. Akroyd, Esq., Lord Alwyne Compton, M. P., Daniel Marks, Esq., and Joseph Price, Esq., as the London Committee of Central Pacific Shareholders, Messrs. Speyer & Company of New York, Messrs. Speyer Brothers of London, Mr. Laz Speyer Ellissen of Frankfort-on-the-Main, Messrs. Teixeira de Mattos Brothers of Amsterdam, and the Deutsche Bank of Berlin, as Readjustment Managers as therein stated, and the Southern Pacific Company, and in a certain other Agreement bearing date the 1st day of March, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, by and between August Belmont, Esq., Hon. John G. Carlisle and George Coppell, Esq., as the American Committee of Central Pacific Shareholders, the said Readjustment Managers and the Southern Pacific Company, and, under arrangements made or to be made with said Readjustment Managers will carry out such Readjustment Plan and said Agreements."

August 1, 1899, the Central Pacific Railway Company executed (a) its first refunding 4% mortgage, securing an issue of $100,000,000 to the Central Trust Company of New York, as trustee; and (b) its 3½% mortgage, securing an issue of $25,000,000 to the United States Trust Company of New York, as trustee (D. Exs. 27, V, R. 1788; 28, 1829).

On the same day (August 1, 1899) the Southern Pacific Company executed (a) to Central Trust Company of New York an indenture subordinating its lease of the Central Pacific lines to the $100,000,000 mortgage, and (b) to United States Trust Company of New York an indenture subordinating its lease of the Central Pacific lines to the lien of the $25,000,000 issue (D. Exs. 48, V, R. 1983; 49, 1987).

Henry Ruhlander, of the firm of Speyer & Company, testified that the plan of readjustment, which is Exhibit "B" to the Answer, was actually carried out in accordance with its terms, resulting in the organization of the Central Pacific Railway Company and the issuance of its 4% refunding bonds and its 3½% mortgage bonds, and the acquisition of the common stock of the old Central Pacific Railroad Company by the Southern Pacific in exchange for its stock and 25% in bonds; and that the other conditions of the plan were carried out (III R. 924).

In the Attorney General's Report 1899, it is said (p. 31):

> "On October 7, 1899, bonds were delivered to the Treasury Department by the (Central) Pacific Railway Company to secure the outstanding notes held by the Treasury in conformity to the terms of the agreement of settlement."

(19) The Act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1023), as a further recognition and confirmation of the readjustment plan.

We have seen that with full knowledge of the facts and of all the terms of the plan, Congress passed a law on March 3, 1899, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell to Speyer & Company the four earliest maturing Central Pacific notes, and thereby ratified the agreement of February 1, 1899.

We come now to another act of Congress, passed March 3, 1901, whereby the agreement was a second time approved. Before taking up this act, however, we desire again to call attention to the report of Attorney-General Griggs for 1899, pages 30 to 33 (D. Ex. 53, VI R. 2239).

"Pacific Railroad Matters.

The deficiency appropriation act of July 7, 1898, appointed the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney-General a commission with full power to settle the indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific bond-aided railroads upon such terms and in such manner as might be agreed upon by them or by a majority of them and the owners of said railroads, subject to the approval of the President.

An agreement for the settlement of this indebtedness was entered into between the said commissioners with the railroad companies on February 1, 1899. At that date the amount due the United States for principal and interest upon its subsidy liens upon the Central Pacific and the Western Pacific railroads was $58,812,715.48, more than one-half of which was accrued interest upon the principal debt. The agreement of settlement provided for the funding of this amount into 20 promissory notes bearing date February 1, 1899, payable, respectively, on or before the expiration of each successive six months for ten years, each note being for the sum of $2,940,635.78, or one-twentieth of the total amount due. The notes bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and have a condition attached to the effect that if default be made either in the payment of principal or interest or either of said notes or in any part thereof, then all of the said notes outstanding, principal and interest, shall immediately become due and payable notwithstanding any other stipulation of the agreement of settlement.

It was further agreed that the payment of the principal and interest of the notes shall be secured by the deposit with the United States Treasury of $58,820,000 of face value of first refunding mortgage 4 per cent. gold bonds, to be thereafter issued by the Central Pacific or its successor having charge of the railroads then owned by said company, such bonds to be part of an issue of not exceeding $100,000,000 in all, and to be secured by mortgage upon all railroads, equipments, and terminals owned by said Central Pacific Railroad Company, such mortgage to be a first lien upon such property, or to be secured by the deposit as collateral of certain percentages of the outstanding bonds upon such property or on the different divisional parts thereof.

The notes provided for by this agreement were duly executed and delivered to the Treasurer of the United States in conformity with the terms of the agreement. In pursuance of another provision of the agreement, the four earliest maturing notes were purchased by Speyer & Co., March 10, 1899, and the proceeds, amounting to $11,762,543.12, and accrued interest to the date of payment $35,771.02, in all $11,798,314.14, were received and covered into the Treasury March 27, 1899, as part payment of the indebtedness of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroad Companies. The properties of the various companies comprising the Central Pacific system were subsequently conveyed to a new corporation called the Central Pacific Railway Company, which latter company executed the mortgage and bonds provided for by the agreement of settlement. On October 7, 1899, bonds were delivered to the Treasury Department by the Central Pacific Railway Company, to secure the outstanding notes held by the Treasury in conformity to the terms of the agreement of settlement. The United States therefore holds the notes of the Central Pacific Railroad Company guaranteed* by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to the amount of $47,050,172.36, bearing interest payable semi-annually at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum and secured by the deposit of an equal amount of first-mortgage bonds of the Pacific Railway Company, thus providing, beyond doubt or peradventure, for the sure and gradual payment of the whole of this subsidy debt, and providing in the meantime for the payment of interest at the rate of 3 per cent. upon the unpaid balances.

*The notes themselves were not guaranteed but the entire issue of bonds was guaranteed and there were in the hands of the Government bonds equal in amount to the face of the notes and bearing, of course, the guaranty of the Southern Pacific Company.

Taking into account the enormous material benefits that have accrued to the country from the construction of these transcontinental lines of communication, and the advantage which the Government has had by way of reduced rates of transportation and service over them, the participation of the Government in the construction and maintenance of these enterprises has been fully justified, and the faith of the original promoters and projectors of these great lines has been proven to have had a substantial basis."

It is clear, therefore, that all the details of the settlement between the Central Pacific and the Government had become public matters of common knowledge in the country, and cumulative evidence to this point may be found in the frequent reviews of the readjustment, with all its incidents, published in The Commercial & Financial Chronicle throughout the year 1899 (D. Ex. 95, VI, R. 2258).

In 1900 questions relating to interest upon claims for transportation service rendered the Government over the non-bond-aided lines of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and Southern Pacific Company were before the Senate Committee on Appropriations. By a settlement agreement made on February 1, 1899, the claims themselves had been allowed, but in the absence of express authority, no allowance had been made for accrued interest thereon, amounting to $1,496,090.41. In response to a request from the Senate Committee the details of these claims for interest were laid before the Committee by Secretary of the Treasury Gage in a letter dated May 12, 1900, which is Exhibit "C" to the Answer (I R. 73). This letter was ordered to be printed by the Senate March 2, 1901, and on the following day the Act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1010, 1023), became a law. It was a general appropriation bill and contained the following provision:

> "That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make settlement of the claims growing out of Government transportation over non-bond-aided lines of the Southern Pacific Company and Central Pacific Company by crediting against the notes of the Central Pacific Railroad Company held in the Treasury of the United States interest on all of said judgment and allowed claims at four per centum per annum, as set forth in his letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, dated May twelfth, nineteen hundred." (p. 1023)

In this act, we have the second instance of Congressional recognition of the Central Pacific notes, and ratification of the plan of readjustment of February 1, 1899.

(20) The payment to the Government of the $47,050,172.48, with interest, in discharge of the sixteen notes remaining in the hands of the Government after Speyer and Company had taken over on March 10, 1899, the four earliest maturing notes.

It appears by the testimony of Andrew K. Van Deventer, Treasurer of the Southern Pacific Company, that all the notes held by the Government were paid as and when they matured, except the four earliest ones, which were sold to Speyer and Company, March 10, 1899. The last of the twenty notes matured February 1, 1909, and the last payment was made upon that date.

It is established by the testimony of Mr. Van Deventer that these payments to the Government were made by the Southern Pacific Company (III R. 904). It appears, too, that these notes were charged by the Southern Pacific to the Central Pacific, and that they were paid by the Central Pacific. Inasmuch, however, as the Southern Pacific was the only stockholder of the Central Pacific, this was a mere matter of bookkeeping. The point, after all, is, that the Southern Pacific was the company that made the payment possible.

(21) The death on August 13, 1900, of C. P. Huntington the last survivor of the four men who built the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system; the acquisition by the Union Pacific of the Huntington stock and other stock in the Southern Pacific Company, giving the Union Pacific a dominating control of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system; and the operation of the latter by the former until the final decree in the Union Pacific unmerger suit, June 30, 1913.

C. P. Huntington survived the three men with whom he had been associated in the construction of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific lines. Mark Hopkins died March 29, 1878, six months after the Southern Pacific construction had reached Yuma on October 22, 1877; Charles Crocker died August 14, 1888, three years after the Southern Pacific had become lessor of the Central Pacific under the ninety-nine year lease executed in 1885; and Leland Stanford died June 20, 1893, a few months before receivers for the Union Pacific were appointed, October 13, 1893, and when Congress was attempting to devise a plan for the collection by the Government of the indebtedness due from the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific. Mr. Huntington died August 13, 1900.

The agreement with the Government was executed February 16, 1899. The notes for the full amount of the Government indebtedness were delivered to the Treasurer of the United States February 20, 1899; four of them were purchased by Speyer & Company March 10, 1899; the new securities of the Central Pacific were put out August 1, 1899, and the bonds by which the notes of the Government were required to be secured were delivered to the Treasury Department October 7, 1899. Within twelve months thereafter, C. P. Huntington died.

A few months later, in February, 1901, Mr. E. H. Harriman representing the Union Pacific Company, acquired for that company and its subsidiaries the Southern Pacific stock owned by the estate of C. P. Huntington. It amounted to slightly less than twenty-five per cent of the outstanding issue. At about the same time the Union Pacific also made purchases in the open market of thirteen per cent of the outstanding Southern Pacific stock, bringing its holding up to 750,000 shares, representing approximately a three-eighths interest in the company. In 1902 the Union Pacific bought 150,000 additional shares, increasing its holding to about forty-six per cent, which interest it maintained, with comparatively slight variations in amount until 1913, when the Union Pacific control of the Southern Pacific was terminated.

At the death of C. P. Huntington and thenceforward until the Union Pacific merger, there was active, vigorous competition between the El Paso and Ogden routes. The acquisition of control of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system by the Union Pacific resulted in the suppression of that competition while the dominance of the Union Pacific continued.

We pass now to consider in detail the Government's suit against the Union Pacific to terminate its control of the Southern Pacific.

(22) The case of United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, from its commencement February 1, 1908, to the entry of the final decree June 30, 1913.

As we shall have occasion later to deal with this case, we refer here only to that phase of it which concerns the questions with which we have been dealing and are now about to deal.

The suit was filed in the Circuit Court for the District of Utah February 1, 1908, to terminate the Union Pacific control of the Southern Pacific Company, which company was joined as a defendant. It was there decided June 24, 1911 (188 Fed. 102). The decision of this court was rendered December 2, 1912. Upon the going down of the mandate, the Government moved that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railway Company should be brought in as additional parties defendant, which was accordingly done February 12, 1913. The final decree was entered June 30, 1913.

The petition filed February 1, 1908, alleged (pp. 4-7):

> "That the Central Pacific Railroad Company was organized under the laws of California, and constructed a line of railroad from Sacramento, Cal., to Ogden, Utah;
>
> That the Western Pacific Railroad Company was organized also under the laws of California, and constructed a line of railroad from San Francisco to Sacramento, Cal., and that these two latter corporations were afterwards consolidated into and became the Central Pacific Railroad Company, which was for many years engaged in the operation of said line of railroad from San Francisco to Ogden, at which point it connected with the main line of said Union Pacific Railroad Company;
>
> That by the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, the said lines of railway (the roads named in the Act of July 1, 1862) receiving said aid (land grants and Government bond aid) . . . were required to operate their lines as one continuous line, without discrimination against or in favor of any or either of said companies;
> That in and by section 15 of said act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, it was, among other things, provided 'That the several companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads are hereby required to operate and use said roads and telegraph for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, and in such operation and use to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others.'

That by the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874 (18 Stat. 111), this provision was in substance re-enacted, and any officer or agent of the companies refusing to operate and use the said railroads for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, without discrimination as aforesaid, was declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment; and any party injured was authorized to sue for damages or to procure an injunction to enforce its provisions.

That the Southern Pacific Company was on said January 1, 1901 (the year in which the alleged combination occurred), and still is the owner and in control by and through its ownership of the stock of various connecting lines of a line of railway extending from New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, through said State and the State of Texas, the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and the States of California and Oregon, to said Portland;

That said Southern Pacific Company also owned and still owns a line connecting with said through lines ending at Galveston, Tex., upon the Gulf of Mexico, and in connection with its lines of railroad so reaching New Orleans and Galveston it owned and operated and still owns and operates a line of steamships running from said ports to Habana, Cuba, and to the city of New York;

That then and now the said Southern Pacific Company was and is also the owner of all the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company,* a corporation organized and existing under the laws of California,* which succeeded to the ownership of the line of railway from Ogden to San Francisco theretofore owned by the corporation of the same name, to wit, Central Pacific Railroad Company, hereinbefore particularly described; and by virtue of such ownership of all said capital stock said Southern Pacific Company then and now in all respects controls the operation and management of the affairs and business of said Central Pacific Railroad Company."*

. . . . . .

That the said rail lines of the said Southern Pacific Company from the Mississippi River to Portland, Oreg., by way of San Francisco and Los Angeles, were in active competition with said lines of railroad of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for the transportation of vast quantities of freight from points in the Mississippi Valley and in the Eastern States, both to and from the Pacific coast and points in Colorado and other interior States; and said steamship line of said Southern Pacific Company from New York to New Orleans and Galveston, together with its rail lines run in connection therewith, was in active competition with the lines of said Union Pacific Railroad Company for a large amount of traffic originating in the Atlantic coast and Central states;

That the rail line of said Southern Pacific Company from San Francisco to Portland was in active competition with the ships plying between San Francisco and Portland and owned by said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, as hereinbefore alleged;

That the said ships of the Portland and Asiatic Steamship Company, in connection with the rail lines of said Union Pacific Railroad Company and its subsidiary companies, as hereinbefore alleged, running from Portland, Oreg., to the East, were in active competition with the ships of said Pacific

*This description of the corporation was inaccurate because the new company was the Central Pacific Railway Company, a Utah corporation.

Mail Steamship Company and the rails of said Southern Pacific Company running to the East from San Francisco;

That the line of railroad composed of the tracks of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Company and said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company between Ogden, Utah, and Portland, Oreg., were in active competition with the lines of said Southern Pacific Company between said points;

That the rail lines of the said Southern Pacific Company were in active competition with the ships and rail lines of the said Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company for a large amount of traffic between San Francisco and points in Montana, Idaho, and other States.

That the competition hereinbefore alleged between the system of railroads and steamships owned and controlled by said Union Pacific Railroad Company and the system of railroads and steamships owned and controlled by said Southern Pacific Company was substantial and included a large volume of traffic, both freight and passenger.

That the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company has been for a period of more than eight years last past the owner and in control, by direct ownership and by the ownership of the stock of railway companies owning a portion of said lines and by lease, of a line of railway reaching from Chicago, in the State of Illinois, through the States of Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and the State of California to the city of San Francisco and to tide water at San Diego, Cal.; that said line of railway touches the Union Pacific at Kansas City, Mo., and is and during all said times has been competitive with said Union Pacific Railroad Company and said Southern Pacific Company for a large traffic to and from the Pacific coast and the Orient, to and from various points in the east and the Mississippi valley and in the State of Colorado and other interier States;"

In the taking of testimony the Government undertook to show, and succeeded in proving, that prior to the Union Pacific's acquisition of control of the Southern Pacific, there was active and vigorous competition between the Ogden and El Paso routes.

In deciding the case, Judge Adams said (188 Fed. 102, 113):

> "The voluminous evidence of officers, agents, and shippers to the effect that active competition existed between the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific roads prior to 1901 must be considered in the light of the legal and physical relations of the roads to each other and of other related facts. Whether there was competition or not, in view of all these things, is a mixed question of law and fact, and not susceptible of determination by the preponderance of proof as an issue of fact only."

In his dissenting opinion, Judge Hook said (p. 121):

> "The other question in the case is decided by the court against the government. It is whether the two great transportation systems, the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific, were in a substantial sense competitors in interstate and foreign commerce. This question involves the relative location of their lines on land and sea, and not only the parts they actually performed, but also those they were naturally capable of performing, in the movement of traffic. Albeit in part within the domain of judicial knowledge, this seems to me to be a pure question of fact. Some hundreds of witnesses, practical railroad men and shippers of wide experience, testified upon it, and a great mass of evidence was taken, showing almost without dispute, that, using the term 'competition' as business men understand and use it, there was active, vigorous, and substantial competition between the > Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific before the former obtained control of the latter. But the court holds the question of competition to be one of mixed law and fact, not determinable by the evidence alone, and as such it is answered against the government."

Again, Judge Hook said, in reply to the argument that the competitive traffic was small when compared with the total traffic (p. 124):

> "The magnitude of the traffic shown by the proofs was too great, and the competition for it too earnest and active, to dismiss it as merely incidental to the principal business of the companies, and as not furnishing a motive for the merger or combination."

In this court, it was said (226 U. S. 86-87):

> "It is said, however, and this was the view of the majority of the circuit judges, that these railroads were not competing, but were engaged in a partnership in interstate carriage as connecting railroads; and it was further said that the Southern Pacific, because of its control of the line from Ogden to San Francisco and other California points, was the dominating partner. A large amount of the testimony in this voluminous record was given by railroad men of wide experience, business men and shippers, who, with practical unanimity, expressed the view that, prior to the stock purchase in question, Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems were in competition, sharp, well-defined, and vigorous, for interstate trade. To compete is to strive for something which another is actively seeking and wishes to gain. The Southern Pacific, through its agents, advertisements, and literature, had undertaken to obtain transportation for its 'Sunset' or southerly route across the continent, while the Union Pacific had endeavored in the same territory to have freight shipped by way of its own and connecting lines, thus securing for itself about 1,000 miles of the haul to the coast."

Again (226 U. S. 89):

"The fact that the Southern Pacific had a road of its own from the Gulf to the Pacific coast did not prevent competition for this traffic. The Union Pacific and its connections were engaged in the same carrying trade, and as a matter of fact were competing for that trade by all the usual means of competition resorted to by rival railroad systems."

Again (226 U. S. 89-90):

"It is going too far to say that the Union Pacific was entirely at the mercy of the Southern Pacific in making rates for freight by way of the Ogden connection, because the latter company controlled the old Central Pacific line to San Francisco. It certainly would have been very detrimental to the Southern Pacific to have declined an arrangement for the carriage of freight received from the Union Pacific and its connections for transportation to California by way of the Ogden route. The traffic manager of the Southern Pacific testified that the division of the through rate from Omaha to San Francisco has been the same since 1870; that he thought it unfair to the Southern Pacific, but that it was the best that could be obtained at the time."

How keen this competition was is described in the following extract from the Government's brief of facts in the Union Pacific case (p. 39):

"There was the same incentive to active, energetic competition between these lines (Ogden and El Paso routes) that there would have been had the Southern Pacific not owned the line between Ogden and San Francisco."

An adequate reason for this keen competition is stated in the opinion of the Railroad Commission of California in Decision No. 477, dated February 24, 1913 (D. Ex. 25, V, R. 1769, 1775), presently to be discussed in detail. The Commission says:

> ". . . freight east and west through both the Ogden and El Paso gateways is at the present time carried in active competition with two other transcontinental lines, namely, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company and the Western Pacific Railway Company."

It is to be seen from the foregoing that the decision of this court in the Union Pacific case shows (a) that prior to the acquisition of control of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific in 1901 there was active, vigorous, earnest and substantial competition between the Ogden and El Paso routes; (b) that the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific did not prevent such competition, and (c) that the competition which existed in 1901 was suppressed as a result of the acquisition of control of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific.

(23) How the question of the purchase of the Central Pacific by the Union Pacific arose and came to be spoken of in the Union Pacific case.

In attempting to justify its acquisition of control over the Southern Pacific, the Union Pacific contended that its only motive for acquiring the Southern Pacific was to get control of the Central Pacific to California and the north and south lines in California. It argued that it had not acquired control of the Southern Pacific to dominate the Sunset-Gulf route of the Southern Pacific, but that, on the contrary, the Sunset-Gulf route was something of a hindrance and that the Union Pacific desired only to own and retain the Central Pacific line to California and the north and south lines within the State.

In reply to this argument, the Government contended that no matter what the motive of the Union Pacific might have been it did acquire a competitor, and did, in fact, suppress competition as a result. It was not contended in the argument that it would have been unlawful for the Union Pacific to have acquired the Central Pacific. Indeed it seemed to be assumed, or to be taken for granted, that because the Act of July 1, 1862, authorized the constituent lines provided for therein to become consolidated as one company such authority to consolidate continued (even after the Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890) no matter how changed or altered the Union Pacific and Central Pacific lines might have become by extensions, amalgamations, consolidations, etc. It was at no time suggested, however, that the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific was a violation of the Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890. The Government did not contest the argument that if the Union Pacific had bought the Central Pacific alone no case could be made out under the Anti-trust Law of July 2, 1890.

But the Union Pacific had not bought the Central Pacific, so that when the case was argued in this court it was, of course, clear that the legality of such a purchase was not before the court for determination. This court, therefore, was not called upon to render any decision upon that point.

However, in view of the course of the argument, and having in mind the possibility of such a purchase in the future, it was not unnatural for this court to say that, although the acquisition of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific violated the Anti-trust Act, nevertheless its decision should not be interpreted as forbidding the acquisition of the Central Pacific by the Union Pacific [provided, of course, the owner of the Central Pacific was minded to sell.]

In McFadden v. United States, 213 U. S. 288 (1909), it is said:

> "The language of the opinion should be interpreted in the light of the facts of the case."

Stearns v. Wood, 236 U. S. 75 (1915):

> "The province of courts is to decide real controversies, not to discuss abstract propositions."

The foregoing makes very clear what this court meant when it said (226 U. S. p. 97):

> "As to the suggestion made at the oral argument by the Attorney General, in response to a query from the court as to the nature of the decree, that one might be entered which, while destroying the unlawful combination in so far as the Union Pacific secured control of the competing line of road extending from New Orleans and Galveston to San Francisco and Portland, would permit the Union Pacific to retain the Central Pacific connection from Ogden to San Francisco, and thereby to control that line to the coast, thus effecting such a con> tinuity of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific from the Missouri river to San Francisco, as was contemplated* by the acts of Congress under which they were constructed, it should be said that nothing herein shall be considered as preventing the government or any party in interest, if so desiring, from presenting to the district court a plan for accomplishing this result, or as preventing it from adopting and giving effect to any such plan so presented."

The Government seems to entertain the idea that there is something in the paragraph quoted, or that something occurred in this court during the argument which is, in practical effect, a decision that the Southern Pacific was unlawfully in possession of the Central Pacific.

In the examination of Mr. Kruttschnitt, counsel for the Government questioned him as follows (II R. 784-785):

> "Q. Did Attorney Gentral Wickersham inform you that the Supreme Court, or some members of it, in the course of the argument had inquired as to whether or not the holding of the Central Pacific

*In using the word "contemplated" this court did not interpret the Act of July 1, 1862, as commanding a consolidation of the roads operating the continuous line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean. The provision respecting consolidation was to give statutory authority for consolidation, without which the right to consolidate would not have existed. In Clearwater v. Meredith, 68 U. S. (1 Wall.) 25, 40 (1863), the court, in dealing with an act authorizing the consolidation of railroad corporations, said that "the act of the legislature of Indiana allowing railroad corporations to merge and consolidate their stock, was an enabling act—was permissive, not mandatory". In Nugent v. The Supervisors, 86 U. S. (19 Wall.) 241, 249 (1873), speaking of another statute authorizing the consolidation of railroad companies, the court said, "It was therefore contemplated by the legislature, as it must have been by all the subscribers to the stock of the company, that precisely what has occurred might occur." In other words, the consolidation of the Pacific Railroads was within the contemplation of Congress in the sense that Congress gave them authority to consolidate if they desired to do so by the Southern Pacific was not in violation of the Sherman Act?

A. You ask if he informed me of that?

Q. Yes.

A. No, he did not, because I knew, and our attorneys were present at the time the Supreme Court judge, on the argument of the case, made that remark; but he did not make it in just the way that you do. It may have been at some other time, but this whole thing seemed to have started in the argument of the case before the Supreme Court, when one Justice said: 'If the Union Pacific bought this Southern Pacific simply to get the Central, why not let them have the Central part alone and prohibit them from having the rest?' And one of his associates very pertinently remarked: 'That is all right, but what would the Southern Pacific stockholders say to that proposition?'

Now, it occurred that way, and it occurred in the presence of our counsel and was so reported to me after it occurred."

It would have been indeed remarkable if this court had decided that the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific suppressed competition, when the testimony and the argument of the Government were the other way; in fact, we may say that it would have been remarkable if the court had so held or intimated concerning a matter not in issue, and concerning which the only argument was the contention of the Government that, notwithstanding the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific, the lines via Ogden and El Paso were in active and vigorous competition.

It is true that the opinion assumes, for purposes of argument merely (but nothing more), that there would be nothing illegal in the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Union Pacific, but the opinion does not decide that such an acquisition would be lawful. This court said (226 U. S. 93):

> "Conceding for this purpose that it might have been legitimate, had it been practicable, to acquire the California connection at Ogden over the old Central Pacific line, we must consider what was in fact done," etc.

Again (226 U. S. 93):

> "Because it would have been lawful to gain, by purchase or otherwise, an entrance into California over the old Central Pacific, does not render it legal to acquire the entire system, largely engaged in interstate commerce in competition with the purchasing road."

These extracts clearly show, as already stated, that what this court was considering was the legality of a possible acquisition of the Central Pacific line by the Union Pacific, and not whether the Southern Pacific ownership of the line was illegal.

We have elsewhere shown that the court did not decide that the Union Pacific could lawfully acquire the Central Pacific. It simply declared that its opinion should not be construed to adjudge that it would be unlawful for the Union Pacific to do so; and the only effect of the extracts from the opinion above quoted is to leave the question of the power of the Union Pacific to buy the Central Pacific an open and undecided question.

(24) How the plan for the purchase of the Central Pacific by the Union Pacific from the Southern Pacific failed of accomplishment.

The decision in United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, December 2, 1912, provided that a plan to carry into effect the dissolution ordered should be presented to the District Court within three months after it had received the mandate of this court. In negotiations between the Union Pacific and the Government respecting such a plan the Attorney-General advanced the opinion that the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific was a violation of the Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, and insisted that if the Southern Pacific did not immediately divest itself of ownership in the Central Pacific, proceedings for dissolution would be commenced. Under these circumstances the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific (the latter not yet released from the control of the former) negotiated for the purchase of the Central Pacific by the Union Pacific from the Southern Pacific. This purchase, however, involved difficulties which could only be met by collateral agreements, and these agreements required the approval of the Railroad Commission of California. The application for such approval was made February 17, 1913, whereupon the Western Pacific Railway Company (incorporated in 1905 to build from San Francisco to Salt Lake) intervened, and the proceedings took such a course that the Railroad Commission of California (in two opinions rendered February 24, 1913, Nos. 477 and 478; D. Exs. 25, 26; V, R. 1769, 1782) refused in effect to approve the agreement between the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific. As a result, the agreement was abandoned, and another plan for the disposition of the stock of the Southern Pacific owned by the Union Pacific was decreed and carried into effect.

It is important to describe the transaction sought to be carried into effect by the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, noting the particulars to which the Railroad Commission offered no objection and those which the Commission refused to approve.

The several features of the plan and the views of the Commission regarding them were as follows:

(1) The stock of the Southern Pacific held by the Union Pacific was to be transferred to the stockholders of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific in the proportion of one share of Southern Pacific stock in the Union Pacific treasury to each four shares of Union Pacific stock held by its stockholders generally, and one share of said Southern Pacific stock in the treasury of the Union Pacific to each three shares of Southern Pacific stock owned by stockholders other than the Union Pacific.

With this method of distributing the stock of the Southern Pacific in the treasury of the Union Pacific, the Railroad Commission said it had "no direct official concern," but it invited attention to the suggestion that such a method would still render possible the control of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific (Decision No. 478; V, R. 1784).

Before proceeding to consider the other details of the agreement, we quote what the Railroad Commission of California said in this connection (Decision No. 477; V, R. 1771):

> "The only thing provided in the agreement which was in accordance with the positive admonition of the Supreme Court is the sale by the Union Pacific of the stock of the Southern Pacific. Everything else provided in the agreement is, in our judgment, in excess of the requirements of the Supreme Court; but it is presupposed* in the agreement that the design of the Attorney General of the United States was to bring about at the same time the dissolution of the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific."

(2) By the agreement the Union Pacific was to assume approximately $200,000,000 of bonded indebtedness of the Central Pacific and to pay to the Southern Pacific about $104,000,000 (Decision No. 477; V, R. 1772). In consideration of this price, the stock of the Central Pacific was to be transferred by the Southern Pacific to the Union Pacific, and all the leases of Central Pacific properties held by the Southern Pacific were to be cancelled.

The Commission held that it had no power to interfere with this feature of the plan. In order, however, to make clear its order and determination concerning those features (hereafter to be considered) with which it did have power to deal, the Commission prefaced its opinion with its views respecting the effect of the plan on both interstate and intrastate traffic, as follows (Decision No. 477; V, R. 1773-1776):

* As we have seen, pp. 201-5, supra, there was nothing whatever in the decision of this court which in any way required the Central Pacific line to be sold.

"The plan presented to us in this agreement contemplates the control by the Union Pacific not only of a line to the coast, but also of many important feeders owned by the Central Pacific in northern and central California. As a matter of fact, the acquisition of the entire Central Pacific holdings by the Union Pacific will give it an entry into all of the important centers of population in California north of the Tehachapi Mountains, while its control by stock ownership of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company from Salt Lake to Los Angeles, with the connections of the Oregon Short Line from Salt Lake to Ogden, gives it an entry into the region south of the Tehachapi Mountains, and its ownership of the Oregon Short Line and the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company gives it access to Portland and other Oregon points. The Southern Pacific, on the other hand, while it is left with its Coast line from San Francisco to Los Angeles, will, in our opinion, if this agreement is consummated, compete at a disadvantage at all points north of the Tehachapi Mountains with the Union Pacific-Central Pacific line. In fact, it is in evidence in this case from the testimony of the representatives of the Southern Pacific itself, that that line will be excluded from practically all of the deciduous fruit business in California, as well as a major portion of the dried fruit business and a large portion of the citrus fruit business originating at points north of the Tehachapi Mountains.

We do not believe it necessary to the determination of the questions that are now presented to us to present in detail the traffic conditions which we consider will be brought about if the rearrangement contemplated by this agreement is consummated. Mr. Sproule, president of the Southern Pacific, testified that 47 per cent. of the traffic carried by the Southern Pacific as it now exists, controlling as it does the Central Pacific to Ogden, passes through the El Paso gateway. This, of course, includes practically all the Southern Pacific's traffic originating south of the Tehachapi Mountains and all of the traffic moving by water from Galveston over the Southern Pacific and Gulf line, and necessarily includes but a small percentage of the business produced north of the Tehachapi Mountains. Under present conditions, the Southern Pacific, having regard solely to traffic convenience, carries by way of its Sunset route only a comparatively small amount of freight which originates at points north of the Tehachapi Mountains. It would appear that under the circumstances of this case, the traffic will largely move over the most convenient and expeditious route. Such being the case, we are justified in concluding that for most of the traffic originating north of the Tehachapi Mountains, the Sunset route is a less convenient route than the route by way of Ogden gateway, and if this conclusion is correct, the Southern Pacific will compete at a disadvantage for most of this traffic when the ownership of the lines through the Ogden gateway and the El Paso gateway is in the hands of competing owners. Thus, if the Union Pacific secures control of the Central Pacific with its feeders as far south as Goshen and into practically all of the important commercial centers in northern and central California, the Southern Pacific will be placed in the position of the inferior road at all of these points, while if the Union Pacific were to secure merely the control of the main line of the Central Pacific from Ogden to San Francisco, the condition would be reversed and the Union Pacific-Central Pacific line would compete at a disadvantage or be compelled to build additional feeders.

We do not pretend to say, nor do we consider it necessary to decide, how serious an impairment of the Southern Pacific will be brought about by the securing of the Central Pacific main line and feeders by the Union Pacific, but we are of the opinion that the present commanding position of that road cannot be maintained under the contract which is presented to us for approval, and that there is room for grave fear that if the agreement is carried out this State will, instead of securing two strong competing lines, secure one dominant line and one much impaired line.

The desire of the Supreme Court and the Attorney General to produce active competition between these two transcontinental lines, of course, is founded in the belief that such competition will produce advantageous results to the shippers. We do not believe, however, that any appreciable reduction of transcontinental rates will be brought about by the unmerging of these lines, particularly under the terms of the agreement here under consideration. If, however, active and bona fide competition is produced between these lines there will be more striving after business and, consequently, probably some improvement in service, how great it is impossible to determine. We do not believe that the improvement in service will be very marked, because of the fact that the freight east and west through both the Ogden and El Paso gateways is at the present time carried in active competition with two other transcontinental lines, namely, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company and Western Pacific Railway Company.

Believing as we do that the plan here under consideration will not substantially benefit the shippers of transcontinental freight, either in rates or in service, it is well to consider what, if any, effect will be the natural result of this arrangement upon local traffic. At the present time, the local lines of the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific form one system within this State, reaching from Oregon to the Mexican line, and from Yuma and a point near Reno on the east. All local lines of these two systems are now under the control of one agency and operated as a unit. The result of the reorganization plan as set forth in this agreement will be the substitution as to a great part of this territory of two agencies to perform the work now performed by one.

While the representatives of both the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific state positively that it is contrary to their policy to permit the reorganization scheme to increase the rates or to interfere with the service locally within the State, yet we cannot refrain from observing that this result usually follows upon a substitution of two agencies in the performance of a service theretofore performed by one. We invariably have it urged upon us in rate controversies before the Commission, where rates are to be made over two connecting lines that the joint movement over two connecting lines is more expensive to the carriers in the aggregate than a single movement over one line between the same points. Therefore, regardless of the present disposition of the parties hereto, we feel that serious consideration must be given by the Commission to the possibility or probability of applications which may hereafter be made by carriers to increase rates in this State in cases where, as the result of the consummation of this agreement, points now upon one line may, by reason of the dismemberment of the Southern Pacific lines in this State be found located one solely on the Southern Pacific and the other solely on the Central Pacific.

It is our disposition to believe that it would be better for the local business within this State if the local lines now controlled by the Southern Pacific could remain under the control of one agency and not be separated and given over to the control of two. This conclusion, in conjunction with the opinion we have already expressed that the advantage to shippers as to transcontinental freight will be negligible if the provisions of this contract are carried out, leads us to suggest that it would be better to adopt the other method already suggested of bringing about the design of Congress in providing that the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific should be one continuous transcontinental line, namely, by the sale or long term lease of the line of the Central Pacific from Ogden to Sacramento to the Union Pacific and the provision for a trackage right from Sacramento to bay points for the Union Pacific and the retention by the Southern Pacific of the remainder of the Central Pacific system. Having given our views upon that portion of the contract, which while involved in the entire plan does not specifically require our approval, we shall now consider those matters for which our approval is required."

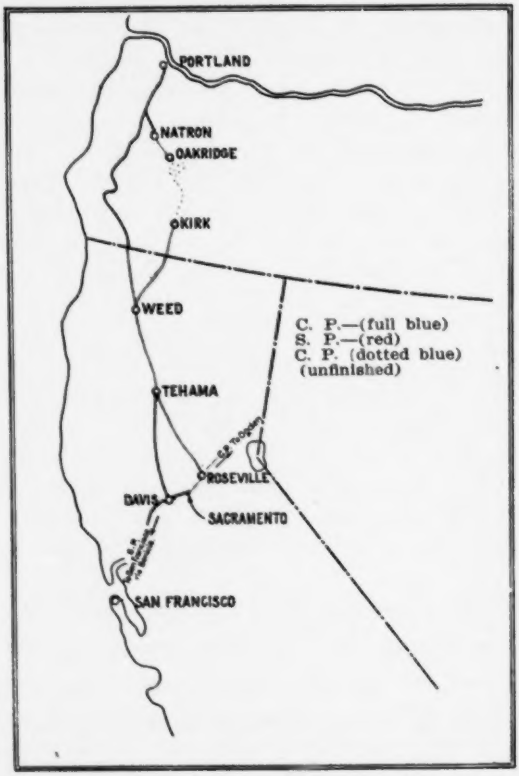
It is thus to be seen that the Railroad Commission was of the opinion that the plan presented would (a) probably not be advantageous to interstate shippers, and (b) that it would certainly be disadvantageous to intrastate shippers. Repeatedly through its opinions the Railroad Commission vigorously argues against a sale of any of the properties of the Central Pacific except the line from Sacramento to Ogden.

(3) The plan also provided that the Central Pacific should lease to the Southern Pacific its line of railroad from Tehama, California, to the Oregon line for 999 years, and sell its line from Weed, in Siskiyou County, California, to Natron, Oregon, to the same company.

The Commission consented to this part of the plan. The necessity for it is shown by the following map:



Rail Connection Between Tehama and Portland

N. B. Tehama is the most northerly point in California reached by the Southern Pacific over its own rails; all points in California north of Tehama are reached by Central Pacific rails only.

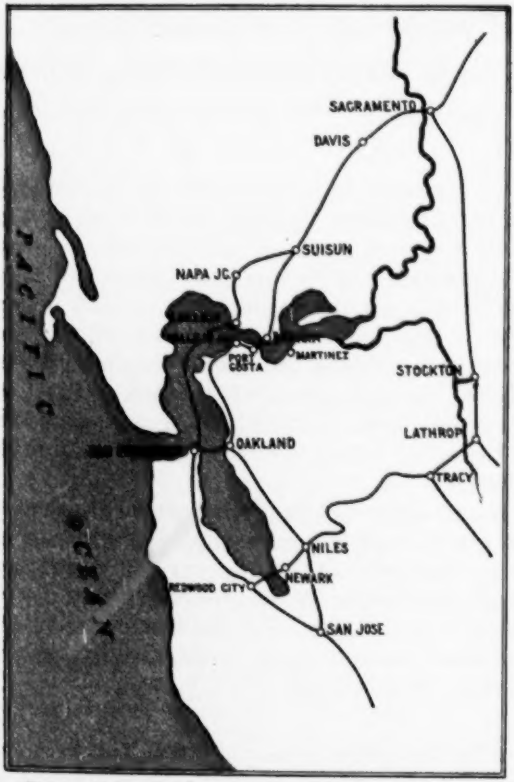
(4) The next item in the plan was a lease for 999 years by the Southern Pacific to the Central Pacific of trackage and running rights for through freight trains only, between Redwood and San Francisco. (In 1910 the Central Pacific had extended its line from Niles to Redwood, over the waters of San Francisco Bay, thereby creating the "Dumbarton Cut-Off".)



Routes Between Sacramento and San Francisco

1. Sacramento-Lathrop-Niles-Oakland-San Francisco.
2. Sacramento-Napa Junction-South Vallejo-San Francisco.
3. Sacramento, via Benicia cut-off-Suisun-Benicia-Oakland-San Francisco.
4. Sacramento-Lathrop-Niles-San Jose-San Francisco.
5. Sacramento-Lathrop-Niles, via Dumbarton cut-off-Newark-Redwood-San Francisco.

This part of the agreement between the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific gave the Central Pacific trackage rights for through freight trains only, from Redwood to San Francisco, so that it might route its through freight trains to San Francisco by its own line to Redwood and thence by virtue of this trackage privilege, over the Southern Pacific tracks from Redwood to San Francisco.

Speaking of this feature of the agreement, the Commission said that it would approve (Decision No. 477, V, R. 1777)

> "the Redwood-San Francisco lease, except as to the term thereof. Except in those cases where we would approve a sale of the property and a sale is only prevented by the outstanding obligations which are liens upon the property, we think a perpetual lease is not warranted. In other words, except in those cases where we would approve a sale we will not approve a perpetual lease. This is equally applicable to the term of 999 years provided in all of the other leases which are hereafter to be considered.
> The Commission is, however, willing to permit the leases in this case to run for a period of fifty years and for the further period until the Commission or other competent state authority, after notice and hearing, directs their cancellation or modification, whereupon such cancellation or modification shall be made."

(5) The last item was the lease for 999 years by the Southern Pacific to the Central Pacific of its line of railroad from Sacramento by way of Benicia to Oakland (sometimes called the Benicia Short Line or Benicia Cut-off) for joint and equal use with the Southern Pacific to the exclusion of any other line except with the permission of both companies; and to this there was added a provision for a lease for 999 years by the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific to one another of the joint use of their respective terminals, including industry tracks, at all junctions of their respective lines within said limits, to which no other company would be admitted except by the consent of both the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific.

Respecting these provisions, the Commission said (Decision No. 477; V, R. 1778):

> "The provision for the lease of the Benicia short line and the joint use of terminals, including industry tracks, are the ones to which we find the most serious objection. The agreement contemplates that the Southern Pacific shall grant to the Central Pacific for the Union Pacific the equal joint use and possession of the short line from Sacramento to Oakland via Benicia, at an annual rental, and that no additional company may use the tracks so leased unless it has first secured the written consent of both the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific. In other words, these two companies are to have the use of these very desirable tracks to the exclusion of any other railway company, unless both the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific concur in letting in the stranger. We recognize fully that this property now belongs solely to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and is operated solely by the Southern Pacific. Nevertheless, the grant by the Southern Pacific of the use of its tracks to one independent competitor (the Central Pacific) while refusing to grant the same rights to another independent competitor (the Western Pacific) would work a discrimination which the welfare of this State does not permit and which this Commission will not sanction. If the Southern Pacific is going to throw its property open to one of its several independent competitors, it must play fair with the others and permit its use by them also, on terms which shall provide for a just compensation to the extent to which the capacity of the property reasonably permits. If the present plan of a sale by the Southern Pacific of the Central Pacific stock to the Union Pacific be abandoned and in lieu thereof the Union Pacific shall buy the line of the Central Pacific between Ogden and Sacramento or secures long term lease thereof, with lease or trackage rights thence into San Francisco, other considerations might arise. It might then be held that the Union Pacific would be acting in accordance with the plan of Congress to secure a connected line of railway via the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific to the coast and that the Central Pacific was not acting voluntarily in granting the trackage rights to enable the Union Pacific to reach the coast from Sacramento. This effect of the Federal statutes heretofore referred to would confine the right to an outlet for the Union Pacific to the Stockton-Niles route."

In its order, the Commission directed (a) that no lease should exceed a term of fifty years except the lease of the line between Tehama and the California-Oregon line; (b) that in the event the Southern Pacific granted trackage rights in respect of the Benicia Short Line to one company it should grant it to other companies on the same terms, and (c) that in the event any of the companies party to the agreement granted the use of terminals, including industry tracks, to one company the same privileges should be granted to other companies upon like terms.

In other words, the Commission held (a) that if the Union Pacific acquired all the Central Pacific lines it would not be permitted to obtain from the Southern Pacific exclusive trackage privileges over any of the Southern Pacific lines, and (b) that if, however, the Southern Pacific retained all the Central Pacific lines except the line from Sacramento to Ogden the Commission would recognize the right of the Union Pacific to secure exclusive trackage rights over the Central Pacific from Sacramento via Niles to Oakland and thence by boat to San Francisco as legitimately appertaining to the through line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, provided for in the Act of July 1, 1862.

With these conditions imposed by the California Railroad Commission, the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific (the latter still under the former's domination, and with a threatened suit in sight) found it impossible to arrange a workable separation of the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific, and the negotiations came to an end.

(25) The competitive conditions existing between the Ogden Route and the Southern Pacific Sunset Gulf Route before the Union Pacific Merger of 1901.

In point twenty-two, supra pp. 192-200, we have quoted fully from the petition and brief of the Government, and from the decision of this court in United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 226 U. S. 61 (1912), respecting the competitive conditions which existed between the Ogden route and the Southern Pacific Sunset--Gulf route before the Union Pacific merger of 1901, and we do not think it necessary to make further comment.

(26) The non-competitive conditions between the Ogden Route and the Southern Pacific Sunset-Gulf Route during the Union Pacific merger from 1901 to 1913.

This court has held in United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 226 U. S. 61 (1912), that the acquisition of control of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific had the effect of restraining trade and commerce during the merger.

(27) The return to the conditions which existed prior to the merger of 1901, and the resumption of competition between the Ogden Route and the Southern Pacific Sunset-Gulf Route consequent upon the unmerger.

William Sproule, President of the Southern Pacific Company, testified that the policy of the Southern Pacific with respect to the conduct of its business is now the same "as it was prior to the time we became dominated by the Union Pacific, 1901" (I R. 201):

Speaking of traffic conditions in seaboard territory, John B. De Friest, the General Eastern Agent of the Union Pacific, said (I R. 305):

> "I think the situation now is about the same as it was before the merger."

Julius Kruttschnitt, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Board of Directors of the Southern Pacific Company, testified (II R. 739-740):

"Q. Since the unmerger in 1913 of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, has this competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route continued?

A. It has.

Q. What is its condition now?

A. It is active.

Q. Carried on in the same way in which you have indicated?

A. Yes.

Q. I believe you have already answered it, but I will ask you again: Have you ever considered it to the interest of the Southern Pacific to influence this competition by impairing in any way the service over the Ogden route?

A. We have not; and I could not conceive of any officer being stupid enough or short-sighted enough to try to do it; because, as I have said before, it would be suicidal for Southern Pacific interests to try to get freight to move away from the Southern Pacific and then lose it, and not get it for the Sunset, but lose it to the Atchison.

Q. Would it be possible, in your opinion, to impair the service on the Ogden routes west of Ogden and confine the effects of that impairment of service to business competitive with the Sunset-Gulf route?

A. No, it would be impossible.

Q. Please explain that.

A. It would be impossible, for the reason that, if the service were not good on the Central Pacific, people would decline to ship there, and then we would have only a small chance of getting for the Sunset route the freight that had been lost to the Central Pacific. The shipper would probably exercise his option to ship via Santa Fe or Western Pacific, and we do not want to risk that.

Q. Would any lessening of the efficiency of the service over the Ogden route be felt in its influence on traffic which was not competitive with the Sunset-Gulf route?

A. Will you please repeat that?

Q. That is, would it affect the traffic which would seek to get over the Ogden route, which is not competitive with the Sunset-Gulf route?

A. It would affect it to this extent: if we lowered the efficiency of the service, or the excellence of the service, we would lose it from the Central Pacific, without any certainty of getting it by the Sunset."

(28) The treatment of the Union Pacific by the Central Pacific both before and since the Union Pacific Merger.

In Mr. Kruttschnitt's testimony just quoted, we have shown how the self-interest of the Southern Pacific requires it to give to the Union Pacific the highest order of co-operation in its operation of the Central Pacific. Moreover, there is not the slightest suggestion in the case that the relation between these two companies in the operation of the properties is not most friendly and intimate.

Mr. Kruttschnitt testified (II R. 729-730) as follows:

"Q. After the unmerger in 1913, have there been any material changes in the arrangements for handling through business via the Ogden route?

A. None in policy. Of course schedules are rarely kept in effect any great length of time. In other words, there are questions of competition with other lines that may determine the times of leaving or the times of arriving; but those changes were always reached by agreement between the officers of the two roads.

Q. In your opinion, is the arrangement for operation of the through line via Ogden from San Francisco east over the Union Pacific as good now as it was during the merger period?

A. It is as good. I think it is better, because we have been making improvements all the time, and my judgment about the matter is borne out by the judgment of the public, by the way they use the line, by the amount of traffic both passenger and freight that we get over it.

Q. During the whole of the period above referred to, what have been the relations between the officials of the Southern Pacific Company and the officials of the Union Pacific Railroad Company with respect to the arrangements for the handling of through traffic via Ogden?

A. They were always perfectly cordial and co-operative.

Q. And that continues so to the present time?

A. Yes; I do not recall any complaints made since the unmerger.

Q. What kind of through service has been produced by the arrangements for the handling of through business via Ogden?

A. Well, we have, as I said, I think the best trans-continental service that way of any road in the United States, and my judgment is borne out by the verdict of the public in using the line, and from expressions we get from people who travel over the line and who make shipments over it. And then we have the still better evidence, of the traffic that we control that way."

Upon his cross-examination Mr Kruttschnitt testified (II R. 824):

"Q. You have spoken of the Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad as operated as one line. By that you meant, did you not, that they have had joint rates and have operated through cars and through trains, both freight and passenger?

A. No; I meant much more than that. We have arrangements with a good many lines for through rates, through cars and passengers, but I stated that with no line was our co-operation as close as with the Union Pacific, ever since I have known anything about it; and I understand that our treatment of them, after I went to California, was in no wise different from what it was before.

Q. Well, in what other ways than in arranging for through rates, through cars and through trains and through billings have you co-operated?

A. Well, in this way: your connection may suggest a new train or a through car; you may say that you see no necessity for a new train or no necessity for a through car, and you do not care about hauling it. Indeed, that you have balanced expected increased revenues with expected increased expenses, and that you think it will not pay and you don't propose to do it. When propositions from the Union Pacific have come, we have never taken that position.

Q. Now, is there any other respect in which the line has been operated as a through line?

A. Well, after making through rates, hauling of the through trains that they want you to haul, hauling all the through cars that they ask you to haul, co-operating with them in getting business as we have done, I don't see how much more you can do, unless you turn over the management of the road to them.

Q. I think you misunderstood the question. I did not ask you what more you could do, but is there any more that you do do?

A. Then I will say no; I do not see how we could do any more."

Judge Robert S. Lovett, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, called as a witness for the Government, testified (I R. 290):

"We work preferentially with the Southern Pacific."

Also (I R. 296):

"The Central Pacific is far and away the best connection for the Union Pacific to Central California. It is the shortest line and the best railroad in every sense of the word."

Again (I R. 297):

"Q. Well, could that (service) be increased or in any manner changed by the separation of the Central from the Southern Pacific control?

A. I would not like to say that, because I think the Southern Pacific Company is working now and has been ever since the merger, as it certainly was during the merger, the Ogden gateway very effectively. How long it will continue to do that I do not know. . . . I want to make my position clear on that. I cannot say that the situation would be improved beyond what it is now by the Southern Pacific, because up to this time, whatever it may do in the future, the Southern Pacific is working the Central Pacific very efficiently."

Lewis J. Spence, Director of Traffic for the Southern Pacific Company, testified (III R. 1045-1047):

"Q. . . . what are the relations between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific in respect to the through route via Ogden?

A. There are but few connecting lines whose relations are as close and co-operative. There are no connecting lines whose relations are closer and more co-operative than the relations between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific. The lines are operated as one connected, continuous, line.

Q. What about the personal relations between the officers of those lines in respect to mutual satisfaction as to the nature and extent of the co-operation?

A. They are exceedingly cordial and co-operative. I do not know of a complaint on either side, and I know of no cause for complaint on either side.

Q. What arrangements have you, for instance, with them in regard to advertising the Ogden through route?

A. We joined the Union Pacific in advertising the through train service between Chicago and San Francisco by the annual creation of a joint advertising fund, to which the lines contribute on a pro rata basis. Very much the largest share of that fund is spent in westbound advertising, and is placed in the hands of the Union Pacific for that purpose.

Q. They spend the fund to which you contribute as they see fit?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us the approximate amount annually which is expended for this westbound advertising?

A. The amount spent, between Chicago and San Francisco, during the current year will be about $140,000.

Q. What have been the results of this co-operative effort to afford the public a through line via Ogden? What kind of a line is that through line thus created?

A. Briefly stated, the results of this co-operation have been to establish the best through transcontinental line, taking passenger and freight service together, across the country.

Q. Of all the all-rail lines that you have mentioned, in your opinion, the Ogden route is the best?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Spence, state whether or not the Union Pacific is more or less at the mercy of the Southern Pacific now than it was just before the merger in 1901, in respect to securing good service, reasonable terms and facilities, and so forth, for engaging in transcontinental business via the Ogden route; and give the facts upon which your answer is based.

A. Prior to 1901 the Union Pacific had, beside the Southern Pacific west of Ogden as a connecting line, its rail route to Portland and its steamship line thence to San Francisco as its only alternative route. Since that time the Western Pacific and the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake railways have been constructed, affording the Union Pacific various routes; the Interstate Commerce Law was amended in 1906, delegating authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish through routes and joint rates, which gives the Union Pacific an absolute guaranty of the continuation of through routes and joint rates; in 1910 the Commission was given authority to suspend advanced rates, and by the same amendment to the law the shipper was given authority to route his freight, and the carriers were required to respect his routing.

Q. What kind of service is maintained by the Southern Pacific over its end of the Ogden route; that is between Ogden and San Francisco? I mean in respect of the maintenance of the road as well as in respect of the equipment and all the elements that go into service?

A. The service on the line west of Ogden is not excelled anywhere, under like conditions.

Q. What do you mean by 'under like conditions'?

A. The character of the country, the density of the traffic, and the population.

Q. State any facts that you may know, tending to show whether the Southern Pacific Company has any interest or motive to impair this service over the Ogden route.

A. In the first place, the Southern Pacific Company has a very large investment in the Central Pacific, upon which it is anxious to earn a return. In the second place——

Q. Just give the general character of that investment, without going much into detail.

A. It owns the stock, and is the guarantor of the bonds.

In the second place, the Southern Pacific is dependent upon the Central Pacific, west of Ogden, as the only route by which it can successfully compete for the traffic to and from the middle west territory, and also dependent upon that route to successfully compete for a large share of the traffic to and from the Atlantic seaboard territory for which the Sunset-Gulf route is physically unable to compete. These conditions not only afford no motive for impairing the service, but they afford every incentive for keeping the service up to its maximum efficiency.

Q. Could you impair the service on your part of the Ogden route, with a view to benefiting the Sunset-Gulf route in respect to the limited traffic for which those two routes offer alternative routes, without at the same time impairing the service and injuring the Ogden route in respect to this traffic as to which the two lines do not offer alternative routes?

A. No."

Again (III R. 1151):

"Q. Is the Sante Fe today the strongest all-rail line in the field?

A. No. The Union Pacific-Ogden route is the strongest line."

See also Defendants' Exhibit (Spence) No. 81, showing commercial freight interchanged between the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific at Ogden, Utah, for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1913, and 1914 (introduced III R. 1063) from which it appears that the tonnage was as follows:

	1913 Tons.	1914 Tons.
Eastbound	606,122	598,035
Westbound	547,861	469,406

Mr. Sproule testified (I R. 190):

> "Q. The strongest competitor of the Sunset route is the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe for California business; is that correct?
> A. I should say the strongest competitor is the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line."

He also testified that co-operation between the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific over Ogden "prevailed before the merger period and prevails since the merger period" (I R. 240).

---

(29) The treatment accorded by the Southern Pacific to its connections generally.

We have shown the treatment accorded by the Southern Pacific to the Union Pacific at Ogden. It is established by the testimony of Mr. Sproule that the Southern Pacific aims to co-operate and reciprocate with all other lines at Ogden with a view to the promotion of business; that is to say, the eastern lines shipping through Ogden give the Southern Pacific business and the Southern Pacific aims to reciprocate.

On this point Mr. Sproule said (I R. 197):

> "We aim to reciprocate with all those lines and interchange business with them and give them business to an extent that will justify them in working all they know how over our lines; that is, the through line via Ogden."

Mr. Kruttschnitt testified upon his cross-examination by the Government (II R. 770):

> "I have tried to indicate to you what the Southern Pacific construction is, how we have treated our connections whenever they have built in to us, but it does not follow at all that that same construction of those words ("business interests") would be given by some one else. I think we have given the right construction to them, because we have maintained very pleasant relations with all our connections, and from the mere fact that as strong a company as the Atchison, financially and in other respects, has never built short branches into this local territory, leads me to believe that our policy has been broad and has been satisfactory not only to us but to them. It does not follow that any other company might do the same. I have known companies that did not do it at all that way; they try to build up tariff walls at junction points that could not be pierced by their competitors and connections."

And again (II R. 818):

"Q. The Western Pacific and the Southern Pacific have some agreement as to division on freight delivered by the Southern Pacific to the Western Pacific and vice versa?

A. That is a traffic matter, which I am not familiar with; but I do know that with the Western Pacific, as with the Atchison, we have thrown open our local points freely to them on divisions. I do not know what the divisions are, but on divisions that they have accepted as satisfactory, and it has put them, as it has the Atchison, into all local points of the Southern Pacific. It is in pursuance of our policy of having our lines used to the maximum extent."

The point of junction between the Rock Island and the Southern Pacific is El Paso. In speaking of the relations of his company with that road, Mr. Spence testified (III R. 1151-1152):

"Q. Does the Southern Pacific operate, with the Rock Island, as one continuous line from California to Chicago?

A. We operate very closely with the Rock Island. We co-operate with them very closely. We join in the operation of a through passenger train—two through passenger trains. We do not join in the operation of any through mail train or any through mail car. We do not join in the operation of through merchandise cars to points north of the Tehachapi Mountains, because the volume of the traffic does not justify it.

Q. What is there lacking to your describing the Southern Pacific-Rock Island operation from California to Chicago as one continuous through line?

A. I was seeking to show the differences, whatever they might be, between that route, in answer to your question, and the route through Ogden. The differences are that by the Ogden route we operate a through mail train from Omaha to San Francisco on a schedule of two days, two hours and ten minutes, and a through mail car on the Overland Limited in two days, four hours and ten minutes. We do not operate either by El Paso in connection with the Rock Island. We do not operate through merchandise cars to central California via the Rock Island.

Q. When you use the term 'one continuous through route' to describe a route portions of which are operated by separate companies, what do you mean by that term?

A. I mean the joining in through passenger rates, in joint freight rates, in through billing and in through bills of lading. Those I should regard as the essential features to the operation of a connected continuous line. We do more. We operate the main trains as I have described, and a through mail car upon the fastest schedule made; because you know the government awards the mail to the schedule, and we carry the mail. We join in joint advertising, as I explained a day or two ago. We also do that for the Rock Island."

Mr. Spence further testified (III R. 1025):

"Q. Mr. Spence, what has been the policy of the Southern Pacific Company in respect of each transcontinental line which has made a junction with it from time to time?

A. The Southern Pacific has consistently opened each gateway as it has been reached by a transcontinental connection, and joined in the establishment of through rates and divisions.

Q. And have the through rates and divisions which it established been effective to enable the new transcontinental lines thus formed to engage actively in transcontinental business?

A. They have permitted them to engage in all business to and from points reached by the Southern Pacific.

Q. Was this policy adopted and enforced prior to the time when, by amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act, the Interstate Commerce Commission acquired authority to enforce the making of joint rates and fair divisions?

A. The policy was consistently pursued many years prior to the Interstate Commission having been empowered to establish through routes and joint rates."

In the construction of the Southern Pacific road from Mojave* to New Orleans, the Southern Pacific made connections with (a) the Atchison, Topeka and

*It will be remembered that the Mojave-New Orleans line (via Los Angeles and Yuma) is the line built under the Texas Pacific Act of March 3, 1871, and that the Mojave-Needles line was constructed under the Atlantic Pacific Act of July 27, 1866 (supra p. 43).

Santa Fe at Deming, (b) the Rock Island at El Paso, and (c) the Texas Pacific at Sierra Blanca. To each of these connections it gave full co-operation. Indeed, from the time of its entrance into California about 1883 the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe had a lease of the line from Needles to Mojave* and subsequently bought the line from the Southern Pacific. In addition it has had trackage arrangements with the Southern Pacific, giving it entrance into all the towns of California. (See Mr. Chamber's testimony, III R. 954-955, 984).

Eastern Rail Connections of the Southern Pacific

These facts are proved by affirmative testimony, but equally significant is the absence of any testimony to the contrary in the record. In other words, there is no complaint made by any witness that there has been a use of unfair methods by the Southern Pacific in the treatment of any of its connections.

(30) The fair treatment accorded the Central Pacific by Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker, notwithstanding their interest in the Southern Pacific Sunset-Gulf Route; and the continuation of that treatment down to the time of the commencement of this suit.

In financing themselves in their burdensome railroad construction it is clear, of course, that it was necessary for Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker to put out and sell Central Pacific stock. There came a time, therefore, when it would have been natural to expect the suggestion (if not more) that they were operating the Sunset-Gulf route in discrimination against the Ogden route and diverting traffic from the Central Pacific. This suggestion might have come from stockholders interested in the Central Pacific, but not interested in the Southern Pacific, or from the Government itself.

There is, however, no evidence that there was ever any discrimination in favor of the Southern Pacific line, or that any consideration other than traffic convenience and public advantage governed the transit of freight.

This very question is dealt with in the report of the United States Pacific Railway Commission (p. 115) which states one of the questions before the Commission and the reply thereto as follows:

> "(9) Whether any traffic or business which could or should be done on the aided lines of said companies, has been diverted to the lines of any other company or to non-aided lines.
> The evidence discloses that traffic has been diverted in a great variety of instances from the Union Pacific and Central Pacific railroads to other lines. As illustrations of such diversions the Commission refer to the following: The Southern Pacific, the California Pacific, and the Oregon Short Line. It would have been possible to have carried the traffic which was forwarded over the roads named by the Union Pacific and Central Pacific route. In the judgment of the Commission the controlling motive which has led to this alteration in the transit of freight has been the question of convenience and public advantage. It has not arisen from an intention to reduce the net earnings applicable to the percentage due to the United States. In the report of the Postmaster-General it is stated that this same diversion is practiced by his Department, and that he selects the best and the quickest routes because he thereby promotes public convenience."

Mr. Kruttschnitt testified on this point (II R. 806):

"Q. In respect to transcontinental business, has the Central Pacific Railroad Company ever, through its officials, competed against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, in practice?

A. It could not. They were one and the same thing. The officers of the Central Pacific were the officers of the Southern Pacific. Money from the same pockets built both."

It is plain from this answer of Mr. Kruttschnitt that the very preservation of their own interests prompted Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker to deal fairly with all the properties in which they were interested; and it appears from the further testimony of Mr. Kruttschnitt that the self-preservation argument still obtains (II R. 732-734):

"Q. During all this period, from the time you came to California to the present time, to what degree of efficiency have the lines standing in the name of the Central Pacific been maintained?

A. I think and know that the lines of the Central Pacific are maintained in as good order as those of any railroad in the United States.

Q. How does this standard of maintenance compare with the standard of maintenance of the lines composing the Sunset-Gulf route?

A. As a rule, the maintenance of the Central Pacific, because of the great amount of money spent on it on account of the heavier, denser traffic and on account of the country it runs through, is generally better than the Sunset lines, part of which, east of San Antonio and Texas, runs over low and wet countries where it is very difficult to keep the track up in as good condition as the tracks upon the deserts of Utah and Nevada. Up to a year ago it was our custom to carry out an annual inspection, and to mark each section on the entire line, graded as you would grade examination papers at college. Each feature of maintenance was marked as a maximum of ten, and the average cast up, and we gave prizes to the man who kept his section best. In looking over the last record we have, for 1913, as we abandoned this practice on account of forced economies, and on account of bad earnings in the last year, I find that the Central Pacific lines from San Francisco to Ogden averaged up 93.3 per cent.

A part of the Sunset line from San Francisco to El Paso was a point under that; it was about 92.3.

Q. Who made those markings?

A. They were made by a jury of operating officers, a jury of about twelve men, division superintendents and division engineers, the general superintendent and the general manager.

Q. What reasons exist for maintaining the Central Pacific line in question up to this high state of efficiency with respect to equipment, service and so on?

A. The reasons are that if we do not maintain the line in the highest state of efficiency and give the best service, we will lose the business.

The Atchison is competing strongly for California business; the Western Pacific has, and we have always had, competition in southern California with the San Pedro road.

Q. Is there any part of the traffic which you secure in competition with those lines which could not be induced to go over the Sunset route?

A. Yes, quite a good deal. There is a great deal of traffic that is competitive with the Santa Fe that we could not get to go over the Sunset at all.

Q. What, in your opinion, would be the result if you allowed the service to be impaired on the western end of the Ogden route?

A. It would be loss of traffic and necessarily loss of earnings; and there is only one word that could characterize such a policy, and that is that it would be suicidal, because the Southern Pacific has such an interest in the Central, through ownership of stock and through guarantee of bond issue that it cannot afford to lose any traffic for the Central Pacific that it can possibly retain, and self-interest alone makes us keep it up to the highest standard of excellence.

Q. In your opinion would the loss of traffic which you say would result from impairment of service on the line west of Ogden inure to the benefit of the Sunset-Gulf route?

A. I do not think so; I doubt if any of it would go that way. It would be taken by the Santa Fe, which is our most vigorous and active competitor."

Testimony to similar effect was given by Mr. Kruttschnitt, II R. 740-741, 805,806, 808 and 824.

EDWARD CHAMBERS, Vice-President of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, testified (III R. 973):

> "The Southern Pacific always gave very good service over their Central Pacific line. Their passenger service I judge them by more than anything else."

Again (III R. 978-979):

> "I know the Central Pacific-Union Pacific route has been improving right along up to today."

Again (III R. 979):

> "Q. Prior to 1901, or prior to 1899 anyway, the great energies of the Southern Pacific Company had been directed towards the development of the Sunset line, had they not?
>
> A. I would not say that their roadbed east of Los Angeles via El Paso was ever in better condition than around by Ogden and Sacramento. My observation and recollection is that it was just about the same. If anything, I should say the Central Pacific was a little better. It had, perhaps, more need of a better roadbed than any other line, on account of the large passenger business it did."

Again (III R. 983):

> "Q. You said the Ogden route had always given good service. By that you included the Central Pacific as a part of the Ogden route?
>
> A. Yes, sir.
>
> Q. As a matter of fact, as far as you know, has not the Central Pacific been maintained pari passu with the Union Pacific, and substantially in the same condition, as to efficiency, from the beginning?

A. That is my understanding, and that is my experience. I never heard of any difference between them.

Q. Has not generally the traffic over the Central Pacific and Union Pacific been of greater volume than the traffic over the Sunset line?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Always, has it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And has not the Central Pacific and Union Pacific track been maintained at a higher standard, as a rule, than the tracks of the Sunset route—heavier rail and otherwise better adapted for good service?

A. I would say yes; that is my general understanding, although I have never heard much objection to either one.

Q. But, other things being equal, the care of maintenance is in proportion to the amount of traffic you have to handle over a line?

A. Yes, sir. . . .

Q. That is, your main lines are always maintained, or usually maintained, at a higher standard than the branch lines?

A. Yes, sir. The needs of a passenger service largely control in the building up of the roadbed and tracks; that is the business that is sensitive to the condition of the road-bed and the tracks. That is what I judge the Central and Union Pacific route by. That has always been the principal passenger route of the Southern Pacific Company.

Q. And it always has been the principal passenger route transcontinentally, really, leaving out, of course, the Atchison as a very formidable competitor?

A. Not very effective yet, as to northern California.

Q. There is no doubt of the position and prestige of the Central-Union Pacific line as a passenger line—transcontinental?

A. No."

See testimony of Mr. Spence (III R. 1045-1047) under point twenty-eight, supra.

All this testimony is quite consistent with, indeed, it is in part explained by, the fact that there is a natural division of traffic between the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes. For instance, Mr. Kruttschnitt testifies (II R. 808):

> "There is certain freight which the Southern Pacific Company cannot get to go by the Sunset route. There is some which it cannot get to go by the Central Pacific. There is some which may go either way."

Again (II R. 825):

> "A. Where we have seen an opportunity of making the service of the Sunset line appear more attractive to the shipper than the other, we have done it; but there is a large amount of freight that we cannot by any possibility get to go over the Sunset line. I have always known it, the public knows it, and that we help the Union Pacific to get for their line."

As an example of one of the numerous instances where the character of the traffic and not the choice of the Company governs the routing, R. P. Schwerin, Vice-President and General Manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, testified that the eastbound traffic of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company travelled by the central route, via the Western Pacific, Santa Fe or Central Pacific because it was all fast freight, and only unusual shipments, i. e., local shipments, to some point in Texas or beyond, could go via El Paso (II R. 699-700).

These considerations are all re-enforced by the testimony of Mr. Spence, who shows that it is no longer possible, even without the Hepburn Act (approved June 29, 1906) for a carrier to route freight as it is minded to do, because an arbitrary routing without full regard to the service for which the shipment calls would swiftly end in disaster (see III R. 1032-1033, 1050, 1058, 1059, 1175).

(31) The radical changes in traffic conditions generally between 1901 when the Union Pacific merger occurred, and 1914, when this suit was commenced.

In the consideration of this case it is important to note the radical changes in traffic conditions generally between 1901, when the Union Pacific acquired control of the Southern Pacific, and 1914, when this suit was commenced.

Some of these changes are the following:

(a) Through routing and joint rates under the Hepburn Act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. 584).

The rule reviewed in Southern Pacific Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1906) 200 U. S. 536, that carriers might but need not agree upon through routing and joint rates has, of course, been superseded by the amendment to the act creating the Interstate Commerce Commission approved June 29, 1906, and called the Hepburn Act (34 Stat. 584). Under the terms of this act, the Commission is empowered to establish the through routes and joint rates which now prevail.

(b) The right of the shipper to route his own freight under Act of June 18, 1910 (36 Stat. 551).

By further amendment, Act of June 18, 1910 (36 Stat. 551), it was provided that the shipper, subject to regulation by the Commission, "shall have the right to designate" the routing of his freight.

Mr. Spence testified (III R. 1064):

> "Q. Mr. Spence, is there much unrouted traffic nowadays? I mean, is there any considerable quantity of traffic which a carrier receives without routing directions from the shipper?
>
> A. There is no appreciable amount of such traffic now. The shipper nearly always exercises his prerogative to designate the routing."

The effect of all this is well expressed by Mr. Sproule (I R. 207):

> "You understand that we have nothing to offer the shipper except his interest in his own shipments—no concession of any kind whatever that we can offer him; and the controlling factor in the routing of all business is not the wishes of the initial carrier, or of any other carrier, but it is the shipper's interest in his own business. That is a point which it is advisable we should not lose sight of in the technical question of the carriers controlling the routing. The carrier has no control over the routing except the service."

Judge Lovett testified (I R. 301) that the shipper is quite alive to his right to route his freight and that with him the question is largely one of service; that the location of the man who controls the routing, whether consignor or consignee, has a good deal to do with his choice of routes, and that where a choice is practically immaterial to him his selection is a matter of personal idiosyncrasy arising perhaps out of a dislike for some officer of some particular line, or through personal like or friendships—presuming, of course, that the rates and service are equal.

(c) The Panama Canal opened August 15, 1914.

The Panama Canal opened for business August 15, 1914 (Spence, III R. 1025). The effect of the Canal on transcontinental business is considered in the testimony of several witnesses.

Mr. Spence testified (III R. 1065) that the steamship facilities available through the Panama Canal amount to considerably more than one million tons per annum in each direction.

Also (III R. 1066):

> "The steamship lines through the Panama Canal have already established very low rates; rates so low that the all-rail lines are finding it impossible to meet them."

Also (III R. 1066-1067):

> "The Sunset route, the Southern Pacific Company, has made application to the Interstate Commerce Commission for authority to make eastbound rates, which application was granted this week, between the California ports and New York, to approximately meet the competition through the Canal.
>
> . . . . . .
> The all-rail lines have not participated in the application, and are unable to do so for the reasons stated."

Mr. Spence also testified (III R. 1067) that "as to all the traffic of the Sunset-Gulf route which it is physically able to carry between California and the Atlantic seaboard territory it is in competition with the Pacific Mail steamships through the Panama Canal"; and that as to traffic which mixed rail and water lines cannot engage in, "competition for that traffic will be between the several all-rail lines, the Ogden route and the Santa Fe and others."

Again (III R. 1067):

"Q. And the competition for this transcontinental traffic which the Sunset-Gulf route is capable of carrying, that competition will be between the Sunset-Gulf route, the Santa Fe-Mallory Line and the water carriers through the Panama Canal?

A. That is right.

Q. What effect in respect to the rate upon that traffic has the coming into existence of the water carriers through the Panama Canal had?

A. It has radically reduced it.

Q. Which lines are the dominant rate making factors in respect to all that traffic which the Sunset-Gulf route is capable of carrying?

A. The steamship lines through the Panama Canal.

Q. And those carriers now dominate the rate situation in respect to such traffic between California and the Atlantic seaboard territory?

A. Yes.

(d) The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company operating since 1905.

The Union Pacific acquired one-half of the stock of this company before it began operation, which it did in the year 1905 (United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 102, 108).

JOHN A. MUNROE, Vice-president and Traffic Manager of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, testified (I R. 386):

> "Q. Since the establishment of the San Pedro line in 1905 that has been the Union Pacific's preferential route on southern California business, has it not?
> A. It has."

(e) Western Pacific Railway Company operating since July 20, 1910.

The Western Pacific Railway Company (commonly called a Gould company at the time this suit was commenced, and after) opened its line on July 20, 1910, from Salt Lake City, where it connected with the Denver and Rio Grande, to San Francisco Bay (Sproule, I R. 225).

(f) Electric lines in California constructed since 1901.

Speaking of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, Mr. Chambers testified (III R. 974):

> "We have connections independent of the Southern Pacific in northern California. We have the Central California Traction Company, running from Stockton to Sacramento; we have the Oakland & Antioch Electric line running from Oakland to Sacramento, crossing the river near Bay Point; we have the Northern Electric Railroad running north from Sacramento, that connects with the Central California Traction Company at Sacramento."

Again Mr. Chambers said (III R. 984):

> "Q. You spoke of using the Northern Electric and the California Transportation Company and the Oakland, Antioch & Eastern as connections. I suppose you mean you have traffic arrangements with those lines for the interchange of freight?
>
> A. Yes; we have joint rates in effect.

Q. You have joint rates in effect, which gives you those lines for purposes of securing freight from the points reached by them?

A. From the points reached by them, and in competition with the Southern Pacific.

Q. In competition with the Southern Pacific?

A. Yes; as to points reached by the Southern Pacific and the electric lines."

Mr. Spence testified (III R. 1024-1025) that the following "electric lines were opened in California, the Central California Traction Company between Stockton and Sacramento, the Northern Electric between Sacramento and Marysville and Chico, and the Oakland, Antioch & Eastern between Sacramento and Oakland."

We have now dealt with the principal radical changes in traffic conditions between 1901 and 1914. It will be appropriate to sum up with the testimony of Judge Lovett and Mr. Spence, which deals with these changes in a connected way.

Judge Lovett testified (I R. 295-296):

"Q. (By Mr. Orr.) You may state what in your opinion, from your knowledge of the situation, would be the effect upon the competitive power of the Union Pacific Railroad Company in competing for transcontinental business or other business reaching in the territory served if there was a separation, if the Central Pacific Railway Company were separated from the control of the Southern Pacific Company?

A. The Union Pacific now is merely a connection of the Southern Pacific Company at Ogden, and is not as dependent on the Southern Pacific Company as it formerly was for the business it gets; but the Southern Pacific Company is in the position, by reason of its ownership of the Central Pacific, to divert a great deal of business from there to the Union Pacific. If the Union Pacific had its own line into Central California it would not be dependent on any other line but would have its own line to come directly in contact with the shippers. I am not prepared to say, however, that we would get any more business then than we get now.

Q. You say the Union Pacific is not as dependent now as it formerly was; why not?

A. Well, perhaps I could do better by contrasting the situation now with what it was when the Union Pacific acquired control of the Southern Pacific. At that time the shipper had no right to route his traffic. That was in the hands of the carrier. There was only one railroad between Ogden or Utah and California. That was in 1901. The Union Pacific was absolutely dependent on the Southern Pacific for its California business. It had no line of its own, and there was no other line. Since 1901 what is commonly referred to as the Clark road has been constructed between Salt Lake City and Los Angeles and San Pedro. The Union Pacific has a half interest and equal voice in the management of that line. That was open for business in 1905. That affords the Union Pacific an entrance into the State of California where it is a competitor with the Southern Pacific Company. The Western Pacific Line has been opened from Salt Lake City to central California; that is, to Sacramento, Stockton, Oakland and San Francisco and some other points, and the Union Pacific, or the Short Line, connects with it at Salt Lake City, and, while I do not want to throw stones at it, it is not as good a railroad as the Central Pacific in any respect.

Mr. HERRIN. Which road is that?

The WITNESS. The Western Pacific. That has been opened, it is a railroad and it is there, but it was not there in 1901. So, with those considerations, the building of the line from Salt Lake City to Los Angeles, opened for business in 1905, the passage of the Hepburn Act in 1906, which gave the shipper the right to route his freight, and the opening of the Western Pacific, the Union Pacific is not dependent to the same extent now as it was formerly on the Central Pacific; but the Central Pacific is far and away the best connection for the Union Pacific to Central California. It is the shortest line and the best railroad in every sense of the word."

Mr. Spence testified (III R. 1046-1047):

"Q. Mr. Spence, state whether or not the Union Pacific is more or less at the mercy of the Southern Pacific now than it was just before the merger in 1901, in respect to securing good service, reasonable terms and facilities, and so forth, for engaging in transcontinental business via the Ogden route; and give the facts upon which your answer is based.

A. Prior to 1901 the Union Pacific had, beside the Southern Pacific west of Ogden as a connecting line, its rail route to Portland and its steamship line to San Francisco as its only alternative route. Since that time the Western Pacific and the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake railways have been constructed, affording the Union Pacific various routes; the Interstate Commerce Law was amended in 1906, delegating authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish through routes and joint rates, which gives the Union Pacific an absolute guaranty of the continuation of through routes and joint rates; in 1910 the Commission was given authority to suspend advanced rates; and by the same amendment to the law the shipper was given authority to route his freight, and the carriers were required to respect his routing.

Q. What kind of service is maintained by the Southern Pacific over its end of the Ogden route; that is, between Ogden and San Francisco? I mean in respect of the maintenance of the road as well as in respect of the equipment and all the elements that go into service?

A. The service on the line west of Ogden is not excelled anywhere, under like conditions.

Q. What do you mean by 'under like conditions'?

A. The character of the country, the density of the traffic, and the population.

Q. State any facts that you may know tending to show whether the Southern Pacific Company has any interest or motive to impair this service over the Ogden route.

A. In the first place, the Southern Pacific Company has a very large investment in the Central Pacific, upon which it is anxious to earn a return. In the second place——

Q. Just give the general character of that investment, without going much into detail.

A. It owns the stock, and is the guarantor of the bonds.

In the second place, the Southern Pacific is dependent upon the Central Pacific, west of Ogden, as the only route by which it can successfully compete for the traffic to and from the middle west territory, and also dependent upon that route to successfully compete for a large share of the traffic to and from the Atlantic seaboard territory for which the Sunset-Gulf route is physically unable to compete. These conditions not only afford no motive for impairing the service, but they afford every incentive for keeping the service up to its maximum efficiency.

Q. Could you impair the service on your part of the Ogden route, with a view to benefiting the Sunset-Gulf route in respect to the limited traffic for which those two routes offer alternative routes, without at the same time impairing the service and injuring the Ogden route in respect to this traffic as to which the two lines do not offer alternative routes?

A. No."

(32) The southern construction (Yuma-El Paso-New Orleans) as a normal and natural growth.

After the building of the Central Pacific, the natural development of railroad building in and from California called for feeders in California and thereafter for a line through El Paso to New Orleans.

We have already shown (pp. 30-31, supra), that the topography of California and the necessity for a southern outlet from the state required the construction of the southern line as a part of the normal development of the system. We now refer to the testimony of the witnesses concerning the construction of feeders, and of the southern line.

Mr. Chambers testified (III R. 939-941):

"Q. After the building of the Central Pacific main line connecting from San Francisco to Ogden, what would naturally be the next step in railroad development or construction to be taken, concerning that line?

A. Building feeders for that line through the valleys of northern California.

Q. What, if any, lines southerly from the Central Pacific main line would you regard as feeders?

A. The line south through the San Joaquin Valley, through to Los Angeles, connecting northern and southern California.

Q. How far north would you go for these lines as feeders?

A. The line that is south into the Salinas Valley, and north of Sacramento into the Sacramento Valley.

Q. How far north would the line be constructed as a feeder, naturally, from Sacramento?

A. As a feeder, up to the Oregon line.

Q. You will remember, as a matter of railroad history, if you do not know personally, that when the Central Pacific main line was opened in 1869

there was no other transcontinental rail line, and that the first transcontinental line other than the Central Pacific was formed by the junction of the Santa Fe at Deming, New Mexico, with the Southern Pacific, in 1881.

What would you say as to the construction of the line southerly from Los Angeles to Deming, which was constructed, as to whether that would be a natural, congruous, development of railroad building, as a part of this system, of which the Central Pacific main line was a nucleus in the beginning?

A. I think that would be the natural and business-like move to make, to extend the line from southern California eastward through Arizona.

Q. The Texas Pacific line—you know the location of that, do you?

A. Yes.

Q. Extending from Sierra Blanca on the Southern Pacific line eastward to what point?

A. To Texarkana, Arkansas.

Q. Now, I will remind you, as a historical fact, that the junction of the Central Pacific was made with the Southern Pacific line at Sierra Blanca in 1882. What would you say as to the extension of the Southern Pacific line eastwardly from Sierra Blanca upon the route it was built upon, to Houston, forming connection with the lines built between Houston and New Orleans?

A. I would say that at that time the natural thing to do and the business thing for the Southern Pacific to do, was to get a through line between California and New York, and the extension of their line eastward was the desirable thing to do.

Q. Eastward to what point?

A. Well, to New Orleans. New Orleans is where they first extended it to.

Q. To some point on the Gulf of Mexico?

A. Yes.

Q. Did the business needs of that country which is served by that line—which, of course, includes California, the local territory, and whatever traffic might be gained on that line—did those business needs justify the construction of that line at that time?

A. They did. At that time and for some years afterwards the Atlantic seaboard territory supplied the manufactured merchandise for the entire Pacific Coast, and took all the Pacific Coast products—the great bulk of them; perhaps seventy-five to eighty per cent of them.

Q. Was there any other line that could have been built at that time, first, after the construction of the Central Pacific, which would have been more practicable or a better line for railroad purposes, or for the service of the public, than the Southern Pacific line from Goshen to New Orleans?

A. I think that was the best line that the Southern Pacific could build to serve all their purposes; of course any through line would have been beneficial.

Q. You spoke of the purposes of the Southern Pacific. My question called for your consideration of the service to the public also. Do you include that?

A. That would include the service to the public."

Mr. Kruttschnitt testified (II R. 727-728):

"Q. Mr. Kruttschnitt, from your general knowledge and experience as a railroad expert, and from your particular knowledge of the lines composing the Southern Pacific system, how would you characterize the growth and development of the Southern Pacific system?

A. I think I have already characterized it as being a normal and gradual growth, to meet the necessities of the territories served by these lines.

Q. Has it the characteristic of system growth?

A. Absolutely."

(33) The absence of attempts at monopoly and monopolistic practices.

In the petition it is alleged that the defendants are "attempting to monopolize and are monopolizing trade and commerce." No evidence whatever was offered to support this allegation, and it might therefore be disregarded.

We desire, however, to call attention to the testimony of Mr. Spence (III R. 1039) where mention is made of forty-six soliciting agencies in California, representing all the transcontinental lines, and fifty-nine soliciting agencies on the Atlantic seaboard, representing the same lines—a situation which precludes any thought of monopoly.

The testimony of Mr. Spence concerning the effect of the opening of the Panama Canal on August 15, 1914, may also be noted (III R. 1025-1031). It appears that as early as October 1, 1914, there were six steamship lines operating between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, with an aggregate of forty-nine steamers. These lines were all actively engaged in competing for transcontinental business between all points in Atlantic seaboard territory and California.

In view of the foregoing facts, any suggestion of monopoly or monopolistic practices is unthinkable.

(34) The active and vigorous competition between the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes, and the absence of any attempt at monopoly, as shown by the report and order of the Interstate Commerce Commission granting the application of the Southern Pacific Company, under the Panama Canal Act Amendment of the Interstate Commerce Act, for permission to continue to operate the line of steamships which forms a part of the Sunset-Gulf route.

Section 11 of the Act of Congress, known as the Panama Canal Act, approved August 24, 1912 (37

Stat. L. 560, 566) amends section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act. The pertinent provisions of Section 11 read as follows:

"Sec. 11. That section five of the Act to regulate commerce, approved February fourth, eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding thereto a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

'From and after the first day of July, nineteen hundred and fourteen, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the Act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever (by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly, indirectly, through any holding company, or by stockholders or directors in common, or in any other manner) in any common carrier by water operated through the Panama Canal or elsewhere with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic or any vessel carrying freight or passengers upon said water route or elsewhere with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic; and in case of the violation of this provision each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense.'

Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine questions of fact as to the competition or possibility of competition, after full hearing, on the application of any railroad company or other carrier. Such application may be filed for the purpose of determining whether any existing service is in violation of this section and pray for an order permitting the continuance of any vessel or vessels already in operation, or for the purpose of asking an order to install new service not in conflict with the provisions of this paragraph. The Commission may on its own motion or the application of any shipper institute proceedings to inquire into the operation of any vessel in use by any railroad or other carrier which has not applied to the commission, and had the question of competition or the possibility of competition determined as herein provided. In all such cases the order of said commission shall be final.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be of the opinion that any such existing specified service by water other than through the Panama Canal is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, by order, extend the time during which such service by water may continue to be operated beyond July first, nineteen hundred and fourteen. In every case of such extension the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and shall be subject to the act to regulate commerce and all amendments thereto in the same manner and to the same extent as is the railroad or other common carrier controlling such water carrier or interested in any manner in its operation: Provided, Any application for extension under the terms of this provision filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to July first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, but for any reason not heard and disposed of before said date, may be considered and granted thereafter."

In due course the Southern Pacific Company filed an application with the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to continue to operate its line of steamships between the ports of Galveston and New Orleans and the port of New York. The main report of the Commission upon this application bears date January 24, 1917, and will be found in the official volumes of the Commission's Reports, 43 I. C. C. 168, entitled Southern Pacific Company's Ownership of Atlantic Steamship Lines. A supplemental report, of date May 12, 1917, is set forth in 45 I. C. C. 505. The final order is printed as an appendix of our supplemental brief. The reports and order of the Commission were made after the close of the testimony and the submission of this case in the Court below. The effect thereof on the Government's case will be more fully discussed in the supplemental brief. We include, however, a short summary in this brief.

1. The first question involved in the application of the Southern Pacific Company was whether the competition which the Commission had to consider was merely port-to-port competition, i. e., competition between the water line considered by itself, on the one hand, and, on the other, a rail line under common control carrying traffic between the ports; or whether such competition included also competition between the water line and its connections, on the one hand, and, on the other, any line of transportation formed in whole or in part by railroads which the railroad-owner of the water line controlled or was interested in. An examination of the report of the Commission will show that it decided this question in favor of the broader and more comprehensive meaning of competition. The Southern Pacific Company did not control and was not interested in any line of railroad between Galveston or New Orleans and New York. The competition, the existence of which the Commission considered, was competition between the Sunset-Gulf route (the through line formed by the Southern Pacific steamships and the Southern Pacific rail lines from the Gulf ports to Pacific coast), on the one hand, and, on the other, the through all-rail lines across the continent, the main one being the Ogden route (the through line formed by the Southern Pacific Company's Central Pacific line to Ogden and its eastern connections).

2. The next question which arose was whether competition, actual or potential, of the character above explained existed between the Southern Pacific rail lines and water lines. If no such competition existed the permissive order applied for was not necessary. Application to the Commission for permission to continue to operate a water line was required by the terms of the statute only when there existed competition, actual or potential, of the character indicated. The Commission found the existence of "most active and vigorous competition" between the all-rail routes via Ogden and via El Paso, on the one hand, and the Sunset-Gulf route, on the other hand, formed in part by the water line in question.

3. Then came the crucial questions in the case, whether the Southern Pacific steamship lines, forming part, as they did, of the Sunset-Gulf route, a route competitive with the Ogden route, was being operated in the interest of the public and to the advantage and convenience of commerce, and whether permission to continue to so operate the steamships would either exclude, prevent or reduce competition on the route by water under consideration. The Commission answered the first question in the affirmative and the second in the negative.

In the light of what has already been said these answers mean that, in the opinion of the Commission, the continued ownership and operation by the Southern Pacific Company of the water line in question, which resulted in the Company's ownership and operation of the Sunset-Gulf route from beginning to end, was not contrary to the public interest or to the disadvantage of commerce, and would neither exclude, prevent nor reduce competition, and this conclusion was reached with full knowledge and after consideration of the Southern Pacific Company's ownership and operation of the Central Pacific part of the Ogden route and of the competitive relations between the two routes. In other words the Commission found that the common control by the Southern Pacific Company of the whole of the Sunset-Gulf route and of that part of the Ogden route between Ogden and San Francisco was not against the public interest or to the disadvantage of commerce, and did not prevent or diminish competition between the two routes.

The opposition between the findings and opinion of the Commission and the contentions of the Government in the present suit is manifest. The Government contends that the common control by the Southern Pacific Company of the Central Pacific line between Ogden and San Francisco and of the Sunset-Gulf route has prevented competition between the two routes and amounts to an unreasonable restraint of trade. The Commission is of the exactly contrary opinion. There is moreover a fundamental variance between the theory of the Panama Canal Act and the theory underlying the Government's present suit. The theory of the statute is there may be a common control, in whole or in part, of two competitive lines of transportation the continuance of which may be in the public interest and may neither exclude, prevent nor reduce competition. The theory of the Government in this suit is that proof of common control of the whole of one through route and of part of another through line offering an alternative route for traffic, is of itself, without more, sufficient to establish such prevention or reduction of competition between the two routes as to constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade, and that such prevention or reduction of competition is so inevitable that no attention will be paid to any evidence to the contrary. If this contention of the Government be correct it would be an idle ceremony to submit to the Commission whether the continued control by a railroad company of a water line which does or may compete with that company's rail lines will be in the public interest and to the advantage and convenience of commerce, and will neither exclude, prevent nor reduce competition.

(35) The impossibility of dismemberment of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system without substantial deterioration in the public service.

If the question of undue restraint of trade should ever become vital to a decision of the case it would be all-important to consider the consequences of dismemberment of the system, for by focussing attention upon such consequences we would be better able to know what service is achieved by the unified operation of this system, conceived and constructed and always managed as a single property.

Reference may here be made to the large map of the present Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system which appears as the last map in the appendix of this brief. This map serves two purposes: (a) it shows the unity of the system and the absolute interdependence of its parts; and (b) it gives a graphic illustration of the practical difficulties and disastrous consequences which would attend any attempted dismemberment.

The impossibility of a dismemberment that would preserve the present efficient public service furnished by the system has been shown by our review of the California Railroad Commission's decisions in 1913. The attempted dismemberment failed because it fell foul of public interests. The Union Pacific, of course, desired to acquire the Central Pacific upon terms, and the Southern Pacific, under compulsion, agreed to sell, fearing later it might be forced to sell without having at hand a buyer whom the Attorney-General would be in a position to coerce into approximately acceptable terms. The case presented, therefore, was that of two contracting corporations who were very eager to reach an agreement, although under coercion. There was no captious bargaining, and there was every desire and genuine effort on the part of the contracting corporations to work out an agreement. It is true that each one of them insisted upon terms collateral to the agreed purchase and sale of the Central Pacific, because these collateral terms were necessary to the very life of their bargain.

The Union Pacific refused to buy unless it could have (a) joint and exclusive use, practically part proprietorship, of the Southern Pacific lines from Sacramento via Benicia to Oakland and San Francisco, and (b) the trackage rights from Redwood to San Francisco for its through freight trains. These were essential to any plan which contemplated the taking over of the Central Pacific at an adequate price.

The Southern Pacific on the other hand, would have been denied all access to Oregon if it did not acquire all Central Pacific trackage north of Tehama. It, therefore, could not afford to sell upon any terms which did not involve collateral agreements.

The case broke down because the Railroad Commission of California would not permit the Union Pacific to buy a preferential interest in Southern Pacific properties except upon terms which would open these properties to all other competitors in like position, a condition which would have been intolerable to the Southern Pacific and entirely distasteful and disadvantageous to the Union Pacific.

The Railroad Commission of California said (Decision No 477, rendered February 24, 1913, D. Ex. 25, V, R. 1779):

> "We are not unmindful of the fact that, as testified by both Judge Lovett and Mr. Sproule, these companies are more or less under duress to contract. On the one hand the stock of the Southern Pacific owned by the Union Pacific is in the hands of the court for sale, and if an arrangement is not consummated before ninety days shall have elapsed after the decision of the court, this stock is to be placed in the hands of a receiver to be sold as the court directs. It is testified that the Attorney General is threatening proceedings against the Southern Pacific if it does not divest itself of control of its alleged competing line, the Central Pacific, and we appreciate the desire of the parties to bring about a solution of their troubles which will result in as little financial loss to them as possible, yet we believe it is our duty to have in mind the effect of any arrangement which may be designed upon not only the contracting parties here, but the public. As we have already indicated, we do not believe the sale of the stock of the Central Pacific is necessary to bring about the result desired by the Supreme Court, or even by the Attorney General, but if Federal authorities acting within their jurisdiction in this matter, which is wholly without our jurisdiction, shall decide that the sale of this stock must be made, then we do not feel that it will be possible for us to protect the public beyond that protection which may be accorded by the imposition of conditions specified in the order herein."

It appears from this that the difficulties of dismemberment, consistent with public interests, are well-nigh insurmountable. This is abundantly shown by the uncontradicted testimony of the witnesses.

JOHN M. ESHLEMAN (died January 29, 1916, when Lieutenant-Governor of California), for four years President of the Railroad Commission of California, and the author of the decisions in the matter of the attempts of the Union Pacific to buy the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific (D. Exs. 25, V, R. 1769, 26 V,

R. 1782), testified that separation would create a system in California less convenient and more expensive than the present system (III R. 877); that by destroying the present unity California would be broken up into two-line and three-line operation, and that he knew no other method by which service as good as at present could be obtained (III R. 882-883); that if dismemberment occurred each road would have to provide terminals and duplicate investments (III R. 885). In fact, his testimony is to the same effect as his opinion (Decision No. 477, D. Ex. 25, V, R. 1775):

> "We do not pretend to say, nor do we consider it necessary to decide, how serious an impairment of the Southern Pacific will be brought about by the securing of the Central Pacific main line and feeders by the Union Pacific, but we are of the opinion that the present commanding position of that road cannot be maintained under the contract which is presented to us for approval, and that there is room for grave fear that if the agreement is carried out this State will, instead of securing two strong competing lines, secure one dominant line and one much impaired line."

R. N. Lynch, Vice-President of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, testified that great disadvantage would be suffered by shippers if separation were accomplished (II R. 834); that most of the members of the Chamber of Commerce were large shippers and that their attitude in this regard was unanimous; that they heeded the warning of the Railroad Commission of California that double cost of operation would inevitably cause a raising of the rates (II R. 835), and that although the sentiment of the Chamber of Commerce had favored the Union Pacific unmerger it was decidedly antagonistic to the present proposed dismemberment (II R. 863-864). Defendants' Exhibit No. 22, the resolution of the Chamber of Commerce endorsing the decision of the Railroad Commission of California against unmerging, was introduced with Mr. Lynch's testimony, and strongly expresses the opinion that the preservation of the status quo in California is of great importance to shippers, and to the State.

Edward Chambers, Vice-President of the Atchison, Topeka and Sante Fe Railroad Company, explained how the separation of the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific would tend to increase rates and would necessarily increase local rates because of the substitution of a two-line haul for the existing single line (III R. 947). He also explained how separation, although not increasing competition to any extent, would seriously impair both the freight and passenger service; and he added that traffic arrangements cannot possibly obviate all the disadvantages of separate ownership. Again (III R. 982), he emphasized the inadequacy of joint arrangements to compensate for loss after separation and to maintain the present service. He testified further that separation would disarrange the train service; that in the San Joaquin Valley the through service would be displaced by local service and that freight now moving over the Central Pacific lines in the interior valleys from northern to southern California, would, after separation, have to be sent by way of Port Costa (III R. 986, 989). We may append here his significant remark (III R. 971) that from the Atchison point of view h would prefer to compete against the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific as two separate lines, implying that separation would lessen competition instead of increasing it.

Mr. Kruttschnitt recited in detail the results which would follow dismemberment (II R. 742-751, 799) and estimated that the expense to the Southern Pacific of separation and duplication of terminals would amount to $85,715,000. (This figure was taken by Mr. Kruttschnitt from a computation of reproduction costs, made in 1912. It need hardly be added that the present cost, due to advanced prices, would be very much greater.) Mr. Kruttschnitt also testified that the standard of efficiency would be irreparably lowered by separation (II R. 800).

Judge Lovett said that the Central Pacific separated would be in the position of the Western Pacific; that is to say, it would have to do a great deal of building to supplement the present line and provide feeders for it (I R. 302).

Mr. Sproule testified (I R. 241) that a forced sale of the Central Pacific to a road other than the Southern Pacific would be an amputation so serious as to amount to a capital operation. He testified further (I R. 252) that there is no particular respect in which the public would be advantaged by separation; that on the contrary, it would suffer with the Southern Pacific in the distinct disadvantages to the company consequent upon the dismemberment of the Southern Pacific system.

Mr. Spence outlined the disastrous consequences of dismemberment (III R. 1175) and said that the separation of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system would effect no change in transcontinental rates but, on the other hand, would increase local rates (III R. 1068-1069). He added that separation would impair service.

In addition to all this testimony, which had to do principally with California, it is to be recalled that dismemberment would have disadvantageous results in respect of traffic (a) between California and Oregon; (b) between California and Arizona, and (c) between Oregon and California on the one hand and Nevada on the other. Indeed, it is quite likely that the dismemberment of the system would be very disadvantageous to Nevada, even in respect of westbound traffic, and this view is suggested in the remarks of Senator Newlands of Nevada on June 18, 1913 (50 Congressional Record, Part II, p. 2076), as follows:

> "Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I have always thought that it would be to the advantage of my State if the Central Pacific Railroad were joined to the Union Pacific Railroad, thus constituting a through line from the Missouri to the Pacific. * * *
> I must confess that recently my view as to where the Central Pacific system should be placed in this readjustment of lines has been somewhat affected by the approaching completion of the Panama Canal. The Panama Canal will make San Francisco the great distributing point of the western coast, and it is a question whether the interest of Nevada does not lie rather in maintaining the Central Pacific system as a part of the Southern Pacific system, thus giving that system a radial distribution toward the east from San Francisco, rather than in connecting it with the Union Pacific system, which involves absentee control far off in New York instead of practical home rule through the Southern Pacific system, which has its home office at San Francisco."

In addition to all these considerations, reference should be made to the three competing branches from Utah to the Coast, which the Union Pacific would own if it were to acquire the Central Pacific, as is shown by the accompanying diagram maps.

Union Pacific Lines to the Pacific Coast, and Their Relation Geographically to the Central Pacific Main Line.

Union Pacific Lines to the Pacific Coast, and Their Relation Geographically to the Central Pacific Main Line, Feeders and Extensions.

It thus appears that if the Union Pacific were to acquire the Central Pacific line, it would be (a) the owner of the Oregon Short Line from Granger to Portland, of which it is said in the Union Pacific Case, 226 U. S., foot page 89, "the Portland route was a factor in ratemaking to the Coast", (b) the half owner of the Salt Lake-Los Angeles route, which Judge Lovett (I R. 296) calls a competitor with the Southern Pacific Company, i. e., the Central Pacific line; and lastly, (c) the owner of the Central Pacific line. As a result, the Union Pacific, as Mr. Kruttschnitt said, would then be "in absolute control of the Pacific Coast business". If dismemberment were decreed the last condition of the public would be worse than the first.

(37) Several subsidiary matters may be here noted to facilitate an understanding of the case.

(a) United States v. Southern Pacific Co., United States Circuit Court, Southern District of California, commenced July 16, 1894, dismissed August 4, 1894.

While the railroad strike of 1894 was at its height, the Government filed a bill against the Southern Pacific Company, Central Pacific Railroad Company, and all the other corporations whose lines now comprise the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system, to dissolve, on the ground that their unified operation constituted a monopolization of trade. The record in the case is Defendants' Exhibit 96. The bill was filed July 16, 1894, and nineteen days later, August 4, 1894, it was dismissed by direction of the Attorney-General. In the bill a decree was prayed, among other things for the annulment of the leases of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company, dated February 10, 1885, and February 17, 1885, respectively.

In United States v. Debs, (1894) 64 Fed. 724, it will be seen that the suit there brought was commenced July 2, 1894, and the injunction violated by Debs and others, from that date on, resulted in proceedings in contempt, which were filed July 17, 1894 (64 Fed., top p. 726).

(b) A brief reference to the history of the more important corporations which figure in the case.

In examining the record it may be found convenient to have a brief summary of the corporate history to which easy reference may be made.

1. Central Pacific Railroad Company of California was incorporated as a California corporation June 28, 1861. By two consolidations, June 23, 1870, and August 22, 1870, it absorbed a number of other California railroad corporations, including the Western Pacific Railroad Company and the California and Oregon Railroad Company. The Central Pacific Railroad Company (the name assumed after the consolidation of 1870) continued as the owner of the Central Pacific lines until July 29, 1899, when, in the reorganization occasioned by the settlement with the Government, it transferred all its properties to the Central Pacific Railway Company, a Utah corporation.

2. Central Pacific Railway Company was organized in Utah by articles dated July 26, 1899, and filed July 29, 1899, on which day the (old) Central Pacific Railroad Company conveyed all its assets to the new company. Since then the (new) Central Pacific Railway Company has been the owner of the Central Pacific lines, and as such, is one of the defendants in the case.

3. Southern Pacific Railroad Company was organized as a California corporation December 2, 1865, and is still in existence. By consolidations under the laws of California this company on October 12, 1870, August 19, 1873, December 18, 1874, May 14, 1888, and April 14, 1898, absorbed a number of other railroad corporations. By further consolidation under the laws of the State of California it absorbed Southern Pacific Railroad Company of Arizona and Southern Pacific Railroad Company of New Mexico on March 10, 1902.

4. Southern Pacific Railroad Company of Arizona was incorporated under the laws of Arizona September 20, 1878, and built the Arizona section of the Sunset-Gulf line. It was absorbed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a California corporation, by the articles of consolidation of March 10, 1902.

5. Southern Pacific Railroad Company of New Mexico was incorporated under the laws of New Mexico April 14, 1879, and built the New Mexico section of the Sunset-Gulf line. It was absorbed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a California corporation, by the articles of consolidation of March 10, 1902.

6. Southern Pacific Company was incorporated under the laws of Kentucky (Acts Ky. 1883-4, Vol. I, p. 725) March 17, 1884, and thereafter became the owner of the entire capital stock of the three companies known as the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and organized under the laws of California, Arizona and New Mexico. It also acquired all the capital stock of the two Texas and two Louisiana corporations whose lines form the eastern part of the Sunset-Gulf route.

(v. p. 55, supra.) In 1899, or thereabouts, it became the owner of all the common and preferred stock of the (new) Central Pacific Railway Company (Kruttschnitt, II R. 734).

7. Western Pacific Railway Company was organized under the laws of the State of California, March 16, 1903, as a part of the Gould system. This company is not to be confounded with the Western Pacific Railroad Company which was absorbed by the (old) Central Pacific Railroad Company in the consolidation of June 23, 1870.

(c) The construction by the Southern Pacific Company of the line through the west side of the San Joaquin Valley.

The Southern Pacific construction from Oakland to a point on the Southern Pacific line below Goshen, by which that company was enabled to travel over its own rails from Oakland to Los Angeles via the San Joaquin Valley, via what is known as the West Side line in the San Joaquin Valley, was completed in 1891.

The construction occurred as follows:

West Oakland	to Shellmound	August	16, 1876.
Shellmound	to Martinez	January	9, 1878.
Martinez	to Tracy	September	3, 1878.
Tracy	to Newman	July	1, 1888.
Newman	to Los Banos	November	1, 1889.
Los Banos	to Armona	August	28, 1891.

(thence via Alcalde-Goshen line to Goshen, and via main line to Los Angeles.)

It should also be noted that the West Side line was built to relieve congestion in valley traffic, caused by one-line operation.

The route is shown in the following map:

San Joaquin Valley Lines.

1. Main Line (C. P. 1872): Lathrop-Goshen.
2. West Side Line (S. P. 1891): Tracy-Ingle-Kerman-Armona-Goshen.
3. West Side Line (S. P. 1892): Tracy-Ingle-Kerman-Fresno-Goshen.

It is important to note, that when the Sunset-Gulf route was opened to New Orleans in 1883, the Central Pacific road from Lathrop to Goshen formed a part of the line, and that it was impossible until eight years after the route was opened, and six years after the lease of 1885, for the Southern Pacific to reach Yuma over its own rails. It first became possible to travel from San Francisco to the southern boundary of the state over Southern Pacific rails in 1891, when this result was brought about, not by the construction of a substitute for the main line Central Pacific link, but by the building of the West Side line to relieve congestion in the San Joaquin Valley.

It will be remembered that the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system has three lines to the boundaries of California. The eastern line to Ogden is Central Pacific; the northern line from Tehama to Oregon is Central Pacific; and the southern line to Yuma until 1891 was partly Central Pacific. It thus appears that the Southern Pacific has but one outlet from San Francisco to the borders of the state, and that until 1891 it had none. This fact is constantly to be kept in mind, for it illustrates in a striking manner the unified construction and operation of California's railroad system, and the fact that the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific Companies are and always have been a single entity.

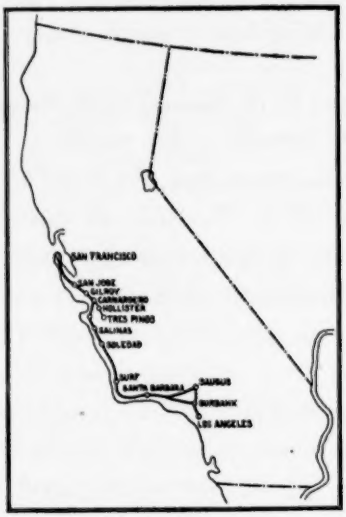
(d) The construction by the Southern Pacific Company of the Coast Line from San Francisco to Los Angeles.

The Coast Line from San Francisco to Los Angeles was opened in 1901. Portions of this line had been constructed many years before that time, but the last gap was not closed until 1901.

The construction is shown by the following table:

San Francisco	to Menlo Park	Oct.	17, 1863
Menlo Park	to San Jose	Jan.	16, 1864
San Jose	to Gilroy	Mar.	13, 1869
Gilroy	to Pajaro	Nov.	27, 1871
Pajaro	to Salinas	Nov.	1, 1872
Salinas	to Soledad	Aug.	12, 1873
Soledad	to Templeton	Nov.	16, 1886
Templeton	to Santa Margarita	Jan.	13, 1889
Santa Margarita	to San Luis Obispo	May	5, 1894
San Luis Obispo	to Guadalupe	July	1, 1895
Guadalupe	to Lake	Dec.	31, 1895
Lake	to Surf	Aug.	18, 1896
Surf	to Honda	During	1898-99
Honda	to Cuate Canon	During	1899-00
Saugus	to Ellwood	Dec.	21, 1887
Completion of gap between Ellwood and Cuate Canon, thus opening Coast Line		March	1901

The route is shown in the following map:



Southern Pacific Coast Line from San Francisco to Los Angeles. Opened 1901.

It is important to note that the direct Coast Line route of the Southern Pacific to Los Angeles was not completed until 1901, after the Sunset-Gulf route had been in operation nearly twenty years.

(e) The gradual decline in the importance of the Sunset-Gulf route since 1897.

In the early years of its existence, the Sunset-Gulf route commanded a large portion of the Atlantic seaboard traffic because it was able to give shippers more satisfactory service than was afforded to them by the all-rail routes. It may be said that during the first fourteen years of its existence (until 1897) it had a preponderance of such traffic, although before the year last named its traffic commenced to decline. Since 1897 there has been a gradual falling off, and its importance has decreased.

Mr. Spence, in speaking of the early history of the Sunset-Gulf route, said that it attracted a great deal of traffic from sailing vessels and afforded facilities for marketing traffic which had not before existed; that it had the effect, too, of expediting the movement of traffic which had been delayed on the congested lines east of Ogden (III R. 1175-1176).

He also testified that it was difficult to fix the date when the ascendancy of the Sunset-Gulf route came to an end because the change was a gradual process; that the all-rail lines gradually improved their service and co-ordinated their efforts; that their number had been gradually increasing with a corresponding increase in the army of soliciting forces, as the all-rail lines approached the standard of the Sunset-Gulf route; that the Sunset-Gulf route handled the major part of the traffic until about 1885; that by 1897 the all-rail lines had secured a preponderance of the business; that from the period of its ascendancy until the present time the Sunset-Gulf route has applied a "continuous competitive spur to the all-rail lines" (III R. 1029).

He further testified that the decline in the Sunset-Gulf route's business is an absolute decline in tonnage, and that at present the tonnage is very substantially below its maximum; that the falling off is due in part to the opening of the Panama Canal, but that a decrease of thousands of tons had been recorded long before the opening of the Canal (III R. 1124).

Mr. Schumacher gives as one reason for the Sunset-Gulf route's early prominence, the local organization of the Southern Pacific in San Francisco, enabling the company to "do a great many things locally for shippers that a foreign line could not do; I mean legitimate things. Their service was better" (I R. 149). He testified that in the eighties, about ninety per cent. of the New York-San Francisco business moved over the Sunset-Gulf route; that now it is scarcely fifty per cent. (I R. 155); and that the Sunset-Gulf route is less strong in influence now than it has been at any time (I R. 169).

Mr. Chambers testified that at first the Sunset's unified management gave the best service, but that later a division of traffic ensued when the all-rail lines were improved (III R. 942-943). He further testified (III R. 958) that after the reorganization of the Atchison line in 1895 a marked improvement was made in the conduct of the line, and he adds (III R. 959) that then the Santa Fe was the only line which could really compete with the Sunset-Gulf route.

(f) Fires which prevented the production by the defendants of several records in the case.

The Southern Pacific Company's offices in San Francisco were burned in the fire of April 18, 1906. Other records were lost in the Equitable fire in New York January 8, 1912; and two fires at the Southern Pacific Pier in New York, one in 1907 and the other in 1910, also destroyed their records (Van Deventer, III R. 905).

(g) The witnesses for the Government.

It is worthy of note that no shipper has appeared in the case to complain of the treatment of himself or of shippers generally, and in this respect, not to mention others, the case is unique.

That the case is purely theoretical and not a practical one, is well shown by the list of witnesses called by the Government:

JOHN MUIR, Traffic Superintendent of Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

HUGH NEILL, Secretary of Southern Pacific Company.

JAMES C. LINCOLN, Manager of Traffic Bureau of Merchants Association of New York.

FRANK H. DAVIS, Assistant Treasurer of Southern Pacific Company in 1901.

THOMAS H. ROSSBOTTOM, Secretary of Panama Railroad Company.

EDWIN S. ALLEN, Vice-President of National Railway Publication Company.

THOMAS M. SCHUMACHER, Chairman of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Board, and previously in the employ of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for a number of years.

WILLIAM SPROULE, President of the Southern Pacific Company.

HENRY RUHLANDER, a member of the firm of Speyer & Company.

OSCAR L. COLES, Transfer Clerk, Central Trust Company.

ANGUS D. MCDONALD, Comptroller of Southern Pacific Company.

ARTHUR A. TOPPING, Clerk Interstate Commerce Commission.

ROBERT S. LOVETT, Chairman of Executive Committee of Union Pacific Railroad Company.

JOHN B. DE FRIEST, General Eastern Agent of Union Pacific Railroad Company.

RALPH MILLER JOHNSON, General Eastern Agent of Chicago and Northwestern.

WILLIAM W. HALL, General Agent of Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul.

BENJAMIN T. BOOZE, Chief Clerk of Transcontinental Freight Bureau.

WILLIAM H. CONNOR, General Agent Union Pacific Railroad Company in Cincinnati.

JOHN A. MUNROE, Vice-President and Traffic Manager, Union Pacific Railroad Company.

(38) Conclusion.

The foregoing Statement of the Case is sufficient to bring out our case, as contradistinguished from our reply to the Government's case. We have thought that a full understanding of the case would be better arrived at if we dealt in our Statement of the Case principally with those facts which bring out in sharp relief our own case. We shall have occasion in the discussion of the contentions made by the Government to deal with other facts, but those facts are naturally so interwoven with the argument with which they are connected that they may be advantageously omitted from the narrative of the case and reserved for the argument, which follows.

Argument.

I.

This case does not involve any combination of competitive units, or any combination at all, for the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific lines were projected and built and have been operated since their origin as one property.

In the statement of the case (pp. 55-123, supra), it has been demonstrated that the Central Pacific lines and Southern Pacific lines have been operated as one property ever since the commencement of the construction south of Goshen in 1872.* In the early days (from 1872 to April 1, 1885), they were operated by the Central Pacific Railroad Company and were known as "Central Pacific and Leased Lines"; on April 1, 1885, they became "Southern Pacific Company and Leased Lines", and later simply "Southern Pacific Company".

Judge Hook has summarized the history of the system as follows (239 Fed. 1000; VI R. 2329):

> "The Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, the ancestor of the present Central Pacific, was incorporated in 1861. Up to 1870 it had constructed or acquired and put in operation the lines from San Francisco to Ogden, from Niles to San Jose in California, and from Roseville to Chico† in the same state. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated in 1865, and in 1870 the construction of the Southern Pacific lines was actively commenced. There was not much of importance of the Southern Pacific before that

* In order to avail itself of the terms of the Atlantic and Pacific Act, the Southern Pacific constructed thirty miles, San Jose to Gilroy, in 1869-70; twenty miles, Gilroy to Tres Pinos, in 1870-71. The remainder of the construction was from Goshen south, the first twenty miles being completed 1871-2. (See supra, pp. 35-36.)

year. In 1870 and prior thereto the Central Pacific was dominated and controlled by Leland Stanford, Charles Crocker, C. P. Huntington and Mark Hopkins, and in that year, if not earlier, the same group of men were in control of the Southern Pacific. For at least fifteen years thereafter and during the most important constructive period of the Southern Pacific, a common control and dominance over both companies was exercised by them or the representatives of their estates. Parts of the lines of both companies were built by the same construction companies owned by Mr. Stanford and his associates, under the same superintendence and with the same equipment. The primary financing of the enterprise was done by them. The Central Pacific was employed as the principal or parent company and the Southern Pacific as its subsidiary, or rather as the corporate instrumentality for the expansion of its system. Except as to corporate title and bookkeeping there were generally the aspects of a single enterprise. In this respect the conditions were not unlike those which have characterized the growth of many of the important railroad systems of the country in which, for necessity or convenience of financing and in some instances because of local laws, separate corporate organizations were utilized. Between 1870 and 1883, as fast as the Southern Pacific lines were built from Goshen, California, the terminus of the Central Pacific, south to Los Angeles, thence eastward to Yuma and across Arizona and New Mexico and into Texas, they were turned over by completed sections to the Central Pacific for operation. Up to 1885 all the Southern Pacific railroads including the main line to New Orleans (with an unimportant exception), were officially announced, advertised and operated by the Central Pacific as part of its system. The legal relation between the two companies was expressed in executed leases, and the system was known as 'Central Pacific Railroad and Leased Lines'. In February, 1885, the Southern Pacific having become the major factor the relation was reversed, and the Central Pacific leased all its railroad to the Southern Pacific Company (of Kentucky) for ninety-nine years from April 1, 1885. The old leases of the Southern Pacific lines to the Central Pacific were surrendered by the same instrument. This was five years before the passage of the Anti-Trust Act."

It is thus clearly shown by the history of the system from the time of its construction—indeed, from the time the lines were projected—that the system is the outcome of a normal natural growth, and that the constituent lines were built to constitute one system, that in point of fact they were constructed as one system, and that, since their construction, they have always been operated as one system. It is equally clear that these lines are now operated as they have been from the beginning, and that therefore, if they are not now competitive, they never have been. In any event, it cannot be said that they have ever been "combined".

The result of the unified construction and operation of the system is forcefully illustrated in the large map in colors, which is printed at the end of the appendix. This map shows most clearly the intertwining and interdependence of the lines of the two companies, and proves that they were built as parts of a unified whole, and that the system in its very nature is such that it could not have been the result of a combination of independent parts.

As Judge Hooks says (239 Fed. 999; VI R. 2328):

> "The location and physical interdependence of the lines of these companies in California and Oregon give the distinct appearance of a single system of railroads. So clearly is this so of the lines in California and Oregon north of Sacramento that when an attempt was made in 1913, in the matter of the dissolution of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, also to divorce the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific, it was generally agreed they should be left with the latter company. It is equally clear as regards the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific lines in California south from Sacramento and San Francisco. Those of the Central Pacific appear on the map as natural links and parts of the Southern Pacific System. Practically all of the spurs, branches and tributary feeders of the Central Pacific lines are the property of the Southern Pacific. . . . This aspect of the railroad map is confirmed in great measure by the history of the construction of the various roads."

In United States v. Union Pacific, 226 U. S. 61 (1912), a combination is said to be something "whereby natural and existing competition in interstate commerce is unduly restricted or suppressed" (p. 85); again, "the consolidation of two great competing systems of railroad . . . creates a combination . . . because, in destroying or greatly abridging the free operation of competition theretofore existing, it tends" etc. (p. 88); again, that "it is the scope of such combinations and their power to suppress or stifle competition" which makes them unlawful (p. 88); and that the Anti-trust Act deals with "power unlawfully obtained" (p. 96).

It is therefore apparent that the Southern Pacific system does not come within any of the definitions of a combination; but on the contrary, to quote from the opinions in the Steel Corporation case, it is the lawful result of "normal growth and development" (Mr. Justice McKenna, 251 U. S. 447), and "obtained by lawful means and developed by natural growth" (Mr. Justice Day, 251 U. S. 460). It cannot be said that dismemberment would result in "recreating" or "restoring" "competitive conditions which the combinations have destroyed" (Mr. Justice Day, 251 U. S. 462, 464), because the conditions which exist to-day have existed from the very origin of the properties.

The petition in this case is based upon the idea that prior to 1885 two transcontinental routes were in competition: (a) the Central Pacific with connections (at Ogden) to the Atlantic Ocean; and (b) the Southern Pacific Sunset-Gulf route from San Francisco via New Orleans and thence by water to New York, and that the violation of the Anti-trust Act arose out of the fact that by the lease of February 17, 1885, that competitive condition had been destroyed. It is true that the petition alleges the acquisition of the stock of the Central Pacific in 1899, but the underlying idea of the petition is that there had been a competitive condition between the two transcontinental routes and that it was destroyed in 1885. This is shown by the following extract from the petition:

> "The lines now owned by the Central Pacific Railway Company, in so far as then existing, were operated prior to 1885 in connection with the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company as a continuous connecting route between San Francisco and the Missouri River, with connections eastward to the Atlantic Ocean, and were in competition with the lines now operated by the Southern Pacific Company in interstate and foreign transportation (I R. 8)."

After the proofs were taken, the Government realized that the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific lines were always operated in the same way both before and after the lease of 1885, and that it would be impossible, therefore, to establish first that there had been a competitive condition differing from the present condition, and second, that it had been destroyed. Consequently, the Government has adopted a different position and in terms claims that the alleged violation of the Anti-trust Act consists in having prevented competition from coming into existence rather than in "destroying", "abridging", "suppressing" or "stifling" competition, to employ the terms just quoted from United States v. Union Pacific, 226 U. S. 61 (1912).

We shall later take up and consider the contention of the Government that competition has been prevented, but we content ourselves at the moment with the establishment of the proposition with which we are at present concerned; namely, that this case does not involve any combination of competitive units, or any combination at all, because the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific lines were projected and built and have been operated since their origin as one property.

II.

At the time of the passage of the Anti-trust Act (July 2, 1890) the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific lines were owned by a single proprietor, although the Central Pacific lines were held under a 99-year lease made February 17, 1885, instead of in fee; but "it is obvious that in principle the right of a lessee is the same as that of a purchaser in fee" (224 U. S. 565).

In 1885 the Southern Pacific Company became the lessee of all the Southern Pacific railroad lines, including the Sunset Gulf Route between San Francisco and New Orleans, and acquired all or substantially all of the stock of the companies owning the said Southern Pacific railroad lines. In the same year the Southern Pacific Company became lessee of the Central Pacific lines for a 99-year term commencing April 1, 1885, by virtue of a lease dated February 17, 1885 (I R. 6, 13).

It is provided in the lease that > "The said Central Pacific Railroad Company hereby leases to the said Southern Pacific Company, for the term of ninety-nine years, from the first day of April, A. D., 1885, the whole of its railroad . . . with the right to possess, maintain, use, operate and enjoy the said property and to receive the rents, issues and profits thereof." (I R. 14.)

>
> "And it is further agreed between the Southern Pacific Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company that, upon the execution of this agreement, the said Southern Pacific Company may enter upon, take possession of, and hold during the continuance of this agreement all the property, real and personal, hereby leased by the said Central Pacific Railroad Company to the said Southern Pacific Company." (I R. 18.)

The lease was carried into effect in accordance with its terms. In 1885, therefore, the Southern Pacific Company became the full proprietor of the Southern Pacific railroad lines and the proprietor for a term of ninety-nine years of the Central Pacific lines.

We say "proprietor" because in principle the right of a lessee is the same as that of a purchaser in fee. In the early common law an interest for a term of years did not confer an estate in land. But this notion is obsolete, and now a lease has a double aspect; (a) it grants a vested estate, a right in rem, in respect of the term transferred to the lessee, and (b) it is usually executory only in respect of the obligations due from the lessee to the lessor.

In 1 Austin's Jurisprudence, p. 387, it is said (3rd Am. Ed.):

> "Rights in rem sometimes arise from an instrument which is called a contract, and are therefore said to arise from a contract. The instrument in those cases wears a double aspect, or has a twofold effect. To one purpose it gives jus in personam, in another purpose it gives jus in rem and is a conveyance. When a so-called contract passes an estate, or, in the language of the civilians, a right in rem, to the obligor, it is to that extent not a contract, but a conveyance; although it may be a contract to some other extent and considered from some other aspect."

In 24 Halsbury's Laws of England, p. 264, it is said:

> "At common law an interest for a term of years did not originally confer an estate in the land. Between lessor and lessee there was only a relation of contract, with the result that, if the lessee was evicted, his remedy was to recover compensation > from the lessor, and though it was afterwards held that he could recover the land itself, the interest in the land which he thereby acquired was liable to be defeated by a collusive recovery suffered by the lessor. This liability was partially removed by the Statute of Gloucester, and more completely by a later statute. The estate in the land which the termor thenceforward enjoyed is therefore in effect the creation of statute."

In the very early common law the lessee's remedy was a personal one against the lessor, in covenant if he was ejected by the lessor; on a warranty for peaceful possession, perhaps, if he was ejected by a stranger. The reason why no possessory action was allowed a lessee originally was that such actions were reserved for freeholders.

Ultimately, however, the law allowed the lessee the legal advantages of possession. This, as stated above, was brought about by the enactment of two statutes passed in 1278 and 1529, each of them designed to protect the lessee in his possession and to prevent a dispossession of the lessee by a feigned recovery suffered by the lessor in an action brought by a third person.

Thus it came to pass that the lessee was given a possessory action theretofore reserved only for the owners of freehold estates, and by being thus confirmed in his possession and the right to recover possession if evicted, the lessee came to be regarded as the owner of an interest in the land itself, and the lease as an interest in the land.

The rights of a lessee having been perfected long before the American Colonies were founded, the rights of the lessee and the incidents of a lease as they existed in England at the time of the foundation of the colonies became a part of the common law of each of the American states which adopted the common law as its basis of jurisprudence. When, therefore, we speak of the common law rights of a lessee in any of the American states, we mean the rights which a lessee had in England at the time the colonies were founded. This, as we have already shown, was not the original common law right, but the right as developed and altered by statute to give the lessee an interest in the land itself and to make a lease a conveyance of an interest in land. Under the common law of every American state, therefore, a lease is a conveyance of an interest in land, and is for all practical purposes a sale of the subject matter of the lease for a term of years instead of in perpetuity.

In principle, there is no inherent difference between a sale and a lease. A lease may be said to be a conveyance for a term of years, and a sale a conveyance in perpetuity. Each vests an estate—a sale an estate in perpetuity; a lease an estate for years.

That there is no difference in principle between a leasehold interest and a fee was recognized by this court in Waskey v. Chambers, 224 U. S. 564 (1912).

Mr. Justice Holmes, in giving the opinion of the court, said (pp. 565-6):

> "It is obvious that in principle the right of a lessee is the same as that of a purchaser in fee. . . . Blackstone defines a lease as a conveyance, 2 Com. 317, and in Sheppard's Touchstone, 267, leases are ranked under the head of grants,—'as in other grants'."

See, also, the following:

"That a lease is a conveyance has frequently been judicially recognized. . . . A lease is, primarily, not a contract but a conveyance."

I Tiffany on Real Property, (2nd Ed.) Vol. I, p. 98.

" 'A lease has a dual character—it presents the aspect of a contract and also that of a conveyance.' (Pollock on Contracts, 3d Am. ed., p. 531.) 'Consequently the lease has two sets of rights and obligations—one comprising those growing out of the relation of landlord and tenant, and said to be based on the 'privity of estate', and the other comprising those growing out of the express stipulations of the lease, and so said to be based on 'privity of contract'."

Samuels v. Ottinger, 169 Cal. 209, 211 (1915);

Realty and Rebuilding Company v. Rea (Sup. Ct. Cal., 1920), 194 Pac. 1024, 1026.

"A lease is a conveyance or grant. . . . The use of the word 'lease' in the agreement operated to convey. . . . In our opinion, the instrument conveyed an unconditional estate of real property."

Milliken v. Faulk, 111 Ala. 658; 20 So. 594, 595 (1896).

"A lease is but a conveyance of an estate in realty. It divests the owner, for a given time, of a certain estate in the realty, leaving in him the reversion. In a sense, therefore, the lessee is as much the owner of the right of possession of the leased premises as the grantee in a deed is the owner of the freehold,"

Mattingly's Executor v. Brents; 155 Ky. 570, 159 S. W. 1157 (1913).

In Venner v. New York Central & H. R. R. Co., 177 App. Div. 296, 347, 164 N. Y. S. 626, 660 (aff'd. 226 N. Y. 583; petition for writ of certiorari denied by this court, 249 U. S. 617), the court, in speaking of leases made prior to the Sherman Act, said:

> "It is not the intention of the Federal acts [Sherman and Clayton Acts] to subvert titles vested before their passage. . . . In the Standard Oil case the court took account of acts prior to the passage of the statute only as they reflected upon the subsequent acts, a course followed in U. S. v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (188 Fed. Rep. 127, 134). . . . In United States v. Freight Association (166 U. S. 290) the court was not dealing with property long vested in ownership. There were involved acts begun before the incoming of the Federal statute, and pursuant to an agreement from which any party could retire on thirty days' notice, and which the parties dissolved on one day by a resolution of the previous day. It vested no property rights, and was not intended to do so, and its obligation was practically at the will of each member. The court said: 'We give to the law no retroactive effect. The agreement in question is a continuing one. The parties to it adopt certain machinery, and agree to certain methods for the purpose of establishing and maintaining in the future reasonable rates for transportation. Assuming such action to have been legal at the time the agreement was first entered into, the continuation of the agreement, after it has been declared to be illegal, becomes a violation of the act. The statute prohibits the continuing or entering into such an agreement for the future, and if the agreement be continued it then becomes a violation of the act'."

It was held accordingly that the status created by the leases before the act was passed could not be challenged.

We reserve for later consideration the argument of counsel for the Government that the lease of the Central Pacific lines to the Southern Pacific Company was invalid.

III.

The Act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat. 652, 659) creating the commission for the settlement of the Central Pacific debt, contemplated as natural if not inevitable, the agreement subsequently made, and it invested the commission with full authority to agree to the plan which was adopted for the payment of the indebtedness, including the provision by which the Southern Pacific Company acquired the stock of the Central Pacific Company.

March 16, 1897, Mr. Gear introduced a bill for the appointment of a commission consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney General to settle the debt of the bond-aided Central Pacific lines (p. 140, supra). The report accompanying the bill speaks of the failure of Congress to enact any measures for the adjustment of the Central Pacific indebtedness as follows (p. 143, supra):

> "In each instance, however, the proposed bills have failed, either on account of failure of the Houses of Congress to reach them for consideration, or on account of adverse action which it is believed was predicated, to a controlling extent, upon the conviction that Congress, with the vast multiplicity of matters constantly demanding its attention, could not devote the requisite time to the grave consideration of the many diverse elements affecting this question and necessarily affecting any specific plan devised for its adjustment."

The report points out that it was believed that the matter could be more adequately dealt with by three members of the Cabinet, subject to the approval of the President. This plan, as we know, was adopted by the enactment of the law passed July 7, 1898.

The lease of the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific of February 17, 1885, had been laid before Congress, February 5, 1886 (p. 126, supra), and all of the later leases except one had been submitted to Congress, January 13, 1897 (p. 138, supra). The exception is the lease of April 15, 1897, which had not yet been made, and which was executed only in order that the fiscal year, for purposes of accounting might conform to the requirement of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It is clear, therefore, that Congress understood the situation very fully, and knew that the Southern Pacific owned the Central Pacific lines for a 99-year term ending January 1, 1984.

It is also to be remembered that the Act of July 7, 1898, was intended to procure a settlement and not to bring about a foreclosure. The Government wished its debt paid; it did not wish foreclosure. Senator Gear's report of March 16, 1897, says:

> "It is believed, however, that a result much more advantageous to the United States can be reached by agreement with the Railroad Company than would be reached by a foreclosure of the second lien held by the Government, subject to this large first mortgage lien, or by the foreclosure of the first mortgage and the Government liens concurrently."

The act, therefore, was an act for an adjustment and settlement with both the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific companies, for it was inconceivable that any settlement could be reached without the consent of the Southern Pacific Company. There could have been foreclosure of course, but foreclosure was neither intended nor desired.

Judge Hook describes the settlement with the Government as follows (239 Fed. 1002; VI R. 2331):

> "That the Southern Pacific control of the Central Pacific was not regarded as contrary to the statutes of the United States appears from the proceedings under the Act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat., 659). By that act a commission consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General, was appointed to settle the Central Pacific debt to the United States. The act provided that 'any and all settlements' should be subject to the approval of the President. William McKinley was then President and the other officials were Lyman J. Gage, Cornelius N. Bliss and John W. Griggs. The settlement was effected as of February 1, 1899. At that time the Central Pacific debt to the United States for Government aid in the construction of the lines between Sacramento and Ogden, and Sacramento and San Jose, amounted to $58,812,715.48. More than half of this amount was accrued interest and it was secured by a statutory lien on the two bond aided lines subject to prior first mortgages. In addition the Central Pacific bonded debt then amounted to $57,471,000, most if not all of which was secured by first mortgages upon its various lines of road. It had outstanding $67,275,500 of stock. Before stating the details of the settlement, the conditions in the light of which the statute authorizing it was passed may be briefly mentioned. Congress had been fully aware for many years of the relations between the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific. As early as 1886 the President transmitted to the House of Representatives a copy of the lease of 1885 and from that time on the connection of the two companies was frequently the subject of official and legislative communications and reports. In February, 1890, a copy of the lease was laid before the Senate with the report of a committee in which it was said:

> 'It is manifest from the terms of their lease that any bill for the adjustment and settlement of the debt of the Central Pacific Company must, in order to be efficacious, contain provisions by which this lease and the obligations of the Southern Pacific Company under it shall become security to the United States, and that the consent of the Southern Pacific Company shall be obtained to such provisions of the bill.'

The committee was of the opinion that the existing security of the Government on the Central Pacific property was inadequate and that in case of foreclosure of the first mortgages the property would be substantially exhausted in satisfying them. They reported that among the plans suggested to them was one 'That all the associated lines forming the Southern Pacific Company (and these include the Central Pacific as consolidated) become parties' to 2 per cent. bonds of the United States secured by a first lien upon the consolidated properties of all the lines. The above is but a small part of a continuous history of legislative efforts in the years preceding the act appointing the commission. Congress was fully informed of the lease and its terms, and that in any conventional settlement the Southern Pacific could not be ignored but had to be reckoned with. Agreement or litigation with the Southern Pacific were unavoidable alternatives, and the remedy by foreclosure of the statutory lien meant probable substantial loss. While the bills introduced in Congress to effect a direct legislative settlement did not pass, it does not appear that the failure was due to a definite opposition of that body to the relation between the two companies. But however that may be, the whole situation in all its angles and complications was public history, and with definite knowledge of it Congress committed the settlement to the commission. The commission was given 'full power to settle the indebtedness . . . upon such terms and in such manner as may be agreed upon by them, or by a majority of them, and the owners of said railroads'. The power, however, was subject to the following limitations: The Government was to receive not less than the full amount of principal and interest due it; in equal semi-annual installments; with interest not less than 3 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually; 'with such security as to said commission may seem expedient'; final payment and full discharge not to be postponed beyond ten years; all to become due upon default in any installment or interest; and if settlement was not perfected the President should proceed at once to foreclose. No other conditions than these were prescribed.

An agreement of settlement as of February 1, 1899, was made and signed by the commissioners, the Central Pacific and Messrs. Speyer & Co., who were managing the reorganization of that company. It was approved by the President. Contemporaneously with the consummation of the settlement the Central Pacific was reorganized under a plan that provided for a new Central Pacific company and its issue of $100,000,000 of first refunding 4 per cent. mortgage bonds. The plan also contemplated the guaranty of the bonds by the Southern Pacific and its acquisition of the stock of the new company. There was the same publicity of the details of this plan as generally attends the reorganization of important railroad systems, and the commission was advised of them in the early stages of its preparation. By the agreement of settlement the Central Pacific was to execute to the United States twenty promissory notes dated February 1, 1899, payable, respectively, on or before the expiration of each successive six months for ten years, each for the sum of $2,940,635.48 or one-twentieth of the total debt, and bearing interest at 3 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually. Each note contained a provision for the maturity of all upon partial default as provided in the act appointing the commission. The Central Pacific 'or its successor company having title to the aforesaid railroads' was also to make an issue of 45 year four per cent. gold bonds not exceeding $100,000,000 in all, secured by a first refunding mortgage upon all its railroads, whether bond aided or not, and all its equipment and terminals. The bonds were to be further secured by the guaranty of the Southern Pacific and were to be, as expressed in the agreement of settlement, 'prior in lien to any lease of the railroads of said Central Pacific'. Of these bonds $58,820,000 were to be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as security for the twenty installment notes. In addition, Speyer & Co., reorganization managers, were within one month after the execution and delivery of the notes to purchase from the United States without recourse the four earliest maturing and pay therefor the face amount, $11,762,543.12, and accrued interest. A proportionate amount of the collateral mortgage bonds was to go with the four notes. The above constituted the security which seemed expedient to the commission within the authority conferred by the Act of Congress.

The agreement of settlement was carried out in all its details. The lease to the Southern Pacific was subordinated to the mortgage securing the new first refunding bonds by an indenture executed by that company which recited as consideration

'the benefits and advantages to be derived by said party of the first part (the Southern Pacific) from the carrying out of the agreement between the United States, the Central Pacific Railroad Company and Messrs. Speyer & Co., dated February 1, 1899'. On February 15, 1899, the commission reported to the House of Representatives. The report was in general terms and referred to the agreement of settlement a copy of which accompanied it. No reference to the guaranty of the Southern Pacific appeared in the report or the agreement, but the proof is convincing that the commission regarded it as a vital feature of a settlement. In the annual report of the Attorney General to the Senate and House of Representatives in November, 1899, the completion of the settlement was set out but the guaranty of the Southern Pacific was inadvertently stated as being upon the notes instead of upon the bonds securing them. With the exception of some credits which will be presently mentioned the notes held in the Treasury of the United States were paid by the checks of the Southern Pacific. That company charged the amounts to the Central Pacific upon their inter-company accounts."

It is therefore clear that Congress contemplated the likelihood of an adjustment of the matter through the Southern Pacific, actuated by its interest in and affiliations with the Central Pacific. The fact that the President and the three members of his Cabinet saw nothing wrong in making the settlement does not suggest that they were unmindful of their duty, but argues that what they did was in full performance of their duty and quite within the law, and the contemplation of Congress.

Judge Hook's opinion contains the following upon this point (239 Fed. 1004; VI R. 2333):

"The rule as to the persuasive force of an administrative construction of statutes is a familiar one and is frequently applied, but in the case before us there was more than the ordinary acts of public officers subject to legislative restraint. Here there was a commission composed of the very highest officials of the government specially created and charged with the adjustment of a difficult and complicated business that had for years engaged the attention of Congress. Limitations upon their power and conditions to be observed were expressly set forth in the statute but none remotely suggesting any obstacle in the Anti-Trust Act. Except as to those limitations and conditions plenary power was given them. The relations between the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific, long a matter of public history, naturally foreshadowed the engagement of the former in any adjustment of the financial condition of the latter; and additional considerations then affecting the other transcontinental railroad companies pointed the same way. So natural if not inevitable was the settlement that was made that the omission of limitations now urged is most significant. We do not say the commission was authorized to violate or to sanction the violation of the act of Congress, but the adjustment they effected necessarily involved the question of its pertinence to the business in hand. The acceptance of the guaranty of the Southern Pacific was a recognition that it had sufficient corporate interest in the Central Pacific to justify it. Without such interest its accommodation guaranty of $100,000,000 of bonds of another company would manifestly have been ultra vires—a gross, indefensible excess of its corporate powers. Again the acceptance of the guaranty implied a recognition of its possible, natural result, that is to say, > the enforcement of the rights of a guarantor against the property of a debtor. The addition of the stock ownership by the Southern Pacific to its long leasehold interest did not so change the situation as to make unlawful what was not so before."

In the Steel Corporation case, Mr. Justice McKenna comments to similar effect upon the effect of administrative approval.

> "There is, however, an important circumstance in connection with [the purchase of] the Tennessee company which is worthy to be noted. It was submitted to President Roosevelt and he gave his approval. His approval, of course, did not make it legal; but it gives assurance of its legality" (251 U. S. 446).

It will be noted that the case described by Mr. Justice McKenna involved merely a conference with the President, while in the present case, we have a formal agreement, authorized and ratified by Congress, and executed by the President and three members of his Cabinet.

IV.

In any event the government is estopped by its conduct to question the legality of the unified control of the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific lines.

The 99-year lease by the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific Company is dated February 17, 1885. The Southern Pacific Company took over the operation of the Central Pacific lines April 1, 1885, and, of course, the fact that it had done so was a matter of common knowledge throughout the country. The obligations of the Central Pacific to the Government consequent upon the bond aid which it received in the construction of its lines, made it necessary to notify the Government of the lease practically contemporaneously with the event, and that it did so appears from the mention of the lease in the report of the Secretary of the Interior dated November 1, 1885 (p. 124, supra). On February 5, 1886, the lease was laid before Congress pursuant to its request (p. 126, supra). The existence of the 99-year term created by the lease was frequently considered in Congress in relation to the measures for the refunding of the indebtedness, and in all or nearly all of those measures it was required that the Southern Pacific should insure the financial ability of the Central Pacific to pay the amount which was due.

To sum up briefly, it may be said that Congress dealt with the matter as though the debt could not be settled without the concurrence or participation in the settlement by the Southern Pacific Company. It is true that the 99-year lease was subordinate to the bond issues and to the Government's lien, but the Government did not desire foreclosure. It wanted only to collect the amount due and had no disposition to operate the Central Pacific lines. When, therefore, the Act of July 7, 1898, was passed, it was clearly contemplated that the settlement of the debt would require a plan in which the Southern Pacific Company would participate or, at the very least, to which its consent would be necessary and, indeed, vital. The Southern Pacific could only have been cut out by foreclosure; but, as foreclosure was not planned except as a last resort, the participation of the Southern Pacific in the plan was a certainty.

As pointed out in the statement of the case (p. 154, supra), this settlement required an arrangement that would satisfy (a) the bondholders, (b) the Government, (c) the Southern Pacific, and (d) the stockholders of the Central Pacific. If the stockholders of the Central Pacific did not join in the reorganization of the company, there could be no adjustment of the debt and foreclosure would be inevitable.

It was not necessary to the reorganization that all the persons participating in the plan should execute the same instrument; in fact, it frequently occurs in complicated transactions that they do not do so. In dealing with such a transaction, however, it often happens after the event that the instruments are treated, construed and given effect as though they were one instrument.

In Metropolitan Securities Co. v. Ladd (C. C. A., 2nd Ct., 1909), 173 Fed. 269, a very complicated plan involved a lease of surface street railway systems in the City of New York, and instruments executed in transactions incident to the lease. The contracts were not all made by the same persons, but they were nevertheless held to constitute a single contract in the language following:

> "In our opinion the true view of the obligation between these parties can only be obtained by considering all the traction companies as being merely parts or administrative divisions of one complex concern, and all the separate contracts executed, in relation to obtaining $8,000,000 for the New York City Company, as being one contract, to be construed together." . . . "These four contracts were made at the same time, were in pari materia, and are to be construed together as constituting, in fact, one contract."

This is in accordance with the general rule. Thus, in Page on Contracts, Sec. 1116, it is said:

"Even if two writings are executed on different dates and between different parties, they may from their subject matter be so connected that even without express reference the later contract is to be construed as to be read in connection with the earlier."

In Gammon v. Freeman, 31 Maine 243 (1850), it was held:

"To constitute several conveyances parts of the same transaction, it is not necessary that the deeds bear the same date; nor that in each of the deeds, the parties should be the same persons."

In the body of the opinion, the Court said (p. 245):

"It will be sufficient that the deeds are delivered at the same time to accomplish the agreed purpose."

In MacDonald v. Wolff, 40 Mo. App. 302 (1890), the syllabus is as follows:

"When several instruments are executed at the same time in relation to the same subject-matter and to accomplish a common purpose, and the execution thereof is known to every party to either instrument, they should be construed as one contract, though the parties to each instrument are not the same."

In the body of the opinion, the court said (p. 308):

> "The plaintiff's contracts with defendant and Bowman were of the same date; they related to the same subject-matter; had but a single object, and were substantially between the same parties. It is a well-recognized rule of law that a contract may be contained in several instruments, which, if made at the same time, between the same parties and in relation to the same subject-matter, will be held to constitute but one contract; and for the purpose of arriving at the true intention of the parties all the instruments will be read as one, and the recitals in each may be explained or limited by reference to the others; and it is not necessary that the instruments should in terms refer to each other. . . . In the case of Gammon v. Freeman, supra, the Supreme Court of Maine held that, to make two or more instruments one transaction or contract, it was not necessary that the parties to each instrument should be the same; it was sufficient if the contracts were known to all the parties, and were delivered at the same time to accomplish an agreed purpose."

Similarly in Houck v. Frisbee, 66 Mo. App. 16 (1896), the syllabus is as follows:

> "A contract may be contained in several instruments. These, if made at the same time, between the same parties and in relation to the same subject-matter, may be read together as one instrument, and the recitals in one way be explained or limited by reference to the other; nor is it necessary that the instruments should in terms refer to each other. And the rule obtains even when the parties are not the same, if the several contracts were known to all the parties and were delivered at the same time to accomplish an agreed purpose."

The two Missouri cases last cited were quoted with approval in Western Adv. Co. v. Star Publishing Co.,

146 Mo. App. 90, 123 S. W. 969 (1910), wherein the syllabus is as follows:

> "Several instruments, if made at the same time, between the same parties, and in relation to the same subject-matter, will be read together as one contract, even in the absence of any reference in one to the other, and though the parties are not the same, if the contracts were known to all the parties, and were delivered at the same time to accomplish an agreed purpose."

Another case sustaining the rule is Bass v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 19 N. M. 193, 142 Pac. 798 (1914), wherein the syllabus is as follows:

> "Even if two writings are executed on different dates and between different parties, they may from their subject-matter be so connected that, even without express reference, the latter contract is to be so construed as to be read in connection with the earlier."

In the body of the opinion the court quoted with approval the cases of MacDonald v. Wolff and Houck v. Frisbee, also Sec. 1116 of Page on Contracts.

In the following cases instruments executed by different parties were construed together, and the procedure was not questioned:

Logan v. Tibbott, 4 Green (Ia.) 389 (1854);

Bradley v. Marshall, 54 Ill. 173 (1870);

Shaw v. First Baptist Church, 44 Minn. 22; 46 N. W. 146 (1890);

Roberts v.Vonnegut, 58 Ind. App. 142, 104 N. E. 321 (1914).

It is not to be said that the entire plan was not known to the President and to the three members of his Cabinet, for the uncontradicted evidence is to the contrary.

The agreement was executed for the Government by President McKinley, Secretary Bliss and Attorney General Griggs February 15, 1899, and by Secretary Gage February 16, 1899. The settlement was reported to both Houses of Congress February 20, 1899. Five days later the plan in full, accompanied by a comprehensive editorial review, appeared in The Commercial & Financial Chronicle February 25, 1899 (6 R. 2258-2268), one of the leading financial journals of the country. Frequent accounts of the plan of reorganization of the Central Pacific later appeared in its columns (6 R. 2268-2279).

It is clear upon the facts stated that the Government is estopped to dispute the validity of the 99-year lease or of the acquisition of the Central Pacific stock of the Southern Pacific Company. It remains for us to enquire whether the defense of Government estopped is available to us. In support of this proposition we rely upon the authorities following:

In the Steel Corporation case, 251 U. S. 417, 452-3, Mr. Justice McKenna said:

> "It is certainly a matter for consideration that there was no legal attack on the corporation until 1911, ten years after its formation and the commencement of its career. We do not, however, speak of the delay simply as to its time—that there is estoppel in it because of its time—but on account of what was done during that time—the many millions of dollars spent, the development made, and the enterprises undertaken, the investments by the public that have been invited, and are not to be ignored."

In United States v. Willamette Co., 54 Fed. 807, 811 (1892), Judge Gilbert said:

> "There is good authority, based upon sound reasoning, to support the doctrine that where the government has acted by legislative enactment, resolution, or grant, or otherwise than through the unauthorized or illegal acts of its agents, and the parties dealing with the government have relied upon the same, and in good faith have so changed their relation to the subject-matter thereof that it would be inequitable to declare such action or grant illegal, the government will be estopped. Com. v. Andre, 3 Pick. 224; Cahn v. Barnes, 7 Sawy. 48, 5 Fed. Rep. 326; State v. Milk, 11 Fed. Rep. 397; Pengra v. Munz, 29 Fed. Rep. 830; Woodruff v. Trapnall, 10 How. 190. . . . It was well said in Woodruff v. Trapnall that we naturally look to the action of a sovereign state to be characterized by a more scruplous regard to justice and a higher morality than belong to the ordinary transactions of individuals."

In United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co. (C. C. A., 8th Ct., 1904), 131 Fed. 668, Sanborn, Circuit Judge, says:

> "This is a suit in equity. The equitable claims of the United States appeal to the conscience of a chancellor with the same, but with no greater or less, force than would those of an individual in like circumstances."

In State of Iowa v. Carr (C. C. A, 8th Ct., 1911), 191 Fed. 257, 266, Sanborn, Circuit Judge, says:

> "They (counsel for appellants) also contend that every sovereignty is exempted from the rule of equitable estoppel. But the great weight of authority, the stronger reason, and the settled rule upon this subject in the courts of the United States, is that while mere delay does not, either by limitation or laches, of itself constitute a bar to suits and claims of a state or of the United States, yet when a sovereignty submits itself to the jurisdiction of a court of equity and prays its aid, its claims and rights are judicable by every other principle and rule of equity applicable to the claims and rights of private parties under similar circumstances."

The State v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., 246 Ill. 188, 92 N. E. 814, 835 (1910):

"Cases may arise of such a character that right and justice will require that equitable estoppel may be asserted even against the State when acting in its governmental capacity."

In United States v. Flint, 4 Sawyer 42, 58; aff'd 98 U. S. 61, Mr. Justice Field says:

"The United States, by virtue of their sovereign character, may claim exemption from legal proceedings; but when they enter the courts of the country as a litigant they waive this exemption, and stand on the same footing with private individuals. Unless otherwise provided by statute, the same rules as to the admissibility of evidence are then applied to them; the same strictness as to motions and appeals is enforced; they must move for a new trial or take an appeal within the same time and in like manner, and they are equally bound to act upon evidence within their reach. And, when they go into a court of equity, they must equally present a case by allegation and proof entitling them to equitable relief."

In United States v. Clark (C. C. A., 9th Ct., 1905), 138 Federal 294, 299, Ross, Circuit Judge, says:

> "As a matter of course, when the government comes as a suitor into a court of equity, its claims appeal to the chancellor with no greater force than do those of an individual under like circumstances, etc."

In U. S. v. Flint (1876), Fed. Cas. No. 15,121 (Field, Circuit Judge), the syllabus reads as follows:

> "If, on consideration of all the circumstances of a given case, it be inequitable to grant the relief prayed against a citizen, such relief will be refused by a court of equity, although the United States be the suitor."

In United States v. White, 17 Fed. 561-565 (1883), Sawyer, J., says:

> "When the United States goes into a court of equity as a suitor, it is subject to the defenses peculiar to that court."

In the case of The Siren, 7 Wallace 152, 159, it was held that the government by its appearance in court

> "waives its exemption and submits to the application of the same principles by which justice is administered between private suitors."

In Commonwealth v. Turnpike Co., 153 Pa. St. 47, 54, 25 Atl. 1105 (1893), the court says:

> "In England, from whence we derived the great body of common law, and most of our principles in equity, it is well settled that while time will not run against the crown, yet time, together with other elements, may make up a species of fraud and estop even sovereignty from exercising its legal rights."

The relation of acquiescence to estoppel is well expressed in Norfolk Railroad Co. v. Perdue, 40 W. Va. 442, 21 S. E. 755 (1895), as follows:

"If a person having a right, and seeing another person about to commit or in the course of committing an act infringing upon that right, stands by in such manner as really to induce the person committing the act, and who might otherwise have abstained from it, to believe that he assents to its being committed, he cannot afterwards be heard to complain of the act. This is the proper sense of the term 'acquiescence', and in that sense it may be defined as "quiescence", under such circumstances as that assent may be reasonably inferred from it, and is no more than an instance of the law of estoppel by words or conduct."

V.

The present status of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific lines was confirmed by the Acts of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1245), and March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1023).

In the statement of the case (p. 176, supra), we deal with the Act of March 3, 1899, conferring authority upon the Secretary of the Treasury to carry into effect the settlement of the Central Pacific indebtedness to the Government; and (p. 185, supra), we deal with the Act of March 3, 1901, which recognized the settlement so made and authorized credits (due in part to the Southern Pacific) to be given on the Central Pacific notes executed and delivered to the Government as a part of that settlement.

Judge Hook's opinion deals as follows with Congress's ratification of the settlement (239 Fed. 1005; VI R. 2334):

"With knowledge of the settlement, and, it may be fairly presumed, of the details that were public history, Congress authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of 'any notes in his possession touching the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States'. Act of March 3, 1899, 30 Stat. 1245. Further, by the Act of March 3, 1901, 31 Stat. 1023, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized and directed to settle claims for interest growing out of transportation services for the Government 'over non-bond aided lines of the Southern Pacific Company and Central Pacific Railroad Company by crediting' the amounts upon the Central Pacific instalment notes. This was done. The claims were just debts of the Government, and the legislative direction to credit those due the Southern Pacific upon the indebtedness of the Central Pacific was a recognition in some degree at least of a relationship between the two companies that justified it. There was no other warrant or authority than that which arose from the proprietary position of the Southern Pacific."

If these Acts of Congress had been less plain, clear and explicit than they are, they would nevertheless have been sufficient to ratify the settlement made by the Government, including the provision by which the Central Pacific stock was acquired by the Southern Pacific Company. This will appear from the following authorities:

In Grogan v. San Francisco, 18 Cal. 590, 609 (1861), Mr. Justice Field says:

> "The State may ratify the acts of her agents upon a subject within the constitutional control of the Legislature, when they exceed their powers. She may do this by legislation directly affirming the acts, or by legislation proceeding upon their assumed validity."

In Abbott v. N. Y. etc. R. R. Co., 145 Mass. 450, 459; 15 N. E. 91, 102 (1888), Mr. Justice Holmes says:

> "It thus appears that for twenty years the Commonwealth has constantly dealt with this corporation and its predecessor as having a good title to the road, and as having possessed the powers which they assumed to exercise. The Commonwealth has advanced a large sum of money on that assumption. For nearly twenty years before these actions were brought the plaintiffs have acquiesced in the same view, while the road over their lands has been in public operation. Meantime the mortgage was made, and the bonds were sold in the market. We think that courts should be slow to pronounce the Legislature to have been mistaken in its constantly manifested opinion upon a matter resting wholly within its will, when for so long a time everything has been conducted upon that footing. But we are satisfied, for the reasons which we have given, that the opinion of the Legislature was correct, and that the Boston, Hartford and Erie Railroad Company must be taken to have had the power and right to make its location of July 30, 1866."

In Deseret Salt Co. v. Tarpey, 142 U. S. 241 (1891), Mr. Justice Field said (p. 253):

> "We do not think the provision was designed to impair the force of the operative words of transfer in the grants of the United States, or invalidate the numerous conveyances by sale and mortgage of the lands made by the railroad company, with the express or implied assent of the government."

In United States v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 177 U. S. 435, 441, Mr. Justice Shiras said:

> "There would seem to be room for a fair presumption that Congress was aware of the action of the President and of the functionaries of the land department in the particulars before mentioned, and approved of the same."

In the case of State v. Hallock, 20 Nev. 73, 15 Pac. 472 (1887), it was held that the legislature of the state acquired knowledge of the methods pursued by the fiscal officers of the state in dealing with appropriations made by it for the carrying on of the Government, through the reports of the Comptroller which were annually transmitted to the legislature. At page 74 of the opinion the court says:

> "At each biennial session the legislature appropriates money for the purpose of carrying on the government for the two years then running. . . . The fiscal officers of the state government have uniformly construed these laws, by usage, as intending an appropriation for the limited time only; that is to say, the appropriation is to meet, within the named fiscal years, the liabilities incurred during those years. Unexpended balances against which no warrants have been drawn are considered as having lapsed, and are carried to the general fund of the treasury. This manner of treating appropriations made for the support of the civil government is known to the legislature from the annual reports of the comptroller, submitted at each session for its information."

In Michigan Land & Lumber Co. v. Rust, 68 Fed. 155, 164 (C. C. A., 6th Ct., 1895), the court said:

> "The state . . . in its legislative capacity knew how the adjustment (of the state land grant) was going forward. The reports of the Commissioner of the State Land Office showed it, and the legislature of 1857 enacted a statute to forbid sales of lands before patents were received."

In Michigan v. Jackson etc. R. Co. (C. C. A., 6th Ct., 1895), 69 Fed. 116, 121, the court said:

> "Express knowledge was communicated to successive legislatures by the reports of the Commissioner of the State Land Office, and messages from the Executive."

Shaw v. Kellogg, 170 U. S. 312, 339, holds that reports of the Surveyor-General and of the Land Department made to Congress, are notice of their contents to the legislative body.

> "As it appears by the report of the Surveyor-General and of the Land Department, transmitted to Congress in 1864, the fact that this land had been finally appropriated to the claim of the Baca heirs was disclosed. Mention of that fact was also made in subsequent reports to that body, and yet from that time to the present Congress has taken no action in the matter, and has thus by its silence confirmed the proceedings of the Land Department."

In State v. New Orleans, 104 La. 685, 690, 29 So. 312 (1900), it appeared that the State had granted to a railroad company a right of way for its road over some public land adjoining a canal, and the company had subsequently transferred this right to another company. The court said:

> "The State was formally notified of what had been done, and was apprised not only of the fact that its grantee had transferred all the rights granted, including the free use of the land in question, but was informed of the manner of the transfer and the consideration therefor, by the filing in the office of the Secretary of State in January, 1876, of a copy of the instrument by which the said transfer was effected."

In State v. Flint etc. Railroad Co., 89 Mich. 481, 491-2, 51 N. W. 103 (1891), certificates prepared by the Department of the Interior, attesting that the lands in controversy had been granted to the State under the Railroad Act of June 3, 1856, were filed in the appropriate state department; and it was held that the filing in the department of these certificates was notice to the State that it had acquired the lands under the Act referred to.

> "The identification of these lands", said the court, "and their certification to the State, were a solemn declaration on the part of the United States that they came to the State under the railroad grant, and not under the swamp-land grant. This declaration stood for 28 years without challenge from the State, and with the evidence thereof on file in its own department. It knew that the railroad company took these lands under the railroad act."

In Atchison v. Peterson, 20 Wall. 507, 512 (1874), this court said:

> "The government, by its silent acquiescence, assented to the general occupation of the public lands for mining, and, to encourage their free and unlimited use for that purpose, reserved such lands as were mineral from sale and the acquisition of title by settlement."

In Buford v. Houtz, 133 U. S. 320 (1890), this court, while speaking of the depasturing of the public lands by the public, said (p. 326):

> "The Government of the United States, in all its branches, has known of this use, has never forbidden it, nor taken any steps to arrest it. No doubt it may be safely stated that this has been done with the consent of all branches of the government, and, as we shall attempt to show, with its direct encouragement."

Finally, we may say of our rights, as this court said:

In Broder v. Water Co., 101 U. S. 274, of the rights of the miners (p. 276):

> [These] "are rights which the Government had, by its conduct, recognized and encouraged and was bound to protect."

VI.

It is established by the opinion and decree in United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S. 61 (1912), that up to the time of the Union Pacific merger in 1901, "sharp, well defined and vigorous" competition existed between the Ogden and El Paso routes, notwithstanding the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific; and it is here in proof that the competitive conditions of 1901 and before were restored after the unmerger in 1913.

The defendants have offered in evidence the Government's Brief of Facts filed in this court in the Union Pacific Case (III R. 933).

In that brief the Government argued (p. 39) that > "there was the same incentive to active, energetic competition between these lines [the Ogden and El Paso routes] that there would have been had the Southern Pacific not owned the lines between Ogden and San Francisco."

Again (p. 78):

> [The defendants] "made no effort to break down or contradict the showing made by the complainant as to the active competition thus existing up to the time of the merger between the two systems."

Again (p. 86):

> "The Southern Pacific, as a matter of self-preservation, was always compelled to and did gladly interchange business with the Union Pacific, accepting for its share of the through haul the division of the through rate accorded to it by consent, from 1870 down to the present time."

Again (p. 88):

> "It is a new suggestion, born out of the necessities of this case, that the Union Pacific could not be a competitor of the Sunset Route of the Southern Pacific because it does not reach through to California, and hence had no power independent of its connections to make rates."

Again (p. 276):

> "The Southern Pacific was helpless to destroy that competition simply by the ownership of the line from Ogden to San Francisco."

These extracts from the Brief of Facts show clearly what the Government attempted to establish in the Union Pacific case. The decision of this court upon the point was in accordance with the contention of the Government, and it was found in terms and declared to be the fact that, notwithstanding the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific, competition between the Ogden and El Paso lines at the time of the merger in 1901 and before was "sharp, well defined and vigorous".

The Southern Pacific Company was a party defendant in the Union Pacific suit from the beginning and the Central Pacific Railway Company became a party before the final decree. The opinion and decree are therefore binding upon the Government, and conclusively determine the fact.

It has been established by uncontradicted testimony in the present case that the competitive conditions which existed in 1901 and before have existed ever since the unmerger in 1913 (p. 220, supra; also Spence, III R. 1038).

VII.

It is thus apparent that we may draw upon the three departments of the Government of the United States for support in our position that the Southern Pacific may and does lawfully control and operate the Central Pacific and that no violation of the Anti-trust Act is involved in such control and operation.

Legislative Action.

Congress's long acquiescence in the control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific arising out of the lease of February 17, 1885; the Act creating a commission "with full power to settle the indebtedness to the Government" which was clearly intended to give authority if the Commission were so minded, to deal with the Southern Pacific; and the passage of the Acts of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1245), and March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1023), whereby Congress ratified the action of the Commission in participating in a plan having for one of its essential features the acquisition of the Central Pacific stock by the Southern Pacific—all establish beyond peradventure a determination by Congress that the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific did not involve undue restraint of commerce or any other violation of the Anti-Trust Act.

Executive Action.

The same determination was made by the Executive Department of the Government. The President, Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of the Interior and Attorney General, upon a full understanding of the facts, entered into a plan which included the acquisition of the Central Pacific stock by the Southern Pacific Company as one of its essential features, and their action can only be interpreted to mean that they determined by implication that the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific did not involve an undue restraint of commerce or the violation of any other provision of the Anti-Trust Act.

It is true that Attorney General Griggs was asked if that question had been considered or discussed, and that he answered no (III R. 1008), but the very fact that it did not arise and did not suggest itself to any of the officers of the Government is striking proof that the plan was not unlawful in conception or execution.

Judicial Action.

We have already shown that the Union Pacific case determined that no undue restraint of commerce resulted from the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific.

Governmental Acquiescence.

Silence and acquiescence when it would be a duty or natural to speak in protest, were protest justified, is taken the world over as evidence of the rightfulness of conduct. This principle, born of common experience, is applicable to the present case. The Government knew, the whole world knew, that the Southern Pacific acquired the Central Pacific stock, and they knew it in 1899. There was no protest by the executive department of the Government—there was no protest by Congress—that the Government had been overreached, or that in the settlement of the Government debt with the Central Pacific the Southern Pacific had brought about an illegal combination and violated the Anti-Trust Act. The Government acquiesced in the purchase. There was no murmur of protest, and no challenge, until 1913 (fourteen years after the event), when the then Attorney General, while attempting to devise a plan for the disposition of Southern Pacific stock held by the Union Pacific, conceived the idea that the Southern Pacific should be compelled to sell the Central Pacific to the Union Pacific.

We rely upon these fourteen years of silence and acquiescence (not to mention the added nine years, 1890-1899, of Southern Pacific operation under the lease of 1885) for persuasive and indeed compelling evidence and argument, both in point of fact and of law, that the Southern Pacific rightfully and lawfully acquired the stock of the Central Pacific.

VIII.

Irrespective of the considerations already dealt with, and considering the matter as an open question, traffic conditions between the El Paso and Ogden routes are such that the control of the Central Pacific line by the Southern Pacific Company, does not constitute an undue restraint of commerce.

In order to make out a case under the Anti-trust Act it was incumbent upon the Government to show (a) acts done by defendants in violation of the statute, i. e., a contract, combination, or conspiracy, or an attempt to monopolize, of the prohibited character and purpose; and (b) a resulting unreasonable restraint of trade existing at the time of the institution of the suit. We have already presented the facts and reasons which show that the common control of the Central Pacific lines and the other lines of the Southern Pacific System did not arise from and do not constitute a contract, combination or conspiracy, or an attempt to monopolize, within the prohibition of the Anti-trust Act. Having established the defense based on the origin and nature of the union under one control of the railway lines in question, that ends the case, and it is immaterial to consider the potentialities of the situation in respect to competition, whether there would be any more benefical and effective competition than now exists, if the common control complained of were dissolved by a separation of the lines standing in the name of the Central Pacific from the other lines of the Southern Pacific System.

For the purpose of covering the whole case we now, however, leave out of consideration the defense based on the original conception, the construction, and the subsequent growth and development of the Central Pacific and the other lines of the Southern Pacific System always as one enterprise and one property, and present the facts and reasons which, in our opinion, show that the common control of the Central Pacific lines and the other system lines has not prevented the competition referred to in the Government's petition, the prevention of which is relied upon to establish an unlawful restraint of trade, and that the termination of this common control as prayed for would not increase such competition or make it more effective, and would not benefit the public by any addition to the general stock of railroad competition.

There is no competition, actual or potential, between the Central Pacific lines considered by themselves and the other lines of the Southern Pacific System. The competition, the destruction or prevention of which is complained of, is the competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route. It is alleged, not that the Central Pacific is a competitor, but that the Central with its eastern connections is a competitor, of the Sunset-Gulf route (I R. 7). On this branch of the case the real and substantial question is the effect of the common control on the competitive striving for traffic between these two alternative routes.

Another fact to be borne in mind is that competition between the two routes is subject to certain inherent and natural limitations. It is thus limited in respect of territory and in respect of commodities.

For example, the Sunset-Gulf route and the Ogden route are not competitors for traffic originating in the Middle West and destined to Southern California (I R. 365). The existence of the line from Salt Lake to San Pedro controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Company is shorter by some four hundred miles than the route through Sacramento, via Ogden, and consequently no appreciable traffic having the origin or destination above mentioned now moves via Ogden and Sacramento (I R. 361). On the contrary it is actively competed for by the Union Pacific and its San Pedro branch and the Sunset route through its connections at El Paso (I R. 364). On traffic originating in the Middle West and destined to Central or Northern California, the Sunset-Gulf route has scarcely ever been a substantial factor. The Ogden route as to such traffic is, and always has been, the best and shortest route, and according to the Government's chief witness (Mr. Connor), any Middle West shipper who understood his business and knew anything about traffic conditions would select the Ogden route for Northern and Central California freight (I R. 364). This same witness gave it as his prediction that by 1917, seventy-five per cent. of this traffic would pass over the Ogden route, twenty per cent. over the Sante Fe, and the other five per cent. over the Western Pacific. The Sunset Gulf route would be completely eliminated from this traffic (I R. 362, 363). Thus it would appear that on traffic originating in the Middle West and destined to Southern California, the route by way of Ogden has been eliminated as a competitive factor by reason of the advent of the Union Pacific line between Salt Lake and San Pedro. On the other hand, the Sunset-Gulf route has never been a substantial factor in the transportation of freight originating in the Middle West and destined to Central and Northern California. For the same reasons, the Ogden route has been eliminated with respect to traffic originating in Atlantic seaboard territory, being the territory east of Buffalo, Pittsburg and Cleveland and north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers (I R. 61), and destined to Southern California.

The natural limitations imposed upon competitive relations by territory, is shown by Mr. Lincoln, a witness for the petitioner, when speaking of the competition between the Santa Fe and Ogden route, the Western Pacific and the Rock Island. He says:

> "They are restricted, as I say—some of the main lines in the territory of competition—by reason of natural conditions, and by reason of service. A fair illustration of the competition that existed in 1901 and the competition that exists to-day, is this: At one time there was considerable traffic moving through Central Freight Association territory—not from Chicago proper, but Central Freight Association Territory, Ohio and Indiana points—down by way of New Orleans to California points, and I do not believe that there is much of that business moving to-day because it is too long a line. To-day that business will move for San Francisco through the Missouri River gateways very largely, and to Southern California through the Southwestern gateways." (I R. 126, 127.)

So also competition between the Sunset line and the Ogden line is inherently restricted by the character of the commodity carried. Certain traffic cannot be moved by a mixed rail and water line (III R. 1036, 1037). Climatic conditions also act as an inherent limitation upon competition between the two lines. Thus, perishable fruits and vegetables and the like at certain periods of the year on account of the heat cannot be moved over the Sunset route without the extra expense of refrigeration (I R. 165, 184, 185).

In the testimony of the witness Spence (III R. 1032-1037) it is also shown that for the reasons above named the two routes are competitive only for traffic between Northern or Central California and Atlantic Seaboard territory, capable of transshipment. This is only about 16% of the through tonnage over the Ogden route (Id. 1048). This figure is significant in showing the immense volume of traffic which the Southern Pacific has an interest in securing for the Ogden route and which it could not secure if, for the sake of a much smaller amount of traffic, it failed to keep its end of the Ogden line in the best condition or injured the good will or reputation of the Ogden route by failing to give the best of services in respect of any traffic moving over that route.

We shall now undertake to establish the following propositions:

1. The common control complained of has not prevented active, vigorous and effective competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route.

2. Such common control has not created either motive or power to prevent such competition.

3. The termination of the common control would not increase such competition or benefit the public in any way. On the contrary the competition would be less effective and the public would receive less efficient service at greater cost.

1. The first proposition, that there exists active, vigorous and effective competition between the two routes is established in the following ways:

(a) In passing upon the application of the Southern Pacific Company, under the Panama Canal Act amendment of the Interstate Commerce Act, for permission to continue to operate the line of steamships which form part of the Sunset-Gulf route, it became the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to consider the competitive relations between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route. This application was filed on February 18, 1914, submitted June 1, 1916, and decided January 24, 1917 (see Southern Pacific Company's Ownership of Atlantic Steamship Lines, 43 I. C. C. 168). The Commission found, and so reported, that there existed "most active and vigorous competition" between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route. A fuller discussion of the nature and effect of this report will be found at pp. 253-259, supra.

(b) The existence of "sharp, well defined and vigorous competition" between the two routes, notwithstanding the inclusion of the Central Pacific lines in the Southern Pacific System, was alleged, proved and decided in the suit of the United States against the Union Pacific Railroad Company et al., to unmerge the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific. In its brief in that case the Government argued successfully that the Southern Pacific Company's ownership of the line between Ogden and San Francisco created neither power nor motive to prevent such competition. In deciding the case in favor of the Government this court referred to the competition between the two routes prior to the merger of the Union and Southern Pacific as "sharp, well defined and vigorous". We have already called attention (Point VI, supra) to the inconsistency between the contentions of the Government, which prevailed in the unmerger suit, and its contention in this suit that the common control it complains of is destructive of competition between the two routes.

(c) The existence at all times, except during the merger of the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific, of active, vigorous and effective competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route is shown by the uncontradicted testimony of a number of competent witnesses, witnesses for the Government as well as for defendants. All the witnesses concurred in declaring that, in respect to all the traffic for which the two routes could compete, the Southern Pacific Company, on the one hand, and the Union Pacific, in connection with representatives of its eastern lines, on the other hand, strove in every way known to railroad men, one to secure the traffic for the Sunset-Gulf route, the other for the Ogden route, and that the Ogden route was not handicapped, in any way, in this competitive contest, by service on the western end or otherwise. The Ogden route is declared by the witnesses to be the best maintained, equipped and operated of the all-rail transcontinental routes and the strongest and ablest competitor for such traffic. See testimony of Spence (III R. 1037-1039; 1045-1048); of Kruttschnitt (II R. 732-4; 740); of Schumacher (I R. 148; 163-167; 173); of Lincoln (I R. 121, 123); of Chambers (III R. 950-952; 967-968; 983).

2. That the common control complained of has not created either motive or power to prevent active and effective competition between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route is testified to by a number of competent witnesses, who support their statements by convincing reasons, and there is no evidence to the contrary. See testimony of Mr. Kruttschnitt (II R. 733-4; 740) and of Mr. Spence (III R. 1048).

The Southern Pacific Company as owner of the capital stock of the Central Pacific and as the guarantor of its bonds has a tremendous financial interest in that Company. The Government therefore, must admit that the Southern Pacific wants the Central Pacific to get all the traffic which the Sunset-Gulf route cannot compete for or which it fails to get by competition. The Government must also know that the traffic which is not subject to competition between the two routes far exceeds in volume and value the competitive traffic and that all of such traffic is the subject of the fiercest competition. Especially is this true of traffic for which the two routes compete. Participating in the struggle therefor are the all-rail route of the Santa Fe, the Santa Fe-Mallory Line route, the Western Pacific and its eastern connections, the Rock Island-El Paso route, and the half dozen steamship lines via Panama, the most powerful of all the competitors. It would be suicidal, as Mr. Kruttschnitt says, for the Southern Pacific Company to do anything in the way of impairing service on its end of the Ogden route, or to fail to do everything in the way of service to make that route a success, in the hope of benefiting the Sunset-Gulf route. Such conduct would in all likelihood result in benefit to some one or more of the outside competitors, and would undoubtedly cause incalculable injury in its reaction upon the immensely larger and more valuable traffic which the forces of the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific are striving to secure for the Ogden route. It was held in effect by this court in deciding the Union Pacific-Southern Pacific unmerger suit that the Southern Pacific Company was, at the time of the merger, powerless to prevent competition between the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes. Subsequent changes in conditions have only made the Southern Pacific Company more impotent in this respect. Among these changes may be mentioned the Hepburn Act (34 Stat. 584) empowering the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish through routes and joint rates between connecting lines; the amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act in 1910 (36 Stat. 552) giving to the shipper the right to designate the routing of his freight; the construction to San Francisco in 1910 of the Western Pacific Railway Company's line, which connects with the Denver and Rio Grande at Salt Lake City; the doubling of the "retaliatory powers" of the Union Pacific by its acquisition of the San Pedro line from Salt Lake City to Los Angeles.

The foregoing is confirmed by the fact, testified to by a number of witnesses, and disputed by none, that the Ogden route is the strongest and most successful of the all-rail competitors for transcontinental traffic, including Atlantic seaboard territory traffic, and is also confirmed by the absence of any complaint from the Union Pacific in regard to physical maintenance, service, arrangements for through business, or otherwise in respect to the Southern Pacific's end of the Ogden route.

3. That the separation of the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific would not cause increase of competition or improved service, but would likely occasion impaired service at increased cost, is a fact which was established by the uncontradicted testimony of a number of competent witnesses.

Among others Mr. Kruttschnitt (II R. 741 ffg.), Mr. Spence (III R. 1015, 1037-1039, 1068-1069), Mr. Eshleman (III R. 877 ffg. and 882 ffg.), and Mr. Chambers (III R. 946-949, 968, 971) give convincing testimony that the separation of the Central Pacific lines from the Southern Pacific System would greatly impair the efficiency, and increase the operating costs, of both the through routes and of the local lines; that there would be no increase in competition and, in all probability, an increase in local rates.

Even the head of the Union Pacific, an interested bystander, was not of the opinion that the separation would result in improved service on the Central Pacific and of the Ogden route or enable the Ogden route to get more business than it now secures (I R. 295, 297, 300).

The foregoing facts are very significant. They supplement and confirm the testimony in respect to the common control having no appreciable effect on competition and in respect to the character of the service maintained on the Southern Pacific end of the Ogden route.

That the Central Pacific, if separated from the Southern Pacific, would constitute an additional effective competitive factor in the situation, is inconsistent wth the foregoing testimony, and is especially denied in the testimony of Mr. Spence (III R. 1039). Another soliciting agent, in addition to the more than two score agents working for the Ogden route, would not appreciably affect the sum total of existing competition for Atlantic seaboard territory traffic, especially when it is considered that he would be soliciting for a line weakened and impaired by the loss of the parts belonging to the Southern Pacific Railroad, as, for instance, the Benicia cut-off and the line from Redwood to San Francisco (Kruttschnitt, II R. 721, 743; Spence, III R. 1015, 1039).

We believe that this court, like the court below, will reach a conclusion in favor of defendants without finding it necessary to consider the traffic questions which have been discussed under this heading. Should, however, a decision of the case require an examination of the traffic conditions surrounding the origin and subsequent growth of the Southern Pacific System, there will be found full information on the subject in the analysis of the testimony of Mr. Spence in the note below.*

*For an orderly statement of the traffic relations between the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route, covering all the points of this branch of the case, see the testimony of Mr. Spence on direct examination, III R. 1012-1077.

The following analysis will show the order and scope of his testimony: Qualifications, 1012-1014; description of the Southern Pacific System, showing interrelation of its different parts, etc., 1014-1018; statement of the growth and development of transcontinental traffic and of the transcontinental lines which transport it, showing conditions at different periods, etc., 1018-1025; policy of Southern Pacific Company as new transcontinental lines were opened, 1025; opening of Panama Canal, and effect of competition of steamship lines, 1025-1028; fierceness of the general competition for the traffic for which the Ogden route and the Sunset-Gulf route compete; rise and decline of the Sunset-Gulf route in the struggle for such traffic, and final supremacy of the Panama-Canal carriers, 1028-1032; policy of Southern Pacific in respect to solicitation and routing of traffic, showing natural limitations upon the traffic for which the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes may compete, etc., 1032-1036; explanation of movement of imported raw silk over all-rail lines in passenger trains, 1037; active and vigorous competition between Ogden and Sunset-Gulf routes, reasons why exclusion of Central Pacific from Southern Pacific System would not increase such competition, but would make it less effective, 1037-1039; dependence of Central Pacific line between Ogden and San Francisco, for its efficiency, upon parts of other lines of the system, 1039; number of soliciting agencies for transcontinental traffic and effect thereof, 1039-1041; relative growth and development of the Sunset-Gulf route and the all-rail transcontinental lines, showing the influence of the Sunset-Gulf route as a continuous competitive spur, 1041-1045; the close, friendly, and mutually satisfactory cooperative relations which have always existed between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific in respect to the maintenance and operation of the line between Ogden and San Francisco as part of the Ogden route, 1045-1046; the Union Pacific much less dependent on Southern Pacific now than in 1901, the date of merger, 1047; excellence of service on Southern Pacific's end of Ogden, and absence of interest or motive to impair such service, 1048; explanation of traffic statistics contained in petitioner's exhibits 43 to 58, and in defendants' exhibits 63 to 80, 1048-1061; absence of possible participation by Sunset-Gulf route in Asiatic traffic, 1062; further traffic statistics, defendants' exhibits 81-82, 1063-1064; absence of control by Southern Pacific over routing of traffic originating on its own lines, shippers

Considering the testimony upon the three points we have been discussing, considering that this testimony is in harmony with the contentions of the Goverment which prevailed in the Union Pacific unmerger case, and is in accordance with the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the application of the Southern Pacific Company for permission to continue to operate the line of steamships forming an essential part of the Sunset-Gulf route, we feel justified in asserting as facts established beyond dispute, that the so-called combination of the Central Pacific with the other lines of the Southern Pacific System has not prevented competition or created power or motive to prevent competition, and that the dissolution of the system prayed for will not increase competition or in any way benefit the public. If this be true, we cannot conceive how the so-called combination, irrespective of its origin and the other defenses elsewhere presented in this brief, can be condemned as a contract, combination or conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of interstate trade or commerce.

Counsel for the Government are here contending that the mere fact that a railroad system includes parts almost always exercising the right to prescribe routing, 1064; growing influence of water carriers via Tehuantepec route and via Panama Canal which compete for all traffic that is competitive between the Ogden and Sunset-Gulf route, the result being that the water carriers control the situation and have made the rates so low that the mixed rail-and-water line of the Southern Pacific has been left practically alone to compete with them, the eastern connections of the Ogden route being unwilling to meet the low water rates, 1065-1067; separation of Central Pacific from Southern Pacific would have no effect in the way of reducing traffic rates, would tend to increase local rates, and impair service, local and through, 1068-1069; value of Central Pacific lines to Southern Pacific System, 1070; general rule in this country for a railroad system to include lines which form parts of alternate and competing routes, illustrative examples and maps of different systems (defendants' exhibits 85 to 93), 1071-1076.

of through lines which offer alternative routes for traffic (in this case the whole of one through line and a fraction of another) of itself, without more, establishes a violation of the Anti-trust Act, and that no amount or character of evidence can avail to save such a system from condemnation. Such it is contended is the inevitable conclusion from the decision of this court in the Union Pacific unmerger case.

In a supplemental brief we distinguish this case from the case presented by the merger of the Southern Pacific and the Union Pacific. We have already called attention to the inconsistency between the Government's contention and the implications of the Panama Canal Act (pp. 253-259, supra). It has been shown by the testimony in this record (Spence III R. 1071-1076), and it is a fact of which the court, in the absence of any evidence, would take judicial notice, that practically every large system of railroads in this country embraces lines which, in connection with other railroads, form through routes that compete with the main lines of the parent company. If the contention under discussion were approved by this court, every large railroad system of the United States would become an unlawful combination in restraint of trade.

IX.

The government, by reason of the position taken and claims urged by it in the Union Pacific case, is estopped from questioning the validity of the ownership and control of the Central Pacific Railway Company by the Southern Pacific Company.

The petition in the Union Pacific case sets forth in detail the lines of railway and steamship lines included in the Union Pacific system, also the lines of railway and steamship lines of the Southern Pacific system, which is substantially the same as that described in the petition in this case as the lines of railway and steamship lines controlled by the Southern Pacific Company. The petition also particularly alleges that the rail lines of the Southern Pacific Company from the Mississippi River to Portland, Oregon, by way of San Francisco and Los Angeles, were in active competition with the lines of railroad of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for the transportation of vast quantities of freight from points in the Mississippi valley and in the Eastern states, both to and from the Pacific Coast and points in Colorado and other interior states, and that the steamship line of the Southern Pacific Company from New York to New Orleans and Galveston, together with its rail lines run in connection therewith, was in active competition with the rail lines of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for a large amount of traffic originating on the Atlantic coast and Central states.

These allegations directly include the competition which was alleged to have existed prior to 1901 between the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line, known as the Ogden route, and the Southern Pacific or Sunset route.

The petition further sets forth the acquisition of the control in 1901 of the Southern Pacific Company by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, alleging that by means of that control the competition formerly existing between the said two railway systems, with their steamship lines, had been destroyed.

The answer of the defendants substantially denied the existence of the competition alleged between these respective railway systems and further sought to justify the acquisition of the control of the Southern Pacific Company for reasons not material here.

It thus appears that the Government, as a necessary basis for its assault upon the control of the Southern Pacific, which had been acquired by the Union Pacific, squarely maintained that prior to that control, created in 1901, there was active and substantial competition between the Central Pacific-Union Pacific Ogden route and the Sunset route.

This was, in effect, asserting that this competition existed notwithstanding the ownership and control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific.

In the Government's brief in the Union Pacific case, filed in this court, we find an elaborate discussion, with detailed reference to the testimony, showing that prior to the merger, which occurred through the purchase of Southern Pacific stock by the Union Pacific, there had been active and thorough competition between the Union Pacific system and the Southern Pacific system and, especially, that such competition existed between the Central Pacific-Union Pacific Ogden route on the one hand and the Sunset route on the other.

Counsel for the Government urged, in substance, that as to the competition between these two transcontinental routes there was at all times prior to the merger the same incentive "to active, energetic competition between these lines that there would have been had the Southern Pacific not owned the line between Ogden and San Francisco". (See page 39 of Government Brief, also, for the discussion generally of this subject, see pages 34 to 272 of that brief.)

The opinion of this court sets forth the contention of the Government that, prior to the stock purchase, the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific were competing systems of railroad engaged in interstate commerce and acted independently as to a large amount of such carrying trade, and that since the acquisition of the stock in question the dominating power of the Union Pacific had eliminated competition between the two systems. Upon this contention this court found that

> "A large amount of the testimony in this voluminous record was given by railroad men of wide experience, business men and shippers, who, with practical unanimity, expressed the view that prior to the stock purchase in question the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems were in competition, sharp, well defined and vigorous, for interstate trade."

And this court concluded that such competition had been suppressed by means of the control of the Southern Pacific acquired by the Union Pacific, and, therefore, granted the Government appropriate relief to terminate such control.

It thus appears that the Government in the Union Pacific case squarely contended that, prior to the Union Pacific stock purchase in 1901, there was active and vigorous competition between these railway systems, that such competition existed despite the fact that the Southern Pacific Company owned the line between Ogden and San Francisco, which, at the time, was the only line over which the Union Pacific transcontinental traffic could move to and from the Pacific Coast, and that such competition had been suppressed by the Union Pacific through its control of the Southern Pacific acquired by the stock purchase in question. This contention was squarely sustained by the decision of this court, which granted the Government the relief appropriate to terminate the control of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific.

Under a well established rule, sustained, we might say, by all the authorities upon the subject, the Government cannot now be heard to claim that the competition between the Central Pacific-Union Pacific line and the Sunset line was suppressed or destroyed by the control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific when it had maintained the contrary of this position, viz., that, notwithstanding such control, there was active and vigorous competition between these two lines, and upon that contention was successful in its former litigation.

The maxim "Allegans contraria non est audiendus" expresses the trite saying of Lord Kenyon, that a man shall not be permitted to "blow hot and cold" with reference to the same transaction, or insist at different times on the truth of each of two conflicting allegations, according to the prompting of his private interest (Broom's Legal Maxims, 169).

That this rule is at the foundation of the administration of justice is well stated in "Bigelow on Estoppel", page 717, as follows:

> "If parties in court were permitted to assume inconsistent positions in the trial of their causes, the usefulness of courts of justice would in most cases be paralyzed; the coercive process of the law, available only between those who consented to its exercise, could be set at naught by all. But the rights of all men, honest and dishonest, are in the keeping of the courts, and consistency of proceeding is therefore required of all those who come or are brought before them.
> It may accordingly be laid down as a broad proposition that one who, without mistake induced by the opposite party, has taken a particular position deliberately in the course of a litigation must act consistently with it; one cannot play fast and loose."

The above is quoted and followed in Canton Roll & Machine Co. v. Rolling Mill Co., 155 Fed. 321 (1907).

In Herman on Estoppel, section 165, it is said:

> "A party who either obtains or defeats a judgment by pleading or representing anything in one aspect, is generally held to be estopped from giving the same thing another aspect in a suit founded on the same subject-matter."

In Railway Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258 (1878), this court said:

> "Where a party gives a reason for his conduct and decision touching anything involved in a controversy, he cannot, after litigation has begun, change his ground, and put his conduct upon another and a different consideration. He is not permitted thus to mend his hold. He is estopped from doing it by a settled principle of law" (96 U. S. 267-8).

In Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U. S. 680 (1895), this court said:

> "It may be laid down as a general proposition that, where a party assumes a certain position in a legal proceeding, and succeeds in maintaining that position he may not thereafter, simply because his interests have changed, assume a contrary position, especially if it be to the prejudice of the party who has acquiesced in the position formerly taken by him" (156 U. S. 689).

To the same effect, see Town of Weston v. Ralston, 48 W. Va. 170, 36 S. E. 446 (1900).

In Michels v. Olmstead, 157 U. S. 198 (1895), Michels sued Olmstead to recover damages for breach of a written contract. Olmstead offered oral evidence that the writing in question was not intended as a contract nor understood by either party to be binding as such. Upon plaintiff's objection the court excluded this evidence as incompetent to control the written contract. Subsequently Olmstead filed a bill in equity to restrain the prosecution of the action at law, setting forth as grounds for equitable relief the facts which he sought to prove in the action at law, the evidence of which was excluded. In the brief for Michels filed in the equity case, it was suggested that if the writing signed was not intended as a contract this should be set up in the action at law and tried by a jury. To this suggestion this court replied:

> "But the conclusive answer to the suggestion is, that evidence of this very fact was offered in the action at law, and excluded, upon his objection, as incompetent in that action; and that he is thereby estopped now to assert that it could or should be availed of at law" (157 U. S. 201).

In Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 415 (1880), suit was brought against Daniels to recover upon a statutory bond given under an unconstitutional statute. This court held that Daniels could not defeat recovery on this bond upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of the statute, saying:

> "Where a party has availed himself for his benefit of an unconstitutional law, he cannot, in a subsequent litigation with others not in that position, aver its unconstitutionality as a defense, although such unconstitutionality may have been pronounced by a competent judicial tribunal in another suit. In such cases the principle of estoppel applies with full force and conclusive effect" (102 U. S. 421).

In Caldwell v. Smith, 77 Ala. 157 (1884), Alexander sued Caldwell in ejectment. Caldwell defended that he held the land as tenant under Smith and defeated Alexander's action. Then Smith sued Caldwell for recovery of the land, and he sought to defeat Smith by proving that he held the land under tenancy from Alexander. Chief Justice Stone said:

"On the strength of Caldwell's testimony on the first trial, he obtained a valuable benefit in the defeat of Alexander's suit. It is now attempted by disproving what was then proved, to secure to Caldwell's estate another benefit, in defeating Smith's suit. One of these lines of defense must, of necessity, be untrue. We may concede it was the first. Yet, under its maintenance as true, Caldwell gained that suit. He will not be allowed to deny it, as a means of defeating this" (77 Ala. 168).

In the main opinion by Somerville, J., it is said:

"So, a party who either obtains or defeats a judgment, by pleading or representing anything in one aspect, is generally held to be estopped from giving the same thing another aspect, in a suit founded upon the same subject matter,—Herman on Estop., Par. 165" (77 Ala. 165).

In Denton v. Erwin, 5 La. Ann. 18 (1850), the court said:

"A man should not be permitted to deny what he had solemnly acknowledged in a judicial proceeding, nor to shift his position at will, to a contradictory one, in relation to the subject matter of litigation, in order to frustrate and defeat the actions of the law upon it" (5 La. Ann. 22).

In Del Bondio v. Insurance Co., 28 La. Ann. 139 (1876), the court said:

"After having gained an advantage by judicially alleging and maintaining that the contract was valid in the suit decided, this defendant will not be listened to when setting up the nullity of the same contract" (28 La. Ann. 140).

In Walker v. Walker, 37 La. Ann. 107 (1885), the court said:

"It is well established that one is bound by his judicial allegations to such extent that he will not be heard to contradict them. School Bd. Concordia v. Hernandez, 31 Ann. 158; Watkins v. Cawthon, 33 Ann. 1198; Folger v. Palmer, 35 Ann. 744. Certainly he cannot recover on an alleged state of facts which is so counter to those set up in a previous suit that if the one be true the other must necessarily be false. Wells on Res Adjudicata, secs. 9 et seq." (37 La. Ann. 107-8).

In Galt v. Provan, 131 Iowa 277, 108 N. W. 760 (1906), the defendant insisted that no recovery could be had upon the contract sued upon because the consideration had failed by breach of a condition precedent, but the court said:

"It appears that, after knowledge of the claimed breach of condition, defendants set up this contract and succeeded in defeating the previous action brought by plaintiff, by reason in part at least of the agreements contained therein. See Galt v. Provan, 108 Iowa 565. Having used the contract in that case, and insisted upon its validity for the purpose of defeating plaintiff, it cannot now be heard to say that the contract is not in force. Defendants will not be allowed to assume such inconsistent positions. Kramer v. Kramer, 68 Iowa 567; Scott v. Lutcher, 44 Iowa 572: Hyatt v. B. C., R. & N. R. R. 68 Iowa 662; Shropshire v. Ryan, 111 Iowa 677; Riegel v. Ormsby, 111 Iowa 10" (131 Iowa 280).

In Ogden v. Rowley, 15 Ind. 56 (1860), the defendant in a suit upon an award set up facts to impeach it for mistake, misconduct and fraud. Plaintiff replied that in a prior suit pending in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant for the same cause of action and subject matter upon which the award now sued on was founded, the defendant had pleaded the award now sued on and thereby defeated said action. The court said:

> "The award was, by the defendant, treated as valid, in the answer setting it up as a defense to the former action. . . . Having had the benefit of it, as a valid award, in that suit, he should not now be permitted to impeach it. Washington Hall Co. v. Stipp, 5 Blackf. 473—2 B. Monroe, 257,—2 Sumner's R. 589" (15 Ind. 58).

In Moser v. Phila. H. & P. R. R. Co., 233 Pa. 259, 82 Atl. 362 (1912), the court said:

> "'It is settled law', says Trunkey, J., in McQueen's App., 104 Pa. 595, 'that a man who obtains or defeats a judgment by pleading or representing an act in one aspect, will be precluded from giving it a different and inconsistent character in a subsequent suit upon the same subject.' To the same effect will be found Campbell v. Stephens, 66 Pa. 314; Aronson v. Cleveland & P. R. R. Co., 70 Pa. 68. The general rule in such cases is thus stated in 16 Cyc. 799, 'A claim or position taken in a former action or judicial proceeding will estop the party to make an inconsistent claim or to take a conflicting position in a subsequent action or judicial proceeding to the prejudice of the adverse party, where the parties are the same, and the same questions are involved'" (233 Pa. 269-270).

In Hodges v. Winston, 95 Ala. 514, 11 So. 200 (1892), it was held that when the defendant, claiming under a conveyance from a judgment-debtor, has successfully excluded evidence assailing the conveyance for fraud, on the ground that the property conveyed was the homestead of the debtor, he is precluded from afterwards contending that it was not in fact the debtor's homestead. The court said:

> "Having obtained a substantial advantage by taking and successfully maintaining the position that the lands in question constituted a homestead, they (the defendants) estopped themselves from claiming, on the same state of evidence, that they were not a homestead. They could not support one position of defense by claiming that the lands constituted a homestead, and at the same time obtain the advantage of another position which involved a denial of the homestead character of the land. A defendant who, for the purpose of maintaining a defense, has deliberately represented a thing in one aspect, cannot be permitted to contradict his own representation by giving the same thing another aspect in the same case.—Caldwell v. Smith, 77 Ala. 157; Hill v. Huckabee, 70 Ala. 183; Herman on Estoppel (4th Ed.), 687" (95 Ala. 517).

The Government cannot claim exemption from the rule above discussed.

In United States v. Stinson et al. (C. C. A. 7th Ct., 1903), 125 Fed. 907, affirmed 197 U. S. 200 (1905), the court said:

> "But when the government seeks its rights at the hands of a court, equity requires that the rights of others as well should be protected. Carr v. United States, 98 U. S. 438, 25 L. Ed. 209. The government may not in conscience ask a court of equity to set on foot an inquiry that, under the circumstances of the case, would be an unfair or inequitable inquiry. The substantial considerations underlying the doctrine of estoppel apply to a government as well as to individuals. Chope v. Detroit Plank Road Company, 37 Mich. 195, 26 Am. Rep. 512; Commonwealth v. Andre, 3 Pick. 224" (125 Fed. 910).

In Walker v. United States, 139 Fed. 409 (1905), the court said:

> "When the sovereign becomes an actor in a court of justice, especially in an action which proceeds on equitable principles, that his rights must be determined upon those fixed principles of justice which govern between man and man in like situation, and that the sovereign will be bound, as an individual would be, by his own acts, or by (what is the same thing) acts of his agents lawfully done within the purview of the authority he commits to them" (130 Fed. 412).

In State of Iowa v. Carr, 191 Fed. 257 (1911), the court said:

> "But the great weight of authority, the stronger reasons and the settled rule upon this subject in the courts of the United States, is that, while mere delay does not, either by limitation or laches, of itself, constitute a bar to suits and claims of a state or of the United States, yet, when a sovereign submits itself to the jurisdiction of a court of equity and prays its aid, its claims and rights are judicable by every other principle and rule of equity applicable to the claims and rights of private parties under similar circumstances" (191 Fed. 266).

X.

The final decree in the case of the United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, Southern Pacific Company, and others, is a bar to all relief sought by the government in this case.

The main purpose of the Union Pacific suit was to remove all restraint of trade and commerce which had been imposed by the defendants, or any of them, and which affected the Central Pacific and connecting transcontinental lines on the one hand and the Sunset line on the other.

Such restraint was alleged to have been accomplished, first, by the Union Pacific Railroad Company obtaining control of the Southern Pacific Company through the purchase of the capital stock of that company in the year 1901. The petition described the system of rail and steamship lines operated and controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, also the system of rail and steamship lines operated and controlled by the Southern Pacific Company, alleging that these two systems were competitive for the transportation of large quantities of freight and passengers between the Atlantic seaboard and the Pacific coast, and between various other points, which competition had been suppressed by the Union Pacific Railroad through its control of the Southern Pacific Company.

The petition further alleged that the Southern Pacific Company was the owner of all the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, which company, in turn, was the owner of the line of railroad extending from San Francisco to Ogden, Utah, and that encouragement."

by virtue of such ownership the Southern Pacific Company, in all respects, controlled the management and operation of the Central Pacific Railway Company.

The Southern Pacific Company, in its answer, admitted its ownership of the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, averring that said company succeeded to the ownership of the railroad from San Francisco to Ogden, with other lines formerly owned by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and that at all times since January 1, 1901, the Southern Pacific Company possessed and operated all the railroads of the Central Pacific Railway Company by virtue of instruments of lease theretofore made and entered into, this being the lease of Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company, dated February 17, 1885.

While a special prayer for relief was made as against the control of the Southern Pacific Company by the Union Pacific Company, the Government, also, by such petition, prayed for such relief as the nature of the case might require and to the court seem proper in the premises.

The proceedings in the Union Pacific suit were, briefly, as follows: after the taking of testimony and the hearing, the Circuit Court entered its decree dismissing the petition and denying the Government any relief whatever. Upon appeal, this court reversed said decree only upon the point that the control of the Southern Pacific Company by the Union Pacific Railroad Company was illegal and in violation of the Act of July 2, 1890; but as to all other matters this court said, "We find no reason to disturb the action of the court below", and as to such matters the final decree was against the Government and in favor of the defendants.

In the case at bar, the Government's petition sets forth the lines of railroad owned by the Central Pacific Railway Company, which include the main line from San Francisco to Ogden; also, the lines of railroad controlled by the Southern Pacific Company through stock ownership and as lessee, which include the line from San Francisco to New Orleans, known as the Sunset line. The Government's petition also sets forth the stock ownership and control of the Central Pacific Railway Company by the Southern Pacific Company and the lease of the Central Pacific lines to the Southern Pacific Company, dated February 17, 1885. The petition also shows the competitive traffic which might have moved, either by the Central Pacific line and connections through Ogden, or by the Sunset line, and avers that the ownership by the Southern Pacific Company of the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company and its lease of the properties of that company result in a suppression of competition for said traffic, and that therefore the Southern Pacific Company's domination, management and control of the Central Pacific Railway Company constitute a combination in restraint of interstate and foreign trade and commerce and a monopolization thereof in violation of the Act of July 2, 1890.

The principal relief prayed for is that the Southern Pacific Company be required to dispose of the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company and to cancel and relinquish its lease, control, management and operation of the lines of that company.

It thus appears that the Government, in the case at bar, is seeking a decree declaring that the ownership by the Southern Pacific Company of the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company and its lease of the properties of that company, and its domination, management and control thereof are in violation of the Act of July 2, 1890.

In Paragraph X of the answer the Southern Pacific Company and the Central Pacific Railway Company plead, as a special defense to the action, the estoppel of the decree in the Union Pacific suit.

The issue in the present suit could have been litigated and adjudicated in the Union Pacific suit and all suitable relief given there which could be obtained here. The Southern Pacific Company was a party to the Union Pacific suit and was the only necessary party defendant in granting the relief which is sought in the present case. The Central Pacific Railway Company was not a necessary party, but, if it had been, its absence would not affect this question (Curtis v. Trustees of Bardstown, 29 Ky. (6 J. J. Marsh) 538). There was nothing in the way of making it a party; in fact, that company was made a party defendant to the Union Pacific suit before final decree.

All the evidence which has been introduced by the Government in the case at bar would have been admissible in the Union Pacific suit to show, if that were true, that the ownership and control of the Central Pacific Railway Company by the Southern Pacific Company created an unlawful combination in restraint of trade and commerce under the Act of July 2, 1890.

The "subject matter" or "cause of action" in the Union Pacific suit was to free two competing transcontinental routes, viz., the Ogden route and the Sunset route, from the unlawful restraint of trade and commerce which had been imposed upon them by the defendants, or any of them, and whether such combination or restraint was created by one or more transactions of the defendants, or any of them, the "subject matter" or "cause of action" was one thing, not to be divided or presented piecemeal for the purpose of litigation.

To allow the Government in this case to litigate the questions which were sub judice in the Union Pacific case, is to violate well settled principles of law which forbid litigation by piecemeal and require litigants to present fully their claims upon the subject matter in question, failing in which a decree against such litigants is a conclusive adjudication barring any further litigation by them upon the "subject matter" or "cause of action" in the first suit.

This rule has been followed in this court in a long line of cases, beginning with Stockton v. Ford, 18 Howard 418 (1855), where this court said:

> "One of the questions now sought to be agitated again is precisely the same as this one in the previous suit; namely, the right of the plaintiff to the judicial mortgage under the execution and sale against Prior. The other is somewhat varied; namely, the equitable right or interest in the mortgage of the plaintiff, as the attorney of Prior, for the fees and costs provided for in the assignment to Jones. But this question was properly involved in the former case, and might have been there raised and determined. The neglect of the plaintiff to avail himself of it, even if tenable, furnishes no reason for another litigation" (18 How. 420).

In Aurora City v. West, 7 Wallace 82 (1869), it is said:

> "Courts of justice, in stating the rule, do not always employ the same language; but where every objection urged in the second suit was open to the party within the legitimate scope of the pleadings in the first suit, and might have been presented in that trial, the matter must be considered as having passed in rem judicatam, and the former judgment in such a case is conclusive between the parties.
>
> "Except in special cases, the plea of res judicata, says Taylor, applies not only to points upon which the court was actually required to form an opinion and pronounce judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time" (7 Wallace 102).

In Beloit v. Morgan, 7 Wallace 619 (1869), Mr. Justice Swayne said, quoting from Henderson v. Henderson, 3 Hare 115:

> "Where a given matter becomes the subject of litigation in, and of adjudication by, a court of competent jurisdiction, the court requires the parties to bring forward their whole case, and will not, except under special circumstances, permit the same subject of litigation in respect of a matter which might have been brought forward as a part of the subject in contest, but which was not brought forward, only because they have, from negligence, inadvertence, or even accident, omitted a part of their case. The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points upon which the court was required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time."

To this, Mr. Justice Swayne adds:

"A party can no more split up defenses than indivisible demands, and present them by piecemeal in successive suits growing out of the same transaction" (7 Wallace 623).

In Wiggins Ferry Co. v. O. & M. Ry., 142 U. S. 396 (1892), it is said:

"Where the judgment in the former action is upon demurrer to the declaration, the estoppel extends only to the exact point raised by the pleadings or decided, and does not operate as a bar to a second suit for other breaches of the same covenants, although if the judgment be upon pleadings and proofs, the estoppel extends not only to what was decided, but to all that was necessarily involved in the issue. Wash. & Alexandria Packet Co. v. Sickles, 24 How. 333; s. c. 5 Wall. 580; Gould v. Evansville etc. Railway, 91 U. S. 526; Boyd v. Alabama, 94 U. S. 645; Russell v. Place, 94 U. S. 606, 608; Morrell v. Morgan, 65 California 575" (142 U. S. 410).

In Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351 (1877), this court held that where the second action between the same parties is upon a different claim or demand, the judgment in the prior action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered, but the court reiterated the rule that a judgment is a bar or estoppel against the prosecution of a second action upon the same claim or demand, such judgment being a finality "not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim or demand, but as to any other admissible matter which might have been offered for that purpose" (94 U. S. 352).

The case of United States v. California & Oregon Land Company, 192 U. S. 355 (1904), is strongly in point. In that case it was decided that a decree rendered upon a bill in equity brought by the United States under the Act of March 2, 1889, to have patents for certain lands declared void and to establish the title of the United States to the land was a bar to the subsequent bill brought against the same defendants to recover the same land on the ground that it was excepted from the original grant as an Indian reservation. This court said:

> "On the general principles of our law it is tolerably plain that the decree in the suit under the foregoing statute would be a bar. The parties, the subject matter and the relief sought all were the same. . . . Here the plaintiff is the same person that brought the former bill, whatever the difference of the interest intended to be asserted. See Werlein v. New Orleans, 177 U. S. 390, 400, 401. The best that can be said, apart from the act just quoted, to distinguish the two suits, is that now the United States puts forward a new ground for its prayer. Formerly it sought to avoid the patents by way of forfeiture. Now it seeks the same conclusion by a different means, that is to say, by evidence that the lands originally were excepted from the grant. But in this, as in the former suit, it seeks to establish its own title to the fee.

It may be the law in Scotland that a judgment is not a bar to a second attempt to reach the same result by a different medium concludendi. Phosphate Sewage Co. v. Molleson, 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th Ser.) 1125, 1139; although in the same case on appeal Lord Blackburn seemed to doubt the proposition if the facts were known before. S. C. 4 App. Cas. 801, 820. But the whole tendency of our decisions is to require a plaintiff to try his whole cause of action and his whole case at one time. He cannot even split up his claim, Fetter v. Beale, 1 Salk. 11; Trask v. Hartford & New Haven Railroad, 2 Allen 331; Freeman, Judgments, 4th Ed., Sec. 238, 241; and, a fortiori, he cannot divide the grounds of recovery. Unless the statute of 1889 put the former suit upon a peculiar footing, the United States was bound then to bring forward all the grounds it had for declaring the patents void, and when the bill was dismissed was barred as to all by the decree. Werlein v. New Orleans, 177 U. S. 390; Bienville Water Supply Co. v. Mobile, 186 U. S. 212, 216, 217; Hoseason v. Keegan, 178 Massachusetts 247; Wildman v. Wildman, 70 Connecticut 700, 710; Sayers v. Auditor General, 124 Michigan 259; Foster v. Hinson, 76 Iowa 714, 720; State v. Brown, 64 Maryland 199; Boyd v. Boyd, 53 App. Div. N. Y. 152, 159; Shaffer v. Scuddy, 14 La. Ann. 576; Henderson v. Henderson, 3 Hare. 100, 115.

But if the United States was at liberty to state all its grounds for claiming the land, it was bound to do so on 'the same principles and rules of jurisprudence as other suits in equity are therein > tried' by which principles and rules, as has been shown, it was expressly enacted that the case should be tried. . . . It would not be consistent with the good faith of the United States to attribute to it the intent to keep a concealed weapon in reserve in case these suits should fail" (92 U. S. 357-360).

It is needless to cite other decisions of this court to the same effect, also innumerable cases which could be cited from the District and Circuit Courts of the United States and from the different State courts which unanimously sustain the rule above stated. But perhaps it is worth while to quote from the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, in the case of Stone v. United States, 64 Fed. 667 (1894), where Judge Hawley states this rule in the following language:

> "It is also well settled that the plea of res adjudicata, except in certain special cases, is not only conclusive upon the questions which the courts were required to form an opinion and pronounce judgment on, but upon every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which was, or might properly have been, brought forward in the former suit. One of the safest rules for courts to follow in determining whether a prior judgment between the same parties, concerning the same matters, is a bar, is to ascertain whether the same evidence which is necessary to sustain the second action, if it had been given in the former suit, would have authorized a recovery therein" (64 Fed. 670).

In Detroit Ry. v. Mich. Comm., 235 U. S. 402, 406 (1914), Mr. Justice Holmes declares:

> "We must assume that the plaintiff was bound to present its whole case. Calaf v. Calaf, 232 U. S. 371, 374."

Applying the rule thus stated to this case, how can we escape the conclusion that the decree in the Union Pacific case is a bar to the relief sought in the present case? Undoubtedly the Government might have offered in the Union Pacific case the evidence which has been advanced by it in this case, and it could have secured in the Union Pacific case any relief to which that evidence would entitle it in this case.

The Government cannot escape the decree in the Union Pacific suit by any technical refinements or sophistication intended to show that it had really two distinct causes of action, one based upon the control of the Southern Pacific Company obtained by the Union Pacific Railroad Company through purchase of stock, and the other based upon the control obtained by the Southern Pacific Company over the Central Pacific Railway Company by purchase of stock and lease of road. Even if these two transactions might have been dealt with separately and independently, and the Government might have elected to confine the Union Pacific case strictly to the first transaction, the answer is, that it did not do this; that by the allegations in its petition and the parties joined as defendants, the Government presented its case so comprehensively that it could have secured full and complete relief as to both of these transactions, and as the cause of action or relief sought affected one thing, namely, restraint of competition between these two transcontinental routes prohibited by the Anti-Trust Act, it was most proper and most desirable that the Government should present its whole case so far as it existed against these defendants in the Union Pacific suit.

How can the Government now argue that it could not, or did not, by its petition in the Union Pacific case, present its cause of action so that full relief could be had by it as to each of the transactions above mentioned? Certainly there was no thought in the minds of the then Attorney General of the United States or his associate counsel, who drew the petition in the Union Pacific case, that there was anything in the way of the Government presenting many different, separate and disconnected transactions upon which it might recover appropriate relief. For example, in the Union Pacific case the petition set forth not only the acquisition and control of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific through purchase of its stock and also the like control over the Central Pacific Company by the Southern Pacific Company through ownership of stock, but the petition further set forth that the defendants had acquired and were the owners of a large amount of the capital stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and also of the Great Northern Railway Company, which stocks were illegally held by the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company for the purpose of suppressing competition theretofore existing between the various railway systems and water lines described in the petition. And, further, the petition set forth that the defendants Clark and Harriman, for the purpose of preventing competition between the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company and the Union Pacific system, had made certain contracts by which the capital stock of the last mentioned railroad company was divided in equal parts between Clark and Harriman; and the petition further set forth that the defendants Harriman and others had made large purchases of stock of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, which stock, or a large part thereof, had been acquired by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, with the result that the competition between the systems of railways controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company had, to a large extent, been eliminated, and that the defendants caused the Southern Pacific Company to abandon extensions, improvements and additions to their interstate railway in the State of California, and also, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company had been in the same manner caused and induced to abandon extensions and additions to its interstate railway lines in California, and that these extensions, so projected, had been amalgamated and placed in a corporation known as the Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company, the stock of which was owned in equal parts by the Southern Pacific Company and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company. And as to all these transactions involving the Northern Pacific Railway Company, the Great Northern Railway Company, the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, the petition prayed special relief by decree adjudging the acquisition of the stocks above mentioned to be illegal and to dissolve the combinations which had been created thereby. As to all these transactions the Government introduced voluminous testimony and urged the court to grant the relief prayed for in the petition.

This case presents in exaggerated form an effort by the Government to litigate matters which were essentially a part of the subject matter or cause of action in the Union Pacific case. This court could not have determined the whole case presented there without considering these matters, and under all the authorities they are disposed of by the decree in that case.

XI.

No violation of the Pacific Railroad Laws is presented in this case.

The Government contends that each of the constituent roads franchised under the Pacific Railroad Laws must work actively and exclusively for one another and make a one hundred per cent. interchange at junction points. There are many replies to this contention:

(a) The conditions complained of as violating the Pacific Railroad Laws have been in existence for more than thirty years (1883 to 1914), and have been unchallenged all these years.

(b) No Committee of Congress has ever claimed that the constituent roads above mentioned are required by the Pacific Railroad Laws to work exclusively for one another or to make a one hundred per cent interchange at junction points.

(c) Indeed, the Pacific Railway Commission in 1885-1887 (D. Ex. 31, V. R. 1921, p. 115) investigated the question whether the Southern Pacific Company (then operating the Central Pacific under a 99-year lease) was discriminating against the Ogden route in favor of the Sunset-Gulf route, and thereby depriving the Ogden route of traffic which it would otherwise have enjoyed. The Commission reported (p. 235, supra) that no such discrimination had occurred, and that traffic had only been diverted when convenience and public advantage required it. The Commission did not consider that the Central Pacific was under obligation to work actively and exclusively for the Ogden route and to make a full interchange at that point. If it had, it would not have investigated the nature of the diversion that had occurred. The fact that the Commission reported as it did is cogent argument that the Pacific Railroad Laws are not open to the construction which the Government here seeks to put upon them.

(d) The Union Pacific Railroad Company, whose rights are said to be violated by the failure of the Central Pacific to work actively and exclusively with a view to procuring all possible traffic for the Ogden route and its delivery to the Union Pacific at Ogden, has never during the thirty years of the Sunset-Gulf route's existence (1883-1914), made any such claim or awakened to the possibility that the Pacific Railroad Laws were open to any such construction.

(e) In fact, the Union Pacific has proceeded upon the very opposite construction, notably in the acquisition of the Oregon Short line and the San Pedro line.

(f) Indeed, in the Union Pacific case, the Company argued that it had acquired the Southern Pacific to avoid being bottled up by the Central Pacific at Ogden; an argument totally inconsistent with the idea that the Central Pacific was bound to work actively and exclusively for the Ogden route and to make a full interchange of business with the Union Pacific at that point.

(g) It never occurred to the Attorney General, in the Union Pacific case, to argue that the question of the Union Pacific being bottled up was conclusively answered by a requirement of the Pacific Railroad Laws, whereunder the Central Pacific was bound to work actively and exclusively for the Ogden route and to make a full interchange of business with the Union Pacific at that point.

(h) It does not seem to have occurred to any of the Circuit Judges who sat in the Union Pacific case, that the argument of the Union Pacific that it had bought the Southern Pacific to prevent the Central Pacific from bottling it up at Ogden could be fully or at all answered by the suggestion that under the Pacific Railroad Laws the Central Pacific was bound to work actively and exclusively for the Ogden route and to make a full interchange of business with it at that point.

(i) This court in the Union Pacific case did not even intimate that under the Pacific Railroad Laws the Central Pacific was bound to work actively and exclusively for the Ogden route and to make a full interchange at that point with the Union Pacific. If it had occurred to this court that this was the meaning of the Pacific Railroad Laws, it would have adopted it as a short cut in reply to the Union Pacific's argument that it might be bottled up by the Central Pacific at Ogden.

In Chicago, etc., R. R. v. R. R. Commission, 237 U. S. 220 (1915), a point was raised in the argument in this court which had not been submitted to the Supreme Court of Wisconsin. This court said:

> "If the Supreme Court of the State had so thought, it would have accepted that short way to the decision of the case, and not have occupied itself with other and more complex questions.

(j) A number of the officers of the Union Pacific were called as witnesses in the case at bar, but it does not seem to have occurred to any one of them that the Central Pacific was bound to work actively and exclusively for the Union Pacific nor is there any suggestion or complaint by any of them that the Central Pacific has discriminated in any way against the Union Pacific.

(k) The Interstate Commerce Act, and its amendments, in terms, either direct or authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to require all the railroads of the country to afford to each other equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, which is all that is required of the Pacific Railroads by the laws under which they were created. No one has ever contended, however, that the Interstate Commerce Act requires connecting carriers generally to work actively and exclusively for one another and to make a full interchange at junction points.

(l) The original English Railway and Canal Traffic Act of 1854 (17 and 18 Vict., Chap. XXI) provided that:

> "Every railway company and canal company and railway and canal company having or working railways or canals which form a continuous line of railway or canal or railway and canal communication; . . . shall afford all due and reasonable facilities for receiving and forwarding all traffic arriving by one of such railways or canals by the other."

The Pacific Act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 356) obligated each of the companies

> "to afford and to secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation."

It may be seen that the object of the English Act of 1854 and of our own Act of 1864 was two-fold:

(1) To insure the use and operation of connecting lines as "one continuous line"; and
(2) To compel each connecting carrier in the "continuous line" to afford equal facilities for receiving and forwarding traffic coming from another of the lines.

The idea that these provisions respecting the handling of traffic had anything to do with the obligation to contribute to the revenues of the connecting lines, seems never to have occurred to the English authorities nor, indeed, until this action, to the American authorities.

(m) The Pacific Railroad Laws were not intended to compel each of the constituent Pacific roads to contribute traffic for the common benefit, but were designed to secure the appropriate handling of the traffic by the requirement of adequate transportation facilities.

(n) The Government on its own behalf is interested in the service to be obtained by one continuous line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and it is also interested in securing "good service at fair rates" for the public. It is not interested in the queston of the revenues of the carriers as such. Although it was once a creditor of these roads, it ceased to be so over fifteen years ago (1899-1914). Moreover, the provision for a continuous road and for equal facilities as to rates, time and transportation had nothing to do with increasing the earnings of the roads indebted to the Government.

(o) In dealing with the arguments of the Government to the effect that the Southern Pacific has discriminated through the Central Pacific against the Union Pacific, it is not to be forgotten that the Union Pacific controlled the Southern Pacific and consequently the Central Pacific, from 1901 to 1913. Failure to note this fact gives rise to deductions which would not otherwise be made. Take the argument of the Government in relation to the discrimination against the Union Pacific in the matter of traffic in Nevada wool.* This alleged discrimination in the shipment of

*Many years ago some shipments of wool were made from points on the Central Pacific in Nevada via Sacramento and the Gulf Route to points on the Atlantic seaboard (I. R. 381). This was because of a through rate made by the Southern Pacific Company on this wool via the Sunset route, and as a natural consequence of the fact that prior to 1909 (and during 8 years of the Union Pacific control) no rates had been made on wool between points west of Elko, Nevada, and the east by the carriers composing the all-rail transcontinental Nevada wool was going on when the Union Pacific acquired control of the Southern Pacific, but the routing of the wool under Union Pacific direction remained unchanged for eight years thereafter. It would seem that if this constituted discrimination against the Union Pacific, the Union Pacific would have corrected it.

(p) It is argued by the Government that the Central Pacific lagged behind the Union Pacific in service, and also that there was a marked improvement in the condition of the Central Pacific after the merger of 1901. It is to be remembered, however, that the Central Pacific debt was not settled until 1899, and that before that settlement, there could have been no certainty as to the future of the company. The lines were mortgaged and no one could forecast the result of a reorganization. The uncertainties of the situation undoubtedly crippled or restricted the credit of the company so that it would have been difficult, if not impossible, to procure the money necessary to build up the property. It would be very natural, therefore, to expect that when the property was freed, it would receive the full attention which an unencumbered line would be sure to have when its future was secure. The improvement in the Central Pacific is not to be attributed to the Union Pacific, although this improve-route (I. R. 371), for the reason that the carriers east of Ogden were not then in a position to handle through shipments of this commodity promptly or to give as satisfactory service as on the Sunset Route (I. R. 219). In recent years, however, nearly all of this wool from Nevada has gone over the Ogden route, even though there are still through rates on the Sunset route (I. R. 381; P. Ex. 32, V. R. 1616).

This Nevada wool movement was abnormal, superinduced by a through rate and good service over the Sunset Route, while no through rate, or good service, was accorded by the carriers composing the direct line.

ment may have commenced contemporaneously with the Union Pacific's control over the line. This was a mere coincidence. The fact of larger importance is that the Central Pacific debt had been readjusted and the company reorganized, and the owners thought their property was secure.

(q) Next, it is not suggested that the Central Pacific does not cooperate fully in handling traffic originating on its lines and destined for the Union Pacific (and vice versa) or in its treatment of traffic coming on to its own lines and destined for or actually delivered to the Union Pacific (and vice versa). Indeed, Judge Lovett testified that he could not say that the Central Pacific operation would be improved if placed in other hands (I R. 297).

The following testimony by Mr. Spence, fully fortified in other portions of his testimony and uncontradicted, makes clear that the Central Pacific cooperates fully in every particular. He testified (III R. 1045-1046):

> "Going back, now, to the regular order of your testimony, what are the relations between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific in respect to the through route via Ogden?
>
> A. There are but few connecting lines whose relations are as close and co-operative. There are no connecting lines whose relations are closer and more co-operative than the relations between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific. The lines are operated as one connected, continuous line.
> Q. What about the personal relations between the officers of those lines in respect to mutual satisfaction as to the nature and extent of the co-operation?

A. They are exceedingly cordial and co-operative. I do not know of a complaint on either side, and I know of no cause for complaint on either side.

Q. What arrangements have you, for instance, with them in regard to advertising the Ogden through route?

A. We joined the Union Pacific in advertising the through train service between Chicago and San Francisco by the annual creation of a joint advertising fund, to which the lines contribute on a pro rata basis. Very much the largest share of that fund is spent in westbound advertising, and is placed in the hands of the Union Pacific for that purpose.

Q. They spend the fund to which you contribute as they see fit?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us the approximate amount annually which is expended for this westbound advertising?

A. The amount spent, between Chicago and San Francisco, during the current year will be about $140,000.

Q. What have been the results of this co-operative effort to afford the public a through line via Ogden? What kind of a line is that through line thus created?

A. Briefly stated, the results of this co-operation have been to establish the best through transcontinental line, taking passenger and freight service together, across the country.

Q. Of all the all-rail lines that you have mentioned, in your opinion, the Ogden route is the best?

A. Yes."

Mr. Schumacher testified (I R. 173):

"There may be connections that work 100 per cent. with each other. The Central and Union do not, but aside from their Sunset territory, I do not believe two lines could work any more closely together than the Union and Southern or Central."

(r) In short, the Pacific Railroad Laws obligated the companies (which were five in number, supra, p. 14) constituting the Pacific Railroads so to operate and use their roads that in use and operation the roads would be "one connected, continuous line". Each of the companies was prohibited from discriminating in favor of or against the roads or business of any of the other of the companies, and was required to accord to each of the other companies "equal facilities as to rates, time and transportation". When we consider that the Act of 1862 was passed shortly after the outbreak of the Civil War, when a through line of transportation to the Pacific Ocean was necessary for the transportation of troops and munitions of war, the meaning of the provisions of the Pacific Railroad Laws is obvious. The Government was not interested in the apportionment of freight or earnings among the several roads. It was interested only in securing such treatment by each road of the others as would assure unhindered through transportation. To accomplish this end, the Pacific Railroad Laws used plain, simple language. They required each of the Pacific Railroads to accord to each of the others "equal facilities as to rates, time and transportation": terms having no relation to the apportionment of traffic or earnings or community interest in revenues, but, on the contrary, peculiarly appropriate to the subject of adequate transportation facilities, and to that subject alone.

The court below summarily disposed of the Government's contention based upon the Pacific Railroad Laws. Judge Hook said (239 Fed. 1006; VI R. 2336):

> "It is contended that the control of the Central Pacific line from San Francisco to Ogden by the Southern Pacific is in violation of the Pacific Railroad Acts. The proofs show no foundation in fact for this contention. When this suit was brought and since, the line was being maintained and operated in every particular required as a part of a continuous railroad from the Missouri River to the Pacific Coast. In conjunction with the Union Pacific there were through rates, through billings and through freight, passenger and mail trains. There were no criticisms of the track, the service or the schedule. The Government and the public were being served adequately. Those statutes require physical connection with the Union Pacific to make a through line and the furnishing of equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation without discrimination of any kind. If those requirements are met it does not seem material whether they are performed by the Southern Pacific as lessee and stockholder or by the Central Pacific independently."

XII.

The construction which the Government attempts to put upon the Pacific Railroad Laws is inconsistent with the position which has always been taken by the three departments of the Government concerning the control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific.

In no instance, except in the case at bar, has the argument ever been put forward in any department of the Government that the Pacific Railroad Laws required the constituent roads to work actively and exclusively for one another and to make full interchange at the junction points. On the contrary the opposite position has been taken by the three departments of the Government. This matter is sufficiently covered in Points VII and XI and need not be considered further. (See quotation from opinion of Mr. Justice McKenna in Steel Corporation case, p. 308, supra.)

XIII.

Even though a violation of the Pacific Railroad Laws were proved in the case, the remedy would not be dismemberment but would be injunction of restraint or of command to comply with the provisions of the acts.

United States v. Great Lakes Towing Co., 208 Fed. 733, 746 (1913), decides:

> "Where the illegality of the combination results alone from purely administrative conditions, which may be effectually eliminated, a prohibition of the offending practices may be sufficient to vindicate the statute."

The court also said (217 Fed. 658) that, under such circumstances, the remedy

> "is clearly to resort to restraint rather than to dissolution, except where restraint alone is inadequate".

In the Steel Corporation case, 251 U. S. 417, 451, it is said:

> "We recall the distinction we made in the Standard Oil case (221 U. S. 1, 77) between acts done in violation of the statute and a condition brought about which 'in and of itself, is not only a continued attempt to monopolize, but also a monopolization'." [In the first case, "adequate measure of relief would result from restraining the doing of such acts in the future"; the second case required "the application of broader and more controlling remedies" (221 U. S. 77)].

In United States v. New England Fish Exchange, 258 Fed. 732 (D. Ct. Mass. 1919), it was held that although the Boston Fish Market Corporation was operating a fish pier in violation of the Sherman Act it should not be dissolved, but should be required to open the pier to all persons under reasonable regulations. Said the court (p. 748):

> "As the Boston Fish Market Corporation and the Exchange are facilities which may be operated for the good of the trade, by amending or eliminating the rules of the Exchange that place an undue restraint on the business, and by requiring the Boston Fish Market Corporation to open up the pier upon equal and reasonable terms to such dealers as may desire the privilege of doing business there, we think that the Boston Fish Market Corporation should not be dissolved, provided the pier is thus opened up, and that the Exchange should not be dissolved, provided its rules are reformed."

XIV.

There is no evidence whatever of any attempts at monopoly or monopolistic practices.

The argument of counsel for the Government in their brief is simply to the point that these railroads had a monopoly because they pioneered the field of railroad building in California. This does not give rise to a monopoly in the invidious sense, otherwise every pioneer would be a monopolist.

XV.

It is impossible to dismember the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific system without substantial deterioration in the public service.

We refer to our treatment of this matter at pp. 259-268, supra, also to the large map at the end of the appendix. It is our contention that the impairment of the public service which would result from the dismemberment of the system here sought to be torn asunder, may be relied upon by us for the following reasons:

(a) It is convincing proof that a system so welded together must have come into existence as the result of a normal growth.

(b) Such impairment of service is a full defense in equity.

(c) It is an item in the defense that there is no undue restraint of commerce.

(d) It is equally an item in the defense of estoppel by conduct.

If this system cannot be torn apart without inflicting substantial and serious injury upon the public, it must be because the present condition has obtained for many years and grown into the needs of the communities served by it. If, therefore, it should prove to be true, as we contend, that substantial and serious public injury will result from dismemberment, that should be a full answer in equity.

> "We are unable to see that the public interest will be served by yielding to the contention of the Government respecting the dissolution of the company or the separation from it of some of its subsidiaries; and we do see in a contrary conclusion a risk of injury to the public interest, including a material disturbance of, and, it may be serious detriment to, the foreign trade. And in submission to the policy of the law and its fortifying prohibitions the public interest is of paramount regard." (Steel Corporation case, 251 U. S. 457.)

Moreover, public injury is an item to be taken into account in support of our defenses that there is no undue restraint of commerce, and that the Government is estopped by its conduct.

> "It is certainly a matter for consideration that there was no legal attack on the Corporation until 1911, ten years after its formation and the commencement of its career. We do not, however, speak of the delay simply as to its time—that there is estoppel in it because of its time—but on account of what was done during that time—the many millions of dollars spent, the development made, and the enterprises undertaken, the investments by the public that have been invited and are not to be ignored." (Steel Corporation case, 251 U. S. 453.)

Again, the impairment of the public service and the impossibility of dismemberment are established by the circumstance that the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific with full dispositon to contract for a readjustment of the status of the Central Pacific were unable to do so in a manner consistent with the public good, as determined by the Railroad Commission of California. The whole matter may be summed up in the language attributed to the then President of the University of California, when the question of the separation of the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific was discussed in 1913 and 1914, as follows:

> "The Central and Southern Pacific Railroads are so thoroughly bound together that no man can foresee the result of tearing them asunder" (The Outlook, Vol. 106, p. 609).

We indicate in the following list, some of the necessary incidents of dismemberment, for which some sort of adjustment will have to be attempted; and we may pertinently ask, as did Mr. Justice McKenna in the Steel Corporation case, "By whom and how shall all the adjustments of preservation or destruction be made?" (251 U. S. 453).

(a) The problem of the Oakland Mole;*

(b) The problem of the Tehama-Oregon Line (p. 214, supra);

(c) The loss of one of the San Joaquin Valley Lines (p. 274, supra);

(d) The breaking up of California transportation into two and three-line hauls;

*The terminus of appellees' railway system on the easterly side of San Francisco Bay is at Oakland Mole or pier with ferry connection to San Francisco. This Terminal, including all the terminal yards, shops and ship yard used for the ferry steamers, together with the line of railroad extending thence to Sacramento via Niles and Stockton, is the property of Central Pacific Railway Company (II R. 748).

The Southern Pacific, on the other hand, owns railroads connecting with the Central Pacific tracks at the shore or east end of Oakland Mole and extending thence to Sacramento via the so-called Benicia cut-off (p. 215, supra). Thus, while the Southern Pacific owns the short line between Oakland and Sacramento, it owns no terminal on San Francisco Bay.

(e) The destruction of a one-line haul between Oregon and California;

(f) The destruction of a one-line haul between many parts of California and Arizona;

(g) The destruction of a one-line haul between Oregon, California and Arizona;

(h) The destruction of a one-line haul between California and Nevada;

(i) The destruction of a one-line haul between Oregon and Nevada;

(j) The impairment of the Ogden route as an interstate carrier consequent upon (i) the loss of the Southern Pacific part of the main line from San Francisco to Sacramento, and (ii) the loss of all Southern Pacific rails as feeders;

(k) The impossibility of selling the Central Pacific line from Ogden to Sacramento, unless preferential rights over the Southern Pacific entrance to San Francisco are granted, and the California Railroad Commission will not permit such an arrangement;

(l) The impairment of the Sunset-Gulf route as an interstate carrier on account of (i) the loss of the Central Pacific part of the main line from Lathrop to Goshen, and (ii) the loss of all Central Pacific rails as feeders;

(m) Reproduction costs and duplication of tracks and terminals were estimated at $85,000,000 in 1912, a figure which would be greatly increased by the present scale of prices;

(n) And finally, summing up the matter as Mr. Eshleman did: (1) it is very problematical if there would be any benefit to interstate commerce; (2) it is practically certain that public detriment and great impairment of service in intrastate commerce would result; and (3) there would be one dominant line and one much impaired line.

It will not do to say that the difficulties of adjustment will be entirely or almost entirely overcome by negotiations between the lines. If they must negotiate a working arrangement between them, why divorce them? If the lines cannot be separated without an agreement for joint operation, why separate them? Again, if a decree be entered in this case for the separation of the lines, who can say what the course of negotiation may be or what we may expect in respect of the future of either of the properties? We shall not be dealing with an old condition, but shall be hurled into a new one.

It will not do to say that the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific were able to make an accommodation agreement in 1913; that agreement was never put into effect, and might have worked out well or poorly. Moreover, many of the details of the matter had necessarily been left to be worked out in a spirit of good-will. It is enough that the two companies found it impossible to sever the Central Pacific without an arrangement which the Railroad Commission of California would not approve. How then can it now be said that arrangements for the divorce of these properties, which have never been operated apart, can be made in keeping with the public interest so as to secure such a divorce as a court of equity would be disposed to decree?

Upon this point, Judge Hook says (239 Fed. 1006; VI R. 2335):

> "After the decision of the Supreme Court that the combination of the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific was unlawful, those companies, to meet the suggestions of the Attorney General, incorporated in the plan to dissolve the combination provisions for the surrender by the Southern Pacific to the Union Pacific of all the Central Pacific lines except one from northern California to the northern state line and a branch therefrom into Oregon. These provisions were in excess of the mandatory requirements of the Supreme Court and their consummation depended upon the approval of the Railroad Commission of California. Upon a consideration of them the Commission expressed the belief that the arrangement would 'not substantially benefit the shippers of transcontinental freight either in rates or in service' and that it would be a distinct detriment to local commerce within the state. However, the Commission made certain modifications and conditions as to features within its jurisdiction, but the railroad companies were unable to agree to them, and that part of the plan was abandoned. The failure to agree was followed by this suit to separate the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific, but we think the doubts of the California Commission would apply with equal force to the result now sought to be accomplished."

XVI.

It is not necessary here to consider whether properties which had been operated together as one from their origin continuously down to July 2, 1890, under say, tenures at will, could or could not thereafter be legally unified by purchase, lease, etc., because at the time of the passage of the Anti-trust Act, as we have elsewhere shown, the properties here involved were owned by a single proprietor, although the tenure under which a part of the properties was owned was a 99-year term and not a fee.

In this connection we may consider two hypothetical cases—(a) the unification by executed agreement after the passage of the Anti-trust Act, of properties which had always from their origin been operated as a single unit, although under executory agreement; and (b) the unification by executed agreement after the passage of the Anti-trust Act of properties which at one time were competitive, but which were combined by executory agreement before the passage of the Anti-trust Act and then operated as a unit.

(a). Let us suppose a case where properties had been operated together as one from their origin under, for example, tenures at will. We might take, for instance, the case of railroad properties which had been operated for several decades by two brothers without any binding agreement. The question might arise whether a transaction after the Anti-trust Act, by which they were for the first time bound together by executed agreement, would be valid. It could be said, and properly, that as they were united from their origin, no violation of the Anti-trust Act would be involved in their unification by executed agreement after the enactment of the law, because such a unification did not involve a combination of competitive units. The properties had a de facto unification from their origin.

(b) Let us assume now the second hypothesis and take, for instance, a case of railroad properties which at one time in their history had been competitive units but were later operated under conventional arrangement before the passage of the Anti-trust Act, and then, after the passage of the act, joined by an executed agreement. In this case it would be argued that U. S. v. Trans-Missouri, 166 U. S. 290 (1897), controlled, because at one time the properties had been competitive units.

The present case, however, is quite excluded from the scope of either of these hypothetical cases, because the properties concerned (always one in practical effect) were unified in legal effect by a lease executed in all respects, so far as vested interest in the property is concerned, five years before the passage of the Anti-trust Act (see Venner v. N. Y. C. and H. R. R. Co., supra, p. 293).

XVII.

Considering that (a) these lines were operated as one from their origin, and that (b) on July 2, 1890, the Central Pacific lines were held under a 99-year term expiring April 1, 1984, it is clear that the lease of December 7, 1893, which cut down the term three months, viz.: to January 1, 1984, is entirely lawful, leaving out of view the argument next to be made that, even if the lease were unlawful, the lessee, Southern Pacific Company, would be deemed to hold under the original term created February 17, 1885.

In this case (a) the lines were operated as one from their origin, and (b) on July 2, 1890, the Central Pacific lines were held by the Southern Pacific under a 99-year term. There was thus a legal unification. Under those circumstances, it was entirely proper to make another agreement in respect of this legal unification, and even if it had developed that all rights under the agreement of 1885 were merged in the rights secured by the lease of December 7, 1893, it would by no means follow that no property rights whatever survived. In other words, the validity of the lease of December 7, 1893, would be sustained by the legal status which existed at that time and which had for its justification the history of the properties and their unification by executed agreement and conveyance on February 17, 1885, for a 99-year term.

The unchanged parts of the first lease would be deemed in force without interruption from the date the lease was made, just as revised or compiled laws are deemed in force from the date of their first enactment [Bear Lake Co. v. Garland (1896), 164 U. S. 1, 11].

Judge Hook puts it as follows (239 Fed. 1001; VI R. 2330):

> "In December, 1893, another lease from the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific was executed, modifying the terms of the lease of 1885 in matters not important here, and though the older instrument was cancelled in terms, in legal effect the relation of lessor and lessee continued unbroken. The term of this last lease is until January 1, 1984. Whatever immunity or exemption from the operation of the Anti-Trust Act attended the proprietary relations existing prior to its passage was not destroyed by the change in the position of the parties affected by the lease of 1885. Nor did the amendment of that lease in immaterial respects in 1893 create a new starting point. It is not material that the amendment was by a revision substituted for the old instrument instead of by a separate supplement."

XVIII.

If the lease of December 7, 1893, were invalid as one executed after the passage of the Anti-trust Act, the Southern Pacific Company would nevertheless be treated at law and in equity as the holder of the 99-year term which it acquired under the lease of February 17, 1885, notwithstanding the provision of cancellation contained in the lease of December 7, 1893.

We have just argued that the lease of December 7, 1893, was valid, although executed after July 2, 1890. We now propose to show that even if the lease of December, 1893, were invalid, the Southern Pacific would nevertheless hold its 99-year term under the tenure of the lease of February 17, 1885; for it is established that if a lessee makes a surrender of an outstanding term in consideration of the grant of a new term, and the grant of the new term is invalid for any reason, the lessee will be restored to his original estate upon principles analogous to those in cases of failure of consideration and mutual mistake of law. The law would not forbid the enjoyment of the new term and deprive the lessee of the old term which he surrendered in the belief that he was to obtain in its stead a new and valid term.

Let us refer briefly to these leases. The lease of February 17, 1885, was for a 99-year term commencing April 1, 1885. The Southern Pacific entered upon the enjoyment of its 99-year term April 1, 1885, and was in possession when it made the new lease of December 7, 1893. At the time it made the lease of December 7, 1893, the 99-year term would have expired April 1, 1984. The lease of 1893 provided that the term thereby granted should expire January 1, 1984; in other words, the lease of 1893 cut off three months from the end of the term fixed by the lease of 1885.

The lease of 1893 contains the following clause:

> "Fifth. The agreements between the same parties, dated February 17, 1885, and January 1, 1888, respectively, are hereby canceled, except so far as they relate to operation of said demised premises prior to January 1, 1894, and adjustment of accounts in respect to such operation thereof" (I R. 23).

Of course the lease of 1893 was simply intended to amend the lease of 1885, but the requirements of conveyancing made it take the form of a surrender of the old term and the grant of a new one. This intent is expressly stated in the lease of March 22, 1894, which amended the lease of 1893. The lease of 1894 provided as follows:

> "Whereas, heretofore and under date of the 7th day of December, 1893, an indenture was made and entered into by and between the parties hereto revising and changing the then existing agreement of lease between said parties, as by said indenture, dated the 7th day of December, 1893, by reference thereto will fully and at large appear" (I R. 24).

In his letter to Senator Gear, dated January 8, 1897 (p. 138, supra) Mr. Huntington speaks of the lease of February 17, 1885, as "original lease" and the subsequent lease and amendments as "modification of lease". It is plain that all that was intended was to modify the lease of 1885. It did take the form of a cancellation and the creation of a new term, but as we have already said the law will treat the Southern Pacific Company as enjoying its original term if it made the mistake of supposing that the lease of 1893 would be effective to give it a new term.

Judge Hook speaks of the leases of 1885 and 1893 as follows:

> "The old leases of the Southern Pacific lines to the Central Pacific were surrendered by the same instrument [the lease of 1885]. This was five years before the passage of the Anti-trust Act. In December, 1893, another lease from the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific was executed modifying the terms of the lease of 1885 in matters not important here, and ihough the older instrument was cancelled in terms, in legal effect the relation of lessor and lessee continued unbroken."

239 Fed. 1001, VI R. 2330.

The rule is that if an amended or substituted lease be invalid, the lessee will be treated as still holding his original term. If, of course, by subsequent contract that term is cut down, the law will treat it as cut down, and if there are amendments in other respects the law will enforce those amendments. But the intention of the parties will be enforced as far as may be lawfully done, and as to those matters in which the parties mistook the law, they will be restored to their position before the mistake of law occurred.

We cite the authorities which deal with this subject and it appears from them that the rule is the same in cases of express surrender as it is in cases of implied surrender. Obviously the rule is applied more frequently in cases of implied surrender, for they occur with greater frequency. It will appear from what follows, however, that the rule is the same in both cases.

Where a person having a lease for a given term accepts from the lessor another lease covering all or a portion of the unexpired term of the first lease, it is almost universally held that the second lease abrogates the first lease, because in the acceptance of the second lease there was an implied surrender of the first. The reason for this is obvious: without a surrender of the first lease the lessor would not have it in his power to grant the second. It is, therefore, presumed that the parties intended by the execution of the second lease that the first should be surrendered.

This presumed intention has sometimes been supported on the doctrine of estoppel. It is the rule that by his acceptance of a lease the lessee is estopped to deny the title or power of the landlord to make the lease. If, therefore, a lessee accepts a second lease covering a portion of the term of a former lease, he is estopped to deny that the lessor did not have the power to make the second lease and is deemed, therefore, to have intended a surrender of the former lease, which would give to the lessor the power of making the second lease.

It would seem, therefore, that whenever the application of the rule of implied surrender would do violence to the real intention of the parties it should not be indulged, and this is the holding of the authorities.

In Doe v. Poole (1848), 11 Q. B. 714, 116 Eng. Repr. 641, it is said (p. 642):

> "The doctrine of surrender implied by law was introduced for the purpose of giving effect to the intention of the parties: the surrender is presumed for the purpose of making a grant operative which otherwise would be without effect."

In Doe v. Poole, supra, it is said (p. 642):

"That an express surrender may be on condition either precedent or subsequent, is clear upon the authorities, as, if it be with reservation of rent, and conditioned to be void if the rent be not paid; Shep. Touchst. 307. 'A condition annexed to a surrender may revest the particular estate, because the surrender is conditional; Co. Lit. 218 b.' . . .

"The implication of a condition, that the surrender should be void in case the new grant should fail, appears to us to be free from objection. Indeed, where the terms of a lease import an express surrender solely in consideration of the new grant, we think a construction that such surrender was conditional would be warranted, and would give effect to the intention of the parties."

It was held, accordingly, that the acceptance of a lease which is voidable and which does not pass an interest according to the contract is not a surrender of a preceding lease.

In Doe v. Courtenay, 11 Q. B. 702, 116 Eng. Rep. 636 (1848), the point of the decision is thus stated in the syllabus (p. 637):

"Held, that the surrender was inoperative, and that the first lease remained in force; and this, whether the second lease, at the time of the demise, was void or only voidable at the will of the tenant for life, and whether the surrender was implied or express; the ground of decision being that the new lease did not pass an interest according to the contract, and therefore the acceptance of it, though with express words as above stated, did not effect an absolute surrender."

In the opinion it is said by Coleridge, J. (p. 640):

"In the case of a surrender implied by law from the acceptance of the new lease, a condition ought also to be understood as implied by law, making void the surrender in case the new lease should be made void; and that, in case of an express surrender, so expressed as to show the intention of the parties to make the surrender only in consideration of the grant, the sound construction of such instrument, in order to effectuate the intention of the parties, would make that surrender also conditional to be void in case the grant should be made void."

The case last cited is based upon and quotes from Doe v. Courtenay, supra.

The conclusions from the above cases may be briefly summarized as follows:

1. The doctrine that a lease will be deemed to have been surrendered where the lessee accepts a second lease during the term of the first is one based upon the presumed intention of the parties and yields whenever it does violence to such presumed intent.

2. In no case will the acceptance of a new lease be held to be a surrender of an old lease where the new lease is, for any reason, invalid, or does not convey the interest and estate which the parties intended it to convey. This is true, notwithstanding the fact that the second lease may be given in consideration of the surrender of the old lease, and, in terms, provide for such surrender.

These rules are based upon the theory, deduced from the presumed intention of the parties, that the surrender of the old lease, whether express or implied, was to be operative only upon condition that the new lease was valid and effectual. If, therefore, the new lease is not valid or effectual, the condition upon which the old lease was to be surrendered fails, and there is no surrender.

XIX.

We here argue but only briefly the point that the Anti-trust Act, did not make unlawful the operation by a single proprietor of lines owned by him at the date of the passage of the act which were not then competitive but which could be made competitive if divorced.

Upon the oral argument below, counsel for the Government took the extreme position that the Sherman

Act makes unlawful the operation by a single proprietor of lines owned by him at the date of the passage of the Anti-trust Act and not then competitive, but which could be made competitive, if divorced. In other words, the Government argued that the Anti-trust Act was intended not only to forbid combinations, but also to forbid the unified operation of properties which could be made competitive if released from a unified ownership.

The language of the Anti-trust Act is open to no such construction. The law forbids the combination of existing competitive units. If it had been the intention of Congress to forbid the ownership by a single proprietor of two railroads which could be made to compete, but which were not competing at the time of the passage of the Sherman Act or for a long period before the act was passed, or which indeed might never have been competitive, Congress would have expressed that idea with clearness and precision, would simply have declared it unlawful for any person to own two railroads which were capable of being made competitive.

In the petition in this case and throughout the argument, counsel for the Government speak of lines as "natural competitors" and roads as "naturally competitive". These terms are intended to indicate railroad lines which are not competing, but which could be made to compete, if divorced. Counsel also employ the term "potential competitors", by which they mean lines of railroad which could be made to compete, but are not competing and perhaps never have competed.

On this point, then, the question is simply this: Does the Anti-trust Act forbid the combining of competitive units (i. e., units that are actually competing), or does it declare unlawful the ownership of property no matter how, or when acquired, or upon what tenure, if parts of the property can be made to compete, if divorced, without regard to the question of when they competed, if as a matter of fact, they ever did so?

It is submitted that the meaning of the Anti-trust Act is plain, and that the act does not make unlawful the operation by a single proprietor of lines owned by him and not competitive at the time of the passage of the act, but which forsooth could be made competitive if divorced.

Upon this point, the court below said (239 Fed. 1001; VI R. 2330):

> "There was from 1870 an existing, continuous, common control of the railroads of both companies created by leases executed and observed by the parties and unquestioned by the State. This was the situation when the Central Pacific debt to the United States was settled in 1899 pursuant to the Act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat., 659), and when the Southern Pacific acquired all the stock of the present Central Pacific which was then organized to succeed the old company. . . .
> There never was a time, in our opinion, when there was in any real, substantial sense, 'a natural and existing competition in interstate commerce' between the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific within the intent of the Anti-Trust Act. . . .
>
> We do not think the statute was intended to create competition by destroying a proprietary relation formed long before its passage and by the very means of which a railroad system has been brought into existence."

XX.

The argument of counsel for the Government in this case overlooks the value and importance to the Government of the guaranty of the bonds by the Southern Pacific Company in 1899.

It is argued by the Government that the $100,000,000 issue of Central Pacific bonds bore the guaranty of the Southern Pacific to satisfy the First Mortgage bondholders, and that the guaranty was of no consequence to the Government. It is not difficult to prove that the guaranty of the Southern Pacific was indispensable to the reorganization of the Central Pacific and to the payment of the Government debt. Nobody expected the Central Pacific to pay $58,000,000 in ten years out of its revenues. The money had to be raised from the sale of its bonds, and unless the bonds were salable the money with which to pay the Government could not be obtained. It has been suggested by the appellant, and it must have been the fact, that the installment notes were paid largely from funds derived from the sale of the bonds. It was therefore indispensable that the bonds should be salable, and we have the testimony of Mr. Speyer that they could not have been marketed without the Southern Pacific Company's guaranty. But Mr. Speyer's testimony was not necessary to prove that fact. The earnings of the Central Pacific would not have enabled it to market the bonds involved in the reorganization without the support of the Southern Pacific Company.

Counsel for the Government also overlooks another very important fact. The Central Pacific might have defaulted in the payment of the notes. If it had done so, what would the plight of the Government and the administration have been without the guaranty of the Southern Pacific Company? The Government would, in the event supposed, have held 47 per cent of the $100,000,000 issue of bonds payable forty-five years after date. But the act of July 7, 1898, appointing the commission required that the debt should be paid within ten years. What answer would President McKinley and the three members of his Cabinet have given to the country if there had been a default in the payment of the notes and the bonds had been simply a lien on the properties of the Central Pacific Company? A moment's reflection makes it clear that the Government had a very great interest in seeing that the bonds were as salable and as valuable as it was possible for the Government to have them. It is for this reason that Judge Hook speaks repeatedly in his opinion of the "security" which was provided for. "The Government was to receive not less than the full amount of principal and interest 'with such security as to said commission may seem expedient'. . . . The bonds were to be secured by the guaranty of the Southern Pacific. . . . The above constituted the security which seemed expedient to the commission." (VI R. 2332-2333.)

It is argued by counsel for the Government that the written agreement did not provide for the guaranty of the Southern Pacific. But the President and his Cabinet understood that the bonds were to be guaranteed, and we may depend upon it that the transaction would have broken down if the bonds, without the guaranty, had been tendered.

Moreover, the contract with the Government provided (I R. 55), as follows:

> "The payment of the principal and interest of the said notes and of the indebtedness represented thereby, shall be secured by the pledge of $58,820,000, face value, First Refunding Mortgage Four Per Cent Gold Bonds issued by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or its successor company having title to the aforesaid railroads, such bonds to be part of an issue hereinafter described not exceeding $100,000,000 in all, one-twentieth part of such pledged bonds to be held as security for each of said notes."

The First Refunding Mortgage of the Central Pacific was fully described in the railroad company contracts and plan of readjustment brought out by Speyer & Co. The Government was familiar with the plan and the terms and conditions of the First Refunding Mortgage, and Attorney General Griggs testified that the Government was to get $58,000,000 in bonds of that issue and that he knew that the Southern Pacific Company was to guarantee the issue and, speaking for himself and the administration, he said that no bond not carrying that guaranty would have been satisfactory (III R. 1000-1002). To the same effect is the testimony of Secretary Gage (III R. 1011-1012) and Mr. Speyer (III R. 1182-1185). See also pp. 166-174, supra.

In point of fact, the bonds which the Government received did carry the endorsement of the Southern Pacific Company. The case aptly illustrates the remark of Lord St. Leonards, quoted in Waterpark v. Fennell, 7 H. C. L. 684, 11 Eng. Rep. 273, "Tell me what you have done under such a deed and I will tell you what the deed means". In other words, the bonds which the Government received were guaranteed and it was therefore agreed with the Government that they should be guaranteed. This circumstance corroborates the testimony of the only survivors of the transaction, all of whom were called by the defendants and testified as we have indicated.

XXI.

Both sides seem to be agreed, although for different reasons, that the Government cannot be said to have been an accomplice in the violation of its own laws: the appellees contending that no laws were violated, and counsel for the Government asserting either that (a) the Government did not know the facts; or (b) was unconscious of the law; or (c) in final analysis had no power through its own officers to violate its own laws.

We have shown elsewhere that the Government's petition in this suit is framed upon the theory that prior to the lease of 1885 the Central Pacific, with its connections to the Atlantic Coast, was in competition with the Sunset-Gulf route from San Francisco via New Orleans to New York; and that this competition was suppressed by the lease of February 17, 1885.

Counsel for the Government now contend that the combination by which the Sherman Act was violated occurred February 20, 1899. They say that the combination complained of was made pursuant to a plan promulgated February 20, 1899, whereby the Southern Pacific Company, then owning the stock of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, acquired all the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

It is important in this connection to note the events immediately preceding February 20, 1899. For several months negotiations for the reorganization of the Central Pacific had been going on. The parties interested in the negotiations were (a) the Government with a claim of $58,812,715.48; (b) the first mortgage bondholders representing $57,471,000; (c) a large number of stockholders holding an undefined portion of an issue of $67,275,500 par value; (d) the Southern Pacific Company as holder of an unexpired term of about 85 years under the Central Pacific lease; and (e) Speyer & Co.

In years past, the stock of the Central Pacific had been sold in large blocks and for large sums in England and on the Continent, and presumably at home. This stock had not been sold to railroad operators, but to investors. The investment had not been a profitable one, and in the years preceding the reorganization of the company the uncertainty respecting the future of the property impaired the value of its shares. All of this was public knowledge here and in financial circles abroad.

The reorganization of the property could not have been accomplished without the concurrence of all the interests represented. The Government was seeking to collect the amount due to it. The Commission was appointed to settle the indebtedness and it was bound to arrange a settlement that would bring in the amount due within ten years. There was also a provision in the act that if an agreement of settlement were not made within a year, foreclosure must occur. It was far from the policy of the Government, however, to force a foreclosure and become a railroad proprietor; its object was to collect the debt due to it. The bonded debt plus the Government claim amounted to over $116,000,000, and the record fails to show any possible purchaser for the property at that or any other figure, except the Southern Pacific Company.

These were the circumstances of the case when the agreement for the reorganization of the properties took final shape. As is usual in such reorganizations, the papers of agreement were numerous and all the parties in interest did not execute, nor was it expected that they would execute, a single instrument. Each of the parties in interest executed the agreement which was appropriate to his interest and engagements. The agreement in respect of the indebtedness of the Government was drawn to bear date February 1, 1899, and the amount due was figured as of that day.

As elsewhere shown, the agreement was executed by President McKinley, Secretary Bliss and Attorney General Griggs at Washington, February 15, 1896, and by Secretary Gage at Boston, February 16, 1896.

This brings us to February 20, 1899, the day which counsel for the Government specifies as the one on which the alleged violation of the Anti-Trust Act began. What occurred that day? Two things: (a) the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney General submitted to each of the Houses of Congress a report, saying that they had executed the agreement, providing for the payment of the debt to the Government; (b) Speyer & Co. on that very day issued and sent out to the financial world at home and abroad the comprehensive plan which had been formulated for the reorganization of the Central Pacific with a view to the payment of the Government debt; and in this plan, prominent and conspicuous, were the provisions that the Southern Pacific Company was (1) to guarantee bonds to the amount of $125,000,000 for the corporate purposes of the Central Pacific; (2) to buy for $20,000,000, as and when required, the preferred shares of the reorganized Central Pacific; (3) to purchase the stock of the Central Pacific, paying for it, par for par, with its own shares, plus $25 per share of bonds issued upon the Central Pacific shares preferred and common; and (4) to issue in accord with these engagements, its own issue of bonds of $36,819,000 secured by the Central Pacific shares, preferred and common, out of which latter sum it was to set apart $20,000,000 for the purchase of the preferred shares and use the other $16,819,000 to pay $25 per share upon the outstanding stock of the Central Pacific, amounting, as before stated, to $67,275,500.

In a word, counsel for the Government fix the date of the so-called combination at the time the Government first became assured of the payment of the fifty-eight millions that were due it; they find the origin of the combination in the acts of the President, his Cabinet and Congress; and they discover illegal restraint of trade in the fact that the Government chose to accept the Southern Pacific guaranty, instead of proceeding to foreclosure in order that it might itself become a competitor of the Sunset-Gulf route.

Is it any wonder, therefore, that while counsel for the Government and ourselves agree that the Government cannot be an accomplice in the violation of its laws, we disagree in the reasons for our attitude? We say that the Government is not an accomplice in the violation of its own laws because its laws were not violated. Counsel for the Government, on the other hand, argue that the Government did not violate its own laws either: (a) because the Government did not know the facts; or (b) if it did know the facts, it was unconscious of the law; or (c) if it knew the facts and was conscious of the law, it had no power (or at least its officers had no power) to agree to a violation of the law.

The case, therefore, in respect of the matter with which we are at the moment dealing, falls within very narrow compass, and we are content to submit it for the consideration of the court without further comment.

XXII.

The argument of counsel that the 99-year lease of the Central Pacific lines to the Southern Pacific Company, dated February 17, 1885, was or is invalid, is without merit.

It is alleged in the petition (I R. 8):

> "By an instrument dated February 17, 1885, all railroads, equipment and other properties owned by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, predecessor of the Central Pacific Railway Company, were leased to the Southern Pacific Company for a term of ninety-nine years, and all leases of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's properties held by said Central Pacific Railroad Company were by the same instrument transferred to said Southern Pacific Company. Under that and subsequent leases and amendments the Southern Pacific Company has ever since controlled and operated said properties and the additions thereto."

It is now claimed, for reasons which we shall presently consider, that the lease is invalid. We take the position, however, that there is no allegation in the petition to that effect. On the contrary the petition proceeds upon the theory that the lease was valid as between the parties thereto, and invalid only under the Anti-Trust Act, or perhaps under the Pacific Railroad Laws, or both. In any event, however, there is no allegation to support the argument now made that the lease was invalid upon any ground not appearing on the face thereof.

In Dahl v. Montana Copper Co., 132 U. S. 264 (1889), one of the points urged was that the defendant in error, a New York corporation, was not authorized to acquire or own any real property in the territory of Montana, because it had not complied with the laws of Montana in respect of foreign corporations. Holding that this point was not available to the plaintiff in error, because not pleaded, this court said (p. 326):

> "No question is therefore raised on the pleadings as to its competency to do business within the Territory for want of compliance with the provisions of the territorial law. . . . It is sufficient in this case to say that such incompetency cannot be considered unless set up in the pleadings in the court below. A failure to comply with the provisions of the law will not be presumed in the absence of any allegation on the subject."

Let us consider the grounds upon which counsel for the Government claims that the lease is invalid.

(1) Counsel argue that the power to lease was not included in the articles of association of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. To this we reply that there is a distinction between corporate purposes and corporate powers, and that it is not at all necessary that the powers of corporations should be specified in the articles of association. In 1880 the California law was amended to permit railroad corporations to lease to other railroad corporations "doing business in the state".

The statute in full is as follows (Stats. Cal. 1880, p. 114):

> "Section 1. That every railway corporation, and every corporation organized for the purpose of carrying freights or passengers, which has or may be created or organized under or by virtue of any of the laws of any State or Territory of the United States of America, or any Act of Congress of the United States of America, may hereafter build railways, exercise the right of eminent domain, and do or transact any other business which such corporation might if the same had been created or organized under or by virtue of the laws of this State, having the same rights, privileges, and immunities, and subject to the same laws, penalties, and obligations, and burdens, as though said corporations had been created by or organized under the laws of the State of California.

Sec. 2. Railroad corporations doing business in this State and organized under any law of this State, or the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, have power to enter into contracts with one another, whereby the one may lease of the other the whole or any part of its railroad, or may acquire of the other the right to use, in common with it, the whole or any part of its railroad.

Sec. 3. All laws inconsistent with this Act are hereby repealed."

The only question which we are at the moment dealing with is whether the lease is invalid because the power to make leases was not inserted in the articles of association. At the time the articles were filed, the law did not in terms provide for leases, but the constitution of California from the very beginning reserved the right of the legislature to alter, amend or repeal corporate charters. This gave it the power lawfully to enact that all railroad corporations should have the power to lease their lines. When it did so, all railroad corporations of California thereupon became possessed of the power to lease their lines, and were not required to take any steps themselves to be entitled to exercise that power. The argument of counsel that such a power could not be exercised by a particular corporation except upon the consent of the stockholders is fully answered by the authorities which declare that a stockholder gives his consent in advance when he becomes a stockholder in a corporation organized under the laws of a state which has reserved the right to amend, alter and repeal corporate charters.

In Market Street Co. v. Hellman, 109 Cal. 571 (1895), in reply to a contention that an amendment authorizing the consolidation of corporations was ineffective if applied to a corporation organized prior to the amendment, except with the consent of its stockholders, the court said:

> "When an individual becomes a stockholder in a corporation it is with the implied assent on his part to the right of the legislature to alter and amend the law within the scope of the constitutional provision, and is as binding upon him as a contract to like effect of his own making would be" (p. 584).

(2) The second objection to the lease is that the California legislature never authorized the lease because the Southern Pacific Company was not "doing business" in California, when the lease was made February 17, 1885. The lease, however (I R. 13), recites that the Southern Pacific Company is "now doing business in the State of California". Moreover, there is no allegation in the petition that the Southern Pacific was not doing business in the State of California February 17, 1885, yet counsel for the Government treat this as an issuable point in the case.

In the next place the lease of February 17, 1885, provided for a term to commence April 1, 1885, and before that time the Southern Pacific Company had commenced doing business in California, and for a month prior to that date was operating the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and allied lines. It is clear that if a state law authorizes a corporation doing business in the state to lease property, the law is complied with if the lessee commences doing business in the state by operating the leased property contemporaneously with the commencement of the demised term, even though the lease were executed six weeks before.

The situation presented in the case is similar to that of an alien forbidden by law to acquire property, who actually purchases the same, and becomes a citizen before any proceedings are taken to divest him of title. It is held that under these circumstances the title of the purchaser becomes indefeasible as soon as he acquires citizenship.

In Harley v. State, 40 Ala. 689 (1867), the syllabus reads as follows:

> "An alien may purchase lands, and acquires by his purchase a defeasible estate, subject to be defeated by office found; and if he becomes a naturalized citizen before an information is filed for the the forfeiture of the lands, his title becomes perfect, and cannot be divested by proceedings afterwards instituted."

In the opinion it is said (p. 697):

> "When Harley purchased the land in controversy, and during the period of his alienage thereafter, he was seized of a defeasible estate in the premises, accompanied with all the incidents of ownership of such an estate. During the same period, the only right which the State could have in the premises was the right to have the land escheated, by a judicial proceeding in the nature of an inquest of office. This prerogative right of sovereignty was not asserted during the period of Harley's alienage; but he was permitted to retain his estate, without molestation, until he had been admitted to full citizenship. This result effected an extinguishment of the right of the State to escheat the land, if such right existed, and perfected the title of Harley."

So, also, the parties by acquiescence in the lease of February 17, 1885, after the Southern Pacific commenced to do business in California, will be deemed to have ratified that lease, and to have given to it the validity that it would have had if executed after the Southern Pacific commenced doing business.

In Montgomery Traction Co. v. Montgomery Light & Water Power Co., 229 Fed. 672 (C.C.A., 5th Ct., 1916), it was held that although the plaintiff corporation was not qualified to transact business in Alabama on January 30, 1909, when it made the contract which the defendant sought to declare invalid, its disqualification had nevertheless been removed on June 11, 1909, by its complying with all the requirements of the state law, and that therefore the validity of the contract could not thereafter be assailed. The court said (p. 675):

"The averments of the bill show that, up to the time it was filed in September, 1911, there was a continuing recognition by each of the parties of the existence of the alleged contract, evidenced in part by the instrument of January 30, 1909, and the evidence adduced as to the dealings between the parties subsequent to June 11, 1909, after which date there was no disability to contract, evinces a mutual understanding or agreement between the parties to conform their dealings to the terms of the contract expressed in the instrument dated January 30, 1909. The conduct of the parties after the removal of the only legal obstacle standing in the way of the making of a valid contract between them had the effect of an adoption by them of the contract expressed in the instrument dated January 30, 1909. While the parties could not by any act of ratification make a void contract a valid one from the time it was undertaken to be made, they could, when each of them was duly qualified to contract, elect to adopt as the whole or a part of the contract by which their dealings were to be governed what was expressed in an instrument which was ineffectual at the time it was signed. Turner Construction Company v. Union Terminal Company, 229 Fed. 702."

The case of Turner Construction Co. v. Union Terminal Co., 229 Fed. 702 (C. C. A. 5th Ct., 1916), referred to in the opinion in the foregoing case, was a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien. The plaintiff was a New York corporation. At the time it entered into the contract for the doing of the work upon which the claim of lien was based it had not complied with the laws of Florida authorizing foreign corporations to do business. During the progress of the work, however, the plaintiff did comply with the Florida statutes. Under these circumstances it was held that the parties had ratified the contract, and that its validity could not be challenged. Said the court (p. 704):

> "It may be conceded that an effect of this provision was to prevent the acquisition by the plaintiff of any enforceable right as a result of the signing of the instrument on November 21, 1912, and that no right thereunder could have accrued to it prior to its compliance with the statute. But its compliance with those requirements and the issue of the permit to it on January 11, 1913, effectually removed its disability to acquire contractual rights in Florida. . . . It could acquire rights theretofore ineffectually undertaken to be contracted for by the operation in its favor of an estoppel upon the party dealt with to deny the existence of such rights, or by joining with that party in adopting as the evidence of a subsisting contract between them the instrument which, when it was signed, did not, because of a statutory prohibition, confer any enforceable right on the plaintiff. . . . After both the parties were free of any disability they could make a new contract and recognize the instrument already signed as embodying the terms of it. Williams v. Morris, 95 U. S. 444, 457, 24 L. Ed. 360."

Again, it appears (p. 108, supra) that the lease by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company bore date February 10, 1885, and ran for a term of 99 years from the date last named. It is true that the testimony is that the Southern Pacific Company began the operation of these lines March 1, 1885, but on February 10, 1885, it became the owner of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's lines for a 99-year term and this is sufficient to satisfy the requirements that it should have been "doing business" in California when it took the Central Pacific lease February 17, 1885.

Moreover, the lease of February 17, 1885, was modified by an agreement between the parties executed January 1, 1888, and at that time the Southern Pacific Company was engaged in doing business in the State of California because it was operating both the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific lines. It is clear that nothing more need be said on this point.

(3) The third point is that the lease to a competing road is invalid. In the first place, that question cannot be raised in a state of the United States in respect of conditions that antedated the enactment of the Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890. In the next place, the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific were operated together as a property with a single identity from their very origin, and they would neither come within the philosophy nor the letter of the rule urged in this objection.

(4) The fourth proposition is that no lease could be made by the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific Company without the consent of Congress on account of the privileges and franchises conferred upon the Central Pacific by the Pacific Railroad Laws. The Central Pacific, notwithstanding the grants from Congress, remained a California corporation, and it sued and was sued in the State and Federal Courts as such. It derived collateral powers from Congress, but its corporate powers as such and its corporate existence it took and has always held under the laws of the State of California.

In Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. California, 162 U. S. 91 (1896), it was held that:

> "The Central Pacific Company is a corporation of California, recognized as such by the acts of Congress granting it aid and conferring upon it Federal franchises, and it was not the object of those acts to sever its allegiance to the State or transfer the powers and privileges derived from it; nor did those consequences result from the acceptance of the grant by the corporation."

In this connection, it may be noted that the right of the old Central Pacific to sell to the new Central Pacific was recognized in United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co. (1912), 226 U. S. 61, 92, where the court, speaking of the transfer of the properties from one company to the other, said:

> "The obligation to keep faith with the Government continued, as did the legislative power of Congress concerning these roads, notwithstanding changed forms of ownership and organization."

If the old Central Pacific could lawfully sell all of its properties to the new Central Pacific without a Congressional enabling act, it certainly had power to make a lease of its properties to the Southern Pacific Company without Congressional action.

(5) In the agreement of settlement between the Government and the Central Pacific dated February 1, 1899, the lease of February 17, 1885, and the modifications thereto were expressly recognized, and it was expressly required that the lease should be subordinated to the hundred million dollar bond issue. This was done by the Southern Pacific and the Government cannot now urge that this lease was invalid because of the lack of Congressional sanction.

(6) Finally, in dealing with all of the objections to the lease, we submit that: (a) in view of the settlement of the Central Pacific debt, notably the requirement that the Southern Pacific should subordinate its lease to the lien securing the $100,000,000 issue, the Government is estopped to question the validity of the lease; and (b) if the lease be attacked at all, it can be attacked only in a suit brought by the State of California.

See Kerfoot v. Farmers & Merchants Bank, 218 U. S. 281 (1910). The question decided is stated in the syllabus as follows:

> "The United States alone can object to the want of authority of a national bank, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5137, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3460, to accept a conveyance of real property to be held in trust."

Many cases are cited in the opinion in support of the conclusion of the court. The following quotation from Union National Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, is held to be decisive of the case:

> "Where a corporation is incompetent by its charter to take a title to real estate, a conveyance to it is not void, but only voidable, and the sovereign alone can object. It is valid until assailed in a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose."

The court states that the rule recognizes "the authority of the government to which the corporation is amenable". In the present case, of course, the State of California was the "authority to which the corporation [Central Pacific] was amenable", since it was incorporated under the laws of California.

XXIII.

This case does not come within any rule or supposed rule dealing with the prevention of competition coming into existence.

Counsel for the Government undertake to justify a decree, not upon the ground that competition has been suppressed, but that competition, threatened and imminent, was prevented from coming into being on February 20, 1899. They argue that since the Act of July 7, 1898, provided that unless the settlement was perfected within a year the President should proceed at once to foreclose the lien, foreclosure must inevitably have resulted in the acquisition of the Central Pacific Railroad by the United States, or by purchasers not subject to the control of the Southern Pacific Company, unless it was acquired by that company or in its interest. From this they contend that the immediate prospect was a naturally competitive railroad, a part of the most direct railroad in the United States, from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean, in the control of independent competitors. The foregoing states the appellant's case. But the Government did not desire foreclosure; it wanted a settlement of the debt that was due to it. There was a precautionary provision, it is true, that if no settlement were obtained, foreclosure should take place. But the Southern Pacific made settlement possible and foreclosure was averted with the consent and by the desire of the Government.

Counsel argue, however, that if foreclosure had not been averted the Central Pacific might have been acquired by the United States, or by purchasers not subject to the control of the Southern Pacific Company, unless it was acquired by that company or in its interest. In other words, counsel seem to realize that the Southern Pacific might have been a bidder at the foreclosure sale. If that had come to pass, and the property had been struck off in the Government foreclosure to the Southern Pacific Company, would the Government have been thereafter in a position to contest the legality of the acquisition of the property by the Southern Pacific Company?

Or let us assume that the Central Pacific had defaulted in its payment of the twenty notes to the Government, maturing semi-annually over a period of ten years. The Southern Pacific was the guarantor of the bonds which secured those notes. It would have been compelled to supply any deficit, in interest or principal, and to look to the Central Pacific for reimbursement. If in so doing, it took over the Central Pacific road, could it have been claimed that in pursuing its strictly legal remedy, it was entering into a combination in violation of the Sherman Act?

Counsel treat a transaction involving $116,000,000 as an every-day occurrence. We do not doubt that the Government would have been able to purchase the property, but there is no evidence whatever that any one else had any desire or expectation of acquiring the Central Pacific. It is very clear that the English and Dutch stockholders did not want to operate the property; they had purchased the shares as an investment, and they were anxious above all things to see the property put upon a firm footing.

Therefore, this argument of counsel for the Government is narrowed down to the contention that we averted Government ownership by paying the Central Pacific debt, that is, by doing precisely what the Government desired. Is the Government now to say to us that as we paid the debt at its request and upon its desire, in point of fact we did it to avert threatened competition through foreclosure, and that therefore our acquisition of the property is illegal under the Anti-Trust Act? Unless this position is sound there is nothing in the point, and we are ready to take the decision of the court upon it.

Even less tenable than the argument last stated is the contention of counsel for the Government that competition between the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad was directly, immediately, and substantially threatened continuously from 1866 to 1899.

The Central Pacific was controlled and operated from its origin by four men, and these same four men acquired the control of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in 1870. Thenceforward these roads were controlled by the same men or by the survivors of them. It is true that a large percentage of the stock of the Central Pacific was sold on the market between, say, 1878 and 1884, when the Southern Pacific was engaged in very expensive construction. But the Government has argued, and for the purposes of the present point we shall assume, that in 1884 and 1885 about twenty-five per cent. of the capital of the Central Pacific was owned by three of these four men and the widow of the fourth. It should be remembered, however, that of the other seventy-five per cent. of the shares, forty-five per cent. stood in the names of the employees of these same four men or of the company itself. In other words, forty-five per cent. of the capital stock had been sold to persons who, presumably, bought it as an investment in reliance upon the operation of the properties by the four men with whom we are here concerned.

It therefore appears that for all practical purposes these two roads have been operated together as though they had been owned, not by separate corporations but by the four men by whom they were controlled for so long a period. To talk, therefore, of a threat of competition direct, immediate and substantial over a period of thirty-three years is to give words a meaning not in accordance with ordinary usage. So far as the record shows there never was a time when there was any attempt whatever to separate the Central Pacific-Southern Pacific lines. If the Government had not been settled with, foreclosure would have occurred. In that event the lines might have come into the hands of the owners of the Southern Pacific Company, or they might have passed into other hands. This is remote possibility and all conjecture; what is certain and established beyond cavil is that there was no one ready, able or willing except the Southern Pacific Company to meet the requirements of the Government settlement, and thereby to acquire the Central Pacific lines.

XXIV.

The purely theoretical nature of the present suit is shown by the complete absence of complaint on the part of shippers or the public generally.

We have listed, pp. 279-280, supra, the names of the nineteen witnesses called by the Government in this case. Thirteen of the number are railroad men—four with the Southern Pacific, five with the Union Pacific, and four with other roads. Not a single witness was called who protested on behalf of shippers or the public generally against the manner in which the Southern Pacific Company operates its system. On the contrary, the testimony is all the other way, and as we have repeatedly shown, points out the disastrous consequences that would attend dismemberment.

> "The situation is indeed singular, and we may wonder at it, wonder that the despotism of the corporation, so baneful to the world in the representation of the Government, did not produce protesting victims. . . .
>
> We are unable to see that the public interest will be served by yielding to the contention of the Government respecting the dissolution of the company or the separation from it of some of its subsidiaries; and we do see in a contrary conclusion a risk of injury to the public interest. . . . And in submission to the policy of the law and its fortifying prohibitions the public interest is of paramount regard."
> Steel Corporation Case, 251 U. S. 449, 457.

Judge Hook observes "that this case of the Government, unlike others of similar character, finds little, if any, support in testimony from complaining shippers or the public generally" (239 Fed. 1006; VI R. 2336).

XXV.

In its last analysis the relief here sought is experimental and not judicial in its nature. The Government does not seek the destruction of a new and unlawfully created condition which took the place of an old and natural one; it seeks the destruction of an old and natural condition in order that it may create by a new and untried experiment a condition which has no prototype.

The obvious purpose of a suit under the restraint of commerce clause of the Anti-Trust Act is to restore the existence of an old and natural condition which has been destroyed by the substitution of a new and artificial condition unlawfully created. This is usually, if not invariably, accomplished by the destruction of the new condition so unlawfully created.

In dealing with such cases, courts are engaged in administering relief entirely judicial in its nature. They are ascertaining (a) that an old and natural condition did exist; (b) that it was superseded by a new and artificial condition; (c) that the latter is unlawful; and, finally, (d) that they can restore the old condition by destroying the new.

This suit does not present the case of an old and natural condition which has been superseded. We have an old and natural condition which never has been superseded; a condition which has existed from the origin of the properties. The court, therefore, is not asked to ascertain what the old condition was and to restore it. No court can restore what has never been displaced. What the Government asks is the destruction of the old condition and the substitution in its place of a new condition, experimental in character, which has no prototype.

> "Our present purpose is . . . practical decision upon existing conditions, that we may not by their disturbance produce, or even risk, consequences of a concern that cannot now be computed."
> Steel Corporation Case, 251 U. S. 444.

In asking the court to engage in the creation of experimental conditions which have never existed, we submit the Government asks for relief which is not judicial in its nature.

XXVI.

Matters of subsidiary importance.

(a) The price paid in 1899 by the Southern Pacific Company for Central Pacific shares was not excessive.

In endeavoring to give a sinister aspect to the reorganization of the Central Pacific in 1899 as one undertaken and accomplished with a view to suppress commerce, counsel for the Government argued that the price paid by the Southern Pacific Company for the Central Pacific stock was excessive. The shares of the Central Pacific were taken over by the Southern Pacific at the price of $125 per share: (a) $100 in par value of the stock of the Southern Pacific and $25 per share in bonds secured by the Central Pacific shares so acquired by the Southern Pacific in the reorganization. The argument of counsel carries with it the underlying assumption that the stock of the Southern Pacific was salable at par and presumably that the company was paying dividends. There is no evidence in respect of either fact in the case and we might therefore rely upon technical grounds alone, and say that there is no evidence of the market value of Southern Pacific shares or that the Southern Pacific Company had paid dividends before that time, or at all. We would not feel justified, however, in invoking such a technical rule, if we did not know the facts, viz., that in January and February, 1899, the price of Southern Pacific shares ranged from $36 to $41 per share and that the company never paid a dividend until October 1, 1905.

(b) Neither the Northern Division of the Southern Pacific Railroad nor its Coast Line opened in 1901 bears upon the issues here involved.

Upon the oral argument, we mentioned the fact that in the early days of the Northern Division of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, that is to say, prior to 1885, the Northern Division (p. 68, supra) was operated independently; in other words, the general manager of that division—which might be said to be a local road—reported directly to the executive officers of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, who were, of course, Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins and Crocker, rather than to Mr. A. N. Towne, who was the general manager of the system then operated as "Central Pacific and Leased Lines".

In a passing reference to this situation, we made the point, in the court below, that the Northern Division was utterly unrelated to the lines which give rise to the controversy in this case, which we now repeat and support by a reference to the maps on pp. 43 and 68, supra.

Judge Hook referred to the Northern Division as follows:

> "Up to 1885 all the Southern Pacific railroads, including the main line to New Orleans (with an unimportant exception), were officially . . . operated by the Central Pacific as part of its system" (239 Fed. 1000; VI R. 2330).

In his closing argument, in the court below, counsel for the Government replied that the Northern Division was of much consequence because it finally grew into the coast line (p. 276, supra), and that it was in proof that the coast line carried the great bulk of traffic from San Francisco via Los Angeles to Yuma and thence on over the Sunset-Gulf route; in other words, he practically argued that we are not dealing with the Goshen-Mojave-Los Angeles line, but with the coast line. All this is readily answered by the circumstance that the Southern Pacific construction involved is the Sunset-Gulf line, built under the Texas and Pacific Act, which empowered the Southern Pacific to build from near the Tehachapi Pass via Los Angeles to Yuma. It is therefore clear that the coast line has nothing whatever to do with the question with which we are now concerned. This is rendered even more certain by the fact that the coast line was not opened until 1901 (p. 276, supra), more than two years after the alleged combination of February 20, 1899.

(c) In considering the estoppels against the Government arising out of the settlement of 1899, it is of no consequence whether the provisions thereof which were designed to protect the Government were in the first instance suggested by Mr. Speyer or by the Government itself.

One argument of counsel in respect of the settlement with the Government not elsewhere dealt with, deserves passing notice. The point is made that the plan to which the Government agreed was suggested by Mr. Speyer and that none of its provisions were asked for or exacted by the Government. From this, counsel argue that the Government, although it took advantage of the provisions obviously designed for its protection and benefit, is not subject to the considerations which give rise to estoppel, because the provisions for its benefit were not asked for or exacted by it, but were offered to it voluntarily. We had supposed that estoppel proceeded upon other considerations and that it arose sometimes from benefits obtained whether asked or not, and sometimes because a change of position would operate as a fraud upon the other contracting party. We submit that the distinction that counsel seeks to import into this case has no foundation in law or morals, and that whether or not the Government asked for the protection which it received, it is bound by the consequences of the protection which it accepted and of which it has enjoyed the benefit.

(d) The powers of the Commission under the Act of July 7, 1898, were limited in those particulars only which are expressed in the act. In respect of matters not so limited the Commission had what the act gave it, "full power" in the matter.

Counsel has failed to realize the significance and purpose as well as the plenary power of the Commission created by the Act of July 7, 1898.

There were to be limitations upon its power, but these were all expressed. "No other conditions than these were prescribed" (Judge Hook, VI R. 2332). If there had been any intention on the part of Congress to exclude the possibility of the acquisition of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific Company, that limitation would have been imposed in terms by the act.

It is true that refunding measures had failed of passage, but that does not establish the fact that they failed of passage because Congress was unalterably and irrevocably or otherwise opposed to the acquisition of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific. Indeed, it was a case of many men, many minds. Some had one view, some had another. And, as it was all summed up in Senator Gear's report of 1897 (p. 144, supra), it was impossible, with all the public business before Congress, to reconcile all views upon this subject and to agree upon a plan involving many details.

The first measure for the appointment of the commission was introduced January 13, 1897 (p. 139, supra), and dealt with the indebtedness of both the Union Pacific and Central Pacific.

This was in the last days of President Cleveland's second administration and just before President McKinley took office.

The first measure for the appointment of the Commission introduced during President McKinley's administration was presented March 16, 1897, and dealt with the Central Pacific's indebtedness alone (p. 140, supra). This is the measure which (after amendments) became a law July 7, 1898, and it is quite evident that Congress, long tired of vainly seeking a modus operandi for the settlement of the indebtedness consistent with the divergent views in Congress, and the imperative and engrossing demands of other public business, determined to entrust the whole matter to the administration and to give to the President and three members of his Cabinet "full power to settle the indebtedness" (I R. 51), subject only to those limitations which were stated in the act. In other words, Congress determined to sink the divergent views held in the two Houses and to confide the matter to the judgment, discretion and authority of three members of the President's Cabinet, with "full power" to act if and when such action was approved by the President.

This view of the case is fully supported by the attitude of Senator Morgan, who gave his support to the passage of the Act of July 7, 1898, without attempting to impose any limitations upon the power of the Commission except those stated in the act.

If it had been intended that there should have been any other limitations, it is reasonably to be supposed that Senator Morgan, long acquainted with the subject-matter of the legislation, would have made an attempt further to limit the powers of the Commission. That he did not do so is of controlling importance and significance.

All of the proceedings in Congress prior to July 7, 1898, may be appropriately referred to in order to ascertain the grasp of this subject-matter which was possessed by Congress; and when we realize the full grasp it had of the subject, we will be able to give true significance to the particulars of the terms of the settlement on which no limitation was put. Chief among these is the matter of the future relation of the Southern Pacific Company to the Central Pacific lines. And we may say again that the whole matter was summed up by Speaker Cannon when he said (p. 148, supra) that, by the enactment of the law, the Commission was authorized to arrange for the settlement of the debt "with the Southern Pacific or with the Union Pacific or with the Rock Island, or with the Northwestern or with anybody".

(c) Because of the 30 years' de facto unification of the properties, this case is in a class apart.

In the consideration of this case, and particularly in respect of the claims of suppression of competition and discrimination against the Union Pacific, it is to be recalled that we are dealing with a condition of thirty years de facto existence. In many cases under the Anti-Trust Act, courts have had occasion to consider unification of recent date, and they have had occasion in connection therewith to say that what is happening at the present moment may not happen in the future. In our case, however, we have a history of thirty years to draw upon, to show that during this long period there has been neither suppression of competition nor unfair treatment of the Union Pacific.

(f) Testimony contained in Report of Pacific Railroad Commission is not competent evidence of facts therein narrated.

Counsel for the Government quote testimony which the Pacific Railroad Commission reported in 1887 as evidence given before that body by the President of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. It is, we think, very well understood that testimony reported by a Congressional Committee is not receivable as evidence: (a) either as to the fact that the testimony was given, or (b) as to the truth of the facts said to have been testified to by the witness. [See, United States v. Reading Co., 183 Fed. 427, 442; Parks Estate, 29 Utah 257; 81 Pac. 83; Stetson v. Stetson, 146 N. Y. S. 245].

It is true, and we so concede and claim, that it is proper for the court to resort to all legislative proceedings and executive action so far as they bear upon any of the issues of this case. (See 7 Encyc. of the U. S. Supreme Court Reports, 687, where an abundance of authority on this point will be found.)

PLEADINGS	1–3
DECISION OF THE DISTRICT COURT	3–5
ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR	5–9
INTRODUCTORY OUTLINE	9–18
FIRST ASSIGNMENT	18–118
In February, 1899, when this combination was formed, the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad were existing railroads naturally competitive for an enormous volume of interstate traffic, and the combination between them unreasonably, directly, substantially, and wholly prevented and destroyed competition between them, and continues to do so, and the combination artificially created a monopoly to the public injury	18
1st. The Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad are competitive and have been so continuously since 1883	19–23
2d. The area as to which they are competitive is large, and the volume of competitive freight is enormous	23–33
3d. The combination in February, 1899, unreasonably restrained this competition	33–109
4th. The combination also produced a monopoly	109–118
SECOND ASSIGNMENT	119–162
The Pacific Railroad laws imposed on the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad and on the franchise of the Union Pacific Railroad the reciprocal duty of the one railroad not to discriminate against the other in favor of any other railroad, but to exert together in normal voluntary cooperation all the natural forces of a single railroad naturally competing with the parallel Southern Pacific Railroad, and the systematic and preconcerted discrimination which the Southern Pacific company in operating the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad has practiced against the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad is a violation of those laws; and this combination between the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad furnishing the incentive of self-interest to discriminate against the Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and so to violate those laws, imposed on the Central Pacific Railroad an unreasonable and unlawful restraint to the injury

of the public and to the defeat of the purpose of those laws, which was to create and develop three separate, competitive systems of railroad to the Pacific coast, with all the advantages that would come to the public from three railroads which were competitive..... 119-120
1st. The Central Pacific Railroad was under a duty not to discriminate against the Union Pacific Railroad..... 120-132
2d. The combination into the Southern Pacific company which created the lively incentive to discriminate against the Union Pacific Railroad was in itself violative of that duty, even if no actual discrimination occurred..... 132-136
3d. There has been long continued discrimination against the Union Pacific Railroad as a result of the combination..... 136-162
THIRD ASSIGNMENT..... 162-196
The payment by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of its debt to the United States and the transactions leading thereto did not exempt the Southern Pacific Company from the provisions of the Sherman Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, or permit that company to make a combination which otherwise would be one in restraint of trade, because (1) the settlement commission did not seek any guaranty by the Southern Pacific Company, (2) the contract of settlement did not require such a guaranty, (3) the United States received only payment of a debt already due and adequately secured, (4) neither the commission, nor the President, nor the Congress purported to give this company a special indulgence to make a combination in restraint of trade, prohibited as a crime by general law to all other corporations, and (5) such a special indulgence or advance pardon is beyond the constitutional power of the commission, the President, and the Congress..... 163-164
1st. The action taken by the Congress, the President, and the settlement commission, showed no intention to construe the Antitrust Act, or to grant any special indulgence or advance pardon to the Southern Pacific Company to violate it..... 165-187
2d. The commission, the President, and the Congress had no power under the Constitution to grant such an indulgence or advance pardon..... 187-189
3d. A construction put by these functionaries of the Government, either upon the Antitrust Act, or upon the Act under which the commission was appointed, would not be binding upon this court or a guide to it..... 189-192
4th. No estoppel runs against the United States when it is seeking, as here, to enforce the criminal law..... 192-196

Page.

FOURTH ASSIGNMENT..... 196–234

The Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad were never, prior to February 20, 1899, a single railroad or system, but on the contrary were always two distinct railroads; (1) separately projected by separate and unrelated groups of men; (2) separately aided by gifts of public lands and loans of the public credit under acts of Congress to promote these two separate competitive systems of railroad between the Atlantic Ocean and the Central United States on the east, and the Pacific Ocean on the west, and enacted prior to 1867 and before any person interested in the one railroad was interested in the other; (3) separately owned by separate corporations organized by separate groups of men; (4) separately constructed at the expense of and for these separate corporations; (5) separately leased by these separate corporations under separate leases, making the amount of rent dependent on the net earnings of the separate railroads; (6) separately controlled by boards of directors, some of whom were always diverse, and a majority of whom were diverse in all but five years between 1865 and 1899; and (7) separately stock owned, always to a substantial extent, and from 1883 to 1899 to the extent of more than a majority of the capital stock in each separate corporation, held by widely scattered stockholders in the United States and Europe..... 197–234

1st. The two railroads were separately projected by separate and unrelated groups of men..... 198–206

2d. The two railroads were separately aided by gifts of public lands and loans of the public credit under acts of Congress to promote these two separate, competitive systems of railroad between the Atlantic Ocean and the central United States on the east, and the Pacific Ocean on the west, and enacted prior to 1867, and before any person interested in the one railroad was interested in the other..... 207–211

3d. These two railroads were separately owned by separate corporations organized by separate groups of men. 211–212

4th. These two railroads were separately constructed at the expense of and for these separate corporations..... 212–216

5th. These two railroads were separately leased by these separate corporations under separate leases, making the amount of rent dependent on the net earnings of the separate railroads..... 217–220

6th. These two corporations were separately controlled by boards of directors, some of whom were always diverse, and a majority of whom were diverse in all but five years between 1865 and 1899..... 221

FOURTH ASSIGNMENT—Continued. Page.
7th. These two corporations were separately stock owned always to a substantial extent, and from 1883 to 1899 to the extent of more than a majority of the capital stock in each corporation held by widely scattered stockholders in the United States and in Europe..... 221-234
FIFTH ASSIGNMENT..... 234-253
The Southern Pacific Co. on February 20, 1899, had no contractual or property, or vested interest, direct or indirect, in the Central Pacific Railroad, because (1) the purported lease of February 17, 1885, by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. was void for lack of power in that company to make, it both under the laws of California and under the laws of the United States, the sovereignty from which it derived its franchises; (2) in 1893 this lease was canceled and the new purported lease then given was equally void for the same reason; and (3) the leasehold interest was subject to immediate destruction by the foreclosure of the underlying lien of the United States..... 234-236
1st. The purported lease of February 7, 1885, by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. was void for lack of power in that company to make it, both under the laws of the State of California and under the laws of the United States, the sovereignty from which it derived its franchises..... 237-249
2d. In 1893 this lease was canceled and the new purported lease then given was equally void for the same reason. 249-251
3d. The leasehold interest was subject to immediate destruction by the foreclosure of the underlying lien of the United States..... 252-253
SIXTH ASSIGNMENT..... 253-283
Even if the Southern Pacific Company had had some control over the Central Pacific Railroad before the Sherman Anti-trust Act was passed, this would not render lawful a combination for the increase and perpetuation of that control, formed after this Act was passed..... 253-258
The additional defenses alleged by the defendants which were not discussed in the opinions in the district court.. 258
1st. In the case of the United States against the Union Pacific Railroad Company the court did not adjudge expressly or by inference that it was not unlawful for the Southern Pacific Company to hold the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company..... 259
(a) The court made no decision on this question.... 261-263
(b) Indispensable parties for such a decision were absent..... 263-265
(c) The effect of a decision in such a case is limited to what was actually decided..... 265-271

SIXTH ASSIGNMENT—Continued. Page.
2d. The United States is not estopped by any inconsistent position taken in the Union Pacific case..... 271
3d. The United States is not barred by absence of complaint of this restraint of trade in the Union Pacific case..... 272–273
4th. The petition is not barred by laches..... 273
(a) There has been no unreasonable delay or laches in bringing the suit at bar..... 273–274
(b) Laches by a sovereign is not a defense to a petition to enforce a criminal law..... 274–275
5th. The lapse of more than five years since the formation of this combination is not a bar..... 275–283
(a) This is not an indictment, information, suit, or prosecution for a penalty or forfeiture..... 277–281
(b) The occurrence of an offense more than five years ago does not bar a proceeding to prevent the continuance of it hereafter..... 281–282
CONCLUSION..... 283
This combination is unlawful, and its continuance should be prevented..... 283–286

In the Supreme Court of the United States.

OCTOBER TERM, 1920.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, APPELLANT,
v.
SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, UNION TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK, et al. } No. 21.

APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF UTAH.

BRIEF FOR APPELLANT.

This is an appeal from a decree dismissing a petition to dissolve a combination as unlawful under the Sherman Antitrust Act and for relief under the Pacific Railroad laws.

PLEADINGS.

This is a petition filed on February 11, 1914, by the United States against the Southern Pacific Company, the Central Pacific Railway Company, the Union Trust Company of New York, and the officers and directors of the Southern Pacific Company for relief under the Sherman Antitrust Act of July 2, 1890, and under the Pacific Railroad laws, against the continuance of a monopoly and of a combination in restraint of trade, formed by the Southern Pacific Company by acquiring all the capital stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company and in its successor, the Central Pacific Railway Company, pursuant to a plan promulgated February 20, 1899, at which time the Southern Pacific Company already held all the stock of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

The defenses presented by the answer may be summarized as follows:

1. The two lines made by the Central Pacific Railroad and its connections and the Southern Pacific Railroad and its connections are not and have not been natural competitors (28).

2. Competition between the two lines has not been restrained (29).

3. The defendants have not monopolized or attempted to monopolize commerce (30).

4. The defendants have not violated the Pacific Railroad laws by failing to operate the Central Pacific Railroad with the Union Pacific Railroad as one connected, continuous line, or by discriminating against the Union Pacific Railroad (31).

5. The two lines composed of the Southern Pacific Railroad and its connections and the Central Pacific Railroad and its connections were built, extended, controlled, and operated as one property (36).

6. The United States is estopped from maintaining this petition by its conduct in connection with the settlement of the debt of the Central Pacific Railroad Company (36).

7. The decree in the case of the United States against the Union Pacific Railroad Company is res adjudicata against the present petition (45).

8. The United States is barred by its laches (46).

9. The United States is barred under the statute of limitations by the lapse of more than five years since the accrual of the causes complained of (46).

DECISION OF THE DISTRICT COURT.

This case was heard in the first instance in the district court by Judges Sanborn, Hook, and Carland, on evidence and exhibits taken wholly before an examiner and submitted in print to the court. A decree was entered dismissing the petition pursuant to the opinion of Judge Hook, Judge Sanborn concurring and Judge Carland dissenting.

To quote from the dissenting opinion, "it is difficult to determine from the opinion of the majority exactly upon what ground or grounds the bill in this case is dismissed" (2336).

The opinion of the majority describes the physical relation of the two railroads (2328), the acquisition of control over the Southern by the promoters of the Central (2329), the control by these promoters over the construction of the two railroads, the operation of the Southern by the Central as lessee; the leasing of the two to the Southern Pacific Company (2330), the consequent absence of competition (2330), the acceptance of the securities of the Southern Pacific Company in 1899 by the commission on the collection of the Pacific Railroad debt (2332), and leaves it open to conjecture on what ground the dismissal is based.

The majority opinion gives no effect to the difference of ownership of the two railroads at all times prior to 1899, or to the invalidity of the leases under the Acts of Congress (and holds immaterial their invalidity under the State laws), or to the obligations to compete under the terms of the leases. It fails to consider the principle that the existence of relations restraining competition between two railroads before 1890 would not validate a new combination made in 1899.

The minority opinion, on the other hand, says:

> It seems to be conceded that but for the common control there would be competition.
>
> There is natural competition which is suppressed by reason of the control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific.
>
> The fact that prior to the passage of the antitrust law there had been a practical control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific through a leasing arrangement in no way validates the present combination, if it be unlawful.
>
> The evidence in the record in my opinion establishes beyond question that the Southern Pacific extending from San Francisco Bay to New Orleans, with its steamship connection to New York, is a natural competitor of the Central Pacific, both as to California-Atlantic Seaboard freight, and central and western United States freight, to and from California.

It follows that the free flow of interstate commerce is restrained.

I do not think the evidence shows that the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific were created originally and have always continued to be one system. They have always been and are now operated as separate systems.

The settlement by the United States of the debt of the Central Pacific in 1899 can not be held to estop the United States from insisting at this time that the combination between the two roads is in violation of the antitrust act.

Finally, I am unable to reconcile the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of U. S. v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S. 61, with the conclusion reached by the majority in this case. The Union Pacific and the Central Pacific constitute one transcontinental line from Omaha, Nebr., to the Pacific coast.

If it is unlawful for the Union Pacific, being one section of the through line to control the Southern Pacific, why is it not unlawful for the Southern Pacific to control the other section of the through line?

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

The United States of America, the petitioner, assigns as the errors in the proceedings and final decree entered March 9, 1917, in the above-entitled cause, on which errors it will rely in the prosecution of its appeal from said decree, that a decree should not have been entered dismissing the petition, but that, on the contrary, a decree should have been entered granting relief to the petitioner to dissolve the combination and monopoly complained of, and to prevent the further infraction of the Pacific Railroad laws, and for greater particularity the petitioner assigns that said errors were committed in failing in said proceedings and decree to give sufficient consideration and effect to the matters of law and matters of fact apparent in the record as follows, namely:

First. In February, 1899, when this combination was formed, the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad were existing railroads naturally competitive for an enormous volume of interstate traffic, and the combination between them unreasonably, directly, substantially, and wholly prevented and destroyed competition between them, and continues to do so, and the combination artificially created a monopoly to the public injury (infra, p. 18).

Second. The Pacific Railroad laws imposed on the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad and on the franchise of the Union Pacific Railroad, the reciprocal duty of the one railroad not to discriminate against the other in favor of any other railroad, but to exert together in normal voluntary cooperation all the natural forces of a single railroad naturally competing with the parallel Southern Pacific Railroad, and the systematic and preconcerted discrimination which the Southern Pacific Company in operating the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad has practiced against the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad is a violation of those laws; and this combination between the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad furnishing the incentive of self-interest to discriminate against the Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and so to violate those laws, imposed on the Central Pacific Railroad an unreasonable and unlawful restraint to the injury of the public and to the defeat of the purpose of those laws, which was to create and develop three separate competitive systems of railroad to the Pacific coast, with all the advantages that would come to the public from three railroads which were competitive (infra, p. 119).

Third. The payment by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of its debt to the United States and the transactions leading thereto did not exempt the Southern Pacific Company from the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act of July 2, 1890, or permit that company to make a combination which otherwise would be one in restraint of trade, because (1) the settlement commission did not seek any guaranty by the Southern Pacific Company, (2) the contract of settlement did not require such a guaranty, (3) the United States received only payment of a debt already due and adequately secured, (4) neither the commission, nor the President, nor the Congress purported to give this company a special indulgence to make a combination in restraint of trade, prohibited as a crime by general law to all other corporations, and (5) such a special indulgence or advance pardon is beyond the constitutional power of the commission, the President, and the Congress (infra, p. 162).

Fourth. The Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad were never, prior to February 20, 1899, a single railroad or system, but, on the contrary, were always two distinct railroads, (1) separately projected by separate and unrelated groups of men, (2) separately aided by gifts of public lands and loans of the public credit under acts of Congress to promote these two separate, competitive systems of railroad between the Atlantic Ocean and the central United States on the east and the Pacific Ocean on the west, and enacted prior to 1867, and before any person interested in the one railroad was interested in the other, (3) separately owned by separate corporations organized by separate groups of men, (4) separately constructed at the expense of and for these separate corporations, (5) separately leased by these separate corporations under separate leases, making the amount of rent dependent on the net earnings of the separate railroads, (6) separately controlled by boards of directors, some of whom were always diverse, and a majority of whom were diverse in all but five years between 1865 and 1899, and (7) separately stock owned, always to a substantial extent, and from 1883 to 1899 to the extent of more than a majority of the capital stock in each separate corporation, held by widely scattered stockholders in the United States and in Europe (infra, p. 196).

Fifth. The Southern Pacific Company on February 20, 1899, had no contractual, or property, or vested interest, direct or indirect, in the Central Pacific Railroad, because (1) the purported lease of February 17, 1885, by the Central Pacific Railroad Company was void for lack of power in that company to make it, both under the laws of California and under the laws of the United States, the sovereignty from which it derived its franchises, (2) in 1893 this lease was canceled and the new purported lease then given was equally void for the same reason, and (3) the leasehold interest was subject to immediate destruction by the foreclosure of the underlying lien of the United States (infra, p. 234).

Sixth. Even if the Southern Pacific Company had had some control over the Central Pacific Railroad before the Sherman Antitrust Act was passed, this would not render lawful a combination for the increase and perpetuation of that control, formed after this act was passed (infra, p. 253).

INTRODUCTORY OUTLINE.

The combination which the Government seeks to dissolve was made pursuant to a plan promulgated February 20, 1899.

In 1852 the project to build railroads to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans across the United States resulted in an act of the legislature of California to grant a right of way to the United States through the State for this purpose.

In 1861 the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California was incorporated to construct a railroad from Sacramento to the eastern boundary of California.

In 1862 and 1864 Congress passed the Pacific Railroad laws, which incorporated the Union Pacific Railroad Company to build a railroad from the Missouri River westward, and authorized the Central Pacific Railroad Company to build eastward to a meeting point. These acts (1) empowered these two companies to issue first mortgage bonds at the rate of $16,000, $32,000, and $48,000 per mile, dependent upon the character of the country and (2) granted to them an equal amount of bonds of the United States for the payment of which, the United States was secured by a lien second only to the first mortgage bonds, and (3) granted them 20 square miles of public lands for each linear mile of railroad constructed.

These acts directed in return (1) that these two railroads should, as far as the Government and the public were concerned, be operated as one continuous line, and (2) that neither should discriminate in favor of either, or against either.

The promoters of the Central Pacific Railroad were Leland Stanford, Collis P. Huntington, Mark Hopkins, and Charles Crocker. They acquired a large part of the capital stock of this company. There was always a substantial amount of this stock owned by others.

Between 1864 and 1869, this railroad, and the Western Pacific Railroad (which was afterwards consolidated with it), was constructed from San Francisco Bay to a junction with the Union Pacific Railroad at Ogden, Utah, thus completing a line of railroad from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean, running for some distance near the forty-first parallel of latitude.

In 1865, pursuant to a project for through routes via the thirty-second and thirty-fifth parallels of latitude, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was organized by an entirely different group of men for the purpose of constructing a railroad from San Francisco Bay via San Diego to the eastern boundary of California, to connect with a contemplated railroad from that point to the Mississippi River.

In 1866, Congress passed an Act to incorporate the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company to construct a railroad near the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude from Springfield, Mo., to the Pacific Ocean. This Act authorized the Southern Pacific Railroad to connect with the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad near the eastern boundary of California, and gave to both of these companies a subsidy of public lands.

In 1867, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company changed its route to turn eastward without going as far south as San Diego. In 1870, Congress and the California Legislature ratified this change.

In 1871, Congress passed an Act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company to construct a railroad near the thirty-second parallel of latitude from Marshall, Tex., via El Paso, Tex., to the Pacific Ocean at San Diego, and to connect on the east with existing railroads, and on the west with the Southern Pacific Railroad. This Act authorized the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to construct a railroad from Tehachapi Pass to a junction with the Texas Pacific Railroad at the eastern boundary of California. This act also gave both companies a subsidy of public lands. It authorized the Texas Pacific Railroad to consolidate with other railroads, provided that they were not competing lines. These several railroads accepted these several acts and undertook the duties imposed by them.

So were launched, with Government aid, three projects for competing lines of railroad to the Pacific Ocean, one of them dependent on the Central, and two of them dependent on the Southern to reach the more settled part of California.

The promoters of the Central perceived the impending competition from the Southern, and in 1870 acquired a controlling amount of the stock of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Before 1885 they had acquired all its stock.

By 1872, the Central had extended a southerly branch, from its main line, to Goshen in the San Joaquin Valley.

When the promoters of the Central acquired control of the Southern in 1870, its line extended southerly from San Francisco to Gilroy. It was projected from this point to a point in the San Joaquin Valley near Goshen, and thence southerly to the two connections, one with the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad and the other, with the expected Texas & Pacific Railroad.

The section to connect Gilroy with Goshen was never completed. Instead, the construction was taken up in 1872 at Goshen at the end of the branch of the Central and without interruption the line was completed southerly through Tehachapi Pass, and thence one fork to a junction with the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad at The Needles on the Colorado River at the eastern boundary of the State, and the other fork to the southeasterly corner of the State opposite Yuma, Ariz., thence across Arizona and New Mexico to a junction with the Texas & Pacific Railroad at Sierra Blanca, Tex. and to a connection at El Paso, Tex., with the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railroad, thus eventually completing a through line to New Orleans.

As the sections of this southern line were built they were leased temporarily to the Central.

It is not unlikely that the first mortgage bonds and the Government loaned bonds yielded enough money to construct the Central.

Under the terms of the acts of 1862 and 1864, the Central was not obliged to pay currently the interest on the Government bonds. It paid substantial dividends, and its stock acquired a good market value.

On the strength of the dividend showing, the promoters of the Central sold the greater part of its stock. These sales began as early as 1877. By 1883, a majority of the stock had been sold, and was held by strangers, and to a large amount in Europe.

The stock certificates were issued, largely in the names of office employees. They had attached to them dividend warrants payable to bearer, similar to coupons on a bond. This, coupled with the fact that there was a stockholder's liability for debts of the corporation, deterred the recording of transfers of shares. This left the apparent stock-voting power in the promoters and these office employees.

Although the competition between the two lines was imminent, it did not become possible to any extent until 1881.

In 1881, the Southern Pacific Railroad made a junction with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad at Deming, N. Mex. Then, for the first time, competition between the Southern and the Central in the transportation of transcontinental freight became possible. In 1882, the Southern made a junction with the Texas & Pacific Railroad at Sierra Blanca, Tex., thus making another through route. In 1883, the direct line of the Southern in connection with the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railroad and its eastern connections was completed through to New Orleans.

In 1883, the Southern made its junction with the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad at The Needles, and so completed another railroad (now the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe) to the east.

All these southern lines were dependent upon the Southern Pacific to reach California.

The Union Pacific was dependent on the Central Pacific to reach California.

On these several dates, when competition first became possible, the Central was owned by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the stock in it was in widely scattered ownerships, and the Southern was owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and connecting lines, the stock of which was owned wholly or nearly so by Stanford, Huntington, Crocker, and the Hopkins estate.

This separation in ownership continued until the combination in 1899.

In 1884, the Southern Pacific Company was organized in Kentucky.

In the early part of 1885, this company acquired all the stock of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and its connecting lines to New Orleans with steamship connections to New York, but it acquired no stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

In 1885, these southern railroads purported to make a lease to the Southern Pacific Company, and the Central Pacific Railroad Company purported to make a separate lease to the Southern Pacific Company. These leases, and particularly that by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, for reasons hereinafter stated (p. 237), were void.

The terms of the lease of the Central, made the rental dependent in part upon the earnings of that railroad, so that the Southern Pacific Company was under obligation to compete for as much business as possible for the Central Pacific Railroad against the Southern Pacific Railroad.

In 1893, this lease was canceled, and a new lease (also void) was given to the Southern Pacific Company.

In 1898, the obligation of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to retire the bonds given it by the Government had matured. In July, Congress passed an act for the creation of a commission composed of the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Interior, to negotiate a settlement of this debt. This Act directed the President to foreclose the lien upon the railroad if settlement was not made within a year.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company then had outstanding (1) first-mortgage bonds amounting to about $59,000,000; (2) Government bonds, on which the Government was protected by the second lien, about $58,000,000; and (3) common stock, about $67,000,000. Its average earnings for 10 years had been sufficient to enable the company to pay 4½ per cent annually on the $117,000,000, bonded debt but no dividends on stock.

If the Government lien was foreclosed, it would destroy the lease whether valid or void, and the Central Pacific Railroad, then already in a separate corporate and essential ownership from the Southern Pacific Railroad, would pass into the operating control of persons not associated with its competitor. To avoid this, a plan was devised for refunding first mortgages sufficient in amount to take care of the existing first mortgage and the Government lien and some additional amounts, and for the transfer of the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company in return for stock and bonds of the Southern Pacific Company.

The plan was carried out, and the Southern Pacific Company, which never before had owned any part of the securities or stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, acquired virtually all the stock in that company and its immediate successor, the Central Pacific Railway Company, and it retained all the stock in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the connecting lines to New Orleans and New York.

This transaction, if valid, suppressed all competition and all possibility of competition between the two railroads.

The freight as to which the two lines are competitive is enormous in amount and value.

The control of the Southern Pacific Company owning a through line over the Central Pacific Railroad furnishes the incentive of personal gain to divert as much of the freight of the Central Pacific Railroad as possible from the Union Pacific Railroad to the Southern Pacific Railroad; and, responsive to this incentive, the Central Pacific Railroad, under the control of the Southern Pacific Company, has discriminated continuously against the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad, contrary to the duties imposed by the Pacific Railroad Acts.

The combination of the two railroads under one control not only restrained trade, but monopolized the interstate railroad transportation with all parts of California north of Tehachapi Pass, notwithstanding that at the time there were in existence these two railroads, separately owned and competitors for the business.

FIRST ASSIGNMENT.

In February, 1899, when this combination was formed, the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad were existing railroads naturally competitive for an enormous volume of interstate traffic, and the combination between them unreasonably, directly, substantially, and wholly prevented and destroyed competition between them, and continues to do so, and the combination artificially created a monopoly to the public injury.

(1) The Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad are competitive and have been so continuously since 1883. (2) The area as to which they are competitive is large, and the volume of competitive freight is enormous. (3) The combination in February, 1899, unreasonably restrained this competition. (4) This combination produced also a monopoly.

FIRST.

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD AND THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD ARE COMPETITIVE AND HAVE BEEN SO CONTINUOUSLY SINCE 1883.

An inspection of a railroad map of the United States is enough to show the competitive character of these two railroads with respect to the transportation of interstate freight between California, and to some extent Oregon and Nevada on the west, and all parts of the eastern half of the United States on the east.

The Central Pacific Railroad extends from San Francisco Bay to Ogden, Utah, with a branch extending north from Roseville in central California to the northern boundary of California, and to Kirk in Oregon, and a branch extending south from Lathrop in central California to Goshen, Calif., and a branch extending south from Hazen in Nevada to Mojave in California, and a branch extending northwest from Fernley in Nevada to Susanville in California, and a short line from Oak Ridge in Oregon to Natron in Oregon. At Ogden, the Central Pacific Railroad connects with the Union Pacific Railroad which extends to Omaha, Nebr., and Kansas City, Mo. The Central Pacific Railroad also connects at Ogden with the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad, which, with its allied connection, the Missouri Pacific Railroad, extends to the Missouri River. From the Missouri River connecting railroads extend to all important points in the central and eastern parts of the United States.

The Southern Pacific Railroad, in connection with other railroads controlled by the Southern Pacific Company, extends from San Francisco Bay through El Paso, Tex., to Galveston, Tex., and to New Orleans, and connects at these last two cities with steamship lines operated by the Southern Pacific Company to New York City. At El Paso, it connects with the Rock Island, so called, which runs to Omaha and to Chicago. At New Orleans, the Southern Pacific Railroad connects with a number of railroads extending to all important points in the eastern part of the United States. It owns and operates a number of branches in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and Oregon, and many in California.

The Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad, with their connections, form separate complete routes from many of the important California terminals to all the important terminals east of the Missouri River, and of the Mississippi River (Maps, P. Ex. 1, p. 1223; P. Ex. 74, p. 1671; D. Ex. 55, p. 2242).

Two railroads transporting freight to a substantial extent by different routes between two common points are naturally competitive.

United States v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324.

United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61.

United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U. S. 505.

United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S. 290.

Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 691, dictum.

United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S. 61, determined, as the fundamental point of the decision, the competitive character of these two railroads. In that case, the competitive railroads considered were the Southern Pacific on the one hand, and the Union Pacific on the other. For these competitive operations, the Union Pacific Railroad used the Central Pacific Railroad from Ogden to California, and used independent connections eastward. If the Union Pacific is competitive with the Southern Pacific, it follows inevitably that the Central Pacific is competitive with the Southern Pacific.

The witnesses for the defendant concur with those for the petitioner and admit the actual and practical competitive character (and not merely theoretic) of these two railroads. It is not in dispute. (Spence, 1018, 1079, 1080, 1084, 1097, 1164, 1166, 1171; Kruttschnitt, 774, 816, 807, 739, 805, 772, 737; Railway Guide, p. 39; P. Ex. 28, p. 1523; Stubbs, 97; P. Ex. 22, p. 1476; Stanford, 98; Lincoln, 109, 113, 122, 123, 297; Schumacher, 149, 150, 156, 164; Munroe, 371, 372; Lovett, 294, 297; Chambers, 965, 950, 968; Connor, 336; Sproule, 224, 180, 182, 199, 241, 245.)

In United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 188 Fed. 102, 124, Judge Hook, whose conclusion was approved by the Supreme Court, said (if "Central" be substituted for "Union") that—

> In a broad and substantial sense, in the sense in which the terms are used in consitutions and statutes and in railroad and business circles, the (Central) Pacific and Southern Pacific lines were parallel and competing. That they were so regarded by practical men having to do with transportation in its various phases is shown, I think, by an overwhelming mass of evidence. But, had no witness testified regarding it, we should come to the same conclusion.

The test of competitiveness is not extension for the total distance between common points. It is the actual capacity in practical operation to transport between such points, either by lines independently controlled, or with the assistance of lines controlled by others, but available in practice for the completion of the transportation.

U. S. v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 226 U. S. 61.

There is nothing that can be said in favor of the competitiveness of the Union Pacific Railroad against the Southern Pacific Railroad which can not be said for the Central Pacific Railroad. On the other hand, the Central Pacific Railroad is more effectively competitive. It is the initial or terminal line in the through route and that gives it more control than is possessed by an intermediate line. (Connor, 345; Schumacher, 154.) The firmness of this control is discussed later.

SECOND.

THE AREA AS TO WHICH THEY ARE COMPETITIVE IS LARGE, AND THE VOLUME OF COMPETITIVE FREIGHT IS ENORMOUS.

(1) The area as to which these two railroads are competitive is not much in dispute. The defendants admit that these two railroads are competitive between northern and central California on the west and Atlantic Seaboard Territory and the Middle West Territory on the east. The evidence establishes that the western area includes also Nevada, southwestern Oregon, and the southern part of California, as far south or east as Banning (Spence, 1079, 1083, 1089, 1092, 1096). Apparently, the only dispute as to this southern part of California is as to whether the division line should be drawn at Banning, or at Mojave and Santa Barbara. Mojave is on the valley line of the Southern Pacific just south of the pass through the Tehachapi Mountains, and Santa Barbara is on the coast line of the Southern Pacific in the same approximate latitude. Banning is farther south and east.

Atlantic Seaboard Territory includes everything east of a line drawn from Toronto, Ontario, through Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Wheeling, and Bristol, Tenn., north of the line of the Norfolk & Western Railway to the Atlantic Ocean. (P. Ex. 64, p. 1666; Lincoln 109; Schumacher, 143; Spence, 1035.)

Middle West Territory includes everything west of Atlantic Seaboard Territory and north of the Ohio River and the northern boundaries of Arkansas and Oklahoma, and east of the line of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad from its intersection with this northern boundary, and thence via McFarland and Belleville, Kans., and Des Moines, Iowa, to St. Paul, Minn. (Spence, 1079.)

Central Freight Association Territory is the portion of the Middle West Territory east of the Mississippi River. (P. Ex. 64, p. 1666; Schumacher, 144; Munroe, 375; Sproul, 198.)

From south of Mojave to east of the Missouri River there is a substantial movement of citrus fruits over the Central Pacific Railroad. (Spence, 1128.)

Southwestern Oregon also is in the competitive area. Probably this is not disputed. Mr. Kruttschnitt, the chairman of the executive committee of the Southern Pacific Company, testified that the competitive area extends as far north as Oregon. (Kruttschnitt 816.) The statistics of tonnage hereafter referred to show substantial movements from and to this territory over the Southern route, and all of this crosses the Central route.

Nevada also is in the competitive area. The Central route is the natural direct route for this territory, but a volume of freight, large in comparison with the entire freight of this State, has been transported from Nevada over the Southern route.

(2) The volume of freight moved over these two railroads between the territories as to which they are competitive is enormous.

Common knowledge establishes this sufficiently, but this is convincingly reinforced by the evidence.

Between these territories, in the year ending June 30, 1914, the Southern Pacific moved either through El Paso or through Ogden 1,473,135 tons, for which the revenue for this company alone was $13,799,059. (Spence 1101.)

The tables prepared by the Southern Pacific Company (P. Ex. 43–58, pp. 1648–1654; D. Ex. 62–83, pp. 2247–2256), which show certain freight movements for the year ending June 30, 1914, reduced to a single table, are as follows:

On this table the figures against "Central Pacific rails," origin or destination, include freight which originated, passed over, or was delivered on the Central Pacific Railroad, or originated or was delivered at points reached by the Central Pacific Railroad (Spence, 1052); "Oregon & Northern California" means Oregon and that portion of California north of Roseville, Davis, Elmira, Suisun, and South Vallejo; "San Francisco & Oakland" means those cities and other places whose transcontinental freight moved through San Francisco or Oakland.

The tonnage moved by the Southern Pacific Company through Ogden divided between the competitive and noncompetitive territories as follows:

	Tons.	Per cent.
Eastbound to Atlantic seaboard	154,229	20.6
Eastbound to Middle West	368,975	49.5
Eastbound to elsewhere	223,613	29.9
Total	746,807	100.0
Westbound from Atlantic seaboard	68,916	11.2
Westbound from Middle West	259,648	42.0
Westbound from elsewhere	289,361	46.8
Total	617,925	100.0

Of this eastbound Ogden tonnage, 70 per cent moved to territories as to which Ogden and El Paso are competitive gateways (Spence, 1082). Of that west bound, 53 per cent moved from such territories (Spence, 1083). The combined east and west percentage is 62.4 per cent of the total tonnage through Ogden.

The figures have not been compiled from which to make a similar comparison as to the tonnage moved through El Paso. (Spence 1083.)

The freight included in the sixteen items for movements through El Paso from or to Central Pacific rails, Nevada, Oregon, and Northern California and San Francisco and Oakland, cover freight which was moved over the Southern Pacific Railroad, notwithstanding the fact that it originated or was delivered in the territory of the Central Pacific Railroad.

Of the eastbound freight from competitive territory to Atlantic seaboard, moved through El Paso, 40 per cent originated in the territory of the Central Pacific Railroad. Of the westbound freight from Atlantic seaboard territory to competitive territory, moved via El Paso, about 52 per cent was delivered in Central Pacific Railroad territory. Of that so moved from the Middle West about 29 per cent was so delivered.

These last comparisons do not include that large volume of freight which, although not originating on the Central Pacific rails or delivered thereon, would nevertheless have had a much shorter haul if moved through Ogden.

Of the freight moved from Atlantic seaboard territory to competitive territory, via El Paso, over 41 per cent moved to or through San Francisco or Oakland. Of that so moved from Middle West territory, 18 per cent so moved. Of that so moved from the Middle West territory, 6 per cent was delivered to points north of the main line of the Central Pacific Railroad from Ogden to Sacramento.

The figures given for the El Paso gateway do not include the freight moved between California and the southern, south central, and southeast part of the United States, or the freight moved between points south and east of Banning, Calif., on the west, and all other points on the east. They include substantially only that freight for the movement of which the Central Pacific Railroad is naturally in a position to compete.

The Central Pacific Railroad is in a better position than the Southern Pacific Railroad to compete for all classes of Atlantic seaboard and Middle West freight moved to or from points north of Mojave, Calif., and the Central Pacific Railroad is in as good a position as the Southern Pacific Railroad to compete for substantially all Atlantic seaboard and Middle West freight moved to or from points north of Banning, Calif. (Spence 1105.)

There is no class of this freight which moves through El Paso which could not be moved through Ogden.

The Sunset Gulf Route because of its water haul between Galveston or New Orleans and New York is said to be unsuited to handling certain classes of freight which move through Ogden. This objection does not apply to the movement of freight over the Southern Pacific Railroad between California through El Paso, or other Texas junctions, or New Orleans, and over connecting railroads from these points. (Spence 1105.) A large amount of such freight now moves over the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Rock Island Railroad through El Paso, and a large amount of such freight moves over the Santa Fe Railroad.

The figures in evidence do not show the volume of the classes of freight that will not stand the split water and rail haul. (Eshleman 953.) It appears that there is a substantial amount of fresh fruit moving through Ogden and El Paso which does not move by the Sunset Gulf boats. Mr. Schumacher testified (159) that there are very few commodities that will not move part water and part rail.

Owing to the destruction of the records of the Southern Pacific Company the evidence is not as complete for earlier years as it is for the year ending June 30, 1914, but some information appears from outside sources.

From 1906 to 1914, the annual eastbound tonnage delivered by the Central Pacific Railroad to the Union Pacific Railroad at Ogden ranged from 472,615 tons to 623,162 tons. During the same period the annual westbound tonnage received by the Central Pacific Railroad from the Union Pacific Railroad at Ogden ranged from 501,848 tons to 672,852 tons. During this period the combined east and west bound tonnage so delivered at Ogden ranged from 1,094,716 tons to 1,263,962 tons. (P. Ex. 73, p. 1671.) During this period the annual revenue of the Union Pacific Railroad alone derived from the movement of this freight ranged from $7,400,264.89 to $8,527,389.57. Since 1870 the joint rate between the Missouri River and California terminals has been divided in the ratio of 46 per cent to the Central Pacific Railroad and 54 per cent to the Union Pacific Railroad. (Schumacher, 155; Munroe, 370; P. Ex. 33, p. 1622.)

Mr. Connor, who since 1887 has been in charge of that part of the Middle West territory which lies southeast of an imaginary line drawn from St. Louis through Danville, Ill., Terre Haute, Ind., to Detroit, Mich., and a part of the territory just south of the Ohio River, testified concerning the movement from this territory through New Orleans and through Ogden.

Between 1901 and 1908 the number of westbound carloads moved annually from this territory through New Orleans or Ogden to California by the Southern Pacific Company ranged from 2,374 to 5,073. (P. Ex. 68, p. 1669; Connor, 355, 333.) In 1912, 4,647 carloads were so moved, and about one half were moved by the Central Pacific Railroad and the other half by the Southern Pacific Railroad. (P. Ex. 69, p. 1669.)

From 1890 to 1899 the freight moved west from this territory to California via New Orleans by the Southern Pacific Company alone, amounted annually to an average of 972 carloads. In the largest year, 1898, the number was 1,942. (P. Ex. 66, p. 1668.) Mr. Connor did not have the figures showing the movement during this period over the Central Pacific Railroad. He believed that the tonnage which moved from this territory through New Orleans to California over the Southern Pacific Railroad ran as high as 65 per cent of the total movement from this territory to California (328).

He did not have the figures for the eastbound tonnage, but testified that in the fall and early winter there was a very heavy movement of canned fruits, dried fruits, lima beans, dried fish, and that class of commodities, and wine (330). He testified that there was a great variety of commodities moving from his territory in carload lots and innumerable others.

He testified that between 1899 and 1901 the tonnage from Pittsburgh via New Orleans and the Southern Pacific Railroad to California was in his judgment heavier than that moved from his territory to California (335), and that he thought that the annual tonnage from his territory to California via either the Southern Pacific Railroad or the Central Pacific Railroad in good years would be over 175,000 or 200,000 tons (336).

Mr. Sproule, the president of the Southern Pacific Company, testified that the volume of competitive traffic over the Central Pacific Railroad and over the Southern Pacific Railroad is very large (241).

The New York representatives of the Union Pacific Railroad and connecting railroads testified to the same effect. (De Friest, 306; Johnson, 311; Hall, 312.)

From this testimony and from the exhibits it is apparent that the volume of competitive freight was at the time of the combination in 1899 and still is absolutely and relatively enormous.

THIRD.

THE COMBINATION IN FEBRUARY, 1899, UNREASONABLY RESTRAINED THIS COMPETITION.

It is admitted that since the combination pursuant to the plan of February 20, 1899, there has been no competition whatever between the Central Pacific Railway Company and the Southern Pacific Company. Indeed, the defendants contend that there never has been any such competition.

This contention is based upon the alleged prior existent unity of the two railroads. In fact, there never was any such unity. This is considered at length elsewhere (infra, p. 196).

This contention of the defendant is also based on the fact that at all times prior to February 20, 1899, this competition had been successfully restrained. This fact is immaterial. This subject is dealt with elsewhere (infra, p. 253).

The defendants contend that there is inconsistency in the position taken by the United States in the Union Pacific case and in the present case, because in the former case it was alleged that prior to 1901 there was competition between the Ogden gateway and the El Paso gateway, whereas in the present case it is contended that such competition was destroyed or prevented by the combination with the Southern Pacific Company in 1899. This statement of inconsistency is based on a false assumption as to the position of the petitioner in both cases.

In the Union Pacific case, the contention was not that prior to 1901 there was competition between the Ogden gateway, as such, and the El Paso gateway. The contention was that there was competition between the Union Pacific Railroad Company operating through the Ogden gateway, and the Southern Pacific Company operating through the El Paso gateway. There is nothing in this inconsistent with the contention that there was no competition by the Central Pacific Railroad Company under the control of the Southern Pacific Company for freight to be carried through the Ogden gateway.

In the present case, it is not contended that after 1899 there was no competition against the Southern Pacific Company for freight to be carried through the Ogden gateway, but it is contended that this competition was confined to the eastern connections of the Central Pacific Railroad, and that there was no competition by the Central Pacific Railroad. There is nothing in this contention inconsistent with the contention for the petitioner in the Union Pacific case.

Actual competition at all times between the Ogden route and the El Paso route, or Sunset Gulf route, is referred to repeatedly by the witnesses for the defendant. This involves no qualification of the admission that there is no competition between the Central Pacific Railway Company and the Southern Pacific Company. It means only that the two railroads being open for business are inevitably inanimate competitors, or else that the eastern connections of the Central Pacific Railroad are competing for business which, if they get it, is carried part of the way over the Central Pacific Railroad. The immateriality of this is considered elsewhere (infra, p. 52).

It remains true that the Central Pacific Railway Company does not compete against the Southern Pacific. (Kruttschnitt 808; Munroe 374, 382; Lovett 292; Connor 336.)

This destruction of competition was a restraint of trade, as that term is used in the Act and repeatedly and consistently defined by this Court.

The contracts saved from the antitrust act by the rule of reason emphasized in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 67, and United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 179–182, are those only which would not have been regarded as contrary to the common law as restraints of trade, namely, the "normal and usual contracts to further trade by resorting to all normal methods," "contracts essential to individual freedom and the right to make which were necessary in order that the course of trade might be free." The court expressly disclaimed any intention to take out of the statute any contract or combination merely because it would have been more reasonable to permit such (221 U. S. 112). A combination between two naturally competitive railroads which relieves one completely from the competition of the other is contrary to the common law and is not a normal or usual method of trade or essential to individual freedom, and it is not made so by any imagined or actual advantages in saving of expense, in reduction of rates, or in increase of public convenience. The decisions after, as well as those before, the Standard Oil decision leave no doubt remaining as to this.

In United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, the court said:

> A combination which places railroads engaged in interstate commerce in such relation as to create a single dominating control in one corporation, whereby natural and existing competition in interstate commerce is unduly restricted or suppressed, is within the condemnation of the act (85).
> The consolidation of two great competing systems of railroad engaged in interstate commerce by a transfer to one of a dominating stock interest in the other creates a combination which restrains interstate commerce within the meaning of the statute (88).

Whatever views may have been entertained as to the extent to which private individuals or companies may go in making agreements restraining their competitive efforts, there is no doubt that it is an unreasonable restraint for public service corporations to enter into combinations directly and substantially to deprive the public of the competition naturally existing between them.

> United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26
> United States v. Pacific & Arctic Co., 228 U. S. 87.
> United States v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324.
> United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61.
> United States v. Terminal Association, 224 U. S. 383.
> Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197.
> United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U. S. 505.
> United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S. 290.
> Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Company, 130 U. S. 396, 408.

In Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co., decided in 1889, the court, in defining the common law rule, said:

> The supplying of illuminating gas [compare railroad transportation] is a business of a public nature to meet a public necessity. It is not a business like that of an ordinary corporation engaged in the manufacture of articles that may be furnished by individual > effort. Hence, while it is justly urged that those rules which say that a given contract is against public policy, should not be arbitrarily extended so as to interfere with the freedom of contract, yet in the instance of business of such character that it presumably can not be restrained to any extent whatever without prejuduce to the public interest, courts decline to enforce or sustain contracts imposing such restraint, however partial, because in contravention of public policy.

The combination of two competing lines necessarily, directly, and immediately prevents or destroys, to a substantial extent, the competition between them. The competitive effort between the two can exist no longer.

In the case at bar the restrictive effect of the combination is unusually great, because of the dependence of all other railroads upon the two railroads which were combined.

On February 20, 1899, California was a great railroad terminal for transcontinental freight. The California terminal facilities for all the railroads in the country were almost exclusively the rails of the Southern Pacific Railroad or of the Central Pacific Railroad. The only exception was the rails of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, which was first opened into San Francisco later in the same year.

If the Central Pacific Railroad and Southern Pacific Railroad were not combined, there would be competing terminal rails in the principal communities of California north of Bakersfield. These included, among others, Fresno, Tracy, Stockton, Niles, San Jose, Sacramento, and San Francisco Bay. With the two roads combined, these facilities are reduced to noncompeting ones, with the consequent effect both upon the public of California and upon the other transcontinental railroads. With the exception noted and because of the combination, one of these railroads, the Southern Pacific Company, controls all the distributing rails in all these cities and towns. The other transcontinental railroads in their competition with the Southern Pacific Railroad, were dependent upon it for terminal tracks in California. The facilities of these other railroads are rendered correspondingly unequal. To get an entrance advantageously into California they must obtain the consent of the Southern Pacific Company. This gives to the combination the same vice that was held unreasonable restraint of trade in United States v. Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis, 224 U. S. 383.

If the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railway Company were owned and operated separately, and they made an agreement between them as to interstate business that rates should not be lowered, extensions built, service improved, or effort exerted by the one against the other to get business, except with the consent of both, the agreement would be contrary to the Sherman Antitrust Act, unquestionably. The combination at bar is in essence such an agreement, but more effective.

The act of the Southern Pacific Company in acquiring all the stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company and its successor, the Central Pacific Railway Company, inevitably ended, prevented and restrained any existing competition or possibility of competition between the two companies.

As the two railroads were not in a lawful unit ownership at the time of this acquisition (see infra, pp. 196–252), it was a restraint of trade because—

(1) These two separately owned railroads were about to become free of any restrictive, combined control;

(2) To prevent competition nonexistent but immediately threatened is a restraint of trade;

(3) This restraint is not validated by the competition of other railroads;

(4) There were no peculiar benefits to the public resulting from this restraint;

(5) The benefits derived from such a restraint do not exempt it from the provisions of the antitrust act; and,

(6) The public is injured by this restraint to as great an extent at least as by the other restraints of trade by common carriers which have been held unlawful.

1. These two separately owned railroads were about to become free of any restrictive, combined control.

On July 3, 1898, after years of congressional investigation and attempts at legislation, Congress passed an act (30 St. at Large, chap. 571, p. 659) to create a commission to negotiate for the settlement of the debt of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States, and directing the President of the United States to institute foreclosure proceedings if settlement was not made within one year.

At this time the Central Pacific Railroad Company had outstanding first mortgage bonds amounting to about $59,000,000, and owed the United States a debt of about $58,000,000, secured by a lien (second only to the first mortgage bonds) for the bonds and interest thereon which the United States had loaned to the company to pay for the construction of the railroad. The company had outstanding stock of a par value of about $67,000,000. This stock was owned, except to a very limited extent, by persons other than those interested in the Southern Pacific Company, and largely in small holdings in the United States and Europe. (See infra, p. 221.) The railroad was being operated by the Southern Pacific Company under a lease which was void and unlawful (see infra, p. 237), and which was also subject to destruction by the foreclosure of the Government lien, or by the foreclosure of the first mortgages.

The railroad had earned, on an average for 10 years, enough to enable it to pay interest at 4½ per cent or better on these mortgage and lien debts, but nothing for dividends on its stock. A sale of some sort on foreclosure proceedings to be begun before July 7, 1899, was inevitable. If the United States, or the stockholders, or anyone else bought the railroad, the purchasers would hold the title free of any lease to the Southern Pacific Company, and this regardless of the validity or not of the lease.

The railroad was in existence, and equipped ready for operation. It was competitive with the railroad owned by the Southern Pacific Company, and immediately to fall into the hands of a competitor whose interests, as such, would cause vigorous competition.

It connected at Ogden with the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad and with the Union Pacific Railroad, and was the only access by rail for either to California, and was of enormous value to either or both of these railroads.

It was so vital to the business of these two railroads, that the Union Pacific Railroad Company, through the Oregon Short Line, inside of two and one-half years, acquired the controlling stock in the Southern Pacific Company, and claimed that it did so for the purpose of getting this access to California, and the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad and its ally, the Missouri Pacific Railroad, thereupon found it necessary to build a new parallel railroad (the Western Pacific) into California.

In this situation, the competition of the Central Pacific Railroad was no mere dream for the future. It was more immediately threatened than that of the undeveloped project, whose suppression was held to be unlawful in United States v. Reading Company, 226 U. S. 324.

The only way to stop this competition was for the Southern Pacific Company (Sproule, 242, 243), in defiance of the Sherman Antitrust Act, to acquire the railroad from its then owners.

The Southern Pacific Company's appreciation of the imminence and danger of this competition is shown by the price which the Southern Pacific Company was ready to pay for this railroad. By February, 1899, the first mortgage debt had become $59,453,000, and the Government second lien debt, $58,812,715.45—a total of $118,265,715.48. (Defendants' answer, Exhibit A, p. 47.) Its outstanding capital stock was $67,275,500. Its net annual operating income before the payment of fixed charges was $6,362,378.08. (Petitioner's Exhibit 35, p. 1634.) Its average net annual operating income before the payment of fixed charges for 10½ years had been $5,582,939.17. (Defendants' answer, Exhibit B, p. 71.)

During the preceding 15 years, the total dividends on capital stock had averaged four-fifths of 1 per cent a year, and during nine of these years, including the last five, no dividends had been paid.

The plan of reorganization under which the Southern Pacific Company acquired the property provided for:—

First mortgage 4 per cent, 45-year bonds	$100,000,000
Second mortgage 3½ per cent, 30-year bonds, first lien on sinking funds and lands	25,000,000
Four per cent cumulative preferred stock	20,000,000
Common stock	67,275,500
Total	212,275,500

This funding and capitalization was to provide no new money for the railroad, except that any part of the proceeds of the preferred stock not required for readjustment purposes, was to be used for improvements.

Notwithstanding this increase in funded debt, and this showing for earnings, the Southern Pacific Company agreed to purchase the common stock, par $100, at $125 per share, payable $100 in stock of the Southern Pacific Company and $25 in bonds of the Southern Pacific Company—a total of $84,094,500. In addition to this the Southern Pacific Company agreed to buy the preferred stock at par, and for this purpose to issue its own bonds as required to the extent of $20,000,000. This meant an expenditure by the Southern Pacific Company of $104,094,500 for stock in this corporation, subject to prior bonded debts of $125,000,000.

Nothing but the imminent danger of this competition could have warranted any such expenditure by the Southern Pacific Company.

The situation in 1899 was a repetition with greater emphasis of that which had led the promoters of the Central Pacific Railroad to secure in 1870 a controlling interest in the stock of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. As to this, Leland Stanford, the president of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, testified before the Pacific Railroad Commission in 1887 that when the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was controlled by those having no interest in the Central Pacific Railroad Company—

> We early saw that if that line of railroad was completed—if it crossed the Sierra Nevada Mountains—all the valleys of the State would be open to it and it would be a very serious competitor of the Central Pacific. So we tried to control it, and we have succeeded in controlling it; and the consequence is that it has never been operated to the prejudice of the Central Pacific. It became a necessity, therefore, that we should control the Southern Pacific, and when opportunity offered we availed ourselves of it and purchased the controlling interest in that road. Since then the roads have worked in entire harmony, with all the advantages of a pooling arrangement, and the advantages resulting from our system of leases. (P. 99.)

This determination to restrain competition was in harmony with the attitude of these two companies during the entire period from 1870 to 1899, and thereafter.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company in its report for the year ending June 30, 1873 (D. Ex. 23, p. 1737), stated that the active competition with the California Pacific Railroad Company for the traffic between Sacramento and San Francisco was terminated by mutual agreement between that company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company, by which the latter guaranteed certain of the bonds of the California Pacific Railroad.

On September 28, 1883 (P. Ex. 18, p. 1421; P. Ex. 71, p. 1670), and on November 8, 1883 (P. Ex.

18, p. 1424; P. Ex. 72, p. 1671), and on December 1, 1887 (P. Ex. 63, p. 1661), these companies entered into agreements with the other transcontinental railroads not dissimilar to those held to be in restraint of commerce in United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S. 290, and United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U. S. 505.

These agreements provided for maintaining the rates in force or subsequently agreed to by the parties (P. Ex. 18, 19, pp. 1422, 1423, 1426), and that the railroads would bear proportionately the subsidy paid to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which was then operating a competitive line via Panama (P. Ex. 18, 19, pp. 1423, 1427), and for the control of rates by the unanimous action of a joint committee (P. Ex. 63, pp. 1662, 1663).

On October 1, 1889 (P. Ex. 24, p. 1480; P. Ex. 62, p. 1660), this association of railroads entered into a contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company by which the railroads guaranteed the gross earnings of the steamship company on its business between New York and San Francisco to be $75,000 per month (P. Ex. 24, p. 1481), and the steamship company gave the railroad companies the fixing of rates via the steamship company's lines (P. Ex. 24, p. 1481) and exclusive control of the business of the steamship company between New York and San Francisco (P. Ex. 24, p. 1482) and for the proportionate payment to the steamship company by all the signatory railroad companies (P. Ex. 24, p. 1482).

At other times prior to 1887 these associated railroads bought or rented space from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company (Munroe, 388) to prevent competition from this line (Munroe, 389).

On December 6, 1895, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, controlled by Mr. Huntington, the president of the Southern Pacific Company (Schwerin 694, 692), and operating by water from San Francisco to Panama, entered into a contract with the Panama Railroad Company, operating by rail from Panama to Colon and thence by water to New York (P. Ex. 25, p. 1484), not dissimilar to that held to be in unreasonable restraint of commerce in United States v. Pacific & Arctic Company, 228 U. S. 87. This agreement provided for the termination, in 1898, of the existing agreement of October 1, 1872, between the contracting parties (P. Ex. 25, p. 1485), and that the steamship company should have the exclusive privilege of through billing over the Panama Railroad (P. Ex. 25, pp. 1485, 1491), and for cooperation to prevent interference or competition (P. Ex. 25, pp. 1486, 1490), and for representation by the railroad company in making any rental agreement with the transcontinental railroads (P. Ex. 25, p. 1489), and that other connecting carriers should be charged full local rates (P. Ex. 25, p. 1490).

On June 11, 1900, about one year after the combination now complained of, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company made another similar agreement with the Panama Railroad Company (P. Ex. 26, p. 1502) and a supplemental agreement (P. Ex. 27, p. 1517), which provided that if the railroad was prevented by pending proceedings in court from performing the exclusive through-billing provision of the principal contract (P. Ex. 27, pp. 1517, 1518) the parties would cooperate to procure a division of territory with other competitive steamship lines (P. Ex. 27, p. 1518), and if unsuccessful a new competing line south of Panama might be opened (P. Ex. 27, p. 1518) where these other steamship companies were then operating (P. Ex. 27, p. 1519).

When there was danger that the Texas & Pacific Railway Company would extend its line from the east toward California, there was a race of diligence by the Southern Pacific Railroad to head off this competition by extending its own line eastward as rapidly as possible. (Strobridge, 406, 415.)

The majority opinion in the district court seems not to take into consideration at all this imminence of competition in 1899.

2. To prevent competition nonexistent but immediately threatened is a restraint of trade.

It is as much a restraint of trade to take steps to prevent others from competing as it is to take steps to repress that competition after it has arisen. What the public is entitled to is the free flow of the competitive forces. Any unreasonable interference with these constitutes the restraint whether applied after the competition has become well developed, or just before it is about to become so. It is the "potentiality of competition" (Standard Oil Co. v. U. S. 221 U. S. 1, 74) which should not be restrained.

In the case of railroads this potentiality, this restrainable competition, begins as soon as the project for the construction of the second line has progressed far enough to make its completion imminent. (U. S. v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324, 348–352.)

In this sense the existence of competition is determined not by actual performance, but by the capacity for performance, if there is no restraint (U. S. v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 226 U. S. 61, 188 Fed. 102, 110, 121, 124; U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., 221 U. S. 1, 70; 173 Fed. 177, 186.)

Even in an indictment for an attempt to monopolize commerce of a particular kind it is not necessary to allege that there is any commerce of this kind in existence. (U. S. v. Patterson, 59 Fed. 280, 283, C. C. Mass.)

In United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 188 Fed. 102, Adams, J., said:

> The contention of the Government in this particular, that a contract to strangle a threatened competition by preventing the construction of an immediately projected line of railway, which, if constructed, would naturally and substantially compete with an existing line for interstate traffic, would be in violation of the anti-trust law, may well be conceded. (Id., p. 117.)

And Hook, J., said:

> This question involves the relative location of their lines on land and sea, and not only the parts they actually performed, but also those they were naturally capable of performing, in the movement of traffic. (Id., p. 121.)
> Competition, as the antithesis of monopoly, is the influence which those in the same line of business have on each other, and that influence may as well be manifested in an existing capacity and preparedness as in the degree of active exercise. (Id., pp. 124, 125.)

In United States v. Standard Oil Co., 173 Fed. 177, 186 (C. C. Eastern District, Mo.), the court said:

> Those companies (the companies existing separately before 1890) were natural and potential competitors; but this group of stockholders held the power to prevent them from actively competing, and it is as incredible that they were actually doing so after they came under the control of that group as it is that the defendant corporations were engaged in actual competition during the nineties.
> For some time, therefore, before the transfer in each of these cases (the Northern Securities Company and the Standard Oil Company), a group of stockholders controlled a majority of the stock of potentially competitive corporations which they vested in the > holding company, so that the latter had the power to operate them together without competition, and the rule which governs one must control the other.

>
> There is much more probability that corporations potentially competitive will separate and compete when each of their stockholders has a separate certificate of his shares of stock in each corporation, which he is free to sell, then when a majority of the stock of each of the corporations is held by a single corporation which has the power to vote the stock, and to operate them. (Id., p. 189.)

In the opinion below in the present case the court says:

> That competition of the kind mentioned might now result from an enforced independence of the two companies, and a separation of the two railroads may be true, but we do not think that the statute was intended to create competition by destroying a proprietary relation formed long before its passage, and by the very means of which a railroad system has been brought into existence (2331).

In dissenting, Judge Carland says:

> As the breaking up of an unlawful combination does not create natural competition, but simply removes the barriers which prevent the free flow of interstate commerce, the concession that there might be competition if the combination was broken is also a concession > that there is a natural competition which is suppressed by reason of the control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific. * * *

>
> I do not think the evidence shows that the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific were created originally and have always continued to be one system. They have always been and are now operated as separate systems (2337).

The majority opinion does not deal with the real contention made for the petitioner. It is not that a unit of ownership which has created two competitive forces without tending to suppress any competition by anybody should be broken apart so that those two forces can compete. On the contrary, it is that when two competitive forces have been created by two separate owners it is no less a restraint of trade to get them into one ownership that they have theretofore, through some device of common control, failed to compete. Particularly is this true if the device is about to terminate and the daily, active competition to begin

In this latter case both principle and, it is believed, the unbroken current of decisions in this court support the contention of the petitioner that to prevent the breaking out of immediately threatened competition is a restraint of trade

3. This restraint is not legalized by the competition of other railroads.

The defendants contend and have introduced evidence in the effort to show that competition is not restrained by the control of the Southern Pacific Company over the Central Pacific Railroad because (1) the eastern connections of the Central Pacific Railroad are competing against the Southern Pacific Company for freight to be forwarded over the Central Pacific Railroad, and (2) the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, and to a minor extent the Western Pacific Railroad and the Panama Canal routes are competing for transcontinental freight to and from California.

Even if this be so it is none the less true that the control of the Southern Pacific Company over the Central Pacific Railroad removes from the field as a competitor the Central Pacific Railway Company. This company is by far the most potent factor in California transcontinental transportation through Ogden. It is the initial or delivering carrier. This alone gives it greater influence than can be exercised by any of the intermediate carriers. (Connor, 345; Schumacher, 155; Chambers, 968; Sproule, 200, 213; Lovett, 301; Spence, 1158.) The line that has the terminals has the advantage. (Eshleman, 892.)

None of the other lines competing for freight through the Ogden gateway can get into California by rail without using the rails of the Central Pacific Railroad, except to the extent of the limited facilities furnished by the Western Pacific Railroad. On the other hand the Central Pacific Railroad has never been wholly dependent on the Union Pacific Railroad since 1883, the time at which the Rio Grande & Western, now the Denver & Rio Grande, reached Ogden, forming a through connection to the east for the Central Pacific Railroad.

The Union Pacific Railroad has a means of getting into California by way of the Oregon Short Line and Oregon-Washington Railway & Navigation Company to Portland, and thence by steamer to San Francisco. While this is a rate-making factor, it does not appear that a pound of freight has traveled that way in the last 30 years, and it is unlikely that it will do so. All the evidence is to the contrary. (Connor, 341; Sproule, 235; Kruttschnitt, 768; Chambers, 960; Schumacher, 159, 171.)

The Union Pacific Railroad through the Oregon Short Line and the Salt Lake, Los Angeles & San Pedro Railroad has access to the southern part of California. It could reach San Francisco by boat from San Pedro. In the 12 years that the San Pedro Railroad has been in operation it does not appear that a pound of freight has moved this way. It is unlikely that any will so move. All the evidence is to the contrary. (Spence, 1159; Chambers, 961, 1131.)

For practical purposes the Union Pacific Railroad is absolutely dependent on the Central Pacific Railroad. (Schumacher, 157, 172; Spence, 1162; Kruttschnitt, 776.)

The power of the Pennsylvania or of any of the eastern trunk lines and of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad or of any of the Iowa or central lines when dealing with California freight is inconsiderable in comparison with the power of the Central Pacific Railroad, with its tracks at the door of the shipper or of the consignee. The tendency of injury to the public by being deprived of the competition of the Central Pacific Railway Company is scarcely affected by the efforts of railroads thousands of miles away.

The most powerful agency in the United States for competition in California against the Southern Pacific Company is restrained as long as that company holds the Central Pacific Railroad. (Connor, 346, 340; Schumacher, 150; Lovett, 295, 303; Munroe, 380; Sproule, 250; Kruttschnitt, 818; Chambers, 964, 975, 968; Eshleman, 896.)

The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad is the outgrowth of one branch of the plan of Congress to provide for three competitive railroads to the Pacific coast. (See infra, p. 198.) When one of those railroads (the Southern Pacific), is charged with restraining the competition of another (the Central Pacific), it is hardly an answer that it has not succeeded in controlling the competition of all of the railroad companies that exercise the franchises granted.

The Central Pacific route, with its eastern connections, is admitted by the defendants' witnesses to be the most powerful in California. (Chambers, 975.) There is no place of great importance in central and northern California which is reached by the Santa Fe and which is not reached by the Central Pacific or the Southern Pacific. On the other hand, there are many places reached by these last two railroads which are not reached by the Santa Fe. In those places which the latter reaches, the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific are the older railroads, and in much closer contact with the communities and with the industries served. The power of the Santa Fe is hardly comparable with that of the Southern Pacific.

The contention that the competition of the eastern connections of the Central Pacific and the competition of the Santa Fe legalized the restraint of the competition of the Central Pacific Railroad by the Southern Pacific Company has been authoritatively disapproved by this court in United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S. 61.

The same contentions were made there. (Mr. Dunne's brief, pp. 164, 107, 108; Mr. Loomis's brief, pp. 96, 90; Mr. Dunne's brief, pp. 38, 81, 97, 99, 108; Mr. Loomis's brief, p. 88.) The court below in that case was apparently convinced of the correctness of the argument (188 Fed., 119), but it was disapproved in the Supreme Court.

The argument was at least equally applicable in that case, and this, whether the cases be compared with reference to the respective dates of the combinations complained of, or with reference to the respective dates of the decrees in the two cases.

The combination complained of in the present case was made in February, 1899, and that complained of in the Union Pacific case was made in 1901. The decree in the present case was entered in March, 1917, and that in the Union Pacific case was entered June 30, 1913.

The alleviating competition of the Santa Fe Railroad was greater in 1901 than it was in February, 1899. The through line of the Santa Fe extended to Mojave in the southern part of California only in February, 1899. It was extended north in July of that year. It began to exercise a powerful and growing influence upon competition. By 1901 it was a much more considerable factor than in 1899.

In 1899 the only line operating from California by way of the Isthmus of Panama was the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which was controlled by the president of the Southern Pacific Company. (Schwerin, 692, 694.) In 1901 this company was still operating, and the American-Hawaiian Steamship Company was also operating by way of the Straits of Magellan.

In 1899 and in 1901 the only interstate railroads reaching California were the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific and the Santa Fe.

In 1913, when the decree was entered in the Union Pacific case, all the additional interstate railroads to California which have now been opened had then been opened. These additions are the Salt Lake, Los Angeles & San Pedro Railroad and the Western Pacific Railroad. The former was opened in 1905 and the latter in 1910. They were both extensively considered in the Union Pacific case.

The defendant in the present case has called attention to the fact that upwards of 50 railroads maintain soliciting offices in Californa and in New York for transcontinental business. (D. Ex. 58, p. 2242; D. Ex. 59, p. 2243; D. Ex. 56, p. 2242). Substantially all of these maintained these offices in New York and in California at the time of the Union Pacific merger in 1901 (Spence, 1144), and certainly there were no more such offices at the time of the combination in 1899 now complained of than there were in 1901.

The witnesses for the defendants who say that the competition of these other railroads requires the Southern Pacific Company to maintain good service over the Central Pacific Railroad say also that that competition required the Union Pacific Railroad also to do so during the time of the merger. (Chambers, 968; Kruttschnitt, 775, 773.)

There was no lessening of effort during the merger period to get as much freight as possible from the Atlantic seaboard via the Sunset Route. (Chambers, 968; Spence, 1125–1131; Sproule, 198.) During that period the effort in the Middle West was kept up with the boundary moved from a line from St. Louis to Detroit to a line along the Ohio River. (Lovett, 289; Munroe, 374; Sproule, 198; Lincoln, 113, 114; Schumacher, 150; Connor, 354, 330.)

Mr. Krutschnitt says that there was no change of policy (729) during the merger period beyond a gradual improvement, and that the Union Pacific Railroad had no greater control of competition than the Central Pacific had. (Chambers, 968; Kruttschnitt, 776, 741–775.)

When this combination was made (Feb. 20, 1899), California was a great railroad terminal for transcontinental freight, and the terminal facilities for all the railroads of the country were the rails of the Southern Pacific Railroad or of the Central Pacific Railroad, except at the points reached by the Santa Fe south of Mojave. The combination of these terminals into one ownership (compare U. S. v. Terminal Railroad Ass'n. of St. Louis, 224 U. S., 383) could not be rendered harmless by the fact that other railroads were competing for freight to forward over one or the other of these terminals. Had the law been otherwise the decision in the case against the Union Pacific Railroad Company must of necessity have been otherwise.

It is not the total annihilation of competition which the antitrust act makes the test; it is the unreasonable restraint of competition.

There is such an unreasonable restraint when one company acquires control of two existing competitive railroads. (U. S. v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 226 U. S. 61, 85; Northern Securities Co. v. U. S. 193 U. S. 197.)

It is no defense that much other competition may remain.

In U. S. v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S. 61, the court said:

> A combination which places railroads engaged in interstate commerce in such relation as to create a single dominating control in one corporation, whereby natural and existing competition in interstate commerce is unduly restricted or suppressed, is within the condemnation of the act (85).

The consolidation of two great competing systems of railroad engaged in interstate commerce by a transfer to one of a dominating stock interest in the other creates a combination which restrains interstate commerce within the meaning of the statute (88).

To preserve from undue restraint the free action of competition in interstate commerce was the purpose which controlled Congress in enacting this statute (87).

In Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 331, the court said:

> Every combination or conspiracy which would extinguish competition between otherwise competing railroads engaged in interstate trade or commerce * * * is made illegal by the act.
>
> To vitiate a combination, such as the act of Congress condemns, it need not be shown that the combination, in fact, results or will result in a total suppression of trade or in a complete monopoly.

In United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 16, the court said:

> All the authorities agree that in order to vitiate a contract or combination it is not essential that its results should be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient if it really tends to > that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition.

This was followed in United States v. Chesapeake & Ohio Fuel Co., 105 Fed. 93, 105 (C. C. S. D. Oh.); in United States v. MacAndrews, 149 Fed. 823, 833 (C. C. S. D. N. Y.); in Bigelow v. Calumet & Hecla Mining Co., 155 Fed. 869, 875 (C. C. W. D. Mich.); and in United States v. Swift, 188 Fed. 92, 101 (D. C. N. D. Ill.).

In Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 237, 243, the court said:

> The defendants were by their combination therefore able to deprive the public in a large territory of the advantages otherwise accruing to them from the proximity of defendants' pipe factories and, by keeping prices just low enough to prevent competition by Eastern manufacturers, to compel the public to pay an increase over what the price would have been if fixed by competition between defendants, nearly equal to the advantage in freight rates enjoyed by defendants over Eastern competitors.
> Total suppression of the trade in the commodity is not necessary in order to render the combination one in restraint of trade (244).

In United States v. Northern Securities Co., 120 Fed. 721, 726 (C. C. D. Minn.), the court said:

> The point involved is whether the ownership of all of the stock of two competing and parallel railroads vests the owner thereof with the power to suppress competition be> tween such roads. We entertain no doubt that it does. Indeed, we regard the suppression of competition, and to that extent a restraint of commerce, as the natural and inevitable result of such ownership.

In Chesapeake & Ohio Fuel Co. v. United States, 115 Fed. 610 (C. C. A. 6th), 623, the court said:

> It is further contended that the competition is such in the market for which this coal is intended, and the coal produced by the operators, parties to this agreement, is such a small fraction of the quantity sold that it can not affect prices materially. It is not required, in order to violate this statute, that a monopoly be created. It is sufficient if that be the necessary tendency of the agreement.
>
> The statute is not limited to contracts or combinations which monopolize interstate commerce in any given commodity, but seeks to reach those which directly restrain or impair the freedom of interstate trade. The law reaches combinations which may fall short of complete control of a trade or business, and does not await the consolidation of many small combinations into the huge "trust," which shall control the production and sale of a commodity (624).

In Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., 165 Fed. 774, 781 (C. C. W. D. Ky.), the court said:

> The act does not appear to require that the restraint of interstate trade and commerce shall be so complete as to amount to total destruction.

In United States v. Standard Oil Co., 173 Fed. 177, 184 (C. C. E. D. Mo.), the court said:

> Any contract or combination of two or more parties, whereby the control of such rates or prices is taken from separate competitors in that trade and vested in a person or an association of persons, necessarily restricts competition and restrains that commerce.

In O'Halloran v. American Sea Green Slate Co., 207 Fed. 187, 191 (D. C. N. D. N. Y.), the court said:

> It is no defense for such a combination to show that there is still some competition and some competitors, and that the acts of the combination do not wholly and entirely control interstate commerce in the article, or absolutely fetter it.

In United States v. Great Lakes Towing Co., 208 Fed. 733, 741, 743 (D. C. N. D. Oh. E. D.), the court said:

> A combination which places the direct instrumentalities of interstate commerce in such a relation as to create a single dominating control in one corporation, whereby natural and existing competition in interstate commerce is unduly restricted or suppressed, is within the condemnation of the act.
> It is not necessary to a violation of the Federal statute that a complete monopoly of all towing on the Great Lakes be effected. A monopoly in 14 ports is as offensive against the act as a monopoly in 50 ports.

In U. S. v. Reading Co., 226 Fed. 229, 271 (D. C. Pa.), it was held that a combination of two companies whereby 20 per cent of the anthracite coal production and 35 per cent of the anthracite transportation to the same market was consolidated into one control was a restraint of trade, notwithstanding the remaining effective competition, which controlled 80 per cent of the production and 65 per cent of the transportation.

In U. S. v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, this portion of the decision is unanimously approved.

Congress reaffirmed this principle in 1914 in section 7 of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 730), providing that—

> No corporation shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of two or more corporations engaged in commerce where the effect of such acquisition or the use of such stock by the voting or granting of proxies or otherwise, may be to substantially lessen competition between such corporations, or any of them, whose stock or other share capital is so acquired, or to restrain such commerce in any section or community, or tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce. [Italics not in original.]

4. There were no peculiar benefits to the public resulting from this restraint.

(a) The benefits claimed.—The defendants contend that there would be an injury to the public in dissolving this combination because it would (1) compel the construction and maintenance of separate terminals at common points; (2) prevent the interchangeable use of the tracks of the two companies; (3) introduce two-line hauls, with consequent increase in rates for one-line hauls.

The stimulant of advocacy and self-interest always tends to overemphasis of objections. They are tenable in all cases of restraint of trade by combination between two railroads. The economic savings of monopoly are constantly being urged in its favor. The arguments are not peculiar to this case, and have no peculiar basis in the facts of this case.

(b) Securing these benefits by agreement.—All of these difficulties would be overcome or minimized by the natural, practical operating methods that would be employed by railroads seeking economies. This is strikingly illustrated by an occurrence with respect to the two railroads in question.

Upon the decision of the Supreme Court in December, 1912, in the case of the United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company (226 U. S. 61), the Attorney General became convinced that, as an inevitable consequence of that decision, the control of the Central Pacific Railroad by the Southern Pacific Company was an unlawful restraint of trade, and he informed the officials of the Southern Pacific Company that if the Southern Pacific Company did not dispose of the stock in the Central Pacific Railway Company he would, in the performance of his duties, file a petition against the Southern Pacific Company for a dissolution of this combination. (Kruttschnitt 785.) The Southern Pacific Company was reluctant to make this voluntary dissolution of the combination, but nevertheless they took up negotiations for it with the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and under date of February 8, 1913 (P. Ex. 20, p. 1428), the Southern Pacific Company, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Pacific Railway Company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company entered into an agreement for the purchase by the Union Pacific Railroad Company of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company.

This agreement provided for a lease by the Central Pacific Railway Company to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of the railroad from Tehama to the northern boundary of California, and for the conveyance by the Central Pacific Railway Company to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of the railroad running north from Weed through Natron (thereby giving the Southern Pacific Company control of a through railroad from San Francisco to Portland, Oreg.), and for the joint use by the Southern Pacific Company and the Central Pacific Railway Company of the railroad controlled by the Southern Pacific Company from Sacramento through Benicia and Port Costa to Oakland, and for trackage rights to the Central Pacific Railway Company over the Southern Pacific Railroad from Redwood to San Francisco, and for the joint use by the two companies of the Central Pacific Railroad from Newark to Redwood, and for general interchange of traffic, and for the joint use of terminals, and for repairing and maintenance of rolling stock of the Southern Pacific Company at the shops of the Central Pacific Railway Company in Sacramento, Oakland, and elsewhere.

The agreement was made conditional upon approval by the California Railroad Commission of the leases and conveyances of railroads in California, and of the contracts for joint use of terminals, and for trackage rights.

On February 7, 1913, the railroad companies applied to this commission for approval, and a week later this approval was granted, but subject to the conditions that the price of the property sold, or its valuation, should be subject to approval of the commission; that the rates of fare within the State of California should not be increased because of the altered conditions; that the term of the lease of the railroad from Tehama north should be 50 years, and thereafter subject to the approval of the commission; and that if the joint use of the Benicia cut-off was granted, then other railroads should be granted similar rights on equitable terms.

No attempt was made to comply with these conditions, and the plan was abandoned, with the result that this suit was begun about a year later. Mr. Sproule, the president of the Southern Pacific Company, testified that the commission's view at the time was that the trade was in some way collusive and not a bona fide separation of the properties (253).

Mr. Eshleman, formerly president of the commission, testified that the view of the commission was that the particular agreement did not restore competitive conditions, and that it left the Union Pacific Railroad Company (893) in more complete control than it was before the decision against it, in that the agreement gave that railroad the exclusive joint use with the Southern Pacific Company of the Benicia cut-off from Sacramento to Port Costa, and of the terminals of the Southern Pacific Company. He stated that this objection was not intended to cover the exclusive joint use of terminals separated by decree of court if the same terminals had been used jointly by the same roads before that separation (893), and that the decision was not intended as a precedent for the case of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company if the combination between them was dissolved (893).

The agreement is of value in the present case as showing how completely it proved to be possible to overcome the difficulties of a dissolution if the parties in interest were minded to do so.

The joint use of terminals by two or more railroad companies at common points is a frequent occurrence. (Chambers, 976.) The Southern Pacific Company and the Central Pacific Railway Company are admittedly in an excellent position to bargain with each other for such use. (Kruttschnitt, 821, 777.) It would not be novel in the experience of these companies. The Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad have had a joint terminal at Ogden for 48 years. (Kruttschnitt, 819.) The Southern Pacific Railroad and the Santa Fe have had a joint use of the terminal at Mojave for years. (Kruttschnitt, 771.) A similar arrangement between the Central and the Southern would be natural, businesslike, and feasible. (Kruttschnitt, 800, 770; Chambers, 976, 977.)

The joint use of necessary connecting tracks by two or more railroads is common. The Southern Pacific Railroad and the Santa Fe have had such a joint use of the track from Mojave to Bakersfield for 18 years. Prior thereto there was a contract between these two railroads under which the Santa Fe had the right to operate its freight trains and engines over the tracks of the Southern Pacific Railroad and into the terminals of that company. (Chambers, 955.) The arrangements between the two roads have worked satisfactorily. (Kruttschnitt, 769, 770.)

The use of the Benicia cut-off by the Central Pacific Railway Company and of the railroad from Tehama to the northern boundary of California by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for through trains is entirely feasible. (Chambers, 987, 976.)

The other tracks of these two railroads could by agreement between them be used interchangeably for the local service without its interfering in any degree with the competition between them for the interstate transportation as to which they are competitive. (Chambers, 976, 978.)

(c) The benefits overstated.—The extent to which the defendants have colored the disadvantages of having this restraint dissolved is strikingly illustrated by Mr. Kruttschnitt's testimony with reference to saving expense. He says that the Central Pacific Railroad Company now gets its fuel hauled by the Southern Pacific Company for nothing, and that the Southern Pacific Company now gets its ties and lumber hauled by the Central Pacific Railroad for nothing, whereas each would have to pay for these services if the two roads were separate. He made no comment, until cross-examined, upon the fact that the saving of expense to the one railroad was a corresponding loss of revenue to the other, and that the actual cost of the service was not affected. (Kruttschnitt, 820, 744.)

The defendants have introduced testimony to show that there would be a chance of increased rates for transportation within the State of California because railroad commissions allow a higher rate on a two-line haul than on a single line haul between the same points. Admittedly, this principle would not operate where there was a competitive railroad, such as the Santa Fe, to perform the same service. (Eshleman, 880; Chambers, 977.) No effort whatever has been made by the defendants, although in possession of the statistics, to show the comparative volume of the freight which might be injuriously affected if such an increase of rates was allowed. They take lumber as a specific illustration and say that lumber amounts to 18 per cent of the total volume of their freight. Of this it appears that only about one-seventh is transported within the State (Eshleman, 886), and most of this fraction would not be subject to a two-line haul if the combination was dissolved. The great bulk of it would first reach whichever one of them was the delivering carrier. (Eshleman, 887.)

The whole theory that there would be any increase in rates for two-line hauls on this dissolution is well shattered by defendants' witness, Mr. Chambers. He says of the similar case of a combination between the Southern Pacific and the Atchison:

> If the Atchison and the Southern Pacific should enter into joint operation, it would not have the effect to materially reduce the rates in California between points that require the two services (977).

This is equally applicable to the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific.

There is another instance of a disposition to overpress argument in Mr. Kruttschnitt's misapplication of the language used by Judge Hook in United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 188 Fed. 102, 120. In concurring with the majority in holding that the petition ought not to prevail with respect to the acquisition of the one-half interest in the San Pedro line by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, Judge Hook called that line "tangential." Mr. Kruttschnitt, in the present case, described the line of the Southern Pacific as a through line from New York or New Orleans to Portland, Oreg., with another line from San Francisco to Ogden, a divergent stem or tangential offshoot (736), and stated that he considered this quite an accurate description (773, 803). He even hesitated to describe the Central Pacific Railroad as a main trunk line (774), but finally consented to do so (774). No one familiar with the situation could doubt for a moment but that the Central Pacific, with its eastern connections, was one main transcontinental trunk line and that the Southern Pacific was another. Neither is a tangential offshoot or divergent stem of the other.

These incidents throw light on the weight to be given the opinion evidence offered for the defendants as to the effect of a dissolution upon future operations.

The only lines of either railroad which do not connect directly with the other lines of the same company (Kruttschnitt, 798, 799, 819) are (1) the lines of the Southern Pacific Railroad in Oregon which are reached over the Central Pacific Railroad from Tehama to the boundary of Oregon; (2) a short line of the Central Pacific Railroad from Eugene to Oak Ridge, Oreg., which is part of a projected, contiguous through line of that railroad, of which about a hundred miles remain to be completed (Kruttschnitt, 797); and (3) some short branches of the Southern Pacific Railroad springing from the Central Pacific Railroad between Fresno and Sacramento. The isolation of the Oregon lines is substantially no greater than that of all the Santa Fe lines north of Bakersfield. These are isolated from the rest of that company's system by about 70 miles of track of the Southern Pacific Company. (Kruttschnitt, 800, 803.)

(d) Eleven other dissimilar railroads.—The defendants, over the objection of the petitioner, have put in evidence maps of 11 railroads having alternative freight routes. (D. Ex. 84–94; pp. 2256–2257; Kruttschnitt, 737, 817; Spence, 1142, 1153.)

It is not clear on just what principle of law the defendants conceive this evidence to be admissible. It seems to be offered as a sort of bogie of the difficulties in store for the Department of Justice and for the court if the restraint of trade by the Southern Pacific Company is dissolved. The evidence has no bearing whatever upon the present case. If these 11 railroads are restraining trade, such restraint should be stopped. If they are not restraining trade, they are not like the Southern Pacific Company. On the evidence presented, concerning these 11 other railroads, it does not appear that there is any restraint of trade by any one of them, unless it be possibly the New York Central Railroad. (Spence, 1142.) None of the alternative routes of these 11 railroads are shown to have been acquired when they were already competitive routes. None of them are shown to have been projected, built, or acquired to prevent the imminent competition of some other railroad or projected railroad. In these respects they all differ essentially from the combination made by the Southern Pacific Company.

It is worthy of note that if the existence of these 11 railroads establishes that the combination made by the Southern Pacific Company in 1899 was lawful, it establishes equally that the combination made by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in 1901 and by the Northern Securities Company in 1901 were lawful.

As the court held otherwise as to these two combinations, it has thereby decided the immateriality of the evidence offered.

The offer of this evidence is but one more indication of the determination of the defendants to confuse the case of a railroad having two alternative routes obtained without the restraint of any competition with the case of two railroads having competitive routes which can not be made the alternative routes of one railroad except by the acquisition of the two by one, and hence by a restraint of trade by the suppression of competition.

(e) The resolution of the board of directors of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce.—The defendants have put in evidence a resolution (D. Ex. 22, p. 1702) adopted by the board of directors of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce. This board consists of 21 members, and 11 are necessary for a quorum. It does not appear how many voted. A careful examination of the secretary, through whom the resolution was offered, failed to recall to his mind the authorship of the resolution. It was filled with erroneous statements of facts (Lynch, 849, 850) and contained a confident expression of opinion formed apparently without legal advice (Lynch, 842, 843) as to the lawfulness of this combination, and contrary to the opinion of the Attorney General. (Lynch, 843.) It was strikingly similar in phraseology to the language employed by the Southern Pacific Company and its employees and representatives in the answer in this case and elsewhere. (Lynch, 849.) The secretary stated that many of the alleged facts for the resolution were obtained from the newspapers and from the office of the Southern Pacific Company. As the secretary could not remember who drew the resolution, and as none of the directors who participated in passing it testified, the petitioner is unable to assert who or what inspired this resolution (Lynch, 838, 849, 856, 860, 862); but it is not difficult to see how easy it would be for men as influential in San Francisco as those connected with the Southern Pacific Company to persuade the directors of the Chamber of Commerce by an ex parte argument.

That some such influence may have been at work is further evidenced by the fact that the resolution was passed without any consultation with the chamber's natural expert advisor, the head of the transportation department (Lynch, 857), and that the body had gone on record publicly as favorable to the dissolution of the Southern Pacific-Union Pacific merger (Lynch, 865), and before the California Railroad Commission had favored the separation of the Central Pacific Railroad from the Southern Pacific Railroad (Eshleman, 898) with its attendant advantages of competition in lower rates and better service. (Eshleman, 897, 896.)

The absolute immateriality, if not effrontery, of such a resolution as this when introduced in evidence requires but little comment. The Attorney General of the United States, convinced that the Southern Pacific Company is restraining trade, has in pursuance of his duties, filed this petition. If trade has been restrained the petition should prevail. If it has not been restrained it should be dismissed. Whether or not there is a restraint is a question of fact or of law to be resolved by a consideration of evidence. The restraint is not to be found or to be ignored because a group of the residents of San Francisco think that it would be a good scheme to have the restraint continue; and their opinion upon the subject, not in court, not under oath, not submitted for cross-examination, and expressed for undisclosed motives or solicitation, is not helpful in the solution of any question of fact or law in the case.

There is probably not a community in the country where there can not be found a goodly number of people who believe that monopolies in railroad transportation with the resultant conveniences in daily transactions are better than competition, and who overlook entirely the ultimate injury to themselves and the general public interest coming from the lack of competition. In any such community a resolution against the dissolution of combinations in restraint of trade by two railroads can be secured quickly and with little effort.

This involves the question of the policy of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, which this court has always said is for Congress and not for this court to determine. Much more is it not for a small group of citizens here or there to determine.

(f) Complaints by shippers, by the public, and by the California delegation in Congress.—With respect to this same subject the majority opinion below says that this case "finds little, if any, support in testimony from complaining shippers or the public generally." This is true, because the competitive character of the two railroads and the total absence of competition between them was so evident on the testimony of the defendants' own officials that it seemed useless to enlarge the record by constant reiteration from shippers.

Whether competition is restrained or not, and to a substantial degree, is not to be determined by the complaints of shippers or of the public. It is to be determined by evidence of the facts. If, on the evidence, it is not restrained, the complaints of shippers and of the public are of no assistance. If it is restrained, their complaints are immaterial.

As Judge Carland says in his opinion, "the Attorney General in instituting this action represents the public, including shippers."

The duty and the authority to make complaint of a restraint of trade is imposed upon the Attorney General, and it is not left in the hands of shippers and the public.

The opinions in the Union Pacific case and in the Northern Securities case, and in the other cases of combinations of competing railroads, rest the decisions on the facts of the several cases, and not on any complaints of shippers or of the public. In the Union Pacific case there was evidence of the competition between the Southern Pacific Company and the Union Pacific Company prior to 1901, and there was evidence of the reduction in that competition after 1901, and this evidence came from witnesses some of whom were railroad men, and some of whom were shippers, but it was no more convincing than is the evidence which in the present case comes from railroad men alone, particularly from the defendants' own officials. In the Union Pacific case there was no evidence of complaints either of shippers or of the public.

It would be most unfortunate and without precedent if the enforcement of the criminal law of the country not merely must wait until there was general complaint from the public or any particular class of it, but also must depend on introducing these complaints in evidence to secure conviction or preventive relief.

If the complaints are of importance, then it is of importance to consider that in 1896 (D. Ex. 37, p 1938, 54th Congress, 1st sess., H. R. Report No. 1497), two years and four months after the Central Pacific Railroad Company made the lease to the Southern Pacific Company under which it is now operating, and two years and 10 months before the Southern Pacific acquired the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, it was stated in the minority report of the Committee on Pacific Railroads that—

> All the California delegation, with one exception it is said, are a unit against any refunding which will vest both these roads, the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific, in the same control; that is, in the present control. They contend that the case is within the principle > that has given rise to the prohibition in the constitution and laws of so many States to any leasing or consolidation of parallel or competing lines, and within the principle of the antitrust law of Congress, and that in this instance that monopoly has exerted the oppression for the prevention of which the laws referred to were enacted. They suggest that either the Government, without actually operating the Central Pacific, maintain it as a sort of a railroad turnpike, for the use of any or all other companies, or that the road be sold to the purchasers of the Union Pacific or any other company that will afford competition with the Southern Pacific.

This protest should be given as much weight certainly as the complaints of any shippers or the action of the directors of a chamber of commerce.

(g) The disadvantages.—Offset against the various objections which the defendants have urged are the benefits to be derived from having the law respected, the restraint of trade removed, and the advantages of competition provided.

Common knowledge and common experience are that normal competition is to the public advantage.

> Pearsall v. Great Northern Railway Co., 161 U. S. 646, 676.
> U. S. v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 226 U. S. 61, 88.

There is peculiar advantage in securing competition by the Central Pacific Railway Company. It is the most important railroad entering California. It is the "key" to California. (D. Ex. 23, p. 1738.) The Union Pacific Railroad and all its eastern connections are in the common and practical sense absolutely dependent upon it. (Sproule, 235, 236, 246; Lovett, 296; Chambers, 968; Kruttschnitt, 776, 778; Connor, 341; Munroe, 379, 380; Schumacher, 157, 172; Spence, 1162.) It has, of course, its route through Portland, Oreg., as a rate-making factor or instrument of strategy (Sproule, 235; Connor, 340; Kruttschnitt, 767; Chambers, 960; Schumacher, 159, 171), and also access to the limited facilities of the Western Pacific Railroad. But for the practical securing and carrying freight in competition, both in time, service, and expense, it is dependent on the Central.

The initial or terminal line is more powerful than the intermediate lines. (Connor, 177; Schumacher, 155; Lovett, 301; Spence, 1158; Chambers, 970, 974, Sproule, 200, 213). The line that has the terminals has the advantage. (Eshleman, 892). The Central Pacific is with respect to California freight in a more powerful position than the Union Pacific. (Kruttschnitt, 777; Chambers, 969.) The Union Pacific could not put into operation any plan for improved service which might enable it to compete with the Southern Pacific route without the consent of the Central Pacific. (Sproule, 240.) The welfare of the Union Pacific is dependent upon the attitude of the Southern Pacific toward the Ogden and the El Paso gateways. (Spence, 1162.)

The Southern Pacific Company is a very powerful road and looked upon as such in California. (Connor, 329.) Its representative used to be looked upon as "boss." The other railroads usually did what he wanted because they could not get through rates and through service in any other way. (Schumacher, 154.)

There has been an improvement in the service over the Central Pacific Railroad, but, as far as appears, not in excess of that in the service over the railroads of the country generally; and by far the largest part of any improvement that has been made by the Central Pacific since the opening of the Southern Pacific through route in 1883 is that which was made between 1901 and 1913, when the Union Pacific Railroad Company was in control of the Central Pacific Railroad. (Munroe, 379; Kruttschnitt, 814, 815; Chambers, 979; Schumacher, 152.)

The development of the Central Pacific Railroad virtually stopped from the time that the promoters of it acquired control of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and until the Union Pacific Railroad Company, with its incentive to improve the Ogden route, got control of the Southern Pacific Company.

The Central Pacific Railroad's main line was completed in 1869 (a year before its promoters acquired control of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company), and branches north and south were constructed. The branch north was carried to Redding in 1872, and extended as far as the Oregon line in the next 15 years. The branch south was stopped at Goshen in 1872. All lines subsequently built up to 1901, whether or not branches of the Central Pacific were built for the Southern Pacific.

After the Union Pacific Railroad Company acquired control of the Southern Pacific Company in 1901, the lines built or acquired contiguous to the Central Pacific became the property of the Central Pacific Railway Company. (P. Ex. 42, p. 1639.) These included the line from Niles to Redwood across the southern arm of San Francisco Bay; the line from Weed through Kirk and Oakridge to Natron, Oreg., except the portion from Kirk to Oakridge not yet constructed; the line from Fernley to Susanville; and the line from Hazen, Nev., to Mojave, Calif.

There can be little doubt that if the Central Pacific Railroad Company had been free from the control of those interested in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, it would have developed many branch lines and feeders between 1870 and 1901. (Chambers, 972.)

The failure of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to develop through freight service via Odgen was one of the striking results of the greater interest felt in developing the through Southern Pacific route. It is particularly noticeable by comparison with the accomplishments of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company. The Central Pacific Railroad went into operation for through transcontinental business in 1869. It then had as complete a connection to the Atlantic Ocean as it now has. The Santa Fe Railroad did not have any connection to any part of California until 1883. It was 14 years junior to the Central Pacific. Even in 1883 and for 16 years thereafter it extended to the southern part only of California. Yet it was the Santa Fe Railroad that first developed the system of through billing between California on the west and the middle west and Atlantic seaboard on the east. (Chambers, 943, 958, 959; Spence, 1118, 1124.)

Some effort has been made to suggest that the failure of the Central Pacific Railroad to institute this through billing was due to inability to get the cooperation of the eastern connecting lines (Spence, 1117, 1122), but no evidence has been offered to show that there was any unwillingness on the part of the eastern lines to cooperate in this way, and the Santa Fe secured the cooperation and secured it about 1889, or within six years of the time when the line was opened to the southern part of California. The Santa Fe service was an incitement to better service over the Central Pacific Railroad. (Chambers, 971.) Undoubtedly the failure of the Central Pacific Railroad to institute through billing by way of Ogden was due to the fact that those in control of the operations of the Central Pacific Railroad were interested to a greater extent in the Southern Pacific Railroad, which secured 100 per cent of the rate on freight moving via this route to and from the Atlantic seaboard, whereas the Central Pacific Railroad Company secured only about 25 per cent of the rate on freight moving via Ogden. On freight to Middle West territory the disparity in percentage was not so great, but was very substantial. The impairment of the service on the Central Pacific would help to give business to the Sunset Route. (Chambers, 950.)

The difficulty with bringing the all-rail service into shape equal to the Sunset service was not with the eastern lines but with the lines west of Omaha and west of the Colorado junctions. (Chambers, 980.)

The Sunset Route would never have been able to secure a substantial share of the traffic between Atlantic seaboard and California if the Southern Pacific's short line had been to Los Angeles, or to the southern boundary of California, and its longer haul to Ogden; or, in other words, if the influence of the Southern Pacific upon that traffic had been exerted in favor of the Ogden haul the Sunset Route could never have made the progress that it did in getting business. (Spence, 1117.)

This through billing has been a great addition to the service. (Chambers, 943.)

This is only one of the impairments of service attributable to the lack of an undivided interest in the success of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the lack of normal competition by those in control of that railroad.

Competition always tends to an improvement in service and to a reduction of rates. Evidently this is not the time nor the place to present evidence of particular rates or particular items of service. The Interstate Commerce Commission is the body to deal with such matters. The destruction of normal competition is the injury complained of without going into the special or peculiar injuries compounded upon that injury. The evidence bears out the common understanding of the seriousness of the injury.

The more competition the better the service the public will get; and to some extent, as a practical matter in railroading, the control of two lines by one company operates by so much as a restraint upon the competition. (Schumacher, 156.) It would help the volume of traffic passing over the Central if they had their own organization in San Francisco. (Schumacher, 157.)

Except so far as the Interstate Commerce Commission is able to exercise control (after the expense of time and money incident to applications to it), the rates to and from California are now controlled by the Southern Pacific Company and the Santa Fe. (Lincoln, 110, 129.) In February, 1899, they were controlled by the Southern Pacific Company. (Schumacher, 154; Kruttschnitt, 781; Stanford, 100; Chambers, 964; Lincoln, 111.)

If the Central Pacific were separated from and independent of the Southern Pacific control, and assuming that the Central Pacific is controlled by the motives that ordinarily control people, it would work very actively for business by way of the Ogden gateway and its connections east, while the Southern Pacific would work very actively for it by way of the El Paso gateway, much more so than is now the case. (Lovett, 293, 294.) The Soutern Pacific now controls all of the rail transportation in central California except that controlled by the Santa Fe and Western Pacific. (Lovett, 294.) If the Central Pacific were separated, if it were independent, both the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific would be in San Francisco, Oakland, San Jose, Stockton, Sacramento, Fresno, and all other towns and places in central California contending for traffic—one for the Ogden gateway, and the other for the El Paso gateway—and it would affect all that competition and would make competitive practically all the traffic of that territory going east. (Lovett, 303.) The increase of effort in the way of competition for the competing traffic would have the tendency to increase the quality of service. That is what always has been the result of competition—improvement in service. (Lovett, 297.)

The Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Chambers says, has taken no part in the reduction or the fixing of the transcontinental rates of the railroads, excepting long haul—short haul applications (964). With these exceptions, railroads themselves and the competitive influences have determined westbound rates to the terminal points. Up to the time the Atchison got into San Francisco, in northern California the Southern Pacific being either the delivering line or the originating line, no rates could be made without their concurrence—no through rates, joint rates. They were practically masters of the situation as to freight rates on all the rates which were known as joint rates, less than the combination of the local rates. (Chambers, 964.) The presence of one or more railroads or of more than one railroad, capable of performing a given service, does have the effect of lowering the rates over a long period of time. It may have that effect to a considerable extent. (Chambers, 965.) Service is very much influenced by competition. If you have four railroads in position to do the same business, the chances are that you will get better service over them than if you have two. (Chambers, 965.)

In their efforts in behalf of the Sunset the Southern Pacific have put forth every effort they possibly could, in connection with the transaction of business, to influence patrons to their route and to hold them as clients. There are a thousand and one ways, so to speak, in which a common carrier can have influence with a patron. The local situation has a large bearing as to where the freight originates, the ability of the carrier to serve the patron on other than the traffic specifically involved and in question, the disposition to accommodate, and a lot of little things of that kind, all going to have influence with the shipper; and when pressed by the carrier, the shipper naturally desires to cooperate as far as he can consistently, without jeopardizing his own interests; and in the case of the Sunset the reforms instituted in the way of prompt settlements of claims, expedited service, special attention to special traffic, all tended to strengthen that route at the expense of all of the all-rail carriers overland. (Munroe, 376.) The Union Pacific was in advance of the Central Pacific until 1901. (Munroe, 379.) If the control of the Southern over the Central was dissolved, there would be a marked increase in competition in everything that the word implies. Competition naturally tends toward helping the shippers, and that undoubtedly would be the case as much in the future as it has been in the past. (Munroe, 380.)

Competition as a practical matter does furnish an inducement for the maintenance of good service and the improvement of service on the part of the competitors, and competition has played a great part in the development and improvement of the service furnished by the railroads to the shippers everywhere, and will in all probability continue to do so. (Spence, 1173.)

The impairment of the service on the Central Pacific would help to give business to the Sunset Route. (Chambers, 950.)

A solicitor who makes it a point to trace freight cars and keeps his patrons advised of their whereabouts in transit and final delivery is considered very useful and beneficial to the shipper. If the Central Pacific was released from the control of the Southern Pacific, the Central Pacific would immediately then become an independent line, officered with president, vice president, general manager, freight traffic manager, auditor, purchasing department, and on down in the lesser capacities to freight solicitors, all of whom would have a reputation to maintain and a record to make. Their entire influence and efforts would be exerted constantly in behalf of the Central Pacific road. The industrial and commercial interests served by that line would receive one hundred per cent of their efforts and all of the important cities and towns and territories served by the road would benefit to the same extent. This separation would improve the conditions to the shipper. Competition is the foremost factor in stimulating service, and were it not for competition the service would be down to a minimum. Competition most certainly has an effect upon both rates and classifications, and always will have. It would have a very decided influence over the making of rates. (Connor, 347.)

The through rates of fare for business between California and points in the Eastern States were regulated by competition. (Stubbs, 97; Kruttschnitt, 741.)

Up to the completion of the Santa Fe to southern California the rates were large and the railroads had no difficulty in getting whatever they thought was fair. They could charge whatever they thought best. When the other road was completed, however, business was divided and the rates cut down (Stanford, 99.)

The threatened competition of the Southern Pacific Company reduced the California-to-Europe grain rates to one-third in a short time. (Hopkins, 670.) The Southern Pacific Company did not keep that competition up very long. It was not necessary. It was a conspicuous example of the quick effect, in the reduction of a rate, of the presence of competition (686).

If the Central Pacific Railroad were separated and working with the Union Pacific Railroad, they would become active competitors of the Sunset, as a practical matter. That would be true of every one of the California terminals that that road reached, and any other terminals with which they could make suitable traffic arrangements, with the existing roads, including the Southern Pacific. If the Central Pacific were separate, it would compete at Sacramento, Marysville, Stockton, Oakland, and San Jose, and would doubtless have some arrangement for reaching San Francisco; and this competition would be as acute as any other competition. The tendency of a number of railroads competing is to reach out to the shipper and reach conclusions with him which do result in reductions of rates. (Sproule, 250.) Generally speaking, competition is to the public advantage . (Sproule, 253.) The release of the Central from the control of the Southern would be an advantage to the public to the extent that competition may be an advantage to the public. (Sproule, 254.)

If you have two roads which have a voice in the rate question you stand 100 per cent, or double, the chance of gaining tariff concessions that you do if there is only one road; if there are three roads, you stand three times the chance of getting your concessions; or if four, four times; and so on. (Wheeler, 897.) And, accordingly, the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce approved the general features of the agreement for the sale of the Central Pacific Railroad by the Southern Pacific Company (Wheeler, 897), and in that connection their traffic manager stated that there might be some advantage in the separation of the Central and the Southern, if it is a genuine separation, so that they would have four roads instead of three. (Wheeler, 898.)

Any incidental benefits from the combination really rest on the theory that a Government-controlled monopoly is better than competition between railroads (Kruttschnitt, 771; Eshleman, 891), and that is a matter not of the law as it is, but a matter of legislative policy, on which Congress has declared against the creation of monopoly and in favor of normal competition. (Eshleman, 891.)

The attitude of the Californaia Railroad Commission is summed up by Mr. Eshleman in these words:

> If you desire an expression of opinion—and it may explain my attitude on this—my entire position and the position of the commission was assumed mainly on the theory that a regulated or Government-owned monopoly was better than any condition that could be brought about by competition in the case of railroads.
>
> My belief is that regulation by Government authority is an alternative to regulation by competition, and is only justified on the ground that competition does not do its duty. It ought to be a matter of legislative policy * * * But, as you say, that goes to the policy and not what the law demands (891).

Congress differs from the California Railroad Commission on this economic question. The petition seeks the application of the law as it is, in the belief that the public interest is better served thereby in the long run.

5. The benefits derived from such a restraint do not exempt it from the provisions of the antitrust act.

A restraint of commerce is not rendered lawful by the fact that its effect is good in the particular case or that it was undertaken with good intent.

Restraint of trade by the unreasonable suppression of competition and not the result of that suppression is the crime which the Sherman Antitrust Act prohibits.

It is clearly established that, if the effect of a combination is to restrain trade or to monopolize it, the purpose for which it was formed does not save it.

In 1890, when the Sherman Antitrust Act was passed, the growing combinations then publicly discussed were feared because of the control which they could exercise. It was to prevent this control that the act was passed.

At that time at least three policies were open for adoption—(1) letting things take their own course; (2) permitting the organization of controlling units and subjecting those units to governmental regulation by commission or otherwise; and (3) adopting a law giving a preventive and punitive remedy against the creation of such controlling organizations, or of organizations tending in that direction, and so helping to maintain the competitive principle as the safest and best. This third course was followed.

The debates in Congress show that what was feared in monopoly and restraint of trade was the inherent power for injury.

It is enough if the power is obtained, even if it is not exercised.

In most of these many cases, there was not a complete monopoly, nor any unfair methods of business, nor any increase of prices to the public, nor any driving out of competition, nor any other injurious use of the power or control which the combination had obtained.

Congress did not direct its prohibition against the bad results of combinations in unreasonable restraint of competition or against those combinations only which were formed with evil intent. It forbade the combinations themselves, and all of them. There was no exception made for those combinations in restraint of trade which worked a public good or for those undertaken with laudable intent. Congress considered the results which usually and ultimately follow such combinations and prohibited the creation of the despotic influence, however benevolent its exercise.

In United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S. 61, 88, the court says:

> Nor does it make any difference that rates for the time being may not be raised and much money be spent in improvements after the combination is effected. It is the scope of such combinations and their power to suppress or stifle competition or create monopoly which determines the applicability of the act.

> Whether the free operation of the normal laws of competition is a wise and wholesome rule for trade and commerce is an economic question which this court need not consider or determine. (83.)

In United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 57, the court says:

> This dominating power was not obtained by normal expansion to meet the demands of a business growing as a result of superior and enterprising management but by deliberate, calculated purchase for control.
> That such a power, so obtained, regardless of the use made of it, constitutes a menace to and an undue restraint upon interstate commerce within the meaning of the antitrust act has been frequently held by this court. (Italics not in original.)

In International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U. S. 199, 209, 210, the court says:

> It is too late in the day to assert against statutes which forbid combinations of competing companies that a particular combination was induced by good intentions and has had some good effect. Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 56, 62; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, 49. The purpose of such statutes is to secure competition and preclude combinations which tend to defeat it.
>
> This is one of the results which the statute was intended to prevent, the unequal struggle of individual effort against the power of combination.

This restates a principle repeatedly recognized.

United States v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324, 353.

Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 332, 352.

United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U. S. 505, 562.

In Thomsen v. Cayser, 243 U. S. 66, 87, the court says:

> The resultant good of the plan, it is said, was "regularity of service, with steadiness of rates"; and that "the whole purpose of the plan under which the defendants acted was to achieve this result."
>
> We may answer the conjectures of the argument by the counter one that if defendants had not entered the trade others might have done so and been willing to serve shippers without constraining them, been willing to compete against others for the patronage of the trade.

In Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Association v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 613, the court says:

> The argument that the course pursued is necessary to the protection of the retail trade and promotive of the public welfare in providing retail facilities is answered by the fact that Congress, with the right to control the field of interstate commerce, has so legislated as to prevent resort to practices which unduly restrain competition or unduly obstruct the free flow of such commerce, and private choice of means must yield to the national authority thus exerted. Addyston Pipe Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 242.

> It (the Sherman Act) broadly condemns all combinations and conspiracies which restrain the free and natural flow of trade in the channels of interstate commerce. It is true that this court held in the Standard Oil and Tobacco Cases, supra, and in the subsequent cases following them, that in its proper construction the act was not intended to reach normal and usual contracts incident to lawful purposes and intended to further legitimate trade. (609.)

In Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 234, 243, the court says:

> It is useless for the defendants to say they did not intend to regulate or affect interstate commerce. They intended to make the very combination and agreement which they in fact did make, and they must be held to have intended (if in such case intention is of the least importance) the necessary and direct result of their agreement.
>
> If the necessary, direct, and immediate effect of the contract be to violate an act of Congress and also to restrain and regulate interstate commerce, it is manifestly immaterial whether the design to so regulate was or was not in existence when the contract was entered into. In such case the design does not constitute the material thing. The fact of a direct and substantial regulation is the important part of the contract, and, that regulation existing, it is unimportant that it was not designed.

This is followed in United States v. Standard Oil Co., 173 Fed. 177, 179 (C. C. E. D. Mo.).

In Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 331, the court says:

> Congress, * * * by the antitrust act, has prescribed the rule of free competition among those engaged in such commerce.

In National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U. S. 115, 129, the court says:

> According to them (statutes against combinations), competition, not combination, should be the law of trade. If there is evil in this it is accepted as less than that which may result from the unification of interest and the power such unification gives.

In Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, 49, the court says:

> Nor can they (the prohibitions of the act) be evaded by good motives. The law is its own measure of right and wrong, of what it permits, or forbids, and the judgment of the courts can not be set up against it in a supposed accommodation of its policy with the good intention of parties, and it may be, of some good results.

In Pearsall v. Great Northern Railway, 161 U. S. 646, 676, the court says:

> Whether the consolidation of competing lines will necessarily result in an increase of rates, or whether such consolidation has generally resulted in a detriment to the public is beside the question. Whether it has that effect or not, it certainly puts it in the power of the consolidated corporation to give it that effect—in short, puts the public at the mercy of the corporation. There is and has been for the past three hundred years, both in England and in this country, a popular prejudice against monopolies in general, which has found expression in innumerable acts of legislation. We can not say that such prejudice is not well founded. It is a matter upon which the legislature is entitled to pass judgment. At least there is sufficient doubt of the propriety of such monopolies to authorize the legislature, which may be presumed to represent the views of the public, to say that it will not tolerate them unless the power to establish them be conferred by clear and explicit language. While, in particular cases, two railways, by consolidating their interests under a single management, may have been able to so far reduce the expenses of administration as to give their customers the benefit of a lower tariff, the logical effect of all monopolies is an increase of price of the thing produced, whether it be merchandise or transportation. Owing to the greater speed and cheapness of the service performed by them, railways become necessarily monopolists of all traffic along their lines; but the general sentiment of the public declares that such monopolies must be limited to the necessities of the case, and rebels against the attempt of one road to control all traffic between terminal points, also connected by a competing line.

In United States v. Northern Securities Co., 120 Fed. 721, 730 (C. C. D. Minn.), the court says:

> It may be that such a virtual consolidation of parallel and competing lines of railroad as has been effected, taking a broad view of the situation, is beneficial to the public rather than harmful.
>
> It may be that the combination was the initial and a necessary step in the accomplishment of great designs, which if carried out as they were conceived, would prove to be of inestimable value to the communities which these roads serve and to the country at large.
>
> We shall neither affirm nor deny either of these propositions, because they present issues which we are not called upon to determine, and some of them are issues which no court is empowered to hear or decide, involving, as they do, questions of public policy which Congress must determine.

In United States v. Chesapeake and Ohio Fuel Co., 105 Fed. 93, 103 (C. C. S. D. Ohio), the court says:

> It (the policy of the law) is opposed to the methods of combination, and will not suffer competition to be destroyed under the pretense that the public will be better served by combination.
>
> The important question is not whether the performance of the contract so far has resulted in actual injury to trade, but whether the contract confers power to regulate and restrain trade, upon those charged with its performance.

In United States v. American Tobacco Co., 164 Fed. 700, 702 (C. C. S. D. N. Y.), the court says:

> What benefits may have come from this combination, or from the others complained of, it is not material to inquire, nor need subsequent business methods be considered, nor the effects on production or prices. The record in this case does not indicate that there has been any increase in the price of tobacco products to the consumer. There is an absence of persuasive evidence that by unfair competition or improper practices independent dealers have been dragooned into giving up their individual enterprises and selling out to the principal defendant.

In United States v. Standard Oil Co., 173 Fed. 177, 187 (C. C. E. D. Mo.), the court says:

> It was the granting of the power to prevent competition to the holding company, not the subsequent exercise of that power, that in the opinion of the Supreme Court brought the combination (the Northern Securities Co.) under the ban of the law.

In United States v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 203 Fed. 295, 312 (D. C. S. D. Ohio) the court says:

> Stress is laid both in the evidence and argument upon the economy of this interchange of facilities, since it secures easier grades over the Hocking Valley, as compared with those of the Toledo & Ohio Central, and avoids the necessity of building double tracks and of operating opposing trains over single-track roads with the usual sidings. These advantages may be conceded from an operating point of view; yet the logic of it all would in the end destroy competition between parallel roads generally.

In O'Halloran v. American Sea Green Slate Co., 207 Fed. 187, 190, 191 (D. C. N. D. N. Y.), the court says:

> The legality or illegality of a combination is not to be determined by weighing or balancing the benefits to the combining parties as against the injury to the public or public interests, or by weighing and balancing the possible benefits to the public interests as against the injury to such interests.
>
> To so construe this act would make injurious effects on the general public, and not interference with and restrictions or restraints upon interstate commerce, the essence of the offending.
>
> The power under and pursuant to the combination to do the prohibited things is what brands it (the combination) as illegal, not the actual exercise of that power.

In United States v. Great Lakes Towing Co., 208 Fed. 733, 744 (D. C. N. D. Ohio), the court says:

> The fact that the towing and wrecking service has been improved under the towing company's administration can not legalize the combination if otherwise unlawful. Not only do good motives furnish no defense to a violation of the antitrust act, but we have no right to assume that the unsatisfactory conditions existing in 1899 could not have been eliminated by lawful and normal methods.

> Whatever may be the views of individual economists, under the Federal statutory policy normal and healthy competition is the law of trade; and such evils as may result from such competition must be considered less than those liable to follow a complete unification of interests and the power such unification gives. The evil of unification lies in the temptation to higher rates and lessened regard for the public interests; and the tendency to this evil result must be recognized even though not in a given case yet realized in actual experience.

In United States v. Whiting, 212 Fed. 466, 477 (D. C. Mass.), the court says:

> The fact that the alleged agreement does not appear to have been used oppressively is not sufficient to save it. In cases of restraint of trade or monopoly not arising under the Sherman Act, the prevailing view (although there has been some difference of opinion on this point) is that the potential evils of a monopoly or dominating control in any trade are sufficient to invalidate agreements having that purpose or result without proof of actual injury or evil result. People v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 251, 34 N. E. 785.

In United States v. Associated Billposters, 235 Fed. 540 (D. C. Ill.), the court in holding that it was unlawful for an association to attempt to control the national billboard advertising in the cities and towns in which the members of the association were located, said that the association was not saved from unlawfulness by the evidence presented of general improvement in and development of the billboard business during the existence of the organization, and that "even perfection in any line of business is not to be thus procured."

In United States v. Quaker Oats Co., 232 Fed. (D. C. Ill.) 499, 502, Judge Mack says:

> A potential monopoly that has failed to exercise its tremendous power and has become and has been a very good trust, is none the less subject to the law.

In United States v. American Can Co., 230 Fed. (D. C. Md.) 859, 901, the court says:

> One of the designs of the framers of the antitrust act was to prevent the concentration in a few hands of control over great industries. They preferred a social and industrial state in which there should be many independent producers.
>
> The law wishes that industrial and trading corporations shall operate under the checks and balances imposed by free and unrestrained competition.

6. The public is injured by this restraint to as great an extent at least as by the other restraints of trade by combination of common carriers which have been held unlawful.

It is safe to say that in every litigated case which has been presented to the courts to dissolve a restraint of trade consisting of the acquisition by one railroad of the control over a competing railroad, evidence has been introduced to show the real advantages to the public which have resulted from the restraint and will result from permitting it to continue. There almost always are some such advantages. They have been commented on in a number of the cases cited in the preceding subsection.

In the Northern Securities case the court either was convinced of the great advantages to the public that were to be expected from the combination or took them for granted. (Supra, p. 102.)

In the Union Pacific case there was no evidence of any injury to the public beyond the one inherent in a restraint of trade. On the other hand, there was a mass of convincing evidence of the great improvements in the condition of the railroads and in the service to the public which had followed the restraint. (Supra, p. 96.)

In the Lake Shore case the evidence showed the economies and increased facilities that would result to the public from the restraint because of the interchangeable use of two lines of railroad by the one combination. (Supra, p. 103.)

In the Great Lakes Towing case the evidence showed the benefits to the public which had resulted from coordination of service by the combination.

It is asserted that the combination between the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad reduces expenses, and that this enables the railroads to give the public the benefit of a lower tariff.

The evidence in this case, taken at its best for the defendants, shows nothing more than in the other cases of restraint of trade of which the foregoing are specimens. When one combination acquires two railroads it always furnishes opportunity for the interchangeable use of tracks and the single ownership and operation of terminals at common points, and single line transportation from points on one road to points on the other, and the use of through trains for local service. In none of these respects is there anything peculiar to this case.

The witnesses for the defendant who say that the combination between the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad is beneficial and not injurious, say the same concerning the combination between the Union Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific (Kruttschnitt, 820, 773; Chambers, 987; Sproule 239.)

In the Union Pacific case, there was a most impressive reason for permitting the combination, but for its offense against the law and the policy of preserving normal competition. The Union Pacific Railroad needed a direct line to San Francisco. The great weight of its business was to and from California. To secure such a line was a natural development. It was quite as natural as any common operation or common use of facilities by the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific. It was not, however, an advantage to secure which the Union Pacific Railroad Company should be permitted to restrain trade.

The same is true of such advantages as might come from the restraint of trade in this case.

The defendants carry their theories to their logical conclusion. Mr. Kruttschnitt says:

> If the Atchison and the Southern Pacific were under common management, I am convinced that in California alone hundreds of thousands of dollars in operating expenses would be saved by combining forces at all those junction points.
> I would carry that theory to its logical conclusion, if applied to all the railroads of the country, and say that if they were all combined under one control it would result in an enormous saving, in the elimination of duplications—an incalculably large saving, assuming that the management were able and efficient.

The present case is not peculiar. These advantages, such as they are in practice, existed in all the railroad combinations which have been held unlawful, despite them.

FOURTH.

THE COMBINATION ALSO PRODUCED A MONOPOLY.

The character of this combination as a monopoly is to be tested by the conditions which existed when it was formed pursuant to the plan of February 20, 1899.

A combination which brings into one corporate control the only two existing competitive agencies in commerce of a particular kind monopolizes that commerce.

Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1.
U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 179.
Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197, 325.

When this combination was formed it put into the single ownership of the Southern Pacific Company the stock in all the railroad corporations having railroad entrance from any part of the United States into California north of Mojave and Tehachapi Mountains.

This monopoly continues, except so far as modified by the extension of the Santa Fe Railroad, which opened to San Francisco Bay, July 1, 1899, and the Western Pacific Railroad, which opened to San Francisco Bay, July 20, 1910.

For traffic purposes the State of California divides itself to some extent at the Tehachapi Mountains near Mojave in the southern part of the State. What is described as the southern part of California is to the south of this point, and what is described as central and northern California, is to the north of this point.

On February 20, 1899, there were no railroads in California for the movement of interstate business except the Central Pacific Railroad, the Southern Pacific Railroad, and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad.

The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad did not extend north of Mojave. It reached Mojave in 1885, and some of the principal points in the southern part of California soon thereafter. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company had a working agreement with the Southern Pacific Company, which is not in evidence, and which gave the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company some rights to operate its rolling stock over the railroads controlled by the Southern Pacific Company, and also provided for joint through rates on transcontinental freight. By this agreement the division of the rate was 77 per cent to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe for hauling from the Missouri River to Mojave or in the opposite direction, and 23 per cent to the Southern Pacific Company for hauling from Mojave to other California points, or in the opposite direction. (Spence, 1167.)

The right of the Santa Fe Company to operate its rolling stock over the rails of the Southern Pacific Company was not exercised. (Chambers, 955.)

In 1898 the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company acquired the San Francisco & San Joaquin Valley Railway Company extending from San Francisco to a point near Bakersfield, about 70 miles north of Mojave. (Kruttschnitt, 800; Chambers, 954.) Steps were taken immediately to build a new line to connect the end of this railroad with the Santa Fe rails at Mojave. Thereupon an agreement was made between the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company and the Southern Pacific Company, under which the Santa Fe Company acquired the right to operate its trains from Mojave to a point near Bakersfield over the existing tracks of the Southern Pacific Company. (Chambers, 975.) This gave the Santa Fe a through line from Chicago to San Francisco, which was opened July 1, 1899. (Chambers, 954.)

Prior to this date the influence of the Santa Fe north of Mojave was comparatively slight.

Mr. Chambers, vice president of the Santa Fe, testified that the Santa Fe did not get any great bulk of the freight from the territory north of Techachapi; that there never was much; that they had a large volume of business from points on Southern Pacific rails, due chiefly to the efforts which they made with the consignees in the East (956,958); that, in the nature of things, the terminal lines, either initial or final, are in a much better position to compete than any intermediate carrier; that they did not reach to the business to any extent in northern California, and competition was just for the southern California business (959); that up to July 1, 1899, the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific together held substantially an absolute monopoly of the California transcontinental rails north of Mojave. (Chambers, 954.)

Mr. Kruttschnitt, the chairman of the executive committee of the board of directors of the Southern Pacific Company, testified that up to the time of the entrance of the Santa Fe into San Francisco the Central and Southern together continued to have a monopoly of the rail entrance into California north of Mojave. (Kruttschnitt, 764, 768.)

Mr. Spence, director of traffic of the Southern Pacific Company, testified that the Santa Fe was a factor in the competition before 1899 (Spence, 1029), because the Southern Pacific had to make as low rates to San Francisco as the Santa Fe did to Los Angeles in order to keep the people satisfied; that the Santa Fe was an active and successful competitor north of Mojave (Spence, 1030); that the possession of the initial or terminal lines, if they have been in the territory for a number of years, is of substantial advantage in competition. (Spence, 1158.)

Mr. Munroe, vice president of the Union Pacific Railroad, testified that the Santa Fe, prior to getting into San Francisco, had exerted a very limited influence only on the freight north of the Techahapi Pass (373), and that it took this railroad a little while after it reached San Francisco before it got a strong foothold (373).

Mr. Connor, commercial agent or general agent of the Southern Pacific Company in Cincinnati from 1889 to 1913, and now of the Union Pacific Railroad, testified that when the Santa Fe first got into San Francisco it was without terminals or branches and had no standing in California to speak of, and was not in a position to control or influence more than a very small percentage of the business (362).

Mr. Eshleman, formerly of the California Railroad Commission, testified that the company in possession of the terminals always had the advantage (892); that he did not think that the Santa Fe (888) was allowed to get much business originating on Southern Pacific rails; and that the Santa Fe has never had many branches in California. (Kruttschnitt, 768, 817.)

The Central Pacific Railroad had an absolute monopoly of the California transcontinental railroad traffic until 1881. The Southern Pacific Railroad, building southerly and southeasterly from San Francisco, made a junction with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad at Deming, N. Mex., in March, 1881, and with the Texas & Pacific Railroad at Sierra Blanca, Tex., on January 1, 1882; but the substantial monopoly of the Central Pacific Railroad was not broken until the opening of the Southern Pacific Railroad to New Orleans on February 1, 1883. (Schumacher, 145; Sproule, 224, 225; Kruttschnitt, 760, 763.)

The Northern Pacific Railroad was opened to Portland, Oreg., in 1883; the Canadian Pacific Railroad to Vancouver in 1887; and the Great Northern Railroad to Seattle in 1893; but none of these railroads ever have had any substantial effect upon California transcontinental freight. (Sproule, 227; Connor, 341; Chambers, 959.)

The Missouri Pacific Railroad from St. Louis, connecting with the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad and the Rio Grande Western Railroad, reached Ogden, Utah, in 1883 (Sproule, 224), but had no entrance into California except over the Central Pacific Railroad until the construction of the Western Pacific Railway in 1910.

The Oregon Short Line and Oregon Railway & Navigation Company connected the Union Pacific Railway at Granger, Utah, with Portland, Oreg., in 1884. It had no connection with California except by water from Portland to San Francisco. It did not reach interior California. The Supreme Court decided in United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S. 61, that this route was a factor in rate making to San Francisco. Mr Sproule, president of the Southern Pacific Company, testified that it was potential but not powerful (233); that it would not be a matter of effective competition, but a matter of stratagem (235). Mr. Kruttschnitt testified that there was a rate war with the Portland steamers in 1895 (765); that he did not know much about the movement of transcontinental freight over this line beyond what the Supreme Court said in the Union Pacific opinion (765); that before this opinion they thought the competition over this line had been largely a theoretical one, but that they had accepted the court's view (768). Mr. Kruttschnitt did not state whether the rate war to which he referred was on transcontinental business or on business between Oregon and California. Mr. Spence testified that this line does not carry any substantial freight traffic; that it could fix the terms for the other route; that all he meant was that the Portland route was a rate-making factor; that it was a reserve that put the Union Pacific in a position to see that the direct route did not seriously overreach it in the matter of terms (Spence, 1159). Mr. Chambers testified that it is likely that some freight moved that way, but not any great volume, and that it was not a serious competitor with the lines running directly to California. Mr. Schumacher, chairman of the directors of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, and former representative of the Union Pacific Railroad at San Francisco, testified that he never thought it a practicable route (160), and that he never called it a line at all (171). Mr. Connor testified that he never knew of a pound of freight going to San Francisco that way (341).

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad from Chicago joins the El Paso & Southwestern Railroad, which reached the Southern Pacific Railroad at El Paso, Tex., in 1902. (Sproule, 225.) It has no independent means of access to California.

The San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad, connecting the Union Pacific Railroad at Salt Lake City with Los Angeles and San Pedro, was opened on May 1, 1905. (Sproule, 225.) This is a practicable route for some points in the southern part of California, but not for any in the central or northern part. (Chambers, 960; Spence, 1159.)

The Western Pacific Railway has never succeeded in controlling a large amount of the transcontinental traffic of California. (Kruttschnitt, 818; Chambers, 960.)

There are many railroads in the western and central part of the United States that do a California business, but they are dependent upon the railroads above described to reach any part of California, Nevada, or southwestern Oregon.

In 1899 the only steamship line to California with connections across the Isthmus of Panama was that of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. (Spence, 1150.) The control of this was at this time in the hands of Mr. Huntington, the president of the Southern Pacific Company. (Schwerin, 694.)

The American-Hawaiian Steamship Company began to operate vessels between New York and San Francisco via the Straits of Magellan in October, 1900. In 1907 this line was changed so that it operated by a rail connection over the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. (Spence, 1021.)

Since the opening of the Panama Canal several additional steamship lines have been put into operation between New York and San Francisco (D. Ex. 57, p. 2242). (Schwerin, 698.)

All of the steamship lines are dependent for deliveries in the interior of California upon the railroads already mentioned. (Spence, 1127.)

Within the last five years several electric lines have been opened in California, and these operate under joint through rates with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad.

The Southern Pacific Company still has a good deal of exclusive territory in the State of California (Eshleman, 881.)

Most of the more important California terminals are reached both by the Southern Pacific Railroad and by the Central Pacific Railroad. (Spence, 1167.) A number of these are reached also by the Santa Fe in connection with the electric lines. There are few, if any, important points reached by the Santa Fe which are not on the Central Pacific Railroad or on the Southern Pacific Railroad. (Spence, 1168.)

The changes stated, which have occurred since 1899, have reduced somewhat the area in which the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad have a monopoly, but that monopoly still continues to an important extent. The Southern Pacific Company still has a good deal of exclusive territory in California. (Eshleman, 881.) In February, 1899, the monopoly covered the entire developed part of the State north of Mojave. A combination of the two railroads into the single ownership of the Southern Pacific Company perfected in one control the monopoly of these two railroads.

It is suggested for the defendants that this was the monopoly of a pioneer. It was not. Two competing pioneers combined to make this monopoly.

SECOND ASSIGNMENT.

The Pacific Railroad laws imposed on the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad and on the franchise of the Union Pacific Railroad the reciprocal duty of the one railroad not to discriminate against the other in favor of any other railroad, but to exert together in normal voluntary cooperation all the natural forces of a single railroad naturally competing with the parallel Southern Pacific Railroad, and the systematic and preconcerted discrimination which the Southern Pacific Company in operating the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad has practiced against the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad is a violation of those laws; and this combination between the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad furnishing the incentive of self-interest to discriminate against the Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and so to violate those laws, imposed on the Central Pacific Railroad an unreasonable and unlawful restraint to the injury of the public and to the defeat of the purpose of those laws, which was to create and develop three separate, competitive systems of railroad to the Pacific coast, with all the advantages that would come to the public from three railroads which were competitive.

(1) The Central Pacific Railroad Company was under a duty not to discriminate against the Union Pacific Railroad Company. (2) The combination into the Southern Pacific Company which created the lively incentive to discriminate against the Union Pacific Railroad was in itself violative of that duty even if no actual discrimination occurred. (3) There has been long continued discrimination against the Union Pacific Railroad as a result of the combination.

FIRST.

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD WAS UNDER A DUTY NOT TO DISCRIMINATE AGAINST THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company was under a special duty not to discriminate against the Union Pacific Railroad. This was a duty peculiar to the railroads subsidized under the Pacific Railroad laws. It was something additional to the ordinary duty of a common carrier not to discriminate.

The duty not to discriminate was not performed merely by permitting tracks to join, through trains to run, and joint rates and through service to continue. It required the Central Pacific Railroad Company to abstain from any discriminative action injurious to the Union Pacific Railroad.

This is evident from the language of the Pacific Railroad laws read in the light of the circumstances existing at the time of their enactment, and it has been expressly declared by this court in U. S. v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S. 61.

On May 5, 1852, the California Legislature passed an act to grant to the United States a right of way through California for the construction of a railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean (chap. 77, p. 150).

On July 1, 1862, Congress granted the fundamental franchise under which the Central Pacific Railroad was built. This act (P. Ex. 2, p. 1223) was entitled, "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes." (12 Stat., c. 120, p. 489.)

This act incorporated the Union Pacific Railroad to construct a railroad near the forty-first parallel of latitude west and east from the one-hundredth meridian of longitude, which is near the center of Nebraska, to the western boundary of Nevada (P. Ex. 2, p. 1229), and to the Missouri River (P. Ex. 2, pp. 1231–1233). It authorized the Union Pacific Railroad Company to connect at the Nevada line with the railroad to be built by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California (P. Ex. 2, pp. 1229, 1230). It authorized the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California to construct a railroad from the Pacific coast near San Francisco, or from the navigable waters of the Sacramento River to the eastern boundary of California, and thereafter to join in the completion of the railroad to the Missouri River (P. Ex. 2, p. 1231). It granted to these railroads a subsidy of public lands and also bonds of the United States to the amount of $16,000 for each mile of ordinary railroad, and double and treble that amount for certain sections (P. Ex. 2, p. 1232), these bonds to be paid at maturity by the railroads. It required in part return that—

> The whole line of said railroad and branches and telegraph shall be operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one connected, continuous line.

October 7, 1862, the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California accepted this act (P. Ex. 59, p. 1655) and on June 23, 1863, the Union Pacific Railroad Company accepted it (P. Ex. 60, p. 1658).

On July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., c. 216, p. 356), Congress amended the act of July 1, 1862, in several particulars (P. Ex. 3, p. 1236). This amendment doubled the land subsidy and permitted the railroads to issue first-mortgage bonds to an amount equal to the bonds to be furnished by the Government (P. Ex. 3, p. 1242). It provided that—

> The several companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads are hereby required to operate and use said roads and telegraph for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line; and, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others. (P. Ex. 3, p. 1244.)

On March 3, 1865, 13 Stat., c. 88, p. 504, Congress passed an act (P. Ex. 4, p. 1250) ratifying the assignment which the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California had made to the Western Pacific Railroad Company of its right to construct a portion of the railroad west of Sacramento to San Jose.

On April 10, 1869, the Senate and House of Representatives passed a joint resolution (P. Ex. 8, pp. 1263, 1264) providing, among other things, that—

> The common terminus of the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific Railroads shall be at or near Ogden; and the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall build and the Central Pacific Railroad Company pay for and own the railroad from the terminus aforesaid to Promontory Summit, at which point the rails shall meet and connect and form one continuous line.

On June 20, 1874, (18 Stat., c. 331, p. 111), Congress passed an act (P. Ex. 10, p. 1274) adding by amendment to the act of 1864 a clause as follows:

> Any officer or agent of the companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads, or of any company engaged in operating either of said roads, who shall refuse to operate and use the road or telegraph under his control, or which he is engaged in operating for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, or shall refuse, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each of said roads equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, or transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of, or adverse to, the road or business of any or either of said companies, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, etc.

In United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company (226 U. S. 61, 91) the court says:

> These acts required the two roads, the Central Pacific and Union Pacific, to be "operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one connected, continuous line" (12 Stat. 489, 495, act of July 1, 1862, c. 120, sec. 12) and in such operation and use, "to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others * * *." (13 Stat. 356, 362, act of July 2, 1864, c. 216, sec. 15.) They also authorized the consolidation of the roads. These acts, it is said, are only intended to secure the permanent physical connection of the roads and to provide for equal accommodations upon the basis of independent carriage and outline no method by which the two roads can be compelled to make a joint through rate, and that at the time of the stock transfer there was no such provision in the interstate commerce acts. Therefore, it is said that the Union Pacific, no less than the Rio Grande, would have been practically at the mercy of the Southern Pacific in the favorable or unfavorable treatment which might have been accorded to it in the matter of through business to be transported eastwardly. The purpose of Congress to secure one permanent road to the coast so far as physical continuity is concerned, is apparent, but we do not think the acts stop with that requirement. It is provided that facilities as to rates, time, and transportation shall be without any discrimination of any kind in favor of either of said companies or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others, and the purpose of Congress to secure a continuous line of road, operating from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast as one road, is further emphasized in the act of Congress of June 20, 1874, c. 331, 18 Stat. 111, making it an offense for any officer or agent of the companies authorized to construct the roads or engaged in the operation thereof, to refuse to operate and use the same for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one continuous line, and making it a misdemeanor to refuse, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each of said roads equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of or adverse to any or either of said companies. Such practices of systematic and preconcerted > discrimination as are said to have destroyed the Rio Grande's carrying trade as a connection for the East for business at Ogden would have violated the statute as discriminations adverse to the Union Pacific and be equally violative of the letter and spirit of the acts of Congress. Certainly such discriminations could be restrained by the courts (Union Pacific Railway Co. v. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co., 163 U. S. 564, 603, 604), and might possibly have resulted in a forfeiture of all rights under the acts of Congress. (Italics not in original.)

> Nor do we think it can be justly said that because of the connection with the Rio Grande road at Ogden the Southern Pacific was in position to discriminate at will against the Union Pacific in such wise as to greatly impair the latter road's carrying trade upon eastbound freight. (90)

This construction of the Pacific Railroad Acts follows from a consideration of the conditions under which they were passed and of the results sought.

These conditions and results have been considered by the court in a number of cases.

> United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 91 U. S. 72.
>
> United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 98 U. S. 569, 613.
>
> Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 724, 751.
>
> California v. Pacific Railroad Co., 127 U. S. 1.
>
> United States v. Stanford, 161 U. S. 412.
> Central Pacific Railroad v. California, 162 U. S. 91.

These acts were passed to secure a continuous railroad from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean. The title of the act of July 1, 1862, described " a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean." The body of the act provided that—

> The whole line of said railroad and branches and telegraph shall be operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one connected, continuous line.

The amendment of July 2, 1864, provided that—

> The several companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads are hereby required to operate and use said roads and telegraph for all purposes of communication, travel and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line; and, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others. (Italics not in original.)

It has been argued for the defendants that "discrimination" in order to be within the prohibition of these acts must be not only against one of the railroads described in the act, but also in favor of one of these railroads. Upon this construction the defendants base the contention that any discrimination by the Central Pacific Railroad under the control of the Southern Pacific Company in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad is not within these acts because the Southern Pacific Railroad was not one of those mentioned in the acts of 1862 and 1864.

This construction of these acts is not the reasonable one. There is nothing in the language that calls for any such construction. It is:

> Without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others.

This language covers any discrimination in favor of any one of these roads, or any discrimination against any one of these roads. There is no reason why Congress should wish to protect these roads against discrimination in favor of any one of these roads and be careless of protecting such road against discrimination in favor of some other railroad. Such discrimination would be just as injurious, even if the beneficiary of it was not incorporated under these particular acts. There is no reason for the distinction, and no such distinction is made by this court in dealing with the act in the Union Pacific case. On the contrary, the court says that the act would be violated by discrimination against the Union Pacific in favor of the Denver & Rio Grande, which is not mentioned in the act. It would be the same if it was in favor of the Southern Pacific.

The act of June 20, 1874, made it a misdemeanor for any officer or agent of any of the companies to refuse to carry out the provision above quoted from the act of 1864.

The benefits and burdens given and imposed by this section were peculiar to the particular companies to which the Government aid was extended.

This was not a mere codification of the well recognized principle of the common law that carriers must not discriminate. It differs in this respect from such a provision as that of the constitution of Colorado, which was construed in Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad v. Denver & New Orleans Railroad Company, 110 U. S. 667, 672, 680. That provision was in favor of "all" individuals, associations, and corporations, and was imposed upon "any" railroad (672), and it contained no provision requiring operation in any respect as a "through" and "continuous" line (680).

The Pacific Railroad acts required operation as "one continuous line" and the discrimination prohibited was that adverse to the road or business of any or either of "the" others.

There were special reasons for these special provisions. Regardless of them, these corporations would be, by the common law, under a duty not to discriminate in the limited sense. This railroad was provided not merely for the ordinary public advantages that come to a particular region from the opening of a railroad. The need of a military highway to the coast and of easy access for the East to the undeveloped West was national. It was thought to be so imperative as to warrant not merely giving the usual right of eminent domain, but also expending the public moneys and lands and extending the public credit. This made the relation of the United States to these railroads not only that of a sovereign, but also that of a creditor.

United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 98 U. S. 569, 613.

Sinking Fund cases, 99 U. S. 700, 724, 751.

The extension of unusual favors to these corporations warranted requiring the performance of unusual duties by them. The ordinary railroad, enjoying no special favor from the sovereign except the granting of the right of eminent domain, had not been required to enter into any business relations with any other railroad, beyond those undertaken voluntarily or with the public generally.

The component parts of this railroad were required to unify its operations and virtually to become one, except that they could maintain their separate corporate identities, and so make their profits and sustain their losses upon the particular section of the railroad which they respectively built and operated.

The United States was concerned in having a strong railroad not only because of its needs as a sovereign and the advantages in service which would come to the people of that sovereignty, but also as a creditor, dependent for payment upon the success of this railroad.

The interests of the United States as a creditor demanded the financial success not only of the railroad company that might discriminate and gain financially thereby but also of the railroad company which might be the object of the discrimination.

As the United States could not obtain payment of the donated bonds, either principal or interest, for 30 years (United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 91 U. S. 72), it was interested to secure the financial success of this railroad not only immediately but also for a long period in the future.

It was not open to doubt that the strength of the entire railroad would be increased if each part of it was cooperating for the success of the whole. It was to secure these results that Congress directed the operation of this road as one line and that no discrimination should be made by one part against the other.

The duty to operate as one continuous line and not to discriminate against parts of that line was a burden upon the franchise, and not merely upon the first corporations which acquired it. It was a condition to the acquisition and exercise of the franchise granted by the Pacific Railroad acts that it should be exercised in conformity to the requirements of these acts. The Central Pacific Railroad Company could not convey the franchise to the Central Pacific Railway Company free of this burden.

Union Pacific Railroad Co. v. Mason City & Fort Dodge R. R. Co., 199 U. S. 160.

United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, 92.

Those in control of the Central Pacific Railroad are now and always have been under a duty not to discriminate against the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

SECOND.

THE COMBINATION INTO THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY WHICH CREATED THE LIVELY INCENTIVE TO DISCRIMINATE AGAINST THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD WAS IN ITSELF VIOLATIVE OF THAT DUTY, EVEN IF NO ACTUAL DISCRIMINATION OCCURRED.

With the Central Pacific Railroad Company under a duty not to discriminate against the Union Pacific Railroad, it would seem to be evident that any device by which the operation of its railroad was put into the control of those whose interest it was to discriminate against the Union Pacific Railroad would be ipso facto violative of that duty and unlawful. Parties should not be permitted by their voluntary acts to put themselves in a situation where their self-interest constantly prompts them not to perform their legal duties.

The combination into the Southern Pacific Company was just such an act. The Central Pacific Railroad Company, under the control of those interested exclusively in developing its business, would naturally strive to forward as much freight as possible to and from California through Ogden in preference to El Paso. The Southern Pacific Company, controlling the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad, would naturally strive to forward all the freight possible to and from California through El Paso and Galveston and New Orleans, in preference to Ogden. The duty of the Southern Pacific Company to earn revenue for its stockholders would require of it the course of conduct which would increase that revenue. This duty was absolutely inconsistent with the duty to press for the success of the Ogden gateway. This inconsistency in the position of the Southern Pacific Company was created by its action in taking control of the Central Pacific Railroad, whose duties were directly opposed to the interests of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Even if the Southern Pacific Company had performed the impossible task of doing everything that it could to further the interests of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and, at the same time, of doing everything that it could to further the interests of the Central Pacific Railroad, with its inconsistent duties, it would not render lawful the combination which produced the inconsistency. It is unlawful to contract oneself into a position where self-interest will conflict in this way with the performance of duty.

For a rival line to take control of the operation of the western half of the Central-Union line was destructive of the natural cohesion between the Central and the Union which was essential to make the two parts in operation one line. It materially diminished the power of the eastern half in its competition with the rival line, and it destroyed entirely that of the western half.

Even if the action of the western half fell short of affirmative discrimination against the eastern half and in favor of its rival, the paralysis of the incentive to build up the business of the older road, with a consequent subtraction from that of the controlling rival, would inevitably retard, if it did not destroy entirely, the success of the older road. The creation of the situation which would render this even possible was contrary to the laws which had prescribed that these two halves should have all the potential success which would come from real cooperation as one line from the Pacific coast to the Missouri River.

This combination was more than mere negative cessation of competition by the western half. It was the taking of an affirmative step calculated to produce this cessation, and to deprive the older road of its natural incentive to effort and its consequent chance of success.

The Pacific Railroad laws required of these railroads not only unity in track connections and train operation, and through rates and service, but also required a road operating from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast "as one road." U. S. v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 226 U. S. 61, 91.

No railroad, one-half free and one-half in the bondage of a rival, could be operated as one road. Such a control, tending against the fulfillment of the requirements of the law, is to be judged by its tendency and not merely by its success. So tested, this control is an unreasonable and an unlawful restraint.

The defendants have stated the contention for the petitioner to be that the Pacific Railroad acts required the Central Pacific Railroad to solicit actively and exclusively for the Union Pacific Railroad. This is not an accurate statement of the Government's position.

It is one thing to say that this railroad must solicit actively and exclusively for the Union Pacific Railroad. It is quite another to say that it must abstain from soliciting actively against the Union Pacific Railroad.

Soliciting freight with indifference as to the line over which it should be forwarded is not discriminative in the same sense as solicitation directed in favor of a particular line, and therefore against another particular line.

If the Central Pacific Railroad, with indifference to the forwarding line, had sought to get all the freight that it could carry and had not tried to keep it away from the Union Pacific Railroad, the natural tendency would have been for much of the freight to go over the Union Pacific Railroad which has gone instead over the Southern Pacific Railroad.

The control of the Central Pacific Railroad by the Southern Pacific Company was contrary to the Pacific Railroad Acts, not necessarily because of its tendency to stop solicitation by the Central Pacific Railroad exclusively in favor of the Union Pacific Railroad, but because of its tendency to produce solicitation by the Central Pacific Railroad against the Union Pacific Railroad. And it was this tendency, and not its success, which determined the unlawfulness of this control.

It distorted the normal development of the Central line in competition with the Southern line and deprived the public of the advantages to be expected from such competition required by the Pacific Railroad Acts.

THIRD.

THERE HAS BEEN LONG CONTINUED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD AS A RESULT OF THE COMBINATION.

The discrimination prohibited has been defined by this court to include conduct tending to divert traffic from the Union Pacific Railroad and to other railroads—namely, "such practices of systematic and preconcerted discrimination as are said to have destroyed the Rio Grande's carrying trade as a connection for the East for business at Ogden." (226 U. S. 61, 91.) These practices consisted of active and persistent solicitation (Munroe, 377), and nothing more.

It is admitted that these practices of the Southern Pacific Company have been systematic and preconcerted. (Spence, 1155; Connor, 338.)

Since 1883 and up to the present time it has been the regularly established and systematic practice of the Southern Pacific Company to divert all the freight possible between California, Oregon, and Nevada in the West and the Middle West and the Atlantic seaboard on the East from the Ogden gateway to the Southern Pacific Railroad via El Paso and New Orleans or Galveston. (Sproule, 183, 184, 185, 189, 202, 203, 239, 255; Lovett, 289, 292; Connor, 338, 340, 329, 330, 360, 365; Munroe, 375, 376, 377, 378, 383, 371, 387; Schumacher, 149, 152, 174; Kruttschnitt, 739, 741, 808, 810, 825, 827; Chambers, 966; Lincoln, 113, 114; Spence, 1034, 1036.)

The evidence on this subject comes largely from the defendants' own witnesses and is not disputed. Yet the opinion of the court below contains no reference whatever to any of this evidence, or to the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Union Pacific case defining the duty of the Central Pacific Railroad not to discriminate (2328).

The natural, shortest, quickest, and best route between central and northern California on the West, and the Middle West territory and Atlantic seaboard on the East, during all this time, has been the Central Pacific-Union Pacific route. (Stubbs, 100; Lincoln, 127; Schumacher, 147; Lovett, 290, 293; Connor, 331, 343, 346, 363; Sproule, 205, 209, 210, 378; Munroe, 370, 375.)

The distance from San Francisco to New York City via the Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad is 3,191 miles, and from San Francisco to New York City via rail to New Orleans and water to New York is 4,225 miles. To interior points in Atlantic seaboard territory the distance via the Union Pacific Railroad is even less, and via New Orleans correspondingly more. Buffalo is 442 miles short of New York City by the Union Pacific route and that much beyond New York by the water route. (Sproule 207.)

The distance from San Francisco to Cincinnati via the Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad is 2,559 miles, and via New Orleans it is 3,323 miles. (P. Ex. 67, p. 1668.) Freight from Cincinnati to San Francisco via New Orleans moves 836 miles to reach New Orleans, and is then 72 miles, only, nearer San Francisco than when it started. (P. Ex. 67, p. 1668.) Of the 2,559 miles from Cincinnati to San Francisco, 1,000 miles are on the Union Pacific Railroad and 783 on the Central Pacific Railroad, a total of 1,783 miles. (Sproule, 206.) The advantage in distance via the Union Pacific Railroad and Central Pacific Railroad over the route via New Orleans increases as the point of origin moves northerly from Cincinnati.

The advantage in distance of the Union Pacific-Central Pacific route over the New Orleans route is even greater for northern, central, and eastern California and for southwestern Oregon than it is for

San Francisco. The junction point at Roseville is farther than San Francisco from El Paso and New Orleans and 107 miles nearer than San Francisco to Ogden. Every mile east of Roseville reduces by so much the distance over the Ogden route and increases correspondingly the distance over the El Paso or New Orleans route.

The ordinary time in transit for freight between San Francisco and New York is two or three days shorter by the Central Pacific-Union Pacific route than by the New Orleans route. (Munroe, 375.) The difference to Cincinnati is a trifle greater. (Connor, 342.) Delays on the route over the Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad and eastern connections to the Atlantic seaboard seldom have occurred during the period since 1887. (Connor, 343, 344; Monroe, 375; Richardson, 639.) They have been no greater than on the Sunset Route. (Richardson, 639; Connor, 344.)

Freight requiring particularly rapid transportation and good service, such as valuable cargoes of silk from the Orient and deciduous fruits, have been moved over the Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad to the exclusion of the Southern Pacific Railroad. (Lincoln, 113; Spence, 209; Schwerin, 700.)

Mr. Connor testified that, if not artificially diverted by solicitation, 75 per cent of the freight from northern and central California would go through Ogden, 20 per cent over the Atchison,

Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, 5 per cent over the Western Pacific Railway, and nothing over the Southern Pacific Railroad. (Connor, 337, 363.)

Notwithstanding these natural advantages, the Central Pacific Railroad, under the control of the Southern Pacific Company, has diverted traffic from its own rails and those of the Union Pacific Railroad to a large amount and for many years.

Before 1899 the Southern Pacific Railroad via the New Orleans route carried probably more than one-half of the Atlantic seaboard competitive business, probably as high as 80 or 90 per cent. (Chambers, 942.)

In the eighties probably as much as 90 per cent of the New York-San Francisco business was moved over this route. (Schumacher, 155.) In 1890 this route had secured the major part of the westbound traffic between the Atlantic seaboard and California of a character in which it could engage (Spence, 1028), and it continued to handle the major part of that traffic until 1895. (Spence, 1029.)

The Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad have been operated as one railroad in the sense only that they have had joint through rates and through trains, but in no other respect. (Schumacher, 172, 173; Richardson, 636, Spence, 1045; Kruttschnitt, 728, 729.) In this sense the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Rock Island, El Paso, and Southwestern Railroads are operated as one railroad, (Spence, 1152.) In this sense the Central Pacific Railroad and the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad are operated as one railroad. (Richardson, 639.) Mr. Richardson, superintendent of transportation of the Southern Pacific Company, testified that in this respect there is no difference between the treatment accorded the Union Pacific and that accorded the Denver & Rio Grande and El Paso and Southwestern as far as he knows (638).

Since the so-called merger between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific in 1901, the passenger advertising funds of the Southern Pacific for westbound business have been placed in the hands of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the corresponding funds of the Union Pacific for eastbound business have been placed in the hands of the Southern Pacific Company. (Spence, 1046, 1157.) This is confined to passenger business and is not confined to the Union Pacific Railroad.

Prior to the time at which the Union Pacific Railroad Company acquired the control of the Southern Pacific Company, in 1901, the condition of the Central Pacific Railroad was much inferior to what it became thereafter. (Kruttschnitt, 814, 815; Munroe, 379; Schumacher, 152; Chambers, 978.)

The Union Pacific Railroad Company, in its answer in the suit of the United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, The Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and others (D. Ex. 50, p. 2097), states:

> That the lines of railroad now owned by defendant Union Pacific Railroad Company had been greatly improved while in the hands of receivers in the foreclosure proceedings hereinbefore mentioned, and prior to January 1, 1901, it recognized the necessity, in the interest of the public as well as of itself, of further improving, and it had determined to further improve, the said railroads, particularly the line between Council Bluffs and Ogden, in order to be able to develop its traffic and serve and accomplish the object of its construction, and to handle such traffic efficiently and economically. Unless the line of the Central Pacific Railway Company, extending from Ogden to the Pacific Ocean, was likewise improved and put and maintained in condition to handle promptly and efficiently the transcontinental traffic passing over the Union Pacific Railroad, the improvement of the latter, as contemplated, would be practically futile. The said Central Pacific Railroad had been mortgaged for large amounts, and the Central Pacific Railway Company was without means or credit to procure the means necessary to bring by improvements its said line of railroad up to anything approximating the condition and efficiency of said Union Pacific Railroad, and the Southern Pacific Company was also without such means or credit, as practically all of its assets and the assets of the various corporations controlled by it were mortgaged or otherwise pledged.

For the purpose of procuring the improvement of the said Central Pacific Railroad and to bring it up to the standard and degree of efficiency approximately of the line of the Union Pacific Railroad, and in order that said Union Pacific Railroad Company should become and securely remain the preferred connection of said Southern Pacific Company and Central Pacific Railway Company at Ogden, and thereby secure the unrouted traffic of said companies interchanged at Ogden, and in order to protect itself against the acquisition and control of said Central Pacific Railway Company by adverse interests to these defendants, and without any intent or purpose in any wise to suppress or restrain any competition in interstate or foreign commerce, the said 900,000 shares of the capital stock of said Southern Pacific Company were purchased and acquired as hereinbefore alleged by defendants, Union Pacific Railroad Company and Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, and are now so held by the company last named.

Prior to 1901 the expenditure of the Central Pacific Railroad Company for maintenance of ways and structures varied between $1,100,000 and $2,500,000 annually. (P. Ex. 37, p. 1635.) During the same period the expenditures on the through route of the Southern Pacific Railroad from San Francisco to New Orleans varied between $2,500,000 and $4,800,000 annually. (P. Ex. 38, p. 1636.) Between January 1, 1887, and June 30, 1901, the expenditures of the Central Pacific Railroad Company for additions and betterments, not including new lines, amounted to $10,268,410.01. (P. Ex. 39,

p. 1636.) Between March 1, 1885, and June 30, 1901, the expenditures for the same purposes on the through route of the Southern Pacific Railroad from San Francisco to New Orleans amounted to $30,346,240.10. (P. Ex. 40, p. 1637.)

When the Union Pacific obtained control of the Southern Pacific Company there was inaugurated an era of great improvement of the Central Pacific Railroad (Sproule, 239), and the roadbed of the Union Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad and the service over the rails of these two roads was greatly improved. (Sproule, 239, 240.) The Union Pacific Railroad could not, prior to 1901, without the cooperation of the Central Pacific Railroad, make effective any effort for improved service between Omaha and San Francisco Bay. (Sproule, 240.)

The Union Pacific Railroad, during the period prior to 1901, was in advance of the Central Pacific Railroad. (Munroe, 379.) Mr. Munroe, vice president of the Union Pacific, never knew of any action taken by the Southern Pacific Company in the administration of the Central Pacific Railroad looking to the betterment of the Central Pacific route as against the Southern. (Munroe, 388.)

Prior to 1901 the Central Pacific Railroad was a fairly good dirt railroad, with very little ballast except over the mountains on their heavy grades, and laid with 60 or 70 pound rails and kept up just fair. After the merger, so called, in 1901, considerable sums were spent in the upkeep and improvement of the Central Pacific line, and the efficiency and comfort of the road before was about 50 per cent of what it has become since. (Schumacher, 152.)

The Southern Pacific Company kept its freight service over the Sunset line to New York better than any other up to a period after 1901, and continued to do so until the all rail lines had arranged their service so as to make it equal with the Sunset Route service. (Chambers, 979.) Up to the time that the competition of the Atchison made it necessary, Mr. Chambers, vice president of the Atchison did not recollect any efforts of the Southern Pacific Company to make its service through Ogden equal to or preferable to that via the Sunset line. (Chambers, 963.) The service from the Atlantic seaboard to Chicago was always much better for the distance hauled, as long as he could recall, than it was west of Chicago. The lines leading from New York to Chicago—the Pennsylvania, the New York Central particularly, and the Erie—have an expedited merchandise service, a fast service, that they have had for years. They had it at the time that the Atchison first began to make an effort to get seaboard business. They did not have to improve their service very much. The improvement had to be west of Chicago. They had made no great effort to secure the California traffic as against the Sunset Route, because the service could not be equaled under the arrangements they had with western lines, and the western lines were not in a position to equal the service of the Sunset Route, but they gradually got better, and there was an improvement in billing, the making of the through way bills, the prompt settlement of claims, and avoiding transfers. The Iowa lines, most of them, are in very good shape, and some of them have been for 25 years. The difficulty in bringing up the all-rail service was with the lines west of Omaha and west of the Colorado junctions. The Union Pacific has always been a first-class road since 1887, and the Ogden route has always given very good service. (Chambers, 980.)

Mr. J. C. Stubbs, who is now on the pension rolls of the Southern Pacific Company, was the one having the important say as to the methods of developing the traffic for the Southern Pacific Company prior to 1901, and if any effort had been made to organize through service via Ogden from the Atlantic to the Pacific, it is likely that it would have been made by Mr. Stubbs. (Spence, 1122.) He was not called by the defendants as a witness. Mr. Spence could not tell whether he had ever talked with Mr. Stubbs as to such effort. He did not recall Mr. Stubbs having informed him of any effort that he made after the opening of the Sunset Route to get coordination between the eastern roads and the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific. Mr. Edwin Hawley, the general eastern agent of the Southern Pacific Company, and subsequently assistant general traffic manager, and one of the ablest railroad men of his day, worked directly and through his subordinates in securing traffic for the Southern Pacific Company, preferentially via the Sunset Gulf Route. Mr. Hawley remained with the Southern Pacific Company up to March 1, 1902. (Spence, 1123.) The success of the Sunset Route was due to the influence of the Southern Pacific being exerted in favor of that route. (Spence, 1117.)

Mr. Chambers, representing the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, had to do personally with the improvement of the all-rail service so as to compete with the Sunset Gulf line. The Atchison was the first to arrange for through billing from New York to the Pacific coast points and to run through cars (Chambers, 943), in 1889 or 1890. This was not done generally by the all-rail carriers. The Erie-Santa Fe arrangement was the first through billing in connection with all-rail lines. The practice before was for each line to make its own way bill and collect its proportion of the joint rate from its connecting carrier, so that all except the last charges were payable as advance charges, which made it necessary for the shipper to go back to the connecting railroads in case of an overcharge. In the through billing the total charge could be corrected by the agent at destination. (Chambers, 943.) The local billing was very cumbersome and very unsatisfactory. The through billing was one of the strongest points in the Sunset Route. Mr. Chambers thought it was about 1900 before the all-rail lines generally adopted the practice of through billing; that they came in one after another (944). Of course this resulted in an improvement of the all-rail service and in diminishing the proportion of the traffic obtained by the Sunset Gulf Route. When he made his first through billing arrangements with the Erie Railroad, about 1889, it was the first time there had been any effective competition from the Atlantic seaboard against the Sunset Route. (Chambers, 959.) It took some years to work any considerable volume of business, because the Atchison line was not in very good physical condition. As the condition and service improved the volume of business increased, and the great improvement came after 1895. (Chambers, 958.) The Atchison competition with the Sunset Route in the beginning was just for the southern California business. It did not reach to any extent into northern California. (Chambers, 959.) The through billing through Ogden followed along after that time. The Atchison did not make very much of an effort to compete with the Sunset Route from New York to northern California until after 1900. It was not in a position to compete effectively up to that time. (Chambers, 959.)

Mr. Spence testified that he was not sure whether the Atchison was a pioneer in the through billing; that through billing was very uncommon in the early days; that he should say that the Southern Pacific began through billing through Ogden in the early nineties; that he could not state from memory accurately (1115). He could not tell when throughpackage cars began to be run. He did not think they preceded through billing (1115). He testified that there was difficulty with the lines east of Omaha; that he did not and would not know whether the Southern Pacific Company ever attempted to organize coordination with those lines for through business 1117). If the Southern Pacific line in California had stopped at the southern boundary of the State, if the Southern Pacific had not been in the management of the entire line from coast to coast, the Sunset Route, in his judgment, would never have been able to secure a substantial share of the traffic between Atlantic seaboard territory and California; and if the Southern Pacific's short haul had been to Los Angeles and its longer haul to Ogden, or, in other words, if the influence of the Southern Pacific Company upon that traffic had been exerted in favor of the Ogden haul, the Sunset Route could never have made the progress that it made in getting business; that the Southern Pacific would naturally have preferred its long haul. (Spence, 1120.)

The Southern Pacific Company has made lower rates on some commodities via the Southern Pacific Railroad than by the Central Pacific-Union Pacific Railroad. (P. Ex. 30, 31, pp. 1599, 1611; Topping, 275.) At times the number of these commodities has exceeded 100. (P. Ex. 30, 31, pp. 1606, 1604, 1601.) They made a 55-cent rate from California to New York on wine in tank cars via New Orleans, with right to barrel in transit, against 75 cents all-rail, with the added advantage that as barrels originated largely in Louisiana and Arkansas the shipper is saved the freight on the empty barrels.

The natural effort of the Union Pacific-Central Pacific line, if it were operated as one continuous line, would be to have all the freight business moved over that line. (Spence, 1163; Kruttschnitt, 826; Richardson, 638; Munroe, 378.)

Notwithstanding the natural advantages of the Central Pacific-Union Pacific route to and from all points north of Tehachapi Pass, the Central Pacific Company, under the control of the Southern Pacific Company, has diverted traffic from its own rails and those of the Union Pacific Railroad to an enormous extent. (Chambers, 942; Spence, 1028, 1119; Schumacher, 150.)

Not only has there been a failure to advance the use of this route for commodities which could be induced to move by the Southern Pacific route through Galveston or New Orleans, but also there has been a very active contrary effort on the part of the Central Pacific Railroad, under the control of the Southern Pacific Company, to have as little freight of this kind as possible move over the Central Pacific-Union Pacific route. (Connor, 329, 330–332, 338, 339, 343, 345, 360, 364, 365; Schumacher, 159, 173; Sproule, 183–185, 188, 197, 203, 204, 208, 212, 213, 214, 239, 240, 255; Chambers, 942; Johnson, 311; Hall, 312; Munroe, 371, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 380, 381, 382, 384, 387, 388; Lincoln, 113, 114, 130, 147, 150, 151, 152; Lovett, 289, 293, 294, 297, 303; De Friest, 305; Kruttschnitt, 739, 741, 767, 808, 810, 813, 816, 825, 827; Spence, 1036, 1037, 1034, 1028.)

Solicitation has a substantial effect upon the routing of freight. (Chambers, 946; Sproule, 211, 239.)

Solicitation for freight traffic is constant day in and day out. (Schumacher, 166, 167.) The soliciting done by the Southern Pacific had the effect of diminishing the amount of traffic which normally would go over the Central Pacific and Union Pacific Railroads. (Schumacher, 173; Connor, 345.)

The Southern Pacific prior to 1901 would not solicit business to go by way of the Central Pacific Railroad. (Lincoln, 113.) Mr. Lincoln, of the Missouri Pacific, had never known of such a thing prior to that date. (Lincoln, 113, 114.) There were no separate traffic representatives for the Central Pacific Railroad. (Lincoln, 123.)

Mr. Connor testified that they devoted their exclusive time and attention to securing the freight from California to his territory for the New Orleans route, and bent every effort with everybody who could lend any assistance; that their receiving agents and solicitors in California, if it was controlled there, were notified and appealed to for assistance; that if the control rested at Chicago, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, or New York, or in any other point, they went after it through their representatives there; and that if it was controlled in his territory he looked out for it there; and that they all pulled together all the time and worked every means known to influence and secure the shipment for that route, and never let up until the shipment was on the cars moving (Connor, 328, 329); that the Southern Pacific was a very powerful railroad, and looked upon as such by the receivers in California and by the shippers there; and that they cultivated them and tried to do everything they could for their interest and to build up their confidence in that road; that they traced their freight; that they gave them reports on its movement and route, and that they kept them more than satisfied; and that the Southern Pacific Company in California is a very influential road, and that if there were any new industries or industrials being located there, if they were on local territory requiring sidings, the Southern Pacific Company naturally had to put them in; that if there was any material to be moved from the East to complete these industrials and plants it was one of the first things their Southern Pacific solicitors did to see that business was routed to the greatest extent by the long haul; that is, via New Orleans and over the Southern Pacific Railroad (Connor, 329); that there were many times during the period before 1901 when the published tariff rates through New Orleans were cut, although the Southern Pacific Company was not an instigator thereof; that the Southern Pacific Company was a great, big, powerful road, and that they brought pressure to bear in California to make it to their interest to give them the business (Connor, 345); that the Southern Pacific Company supplied him with special equipment required for the shipment of freight from his territory—namely, a special type of cars for carrying buggies and furniture—and that this equipment was for use exclusively through New Orleans and over the Southern Pacific Railroad (Connor, 330), and no similar equipment was provided for the Central Pacific Railroad; that from 1887 to 1901 the Southern Pacific Company, which operated the Central Pacific Railroad, gave no assistance to the Union Pacific Railroad to secure any freight via Ogden which could be secured via the Southern Pacific Railroad (Connor, 340); that the other connections of the Union Pacific Railroad, such as the Chicago & North Western, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, the Illinois Central, the Chicago & Great Western, and the Chicago & Alton, lend their assistance to the Union Pacific Railroad in securing freight traffic (Connor, 340); that there was an absence of competition between the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad; that the Southern Pacific Company had a prescribed blank to be filled out when any agent learned that any freight had traveled over the Central Pacific Railroad from Mr. Connor's territory, to be followed by an immediate call on the shipper in the effort to make him ship no more that way, but to employ the route over the Southern Pacific Railroad (Connor, 338), and that these instructions were received, transmitted, and carried out constantly (Connor, 339); that if the routing was controlled in California the efforts were applied there, and that failing to get the routing changed they looked upon the shipment as lost (Connor, 330), and that he as agent of the Southern Pacific

Company worked the business via the Southern Pacific Railroad first, last, and all the time. (Connor, 359.)

Mr. Schumacher testified that prior to 1901 he had never known of any effort of the Southern Pacific Company to get any transcontinental freight over the Central Pacific Railroad to any point east of the dead line near Indianapolis and Detroit, except that which it was unable to control for the other route (Schumacher, 147, 152); that at that time very little of the transcontinental freight from central and northern California moved over the Central Pacific Railroad through Ogden, because of the strong local organization of the Southern Pacific Company in California. (Schumacher, 149.)

Mr. Lovett, the chairman of the executive committee of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, testified that there is no competition between the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad (Lovett, 292); that the Central Pacific Railroad does not work the business from the Atlantic seaboard territory at all, except where it can not get it by the southern route (Lovett, 289); that the Central Pacific Railroad is not a factor in it at all. (Lovett, 293.)

The effort of the Southern Pacific Company to divert the freight from the natural course through Ogden was extended even to freight originating on the lines of the Central Pacific Railroad or moved over those lines in northern and central California and in Nevada. (Kruttschnitt, 825.)

In consequence of their effort the Nevada wool shipments destined to New York and Boston originating on the lines of the Central Pacific Railroad and which, of course, would move through Ogden and over the Central Pacific Railroad (Munroe, 378), were induced to move via Sacramento, El Paso, and New Orleans to New York and Boston. The Central Pacific Railroad, under the control of the Southern Pacific Company, published rates for this wool via El Paso and the Gulf routes from points in Nevada and as far east as Corinne, Utah. (P. Ex. 32, p. 1621; Topping, 282.) Up to September 14, 1909, the Southern Pacific Company made no through commodity rates via Ogden on wool from any point west of Elko, Nev. This kept the Ogden gateway closed. On that date rates were published for points in Nevada as far west as Winnemucca, and on June 25, 1910, they were published for points west of Winnemucca. (Munroe, 371.)

Prior to these dates the movement of wool via Ogden was very limited, and the great bulk of it moved via Sacramento and El Paso to New Orleans and by boat to New York, and thence by transfer to Boston. (Munroe, 371; Schumacher, 152; Sproule, 219, 221.) Winnemucca is 365 miles west of Ogden and 2,774 miles from New York via Ogden, and is over 4,550 miles from New York via Sacramento, El Paso, and New Orleans. It is farther from New Orleans than it is from New York, and transshipment at New Orleans is necessary, and in the case of wool for Boston another transshipment at New York is necessary. Cars through Ogden would go directly to New York or to Boston. Elko is 140 miles east of Winnemucca and correspondingly nearer New York and farther from New Orleans. The advantages of the Ogden route were apparently such that between Elko and Corinne, where the rates were published both ways, little or no wool could be induced to go via the long route. (Sproule, 219; Munroe, 381.)

It is contended for the defendants that the failure of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to change the routing of Nevada wool when that company came into control of the Southern Pacific Company shows that that routing was not a discrimination against the Union Pacific Railroad. This contention is unfounded. When the Union Pacific Railroad Company acquired control of the Southern Pacific Company it obtained a 46 per cent interest in the stock, and therefore in the earnings, of the Southern Pacific Company. If Nevada wool was routed back through California and via the Southern Pacific Railroad through New Orleans and to New York, the Union Pacific Railroad Company received 46 per cent of the revenue. If it was routed from Nevada through Ogden to New York, the Union Pacific Railroad Company received a much smaller percentage of the revenue—that is, received 100 per cent of the revenue for the haul from Ogden to Omaha, and 46 per cent of the revenue for the haul from Nevada to Ogden, but it received nothing for the haul from Omaha to New York.

Its interest as a stockholder in the Southern Pacific Company neutralized or overcame its interest, as the company operating the Union Pacific Railroad, as to this Nevada wool traffic.

The effect of solicitation upon the movement of traffic is shown by the results of the so-called merger between the Southern Pacific Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company, on the eastbound traffic over the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad from Ogden. Prior to this merger the Central Pacific Railroad had two outlets at Ogden for its eastbound traffic—one over the Union Pacific Railroad, and the other over the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad—and a substantial part of this traffic moved over the latter road. (Sproule, 238.) Mr. Schumacher estimated the amount at 45 per cent (168). This proportion was materially reduced after the merger, so that the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad felt it necessary to build the Western Pacific Railway to the coast. (Schumacher, 151; Sproule, 238.)

This change in routing was accomplished without the closing of any gateway, and by the efforts of the Southern Pacific Company (Munroe, 377; Sproule, 238), and its active and persistent solicitation. (Munroe, 377.)

Mr. Kruttschnitt testified that the effort of those in charge of the Central Pacific Railroad at all times between 1883 and 1901 was to induce as much traffic as possible to travel, not over the Union Pacific, but over the Sunset line (825, 810, 767, 739), irrespective of whether the freight originated on Southern Pacific tracks or on Central Pacific tracks (825).

Representatives of eastern connecting railroads testified that it is customary for connecting railroads to assist each other to get traffic over their lines, but that the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Company gave no assistance to the connections of the Central Pacific Railroad to get any traffic over the Central Pacific Railroad which could be influenced to go over the Southern Pacific Railroad (De Friest, 305; Johnson, 311; Hall, 312), and that the indifference of the Southern Pacific Company toward the Ogden gateway since the unmerging of the Union Pacific-Southern Pacific combination is as great as it was before the formation of that combination in 1901. (De Friest, 305.)

Mr. Sproule testified that as to all freight which can be obtained for the Southern Pacific Railroad the effort of the Southern Pacific Company is directed against the success of the efforts of the connecting railroads which seek to obtain freight to move over the Central Pacific Railroad, (189, 197, 213); that the Southern Pacific Company seeks to get for the Southern Pacific Railroad all the business between California and the Atlantic Seaboard which can be persuaded to that route (183); that it does not seek to get for the Central Pacific Railroad any of that business that can be controlled for the Southern Pacific Railroad (184, 185), except certain particular commodities which can not be carried advantageously over the southern route; that prior to 1901 the Southern Pacific Company exerted this same effort as to the Central Freight Association territory (202); that their effort was to get the Oregon business to go via the Southern Pacific through El Paso (204); that it worked for its long haul (217, 255); that it was the practice before 1901 to watch the movement of traffic through Omaha and to follow up shippers to see whether they could be persuaded to send it over the Sunset Route (240); that the policy of the Southern Pacific Company since the dissolution in 1913 of the Southern Pacific-Union Pacific merger is the same as it was before the formation of that combination in 1901, (201).

This same practice of systematic and preconcerted discrimination against the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad has been continued for years by the Central Pacific Railroad under the control of the Southern Pacific Company. (Spence, 1155.)

Mr. Spence testified that if it could not secure the business for the southern route its effort was to secure it via Ogden, and if it could secure the business via the southern route to and from the territory described, either through New Orleans or, prior to 1901, through the Texas gateways (1126), its effort was not to have it go by Ogden, and that the effort was systematic and preconcerted (1155, 1156). Mr. Connor and Mr. Munroe testified that this systematic and preconcerted discrimination against the Union Pacific Railroad continued up to the so-called merger in 1901. (Connor, 338; Munroe, 375.) Mr. Munroe testified that this discrimination is still kept up and that a large volume of traffic is diverted. (Munroe, 376.)

If not artificially diverted, substantially all freight moved by the Southern Pacific Company between points in California north of Tehachapi Pass, and in Nevada and southwestern Oregon on the west, and all points east of the Missouri River at or north of the latitude of St. Louis, Mo., on the east, would be moved over the Union Pacific Railroad as the shortest, quickest, and best route.

If the Union Pacific-Central Pacific line was operated as one continuous line the natural effort would be to move all the freight possible over that line. (Richardson, 826; Kruttschnitt, 638; Spence, 1163.)

The evidence is overwhelming that ever since the organization of the Southern Pacific Company the effort of that company and of the Central Pacific Railroad, under the control exercised by the Southern Pacific Company, has been to keep as much freight as possible from going over the Union Pacific Railroad and to divert it to the Sunset Route, except that freight which experience has shown could not be so diverted.

The efforts of the Southern Pacific Company have been directed against the efforts of other railroads, even when they were seeking to secure freight to be moved over the Central Pacific Railroad (Connor 338, 339, 330; Spence, 204.)

The attempt at diversion has been very successful. The amount diverted has been enormous.

(Chambers, 942; Spence, 1028, 1119; Schumacher, 149, 174.)

The diversion has been due to these efforts. If the Southern Pacific Company had exerted itself in favor of the Ogden route, the Sunset route could never have made the progress that it made in getting business. (Spence, 1119.)

The discrimination has gone to the point of giving lower rates by the Sunset route and of furnishing special equipment which the Southern Pacific Company would not permit to be used over the Ogden route.

The discrimination has been extended to freight originated or delivered on the Central Pacific Railroad, and even as far east as Nevada. Unquestionably, if the Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad were operating "so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one continuous line," Nevada freight originating on the Central Pacific Railroad and destined to New York or Boston would not move through Sacramento, El Paso, and New Orleans. Under control of the Southern Pacific Company this is the course which it did in fact take. The arrangement of the wool rates practically necessitated this route until 1909. The Ogden gateway was closed to virtually all of this traffic until 1909 and 1910.

It is the effort, regardless of its success, which constitutes the discrimination. These practices of systematic and preconcerted discrimination against the Union Pacific Railroad continued at least from 1887 to the time of the so-called merger in 1901.

This practice was more marked than the discrimination of the Southern Pacific Company in favor of the Union Pacific Railroad against the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad at Ogden, because this last consisted of a choice of two railroads both extending eastward from the common point at Ogden, whereas the choice of the Central Pacific Railroad, discriminating against the Union Pacific Railroad, has been of a most circuitous and broken rail and water route. This less marked discrimination against the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad was what the court said in United States v. Union Pacific Railroad, 226 U. S. 92, was contrary to the requirements of the Pacific Railroad acts, if practiced against the Union Pacific Railroad.

THIRD ASSIGNMENT.

The payment by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of its debt to the United States and the transactions leading thereto did not exempt the Southern Pacific Company from the provisions of the Sherman Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, or permit that company to make a combination which otherwise would be one in restraint of trade, because (1) the settlement commission did not seek any guaranty by the Southern Pacific Company, (2) the contract of settlement did not require such a guaranty, (3) the United States received only payment of a debt already due and adequately secured, (4) neither the commission, nor the President, nor the Congress purported to give this company a special indulgence to make a combination in restraint of trade, prohibited as a crime by general law to all other corporations, and (5) such a special indulgence or advance pardon is beyond the constitutional power of the commission, the President, and the Congress.

The defendants claim that the conduct of the United States in connection with receiving payment of this debt amounted to an estoppel which would prevent the United States from maintaining this petition.

The court below apparently did not approve of this contention. The opinion contains no reference to any estoppel. It apparently attaches importance to the action of the settlement commission, but in just what way is not made apparent. The court describes the settlement proceedings in detail, and then refers to "the persuasive force of an administrative construction of statutes" (2333). From what follows it is not apparent whether the court refers to an administrative construction of the antitrust act, or to an administrative construction of the act under which the commission was appointed. It says:

> We do not say the commission was authorized to violate or to sanction the violation of the Act of Congress, but the adjustment they effected necessarily involved the question of its pertinence to the question in hand (2334).

With this comment the effect of these proceedings upon the case at bar is dropped.

On the other hand, Judge Carland, in his opinion, says:

> The settlement by the United States of the debt of the Central Pacific in 1899 can not be held to estop the United States from insisting at this time that the combination between the two roads is in violation of the antitrust act. It is not remarkable that in the proceedings resulting in the settlement so far as they appear of record the antitrust law was not referred to, as little attention was given in those days to the antitrust law of July 2, 1890 (2337).

It seems demonstrable that Judge Carland is right with respect to this defense: (1) The action taken by the Congress, the President, and the settlement commission, showed no intention to construe the antitrust act, or to grant any special indulgence or advance pardon to the Southern Pacific Company to violate it. (2) The commission, the President, and the Congress had no power under the Constitution to grant such an indulgence or advance pardon. (3) A construction put by these functionaries of the Government, either upon the antitrust act or upon the act under which the commission was appointed would not be binding upon this court or a guide to it. (4) No estoppel runs against the United States when it is seeklng as here to enforce the criminal law.

FIRST.

THE ACTION TAKEN BY THE CONGRESS, THE PRESIDENT, AND THE SETTLEMENT COMMISSION, SHOWED NO INTENTION TO CONSTRUE THE ANTITRUST ACT, OR TO GRANT ANY SPECIAL INDULGENCE OR ADVANCE PARDON TO THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY TO VIOLATE IT.

The evidence shows that the action of Congress, the President, and the commission was directed toward securing for the United States as a creditor the payment of a debt due to it, and their action was confined to this.

(1) No intention is disclosed to construe the antitrust act.

There is not a word in the record that suggests any administrative construction of the antitrust act in this transaction. On the contrary, Attorney General Griggs, who was a member of the commission, and who conducted the negotiations for settlement, says:

> Unquestionably it is true that the legality of the transaction, so far as it might be affected by the Sherman antitrust act, was never considered or discussed with the commission or with the representatives of the Southern Pacific Railroad (1008).

It would be impossible to work out of this conduct any administrative interpretation of the Sherman antitrust act in the light of this testimony introduced by the defendants.

(2) There was no intention to grant any special indulgence or advance pardon to the Southern Pacific Company to violate the Sherman Antitrust Act.

The history of the settlement and of the investigations and legislation which led up to it shows that none of the officers of the United States were engaged in making a trade with the Southern Pacific Company by which they agreed either expressly or by implication that if the Southern Pacific Company would guarantee the debt of the Central Pacific Railroad the Southern Pacific Company might be permitted to have a special privilege to restrain trade in violation of the antitrust act.

None of these officers made any agreement, express or implied, that the Southern Pacific Company might buy the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company or retain control of that company.

The relation of the Central Pacific Railroad Company as a debtor to the United States for the amount of the principal and interest of bonds of the United States advanced to the Central Pacific Railroad Company under the act of 1864 received the attention of Congress during a number of years before a settlement of the debt was made.

In 1887 the Pacific Railway Commission was appointed and held lengthy hearings concerning this railroad and the other bond-aided railroads. Majority and minority reports were made to the President under date of December 1, 1887. The President submitted these reports to Congress on January 17, 1888. (Senate Executive Documents, first session Fiftieth Congress, 1887–88, vols. 2–6; D. Ex. 31, p. 1921.)

These reports dealt with the financial condition of the company, the methods of construction and operation and financing which had produced these conditions, and the methods to be adopted to secure payment of the debt.

They stated that the Central Pacific Railroad Company was no longer operating its railroad, but had leased it to the Southern Pacific Company and was dependent upon this lease for its income.

In February, 1890, a report was made to the Senate from the Committee on the President's Message. (D. Ex. 32; p. 1921, Senate Reports, first session Fifty-first Congress, 1889–90, vol. 1, report 893, p. 25.) This report said:

> It is manifest from the terms of their lease that any bill for the adjustment and settlement of the debt of the Central Pacific Company must, in order to be efficacious, contain provisions by which this lease and the obligations of the Southern Pacific Company under it shall become security to the United States, and that the consent of the Southern Pacific Company shall be obtained to such provisions of the bill.

The legislation recommended did not pass. Congress then was considering the prevention of restraints of trade and later in the year the Sherman Antitrust Act was enacted.

On July 16, 1894, a petition was filed, under the direction of the Attorney General, on behalf of the United States against the Southern Pacific Company and others in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of California (D. Ex. 96, p. 2279), alleging a restraint of trade. On August 4, 1894, before the entry of any appearance for the defendants and at the direction of the Attorney General, a decree was entered dismissing this petition without prejudice. (D. Ex. 96, p. 2293.) This was at the time of the great railroad strike.

On July 21, 1894, a report was made to the House of Representatives from the Committee on Pacific Railroads (Fifty-third Congress, second session, House of Representatives Report No. 1290) concerning the financial condition of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the other bond-aided railroads. (D. Ex. 34, p. 1921.)

In January, 1895, a report was made to the Senate from the Committee on Pacific Railroads on the financial condition of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the other bond-aided railroads. (D. Ex. 33, p. 1921, Fifty-third Congress, third session, Senate Report No. 830, p. 93.)

On April 14, 1896, a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives providing for a refunding mortgage. (D. Ex. 38, p. 1939.) The proposed legislation failed to pass. This apparently ended the attempts at legislation to require any guarantee from the Southern Pacific Company, or to recognize it, in the settlement.

On April 17, 1896, a bill was introduced in the Senate for the amendment of the original Pacific Railroad laws by the addition of provisions enabling the Central Pacific Railroad Company to issue a refunding mortgage and bonds. (D. Ex. 36, p. 1922; Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, Senate bill 2894.)

On May 1, 1896, the Committee on Pacific Railroads submitted to the Senate a report (D. Ex. 35, p. 1922, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, Senate Report No. 778) on the same subject. This report stated that—

> The committee has, however, made in the case of the Central Pacific Railroad Company the special requirement that the lease of its properties to the Southern Pacific Company should be so modified as to provide as follows:
>
> First. That the Southern Pacific Company shall guarantee the payment, during the continuance of the lease, of the amounts payable under the bill.
>
> Second. That in case the Southern Pacific Company should consent to the termination of the lease before the maturity of all amounts payable under the bill it shall guarantee the payment of all such amounts thereafter to mature. * * *
> It is believed that the bill, in requiring payments of interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum and payments on account of principal due from each company at the rate of $365,000 per annum (or $1,000 a day) for > the first ten years, at the rate of $550,000 per annum (or upward of $1,500 a day) for the second ten years, and at the rate of $750,000 per annum (or upward of $2,000 a day) for the remainder of the term, will practically exhaust the reasonably anticipated earnings of the properties involved; that the security reserved to the United States under the bill has been carefully and adequately guarded, and that the provisions of the bill for payment of fixed sums at fixed dates, secured as therein prescribed, will practically insure the payment of the whole debt to the Government.

On April 25, 1896, a report was submitted to the House of Representatives from the Committee on Pacific Railroads. (D. Ex. 37, p. 1938; Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, House of Representatives Report No. 1497.) This was to somewhat the same effect as the report submitted in the Senate. The minority report stated that—

> All the California delegation, with one exception it is said, are a unit against any refunding which will vest both these roads, the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific, in the same control; that is, in the present control. They contend that the case is within the principle that has given rise to the prohibition in the constitution and laws of so many States to any leasing or consolidation of parallel or competing lines, and within the principle of the antitrust law of Congress, and that in this instance the monopoly has exerted the oppression, for the prevention of which the laws referred to were enacted. They suggest that either the Government, without actually operating the Central Pacific, maintain it as a sort of a railroad turnpike for the use of any or all other companies, or that the road be sold to purchasers of the Union Pacific or any other company that will afford competition with the Southern Pacific.

On January 8, 1897, Mr. Huntington, at request, sent to the chairman of the Railroad Committee of the Senate copies of the lease of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company dated February 17, 1885, and the modifications of January 1, 1888, December 7, 1893, and March 22, 1894, and these were presented in the Senate.

On January 13, 1897, a bill was introduced in the Senate (D. Ex. 44, p. 1963, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, Senate bill 3522) to provide for the creation of a commission to be composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General, to settle the indebtedness of the bond-aided Pacific railroads.

On March 16, 1897, a bill was introduced in the Senate from the Committee on Pacific Railroads which provided for the creation of such a commission to arrange for a settlement of the debt to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds in aid of the Central Pacific Railroad and bond-aided railroads. (D. Ex. 40, p. 1957.)

On April 8, 1897, a report to accompany this bill was submitted to the Senate from the Committee on Pacific Railroads. (D. Ex. 39, p. 1956, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, Senate Report No. 20.)

On July 12, 1897, a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives (D. Ex. 45, p. 1965, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, House of Representatives bill 3750) to provide for the creation of such a commission.

On July 7, 1898, an act was passed (30 Stat., chap. 571, p. 659), which provided:

> That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General, and their successors in office be, and they are hereby, appointed a commission with full power to settle the indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds in aid of the construction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific bond-aided railroads, upon such terms and in such manner as may be agreed upon by them, or by a majority of them, and the owners of said railroads: Provided, That any and all settlements thus made shall be submitted in writing to the President for his approval or disapproval, and unless approved by him shall not be binding.
> That said commission shall not agree to accept a less sum in settlement of the amount due the United States than the full amount of the principal and interest and all amounts necessary to reimburse the United States for moneys paid for interest or otherwise: And

also provided, That said commission are hereby empowered to grant such time or times of payment by installment, and at such rates of interest, to be not less than three per centum per annum, payable semi-annually, and with such security as to said commission may seem expedient: Provided, however, That in any settlement that may be made the final payment and full discharge of said indebtedness shall not be postponed to exceed ten years and the whole amount, principal and interest, shall be paid in equal semiannual installments within the period so limited, and in any settlement made it shall be provided that if default shall be made in any payment of either principal or interest or any part thereof then the whole sum and all installments, principal and interest, shall immediately become due and payable, notwithstanding any other stipulation of said settlement: Provided further, That unless the settlement herein authorized be perfected within one year after the passage of this act the President of the United States shall at once proceed to foreclose all liens now held by the United States against said railroad companies and to collect the indebtedness herein sought to be settled, and nothing in this act contained shall be held to waive or release any right, lien, or cause of action already held by the United States.

Upon the enactment of this provision the Central Pacific Railroad Company was confronted with the alternative of making a settlement upon these terms or of being subjected to foreclosure proceedings.

Its financial condition was such that it could reasonably expect to pay an adequate interest on refunding bonds to cover its debts. (Speyer, 1196, 1198.)

At some time between the passage of this act and February 1, 1899, Mr. Speyer presented orally to the President, or to the commission, a scheme for reorganization (1188). This scheme was that the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or a successor corporation, should issue a refunding mortgage to take the place of the existing mortgages and liens. In order to preserve the market values of the outstanding stock and bonds, it was necessary to find some way of getting rid of the Government debt. (Speyer, 1202.) It seemed to Mr. Speyer necessary to get some security which would be satisfactory to all the security holders, including the Government (1202). A guaranty of the refunding bonds by the Southern Pacific Company, or some other substantial guarantor, would increase the market value of these bonds (1202). He did not make any effort to interest any other railroad or other corporation (1200, 1182). In order to get the first-mortgage bondholders to take the new securities diluted by the increase in the amount of the mortgage required to provide for the Government lien, it was necessary to have the new bonds abundantly secured. In Mr. Speyer's judgment, in order to get those bondholders to take the new bonds, it was necessary to have the guaranty of the Southern Pacific Company or some other adequate guaranty (1208). He presented the scheme to the President, originally in the form in which it finally went through (1203, 1205).

No one representing the Government requested the guaranty of the Southern Pacific Company, or requested the Southern Pacific Company to acquire the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or informed any representatives of either of the railroads that any breach of the Sherman antitrust law would be condoned. This was not discussed with the commission or considered by it (Griggs, 1008).

Mr. Griggs, then Attorney General, and Mr. Gage, then Secretary of the Treasury, testified that they understood that the bonds were to be guaranteed by the Southern Pacific Company. (Griggs, 999; Gage, 1011.) This guaranty was not of sufficient importance so that it was included in the agreement which was executed. The United States as a creditor had no interest in the question of who might acquire the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company or any other junior security, and it does not appear that any terms with respect to this were requested or even considered by anyone representing the United States.

Not only did the contract between the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the United States contain no agreement with the Southern Pacific Company to guarantee the new bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, but also no such guaranty was ever requested by the United States. It was introduced into the reorganization plan by the reorganizers because they believed it would facilitate their securing the cooperation of the first mortgage bondholders in the plan. Mr. Speyer says:

> (1208) In order to get the security holders who held some fifty-seven million dollars of bonds to take the new bonds, it was necessary to have those new bonds abundantly secured. In our judgment, in order to get those fifty-seven million dollars of bondholders to take these new refunding bonds it was necessary to have the guaranty of the Southern Pacific Company, or some other adequate guaranty; the reason being that the mortgage which they had was very considerably increased in amount by the bonds that went to the Government. If it had just been the question of extending the lien which they had, that probably could have been done without a guaranty; but the fact that the existing lien was so much increased in the bonds given to the Government, necessitated the guaranty of the Southern Pacific in order to make them good.
> That is, one of the effects of this arrangement was, if it is not too flippant a use of language, to let the Government down from the second story onto the ground floor, so far as security was concerned. And as to whether that had the effect of greatly increasing the securities with which the old security holders would have to pro rate in case of deficient assets.

> If it were not the Government, people would call it diluting them. I would say the security was diluted; but as long as the Government gets it, I do not use that word.
> I do not recall whether any of the three commissioners, the President, or Mr. Root suggested or required any substantial change in the plan which I originally proposed. I rather think that they did not, and that the plan, in its essential features, as I first presented it, was the one which went through (1208).

The agreement (supra, p. 52, answer, Exhibit A, p. 47) in substance provided that the United States would extend the time for payment of the amount due it in return for being given as security 59 per cent of the entire first mortgage in place of its existing second mortgage, and that $11,762,543.12 of the debt should be taken up by Speyer & Co. within one month.

This obligation of Speyer & Co. was in itself valuable. (Speyer, 1204.)

No agreement was made concerning the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

On February 20, 1899, the commissioners reported to the House of Representatives the settlement which had been made (P. Ex. 77, p. 1674), and submitted a copy of the agreement of February 1, 1899. This report described the terms of the agreement. Neither the agreement nor the report contained any reference to the fact that the refunding bonds were to be guaranteed by the Southern Pacific Company, or to the fact that the Southern Pacific Company was to acquire the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The reorganization plan was never submitted to Congress.

March 3, 1899, Congress passed an act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of the notes or other evidence touching the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States (30 Stat. c. 427, p. 1245), and this act said nothing whatever about any guaranty of the Southern Pacific Company, or about the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

On August 1, 1899, the refunding mortgages were executed by the Central Pacific Railway Company. (D. Ex. 27, p. 1788; D. Ex. 28, p. 1829.) They contained no reference to the fact that the refunding bonds were to be guaranteed by the Southern Pacific Company or that the Southern Pacific Company was to acquire the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

On the same day the Southern Pacific Company executed agreements subordinating the lease of the Central Pacific Railroad to the refunding mortgages. (D. Ex. 48, p. 1983; D. Ex. 49, p. 1987.)

On October 7, 1899, the bonds were delivered to the United States Treasury Department, and contained engraved on the back the guaranty of the Southern Pacific Company.

On November 30, 1899, the Attorney General, in his regular report to Congress, described the settlement which had been made, and in the course of the description stated that the notes taken in settlement were guaranteed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company (D. Ex. 53, p. 2240). In fact, they were not guaranteed by this company, but by the Southern Pacific Company.

The Commercial and Financial Chronicle during 1899 contained a number of references to the refunding scheme. (D. Ex. 95, p. 2258.)

The new notes held by the United States and secured by the refunding bonds were subsequently paid by the Central Pacific Railroad Company. (Van Deventer, 912–915.) The Southern Pacific Company acted as banker or disbursing agent (Van Deventer, 912), but the moneys used for the payment were derived from the sale of the new bonds of the Central Pacific Railway Company or from other of its resources, so that on the clearing of the accounts nothing went to the United States from the Southern Pacific Company in payment of this debt. (Van Deventer, 912, 913.) Debts due from the United States to the Southern Pacific Company were applied in part payment of this debt of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and a corresponding amount was paid in accounting by the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company. (Defendants' Answer, Exhibit "C", p. 73; Van Deventer, 904.)

On March 1, 1911, the Central Pacific Railway Company issued additional bonds for what is known as the "European loan," and they were guaranteed by the Southern Pacific Company.

There are bonds outstanding under these several mortgages.

Mr. Kruttschnitt has testified to the loss which would result to the Southern Pacific Company if these loans were called and the Southern Pacific Company was obliged to refund them. The figures are based on the assumption that the call was made in a high-money market, and that the Central Pacific Railroad Company as the principal debtor was unable to meet the obligation, or to reimburse the Southern Pacific Company. In making this computation he made no investigation to determine whether or not the assets of the Central Pacific Railway Company were adequate to meet all the bonds (822–824, 734, 755).

Mr. Kruttschnitt has testified that about 30 to 33 per cent of the dividends of the Southern Pacific stockholders come from the earnings of the Central Pacific Railroad (734). The dividends of the Central Pacific Railway Company since 1903 have been substantial and amount up to June 30, 1914, in the aggregate to $66,390,135, of which $22,015,630 was paid during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914 (P. Ex. 41, p. 1638, 811, 1217).

It is difficult to imagine that Congress intended to grant the power of indulgence to the commission appointed to secure the settlement of the debt of the Central Pacific Railroad.

None of the legislation attempted from 1890 to 1899 provided for the purchase of the Central Pacific Railroad by the Southern Pacific Company.

The bills which sanctioned the lease were opposed on the ground that it tended to suppress competition and these bills failed to pass.

No legislation was passed at any time authorizing the commission to permit the Southern Pacific Company to acquire any of the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

At the time of the appointment of the commission the United States bore a dual relation to the Central Pacific Railroad Company—that of sovereign defender of the public welfare and that of creditor.

> United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 98 U. S. 569, 613.
> Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 724, 751.

It was in its capacity as creditor that it appointed this commission as its business agent. There is nothing in the act of appointment which suggests any intention to confer upon the commission power either to enforce the criminal laws of the United States or to grant a pardon for the breach of them or indulgences to continue breaches of them in the future. The commission was given full power within its limited scope. The express limitations indicate that the scope was not broad. It was "to settle the indebtedness," "upon such terms and in such manner as may be agreed upon;" not to accept a less sum than the amount of the principal and interest of the debt; not to extend time at any rate of interest less than 3 per cent per annum, and to take "such security as to said commission may seem expedient"; and not to postpone payment more than ten years, the extended payments to be in equal semiannual installments, all to become due on the default in payment of any, the President to proceed to foreclose the existing lien if a settlement was not perfected within one year. On the reading of the whole section it is apparent that the full power of the commission was to exercise a very limited power of attorney. It is not conceivable that Congress intended by this section to vest in this commission the extraordinary power to pardon breaches of the Sherman Antitrust Act and to grant indulgences to the Southern Pacific Company to continue such breaches for the long future.

The action of the commission has gained no additional force in support of the alleged defense of estoppel by any subsequent adoption. The United States Treasury received the notes of the Central Pacific Railroad Company for the payment of its debt and also received as collateral thereto the bonds of that company. The guaranty of these bonds by the Southern Pacific Company was not required by the written agreement negotiated by the commission. The report of the commission to Congress (P. Ex. 77, p. 1674) made no reference to this guaranty or to the fact that the Southern Pacific Company was to acquire the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. It does not appear that Congress, or any member of it, ever knew or knows to-day that this stock was so acquired. The guaranty if valid rendered the Southern Pacific Company responsible for the payment of the bonds. It was a matter of indifference thereafter whether the United States received payment from the Central Pacific Railroad Company or for account of that company from the Southern Pacific Company, or from other sources. On March 3, 1901, Congress determined that allowances should be made to the Southern Pacific Company and to the Central Pacific Railroad Company on certain pending claims and directed that these allowances should be made by crediting the amount upon the bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, for the payment of which both companies had purported to obligate themselves. This indicated no intention on the part of Congress to approve the unreported acquisition of the stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company by the Southern Pacific Company or to grant to these companies an indulgence not enjoyed by other citizens to continue to offend against the Sherman Antitrust Act. It indicated no intention to ratify any ultra vires act of the commission, if there was any such act. It is not to be assumed that the commission, the President, or the Congress, departed from the equal enforcement of the laws for the sake of getting payment of the private debt of an offender. There is nothing in the evidence to suggest that there has been any such departure.

Neither the act creating the commission nor the contract between the Central Pacific Railroad company and the United States negotiated by the commission contains any reference to the Southern Pacific Company, and that company is not a party to the contract.

When the commission made the agreement of settlement in 1899, the Central Pacific Railroad Company owed the United States for principal and interest $58,812,715.48 and owed on other bonds $59,453,000, a total of $118,265,715.48. (Exhibit A of answer, p. 47.) The average annual net earnings of the company for the preceding 10½ years were $5,582,937.70, or a little more than 4½ per cent annually upon the bonded debt. There was nothing to indicate that the Central Pacific Railroad could not continue to earn at this rate. On the contrary, if it was independently owned, so that those in charge of its operation would not be actuated by the desire to divert as much freight as possible to the Southern Pacific Railroad, there was good reason to believe that its earnings could be increased materially. The United States as creditor could safely permit the debt to rest as it was on payment of the interest annually or could foreclose the lien by a sale at which the United States or others could purchase.

The agreement of settlement provided for the payment of the debt within 10 years with interest at the low rate of 3 per cent. By the agreement it was the United States, and not the Central Pacific Railroad Company, that was making concessions.

The improvement in the security consisted in changing the lien from a second mortgage to 59 per cent of the first mortgage, and the immediate reduction of the debt to the extent of $11,762,543.12.

Apparently the advantages to the Southern Pacific Company of securing this extension of time and of preventing a sale to a competitor were so great that the Southern Pacific Company decided to undertake a large contingent obligation in order to secure the carrying out of the refunding scheme. It was no part of the agreement between the United States and the Central Pacific Railroad Company that the Southern Pacific Company should do this. The United States gave to the Central Pacific Railroad Company an option to substitute a new security or to suffer a foreclosure. The scheme was proposed in its entirety by the bankers (Speyer, 1201–1203), and was not requested by the commission.

It is evident that if immunity from prosecution for breach of the Sherman Antitrust Act had been a part of the agreement with the United States the contract of settlement would have provided for it. No such provisions are contained in the agreement, and the subject was not discussed. (Griggs, 1008.) No such assurances were given.

Neither the Southern Pacific Company nor the Central Pacific Railroad Company has paid to the United States anything for any such immunity. No more has been paid to the United States than the amount of the debt due to it or than the value of the security which it surrendered to purchasers of the bonds, whose money made the payment.

The large sums paid by the Southern Pacific Company for the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company were not expended at the bidding of the United States, and very likely they do not exceed the sums which other corporations have paid to perfect combinations in unreasonable restraint of trade. One of the evils attendant upon such combinations is that they pave the way for obtaining such returns from the dependent public that they invite initial investments far in excess of the intrinsic values obtained.

Doubtless some of these investments are made in reliance upon the chance that the indifference of public prosecutors or their ignorance of the existence of the combinations will furnish a practical immunity.

The making of the excessive payments therefore furnishes no evidence that the Southern Pacific Company was lured into a false sense of security by any action on the part of the commission.

On the contrary, the commission merely received the proposal of the bankers, uninvited, and made a contract for the settlement of the debt of the Central Pacific Railroad Company upon the terms laid down in the act under which the commission was appointed, and this contract did not authorize or purport to authorize the Southern Pacific Company to acquire the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company or to engage in operating the Central Pacific Railroad as lessee. The Southern Pacific Company was not a party to the agreement.

The right, denied by the law to all other corporations, to make combinations in restraint of trade is too important to be inferred when the contracting parties did not express it in their agreement. In the particular case the subject was not even discussed. (Griggs, 1008.)

Taking all the evidence at its best for the defendants, no officer of the United States agreed that the Southern Pacific Company might acquire the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

SECOND.

THE COMMISSION, THE PRESIDENT, AND THE CONGRESS HAD NO POWER UNDER THE CONSTITUTION TO GRANT SUCH AN INDULGENCE OR ADVANCE PARDON.

Of course, if the acquisition by the Southern Pacific Company of the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or any company owning the Central Pacific Railroad in February, 1899, did not constitute a restraint of trade, then the case for the petitioner fails and it becomes unnecessary to consider the effect of the action of the settlement commission, or the President, or the Congress in connection therewith.

If the acquisition of this stock by the Southern Pacific Company was a restraint of trade, then the action of the commission, the President, and the Congress, in order to have any effect in the case, must be taken in some way to be a grant of a special privilege to the Southern Pacific Company to restrain trade and to continue to do so. This would mean that this company was granted the right to do that which would constitute a misdemeanor if done by anybody else. This would be a pardon in advance of the commission of the offense and an indulgence to commit crime.

It can require no very extended argument to establish that under a constitutional form of government such as ours no such special privilege can be granted by any department of the Government, executive, legislative, or judicial, or all acting together.

The pardoning power under article 2, section 2, of the Constitution, has its limitations, deducible to some extent from the general principles of that power as exercised by the King of England prior to the Revolution.

Ex parte Wells, 18 How. 307, 312.

The King himself could not pardon an offense before it was committed.

4 Hawkins' P. C. Bk., 2 ch. 37, sec. 28.

5 Chitty's Ed. of Burns' Justice, 2.

Although he might remit for the past, he could not in advance pardon the continuance of obstructions to the highway and the nuisance created by failing to remove them.

Coke's Third Institute, 237.

5 Chitty's Ed. of Burns' Justice, 2.

The continuing obstruction of a highway by physical means is analogous to the obstruction of a highway by the more refined method of destroying the competition which would make for its betterment.

The President himself could not grant an indulgence to continue to offend against the prohibitions of the Sherman Antitrust Act, even upon condition that the grantee should pay its debts to the United States.

THIRD.

A CONSTRUCTION PUT BY THESE FUNCTIONARIES OF THE GOVERNMENT, EITHER UPON THE ANTITRUST ACT, OR UPON THE ACT UNDER WHICH THE COMMISSION WAS APPOINTED, WOULD NOT BE BINDING UPON THIS COURT OR A GUIDE TO IT.

In the majority opinion Judge Hook says:

> The rule as to the persuasive force of an administrative construction of statutes is a familiar one and is frequently applied (2333).

This must refer to the familiar rule that this court in construing for the first time a statute under which the administrative departments of the Government have acted for a long time will take into consideration the unvarying construction previously put upon the statute by these administrative departments.

With the utmost respect it is submitted that this rule has no application whatever to the case at bar. The court must be referring either to the construction of the act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat. c. 571, pp. 571, 659), under which the commission was appointed, or to the antitrust act of July 2, 1890.

If the reference is to the act of July 7, 1898, there never has been any attempt by the commission to construe that act; the transaction was a single one; the act was plain on its face; it permitted the commission to negotiate a settlement of a single debt upon definite terms; and it contained no language susceptible of construction by anyone as permitting a restraint of trade. The action of the commission was confined to a single transaction. There has been no repetition of the same or similar action under the statute, and the case is devoid of any resemblance whatever to those announcing or applying the rule of administrative construction of acts of Congress.

If the reference of the court is to the antitrust act of July 2, 1890, the rule of administrative construction has no application, because that was not an act for administrative action or construction in any case. It was a general criminal law to be construed by the courts only. Before 1899 the Supreme Court had already announced the construction of that act in no uncertain terms, and in several cases, as applicable to interstate railroads, and as preventing restraints of trade. If the decision of the court below rests upon the action of the settlement commission in any degree, Judge Carland appears well justified in his statement in dissent that it is difficult to determine from the opinion of the majority exactly upon what ground or grounds the bill in this case is dismissed.

The Supreme Court of the United States in construing the antitrust act is not in need of assistance from the commission on the settlement of the Pacific Railroad debts, nor can such action be said to have "persuasive force," particularly when the guiding member of that commission, the Attorney General, testifies (Griggs, 1008) that the construction of that act was not considered.

In United States v. Reading Company, 226 Fed. 229 (D. C. Pa.), it was urged upon the court that one of the combinations complained of was made pursuant to a purchase at a receiver's sale ordered and approved by the court, but the court said:

> We do not know whether the act of 1890 was considered in its relation to the plan, and we approach the considerations of the present charges uninfluenced by the former action of the court (266).

In this respect certainly no greater effect should be given to the contract of the commission when it appears expressly that no such consideration was given by it to the act of 1890.

It has been held repeatedly that sanction from as important a governmental body as the legislature of any of the States does not save a combination which is in fact in restraint of trade, or assist to establish that it is not such a restraint.

FOURTH.

NO ESTOPPEL RUNS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES WHEN IT IS SEEKING, AS HERE, TO ENFORCE THE CRIMINAL LAW.

An estoppel by conduct, if effective in such a case as this, produces the same result as an express grant of exemption from prosecution. To have an estoppel by the conduct of any officers of the Government, it is necessary to show that those officers were in a position where they could have made an express grant of such an exemption.

No officer of the United States has power to grant such an exemption.

It is a settled principle that no estoppel runs against the sovereign in the enforcement of the criminal laws.

Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U.S. 364, 400, semble.

The United States when enforcing the criminal laws is proceeding for the common good, and not for a personal profit. No one in dealing with it should rely upon any supposition that it will disqualify itself to pursue the enforcement of the laws for the common good. If the agents of the sovereign attempt to do so it is apparent to everyone that they are exceeding their authority.

The sovereign in enforcing the criminal laws stands in a position entirely different from that occupied when acting contractually or in relation to its property. In these relations it may be bound by the acts of its agents within the scope of their authority. Instances of this kind are numerous. Many of them have been cited for the defendants. The decisions cited for them in this topic come all within this class.

Where a grant of property is dependent upon the character of the property and the determination of its character is to be made by a public official, his determination in good faith, although erroneous, may be binding upon the United States.

The United States when dealing in commercial paper may be bound to some extent by the rules governing private individuals.

But even this principle has only a limited application.

Hunter v. United States, 5 Peters, 173.
Carr v. United States, 98 U. S. 433, semble.

None of these principles has any bearing upon the liability of the United States to an estoppel against the enforcement of the criminal laws. When so acting it is its prerogative not to be bound by estoppel, and public policy demands that it should be free therefrom.

An express agreement by the authorized prosecuting officer of the Government, made in accordance with the long-established practice, not to prosecute an accomplice who testifies fairly against the chief alleged criminal does not prevent a subsequent prosecution of the accomplice.

Whiskey Cases, 99 U. S. 594.

Even the receipt and retention of money by the state, paid for the exercise of a right claimed under an unconstitutional statute, does not estop the state to set up the unconstitutionality of the statute when enforcing the criminal law, and this notwithstanding the fact that the statute had previously been enforced under a decision of the court of last resort.

Boyd v. Alabama, 94 U. S. 645.

The commission appointed to secure a settlement of the debt of the Central Pacific Railroad Company could grant no more rights by estoppel by its conduct than it could by express donation. The principle is the same as that which prevents the United States from being deprived indirectly, by adverse user, of lands donated for public uses only.

A railroad which is the recipient of such a grant can not be deprived of the lands by such adverse possession as ordinarily would produce that result, because this would accomplish by indirection that which the railroad could not do directly by sale.

Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. Townsend, 190 U. S. 267.

The fact that unreasonable restraints of competition by a company have been ignored, and that investments have been made in reliance thereon is not sufficient to raise a presumption that they are approved or to justify the Government in failing to enforce the laws and is no defense to such enforcement.

Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 690, 691.

The decision in the Union Pacific case is an illustration of this. The combination in that case was made in 1901. The petition for its dissolution was not filed for seven years, and the final decree was not entered for 12 years. The Government of the United States must have known of this combination at about the time it was made, for, so to speak, all the world knew of it.

FOURTH ASSIGNMENT.

The Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad were never, prior to February 20, 1899, a single railroad or system, but on the contrary were always two distinct railroads; (1) separately projected by separate and unrelated groups of men; (2) separately aided by gifts of public lands and loans of the public credit under acts of Congress to promote these two separate competitive systems of railroad between the Atlantic Ocean and the Central United States on the east, and the Pacific Ocean on the west, and enacted prior to 1867 and before any person interested in the one railroad was interested in the other; (3) separately owned by separate corporations organized by separate groups of men; (4) separately constructed at the expense of and for these separate corporations; (5) separately leased by these separate corporations under separate leases, making the amount of rent dependent on the net earnings of the separate railroads; (6) separately controlled by boards of directors, some of whom were always diverse, and a majority of whom were diverse in all but five years between 1865 and 1899; and (7) separately stock owned, always to a substantial extent, and from 1883 to 1899 to the extent of more than a majority of the capital stock in each separate corporation, held by widely scattered stockholders in the United States and in Europe.

In the majority opinion Judge Hook says:

> Except as to corporate title and bookkeeping there were generally the aspects of a single enterprise. In this respect the conditions were not unlike those which have characterized the growth of many of the important railroad systems of the country in which, for necessity or convenience of financing and in some instances because of local laws, separate corporate organizations were utilized (2329).

n the minority opinion Judge Carland says:

> I do not think the evidence shows that the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific were created originally and have always continued to be one system. They have always been and are now operated as separate systems (2337).

The majority in analogizing the development of these two railroads through separate corporate organizations to the development of other railroads through the instrumentality of subsidiary corporations, overlook entirely a very vital distinction. The subsidiary corporations through which a single enterprise is carried out are the property of one holding company or of one group of men, so that the subsidiary company is merely an instrumentality which does not affect the ultimate beneficial property interests. In such a case there is no basis for competition between the different subsidiary companies. In the case of these two railroads, the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific, there never was, prior to February, 1899, either in form or substance, any such identity of interest.

These two railroads did not have the village of Ogden, Utah, and the city of New Orleans as their terminals, with the cities of California and the Pacific coast as way stations. Neither was a branch or offshoot. Each was a main trunk line (Kruttschnitt, 774) constructed to be operated as a part of separate transcontinental railroads.

FIRST.

THE TWO RAILROADS WERE SEPARATELY PROJECTED BY SEPARATE AND UNRELATED GROUPS OF MEN.

The leading promoters of the Central Pacific Railroad were Leland Stanford, Collis P. Huntington,

Mark Hopkins, and Charles Crocker. Until after the main line of this railroad was completed in May, 1869, they had no interest whatever in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Until 1870 the latter company had no officers, directors, or stockholders, in common with the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or its promoters. (P. Ex. 14, p. 1318; P. Ex. 15, p. 1342; P. Ex. 16, p. 1414.)

The two projects had no relation to each other.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated in 1861 to construct and operate a railroad from the Sacramento River to the eastern boundary of California. Its actual construction was begun and continued under the acts of Congress of 1862 and 1864 to provide for a railroad from San Francisco Bay to the Missouri River at Omaha and Council Bluffs.

As early as 1865 the project of two other transcontinental railroads which would be competitive with the Central Pacific Railroad had been publicly discussed, and the thirty-fifth and the thirty-second or thirty-third parallels of latitude had been considered for locations for these. (Southern Pacific Company v. Horton, 32 Fed. 457, 460.) It was to carry out these projects and not as feeder or ally of the Central Pacific Railroad that the Southern Pacific Railroad was organized.

Pursuant to this project, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated December 2, 1865, by a group of men having no relation to the Central Pacific Railroad, and for the purpose of constructing, owning, and maintaining a railroad from San Francisco Bay to San Diego, and thence to the eastern boundary of California, there to connect with a contemplated railroad from the eastern boundary of California to the Mississippi River. (P. Ex. 13, p. 1284.) The projected route to San Diego was through the Santa Clara and Pajaro Valleys, which would take it through Gilroy and Tres Pinos and thence by way of a pass through the coast range (California v. Central Pacific Railroad Co., 127 U.S. 1 at 42), and to Alcalde near what is now Goshen (Hood 456; Kruttschnitt 799–800; D. Ex. 23, p. 1709), and down the San Joaquin Valley, and thence to San Diego, which was approximately at the thirty-second parallel of latitude.

Within eight months, on July 27, 1866 (14 Stat., c. 278, p. 292), Congress (P. Ex. 6, p. 1251) empowered the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company to construct a railroad near the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude from Springfield, Mo., to the Colorado River, and thence to the Pacific Ocean, and authorized the Southern Pacific Railroad to connect with the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad near the eastern boundary of California. This act gave to both railroads a subsidy of public lands.

On November 30, 1866, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company accepted this act (P. Ex. 75; p. 1672).

On January 3, 1867, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company filed a map in the Department of the Interior showing a route turning eastward before reaching San Diego and meeting the proposed line of the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad at The Needles at the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude at the Colorado River.

On June 25, 1868 (15 Stat., c. 77, p. 79), Congress passed an act (P. Ex. 7, p. 1262) requiring the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to file with the Secretary of the Interior reports of its officers and stockholders and of other matters similar to those required of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

On April 4, 1870, the California Legislature passed an act (p. 883) to permit the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to change its route so that it need not pass through the town of San Diego before turning eastward.

On June 28, 1870, Congress passed a joint resolution to permit this change of route (16 Stat. 382).

All this had occurred before the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or any of its stockholders, directors, officers, or promotors had taken any part in the Southern Pacific Railroad project.

In 1870 there were these two separate well-developed projects—one for a railroad from San Francisco Bay to the Missouri River through the central part of the United States, approximately along the forty-first parallel of latitude, and the other for a railroad from San Francisco via the southern and southeastern part of the State, and thence to the Mississippi River, approximately along either the thirty-second or the thirty-fifth parallels of latitude.

Leland Stanford, the president of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, testified to the Pacific Railroad Commission in 1887:

> The construction of the Southern Pacific road was provided for by act of Congress, and its management went into the hands of people other than those who controlled the Central Pacific. It soon became apparent that the best interests of the Central Pacific required that the control of the Southern Pacific should be in the same hands, and that that road should work in perfect harmony with the Central Pacific. It became a necessity therefore that we should control the Southern Pacific, and when opportunity offered we availed ourselves of it and purchased the controlling interest in that road. Since then the roads have worked in entire harmony, with all the advantages of a pooling arrangement, and the advantages resulting from our system of leases (99).
>
> We early saw that if that line of railroad was completed—if it crossed the Sierra Nevada Mountains—all the valleys of the State would be open to it and it would be a very serious competitor of the Central Pacific. So we tried to control it, and we have succeeded in controlling it; and the consequence is that it has never been operated to the prejudice of the Central Pacific (99).
>
> Neither we ourselves, individually, nor any of the Central Pacific people are in any manner responsible for the building of the Southern Pacific line. I mean to say they had > nothing to do with procuring the Government aid for the Southern Pacific. They had no interest in the Southern Pacific until long afterwards (100).

Mr. Huntington, the vice president of the Central Pacific Railroad, testified to a committee of Congress that the Southern Pacific was not built as a feeder to the Central Pacific Railroad (101).

The Southern Pacific Railroad was built without a year of interruption as a through trunk line (Kruttschnitt, 806, 774), designed primarily for transcontinental traffic. (D. Ex. 23, pp. 1717, 1719.)

The extension of the Southern Pacific Railroad south of the Tehachapi Mountains would not be undertaken as a feeder in any sense to the Central Pacific. (Chambers, 962.)

In September, 1874, Mr. Huntington as president of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, made a report to the stockholders. It is significant that in this report nothing is said about any relation between this company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or its operations. On the contrary, the report is filled with statements indicating that the project was for a through transcontinental line. For instance:

> It is therefore safe to say that the company will receive, upon the completion of the road, the full amount of land covered by the grant (the Government land subsidy). The land agent of the company, after a careful examination and classification of the lands, places their value, at a low estimate, at $30,000,000; and it is with much satisfaction that you can contemplate the ownership of this immense property, especially when you consider that its value to yourselves and the country has nearly all been created by your own energy and perseverance. (1718.)

As your board thought that it would be for the best interest of the company to build that portion of your road from Los Angeles via San Gorgonio to Fort Yuma, on the Colorado River, to secure the trade of Arizona and Sonora, before completing the road from the Tulare Valley to Los Angeles, they have built 50 miles on that division during the past year. But as this division is not connected with that portion of the road running out from San Francisco, and as it can hardly be said as yet to have been fully opened for general business, the earnings have been light and are not included in the preceding statement. (1716.)

The object of the new corporation was to construct, equip, maintain, and operate a line of railroad from the city of San Francisco to a point on the Colorado River, in the southeastern portion of the State, a distance of, say, six hundred and twenty-nine miles, with a branch from Tehachapi Pass to the Colorado River, at or near Fort Yuma, a distance of, say, three hundred and fifty-three miles. (1717.)

The general location of the Southern Pacific Railroad is peculiarly favorable for developing and controlling a large and remunerative miscellaneous business, for it occupies almost > the only passes through which a railroad extending from San Francisco to the Colorado River can be built, and must therefore command the entire business between San Francisco and the southern portion of California, as well as northern Mexico and Arizona. At the Colorado River it will meet the Texas & Pacific Railroad, and when this connection is made it will give your road a direct communication by rail with all the southern and southwestern portions of the United States and the shortest line from San Francisco to New Orleans and the country bordering the Gulf of Mexico, over which you may look for much of the surplus grain from the southern half of California to pass on its way to the European market. (1719.)

April 3, 1871, a few months after Messrs. Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker had become interested in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, that company accepted the Texas Pacific act (P. Ex. 76, p. 1673) and filed in the Department of the Interior its map showing the continuation of its route from Tehachapi Pass by way of Los Angeles, to its junction with the proposed Texas & Pacific Railroad at the Colorado River near Yuma, Ariz., approximately at the thirty-second parallel of latitude. (U. S. v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 146 U. S. 570, 572, 574; Southern Pacific Railroad Co. v. U. S. 189 U. S. 447, 449.)

This completed the defining of the intention of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to connect with both of the through routes, that via the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude and that via the thirty-second parallel of latitude, in accordance with the project for which it had been organized in 1865.

In 1869 the building of this southern line had progressed to Gilroy. In 1871 it was advanced to Pajaro. (1640; D. Ex. 23, p. 1709.) In 1872 it was continued from Goshen, at the end of the Central Pacific Railroad, and because it was necessary to build 20 miles immediately in order to save the franchise. (Strobridge, 402, 414.)

The stretch from Tres Pinos to Alcade has never been completed. Instead, the coast line has been built from Gilroy (Sproule, 223) down the coast to Los Angeles and thence to the thirty-second parallel of latitude, as originally projected at Yuma, and this now forms the chief freight route of the Southern Pacific Railroad from San Francisco Bay to El Paso, Galveston, and New Orleans. (Sproule, 223.)

From 1865, when the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated, to 1883, when it had a line near the thirty-second parallel of latitude and connected through to New Orleans, and had also its junction with the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad at The Needles, at the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude, on the Colorado River, there was not a year of cessation in the building of this as a through southern line (Kruttschnitt, 806), substantially as projected in 1865.

The separate character of the project as a through line was never lost.

SECOND.

THE TWO RAILROADS WERE SEPARATELY AIDED BY GIFTS OF PUBLIC LANDS AND LOANS OF THE PUBLIC CREDIT UNDER ACTS OF CONGRESS TO PROMOTE THESE TWO SEPARATE, COMPETITIVE SYSTEMS OF RAILROAD BETWEEN THE ATLANTIC OCEAN AND THE CENTRAL UNITED STATES ON THE EAST, AND THE PACIFIC OCEAN ON THE WEST, AND ENACTED PRIOR TO 1867, AND BEFORE ANY PERSON INTERESTED IN THE ONE RAILROAD WAS INTERESTED IN THE OTHER.

July 1, 1862 (P. Ex. 2, p. 1223), Congress by an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," incorporated the Union Pacific Railroad Company, to construct a railroad near the forty-first parallel of latitude from the Missouri River (1231, 1233) to the western boundary of Nevada (1229) to connect with the railroad to be built by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California (1229, 1230).

This act authorized the Central Pacific Railroad Company to construct a railroad from the Pacific coast near San Francisco to the eastern boundary of California, and thence to a connection with the Union Pacific Railroad (1231).

This act granted to these two railroads a subsidy of 10 square miles of public lands for each linear mile of railroad, and also bonds of the United States to the amount of $16,000 for each ordinary mile, $32,000 for each mile in the less mountainous country, and $48,000 for each mile in the mountainous country (1232).

October 7, 1862, the Central Pacific Railroad Company accepted this act. (P. Ex. 59, p. 1655.) June 23, 1863, the Union Pacific Railroad Company accepted it. (P. Ex. 60, p. 1658.)

July 2, 1864, Congress amended this act (P. Ex. 3, p. 1236), to permit these railroads to issue first-mortgage bonds to an amount equal to the bonds to be advanced by the United States and also doubled the land subsidy.

In this way Congress provided an enormous subsidy for a railroad from San Francisco Bay to the Missouri River near the forty-first parallel of latitude.

On July 27, 1866 (P. Ex. 6, p. 1251), Congress passed the act referred to in the preceding section, giving the Southern Pacific Railroad Company a subsidy for another railroad to run in competition with the first, from San Francisco Bay southerly to the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude, and thence to the Mississippi River.

Under the first subsidy the Central Pacific Railroad was constructed. Under the second subsidy the Southern Pacific Railroad was constructed.

The first was constructed before anyone had a common interest in the two. The subsidy was granted to the second, it had been accepted by the second, and the construction had proceeded as far as Gilroy before anyone interested in the first railroad had any interest in the second.

The manifest purpose of Congress was to promote two competitive lines from the Pacific Ocean to the eastern part of the country. The importance of this competition in the judgment of Congress is shown again in its action in 1871.

On March 3, 1871 (16 Stat., c. 122, p. 573), Congress passed an act (P. Ex. 9, p. 1265) to incorporate the Texas-Pacific Railroad Company to construct a railroad near the thirty-second parallel of latitude from Marshall, Tex., to El Paso, and thence to the Pacific Ocean at San Diego, and to connect on the east with the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad, and to authorize the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to extend a line from Tehachapi Pass in California to a junction with this Texas-Pacific Railroad at the Colorado River at the eastern boundary of California. Tehachapi was between Bakersfield and Mojave on the projected line of the Southern Pacific Railroad to its junction with the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad at The Needles on the Colorado River.

This act gave both the Texas-Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company a subsidy of public lands (1268, 1273).

This act provided that the Texas-Pacific Railroad might consolidate with other roads, but it expressly provided that "no consolidation shall be with any competing through line of railroads to the Pacific Ocean" (1267).

The defendants presented below the somewhat startling argument that as this limitation upon consolidation was confined to the Texas-Pacific Railroad it manifested an intention on the part of Congress to permit the Southern Pacific Railroad to consolidate even with a competing line. Certainly this is not an inference naturally to be drawn. No reason is assigned for permitting to the Southern Pacific Railroad the privilege of consolidating with competing lines when this was denied to other Government-aided railroads. The reason why the Texas-Pacific Railroad is the only one mentioned in the proviso is obvious. Unless it is expressly sanctioned by general or special legislation, railroads do not have the right to consolidate with each other. No right to consolidate was granted to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in the Texas-Pacific Railroad act, and therefore there was no grant which required a qualification. The act made an express grant to the Texas-Pacific Railroad Company of the right to consolidate, and out of abundant caution the proviso was added that this consolidation should not be with a competing line.

The rights to consolidate given by the acts of 1862 and 1864 to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company were extended only to the corporations named in the act. In the Atlantic & Pacific act of 1866 no right to consolidate was given. Therefore it was not necessary to include in these two acts an express proviso prohibiting consolidation with competing lines. It was only when the more general right of consolidation was given to the Texas-Pacific Railroad Company that it became necessary out of abundant caution to insert the proviso.

It is not likely that Congress intended to leave open the way for the competing Central Pacific and Southern Pacific Railroads to combine with each other while expressly prohibiting the other competing line to do so.

Out of this legislation have developed (1) the Central Pacific-Union Pacific over the original line; (2) the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad in part over the line of the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad; and (3) the Southern Pacific Railroad with its extensions through Texas and Louisiana.

It is believed that the history of railroad legislation in this country would be searched in vain to find a more emphatic illustration of railroads separately projected, created, and aided by the Government to be separate and competing lines.

THIRD.

THESE TWO RAILROADS WERE SEPARATELY OWNED BY SEPARATE CORPORATIONS ORGANIZED BY SEPARATE GROUPS OF MEN.

The Central Pacific Railroad was owned from its inception until 1899 by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and a part by the Western Pacific Railroad Company, which was consolidated into the Central Pacific Railroad Company in 1870 (1280).

The Southern Pacific Railroad has been owned since its inception by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. It had a separate corporate organization in California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, and Louisana. These, however, were in the true sense subsidiary companies in that there was an identity of interest and ownership throughout the line from San Francisco Bay to New Orleans, and thence by steamer to New York.

Nobody connected with the Central Pacific Railroad Company had anything to do with the organization of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. (P. Ex. 14, p. 1316; P. Ex. 15, p. 1342; P. Ex. 16, p. 1414; First Section, supra, p. 198.)

FOURTH.

THESE TWO RAILROADS WERE SEPARATELY CONSTRUCTED AT THE EXPENSE OF AND FOR THESE SEPARATE CORPORATIONS.

The defendants have introduced testimony to show that the construction men who worked on one of these roads also work on the other. Instead of showing a unity of action, it shows just the reverse.

The Central Pacific Railroad was constructed for a short distance by Charles Crocker & Co. With this exception, it was constructed by the Contract & Finance Co., which was a construction company, all the stock in which was owned by Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker in equal parts. By this device, if there were any construction profits, they did not become subject to the bonded or other debts of the railroad company, or inure to the benefit of the other stockholders in the company. This was a source of complaint from these other stockholders. (Pratt, 524; Pacific Railway Commission Report, p. 73; D. Ex. 31, p. 1921.)

These four men, Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker, were stockholders but by no means the only stockholders in the Central Pacific Railroad Company during the course of its construction (infra, p. 221).

The construction was carried out for the Central Pacific Railroad Company and at its expense. The funds for this were provided by first mortgage bonds and the Government subsidy. These together provided $32,000 for every ordinary mile, $64,000 for every mile in the less mountainous country, and $96,000 for every mile in the mountainous country.

The main line of the Central Pacific Railroad was completed in 1869. (P. Ex. 42, p. 1638.) The branch south to Goshen was completed in 1872 (1639). The branch north to Redding was completed the same year (1639). This branch was completed from Redding to the northern boundary of California in 1887 (1638). The line from Hazen, Nev., to Mojave, Calif., was constructed between 1881 and 1910 (1639). The line in Oregon was constructed between 1906 and 1912 (1639.) The branch from Derby Junction, Nev., northerly to Susanville was constructed between 1904 and 1913 (1639).

The Southern Pacific Railroad had been constructed from California as far south as Gilroy on March 13, 1869 (1640). Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker first became connected with this company in 1870. This railroad was completed to the Colorado River opposite Yuma, Ariz., September 13, 1877 (1640), and to El Paso, Tex., in April, 1881 (1640). The Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railroad from El Paso to connections with railroads to New Orleans was completed in 1883. The line from Mojave to a junction with the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad at The Needles, at the eastern boundary of California on the Colorado River, was completed July 1, 1883. The line north to Tehama, Calif., was completed in 1882 (1641). That from the southern boundary of Oregon to Portland was completed in 1887 (1644).

From 1870 the Southern Pacific Railroad was constructed by construction companies, the stock in which was owned by Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker. At first the construction was carried out by the same Contract & Finance Co. that had built the Central Pacific Railroad. It was succeeded at some time by the Pacific Improvement Co., and later by the Western Development Co. and by the Southern Development Co. (Hood, 433, 445, 447, 454; Strobridge, 399, 403, 404, 405, 411, 412; Martin, 420, 423; Pratt, 483, 504, 510, 522; Foulds, 588; Redington, 553; Hopkins, 684.)

The construction work was done for each railroad corporation and at its expense.

The construction engineers of the two railroad companies were transferred from one company to the other as the construction was being performed for the one company or the other. (Hood 434, 437, 448.) The two railroad corporations and the several construction corporations were kept distinct. The Central Pacific Railroad Company acted as the banker or clearing house for the construction companies. (Strobridge, 406; Hopkins, 652, 684; Martin, 423; Hood, 436, 449.)

Mr. Redington was in the paymaster's office of the Central Pacific Railroad. He would figure out the pay rolls of the railroad and would obtain from the construction company the pay rolls of the construction company. He would take the pay car and pay the railroad company's men to the end of the line, and would pay the construction company's men beyond the line. He would on his return determine how much he had paid for each company, and would obtain from the construction company a draft for the amount which he had paid for the construction company in return for the money of the railroad company which had been used in making payment. (Redington 554.)

The majority opinion below says:

> Except as to corporate title and bookkeeping there were generally the aspects of a single enterprise (2329).

This comment leaves entirely out of consideration the fact that this bookkeeping affected the actual moneys in the treasury of the one corporation or the other, and the cost of the railroads to the one corporation and the other. The charges were not for convenience in determining for accounting purposes what was the cost of any particular line of railroad. They were charges which were met from the separate funds of two separate corporations. The different stockholders (infra, p. 221) in the two corporations were the ones whose financial interests were affected by the way in which the expense of this work was borne.

These charges were kept separate for the express purpose of preventing one corporation from paying for any part of the expense of the construction of the railroad of the other corporation.

The fact that a single construction company built the whole or parts of the two railroads, and that that construction company was owned by directors and large stockholders in these two railroad companies is of no importance in determining whether or not the railroads were separately constructed for and at the expense of the separate corporations. The evidence introduced by the defendants shows that they were so separately constructed and that care was taken to see that no part of the expense of construction of one of them was charged to the other.

FIFTH.

THESE TWO RAILROADS WERE SEPARATELY LEASED BY THESE SEPARATE CORPORATIONS UNDER SEPARATE LEASES, MAKING THE AMOUNT OF RENT DEPENDENT ON THE NET EARNINGS OF THE SEPARATE RAILROADS.

Until April 1, 1885, the Central Pacific Railroad Company operated its own railroad as an owner.

Until March 1, 1885, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company operated the so-called northern division of its railroad, a part of what is now its coast line, as an owner. The Central Pacific Railroad Company never had anything to do with this northern division. (Richardson, 639; Donaldson, 628; Hopkins, 651; Martin, 429; Hood, 456; Redington, 564; Railton, 569, 577; Klink, 600, 609; Englebright, 472.)

From 1872, until March 1, 1885, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, pending the completion of its through line, temporarily (D. Ex. 23, p. 1712) leased its lines of railroad south of Goshen to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the latter company operated them as a lessee. (Pratt, 523; Hopkins, 685; D. Ex. 24, p. 1758–1768.) There was nothing to differentiate the operation by the Central Pacific Railroad Company under these leases from the operation of a leased line by any company. These operations were conducted in the manner customary with leased railroads. (Pratt, 523; Hopkins, 685; Redington, 565; Foulds, 586; Klink, 612.)

The portions of railroad belonging to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company were advertised by the Central Pacific Railroad Company as "leased lines." (D. Ex. 8, p. 1677; D. Ex. 9, p. 1678; D. Ex. 10, p. 1679; D. Ex. 14, p. 1681; D. Ex. 16, p. 1682; D. Ex. 18, p. 1682; D. Ex. 19, p. 1683.) Trains were run without interruption over the lines of the operating company and over the lines of which it was lessee. (Breckenfeld, 458; Englebright, 466; Foulds, 582; Donaldson, 626; Luckett, 533; Railton, 575; Horsburgh, 630.) Rolling stock and supplies were made and repaired in the shops of the lessee company. (Martin, 421; Luckett, 533, 534; Railton, 576.) They were charged to the particular company for which they were provided. (Slater, 528, 530; Luckett, 536, 537; Klink, 606.) The rolling stock was used on the lines owned and on the lines leased. (Luckett, 534, 535; Johnson, 548; Railton, 577; Englebright, 467; Pratt, 506; Sheedy, 593; Kruttschnitt 710.) The operations were separately accounted for and settled between the two companies. (Luckett, 537; Redington, 565; Slater, 529; Klink, 603, 605, 606, 607, 610, 611, 612; Hopkins, 685.)

Messrs. Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker were officials of the Central Pacific Railroad Company from the beginning, and were officials of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company from 1870, and were recognized by all the subordinate officials as having authority. (Railton, 578; Foulds, 585; Horsburgh, 632.) When action by the stockholders or directors as a board was necessary, it was taken. (Foulds, 586.)

In 1885, on the formation of the Southern Pacific Company, the Central Pacific Railroad Company made one lease of its railroad to the Southern Pacific Company, and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company made another lease of its railroad to the Southern Pacific Company.

These two leases were made on different dates. They were for terms beginning on different dates. The covenants and conditions of the two leases were different. (Klink, 610; Breckenfeld, 461; Englebright, 473; Pratt, 491.)

The lease from the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company was of lesser importance, because at this time the Southern Pacific Company owned all the stock in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. The Southern Pacific Company owned none of the stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company before 1899. This distinction was the reason for the separate lease of the Central Pacific Railroad. (Hopkins, 688.)

The lease of the Central Pacific Railroad required the Southern Pacific Company to pay a rental of $1,200,000 per year, and in addition the net earnings of the Central Pacific Railroad not exceeding $2,400,000 per year. Evidently, this provision of the lease required the Southern Pacific Company to operate the Central Pacific Railroad in such a manner as to yield as large a net income as possible for the benefit of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and its stockholders. If the lease had been valid and its legal requirements complied with the Southern Pacific Company would have been obliged, in operating under it, to compete against the Southern Pacific Railroad so as to earn and pay as much of this contingent rental as possible.

The lease contained elaborate provisions for accounting between the lessee and the lessor, and required the lessee to maintain the roadbed, equipment, and other property of the lessor's railroad. It required the lessee company to account for any use on any of its other lines, of any rolling stock or other personal property of the lessor in the manner customary with railroads using foreign equipment (18). It charged the lessor company with any of the lessee's equipment used on the lessor's lines.

Accounts in the manner required by the lease were kept between the two companies. Equipment built was lettered to designate to which company it belonged. All the operations were conducted in the manner which is common where one railroad is leased to another.

It does not appear that there was lacking any element of that degree of separation which is to be expected where two separately owned railroads are operated by one company as an owner of one of the railroads and as the lessee of the other. (Hopkins, 685.)

SIXTH.

THESE TWO CORPORATIONS WERE SEPARATELY CONTROLLED BY BOARDS OF DIRECTORS, SOME OF WHOM WERE ALWAYS DIVERSE, AND A MAJORITY OF WHOM WERE DIVERSE IN ALL BUT FIVE YEARS BETWEEN 1865 AND 1899.

There were no common directors of these two corporations before 1870. In every year from the beginning to 1899, with the exception of the years 1876 and 1883 to 1887, a majority of the directors of the two corporations were diverse. In 1895, 1896, and 1897 the two corporations had only one director in common. In 1894, 1898, and 1899 they had no directors in common. (P. Ex. 14, p. 1316; Pratt, 497, 498.)

SEVENTH.

THESE TWO CORPORATIONS WERE SEPARATELY STOCK-OWNED ALWAYS TO A SUBSTANTIAL EXTENT, AND FROM 1883 TO 1899 TO THE EXTENT OF MORE THAN A MAJORITY OF THE CAPITAL STOCK IN EACH CORPORATION HELD BY WIDELY SCATTERED STOCKHOLDERS IN THE UNITED STATES AND IN EUROPE.

These two railroads were separately owned, whether we look at the corporate entities only, or at the stockholders or bondholders behind them.

In the testimony and in the briefs for the defendants will be found constant references to these two railroads as a single system, which the petitioner is seeking to make for the first time into two railroads. There is no foundation whatever for such a contention. These two railroads were the separate properties of two separate and unrelated corporations—the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Neither railroad was the individual property of Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker.

The Central Pacific Railroad was not built with the money of these four men. It was built with the proceeds of the first mortgage bonds and of the bonds loaned to the Central Pacific Railroad Company by the United States. There is no reason to believe that the proceeds of these bonds were not sufficient to pay for the construction of the entire railroad. These two issues of bonds were for $32,000 per ordinary mile, $64,000 per less mountainous mile, and $96,000 per mountainous mile. There is nothing in the record to indicate that this was not an abundant amount to pay for the construction and equipment of the railroad, or that the four promoters made any financial contribution to it. On the contrary, apparently they received all the stock which they ever held in the company as a profit. (D. Ex. 31, p. 1921; Pacific Railway Commission Report, pp. 23, 88, 107, 75, 82, 69–82.) The estimated cost of reproduction of the 850 miles of bond-aided railroad was less than $51,000,000. (P. R. C. Rept., p. 23.)

When it was sought to hold the estate of Mr. Stanford for the obligations of the Central Pacific Railroad, the distinction between the corporation and the four promoters was made very clear, and it was held that they did not assume the obligations of owners. (U. S. v. Stanford, 161 U. S. 412, 70 Fed. 346; 69 Fed. 25, 44.) They were not the owners of the railroad. They possessed no franchises. In 1899, in a very substantial sense, the holders of the first-mortgage bonds and the United States Government, to whom together there was owed approximately $117,000,000, were much more nearly the owners of this railroad than were Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker.

However, in the legal sense, and in the substantial sense, the owner of this railroad was the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the stock in that company was always owned by different men from those who owned the stock in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and in the Southern Pacific Company.

Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker acquired a controlling interest in the stock of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in 1870. It does not appear when they acquired the balance of the stock in that company, but it was at some time before 1884. (P. Ex. 16, p. 1414.) In 1884 they owned all the stock in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. (Hopkins, 672.)

In 1876 Mr. Huntington wrote that the Central Pacific "does not control the Southern Pacific" (101). In 1877 he wrote that "the Southern Pacific is a separate and distinct property" (101).

When the Southern Pacific Company was organized in 1884 these four interests acquired all the stock in that company, and that company acquired all the stock of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, but none of the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. (Klink, 621.) The Southern Pacific Company acquired no stock in the Central Pacific Company at any time before 1899.

The ownership of the stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company may be considered conveniently in three separate periods—the first from 1861 to 1877, the second from 1877 to 1884, and the third from 1884 to 1899.

In the first period Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker probably owned, directly or indirectly, a large part of the stock. They never owned it all. In the second period they were disposing of their stock, and so holding a constantly diminishing amount. In the third period they held less than a majority of the stock, and the stock was widely distributed throughout the United States and in Europe.

The stock books of the Central Pacific Railroad Company are not in evidence because the defendants state that the books have been destroyed by fire. (Jackson, 648.)

From the reports filed by the Central Pacific Railroad Company with the Secretary of the Treasury and with the Secretary of the Interior (P. Ex. 15, pp. 1342–1413) and with the California Railroad Commission (871) it appears that the number of stockholders in this company in different years was as follows:

1863	271	1882	1,880
1864	296	1883	2,198
1865	319	1884	2,600
1866	312	1885	2,237
1867	325	1886	1,916
1868	330	1887	1,826
1869	340	1888	1,796
1870	190	1889. Number not shown.
1871	140	1890	1,703
1872	130	1891	1,700
1873	85	1892	1,700
1874	90	1893	1,681
1875	90	1894	1,713
1876	90	1895	1,651
1877	89	1896	1,630
1878	82	1897	1,617
1879. No report found.		1898	1,427
1880	411	1899	480
1881	1,340	1900	16

Some of the counties of California were among these stockholders. (P. Ex. 15, pp. 1385, 1402.)

In certain years the reports showed the number of the stockholders resident in California and the par value of their holdings as follows (871):

Year.	Number of stockholders.	Holdings.
1877	62	$43,256,300
1878	56	43,260,000
1880	46	25,672,000
1881	48	18,272,800

During these years Mr. Huntington was a resident of New York, and Mr. Stanford, Mr. Crocker, and Mr. Hopkins and his representatives after his death were residents of California.

These four men, when they sold their stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company, did so on joint account. (Davis 132, Schwerin 675.)

From these reports of the stock held in California it would appear that they disposed of over 60 per cent of their holdings between 1877 and 1881.

On March 12, 1878, Mr. Richard S. Spofford, on behalf of the Southern Pacific Railroad, said to the Committee on Railroads of the United States Senate (509):

> It is affirmed respecting those by whose labor and enterprise the Southern Pacific Railroad of California has been extended to its present terminus to Fort Yuma that but few of their number are connected, whether by ownership or otherwise, with the Central Pacific Company—so few, indeed, as to constitute but one-seventh in ownership and control of the former corporation, and this is an assertion which is capable, it would seem, of absolute authentication.

Mr. Pratt, who testified as to the authority exercised by Messrs. Stanford, Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker, was ignorant as to the amount of stock which these men held (498, 502, 503, 510, 511, 514).

Mr. Sproule, president of the Southern Pacific Company, testified that he first joined the Central Pacific Railroad in 1882, and that he understood that considerable blocks of the stock were then held in Europe. (Sproule, 217.)

Mr. Speyer testified that Speyer & Co. had been the bankers for Mr. Huntington and that they sold a block of Central Pacific shares for him in Europe before 1884 (1191); that it was certainly during the dividend-paying period that the great bulk of the stock was sold in England and Holland (1196); that he thought the stock sold at about 50, and that it declined to 36 or something like that in 1883, and was selling considerably below the price at which it had been sold (1196); that the sales in England were, he should think, before 1884, possibly in 1881 (1194); that when he first came to the New York office of Speyer & Co. in 1883, 1884, or 1885 the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company was then held largely in England and Holland; that he could not remember whether a majority of the stock was so held (1191). The period of substantial dividends ended January 15, 1884. (P. Ex. 41, p. 1637.)

Frank H. Davis, who was in the service of Mr. Huntington from February 1, 1881, to July 1, 1901, testified that he opened a set of books for Mr. Huntington probably before 1885, and that he entered therein the different investments held by Mr. Huntington (131), and that he recalled that Mr. Huntington then did not have very many shares in the Central Pacific Railroad Company (133), and that he knew that there were stockholders in Europe in 1885 (132); that there had been before that time (132), and that stock was being sold in 1881 through brokers (132) for Mr. Stanford, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Hopkins, and Mr. Crocker.

Mr. Klink, clerk in the general auditor's office from 1883 to 1887 and in the office of the secretary and comptroller from 1887 to 1895 (598), testified that he was familiar with the number of stockholders in the company during these years; that the numbers in the reports corresponded with his recollection (613), and that by 1884 large quantities of the stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company had become widely distributed in America and in Europe—England and on the Continent (664); that the greater part of the stock stood on the books in the names of office employees of the company, who were not themselves the real owners of the stock (614); that the stock was dealt with on the stock exchanges in 1883 (615); that the stock standing in 1884 in the names of Mr. Huntington, Mr. Stanford, Mr. Crocker, and the Hopkins estate was considerably less than a majority of the stock in the company (618); that it was his impression that the stock standing in the names of these four in 1884 was comparatively small (618); that the voting control remained in the hands of 15 or 20 of the employees of the company (618); that he had no knowledge whether stock in their names had been sold in Europe (619); and that the remaining stock held by upwards of 2,500 shareholders was in scattered holdings among the public (618).

Mr. Jackson, present assistant chief clerk in the president's office of the Southern Pacific Company (640), and in the office of the secretary of the Central Pacific Railroad Company in 1885, testified that in 1885 Mr. Stanford, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Crocker, and the Hopkins estate each held between 30,000 and 35,000 shares of stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company (645), i. e., about 6 per cent of the total; that the voting control was in the employees of the company (645), and that approximately 30 per cent of the stock in the company was held outside of the employees and Messrs. Stanford, Huntington, Crocker, and the Hopkins estate (647).

The time of transfer of any shares in this corporation is of little or no assistance in determining when the stock was actually sold, because the Central Pacific Railroad Company had adopted a form of certificate which made it unnecessary to have the stock transferred in order to obtain direct payment of dividends. The certificate had attached, numbered warrants for dividends payable to bearer, somewhat like the coupons attached to a bond. (P. Ex. 61, p. 1659; Hopkins, 615; Klink, 679.)

When stock was sold the delivery was made by certificates standing in the name of the employees, and a considerable part of the stock so delivered was not sent back for transfer for some length of time. (Davis, 133.) It is not unlikely that the purchasers were induced to refrain from transferring shares into their own names by the possibility that they would become liable for the debts of the company under the laws of California as stockholders of record. (Hopkins, 681.)

Mr. Timothy Hopkins, the adopted son of Mark Hopkins, and active in the management of his estate from 1880 to 1889, testified that some of the stock standing in the name of the employees had been sold in this country and in Europe. (Hopkins, 680.)

In October, 1884, W. E. Brown, as secretary of conferences held between Mr. Stanford, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Crocker, and Mr. Timothy Hopkins, made up a statement of the Central Pacific stock on hand of the four interests, which showed the total number of shares as 157,535, out of the total capital then outstanding of 592,755 shares. (D. Ex. 21, p. 1695; Hopkins, 666, 677.)

Mr. Jackson fixed the amount in his recollection at between 30,000 and 35,000 shares apiece (645)—a total for the four of 140,000 shares.

Mr. Hopkins was unable to say whether or not in the spring of 1885 more than 50 per cent of the entire capital stock of the company was owned by outside stockholders who had not transferred the stock from the names of the employees into their own names (690).

In 1887 Mr. Stanford testified to the Pacific Railway Commission that he owned 32,000 shares, par $3,200,000 (i. e., 5 per cent) out of a total of about 670,000 shares, par $67,000,000 (98), and that he thought they succeeded in selling their shares in 1880 (98).

The decree of distribution of Mr. Stanford's estate, entered December 28, 1898, indicates that at his death in 1893 he held 32,973 shares (872).

The inventory of Mr. Crocker's estate of July 12, 1889, shows that he held 34,049 shares (871).

The most probable time for the sale of the stock would naturally be while it was a dividend-paying stock. (Speyer, 1196; Hopkins, 682.)

The company paid substantial dividends from 1873 to January 15, 1884, a total of more than 50 per cent (P. Ex. 41, p. 1637), and no dividends thereafter for four and a half years, after which time dividends of 1 and 2 per cent per year were paid until 1894, and none thereafter.

In 1896 Mr. Huntington testified before a committee of Congress that he had 4,000 or 5,000 shares (102); that no stockholder of the Central Pacific Railroad Company had exchanged his shares for stock in the Southern Pacific Company (102); that he always had 4,000 or 5,000 shares (103); that he did not know that he ever owned more than 6,000 shares (672); that the stock issued by the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the construction company, the Contract & Finance Co., did not come into their hands, but was sold to pay the debts of that company along in the seventies (104); that the stock sold as high as 85, he thought, between 1870 and 1880 (105); that they began to sell the shares when they began to appreciate (673); and that he did not believe that he had ever bought any shares of the stock.

There is no affirmative evidence that any substantial amount of stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company was sold between 1884 and 1898. The attractive dividends ceased in 1884. It appears from a record of a stockholders' meeting of the company held on April 12, 1898 (P. Ex. 17, p. 1418), that on that date 332,509 shares were held by the Central Pacific Railroad Shareholding Co. (Ltd.), and 32,973 shares by the Stanford family or estate. This last amount is about the same as that stated by Mr. Stanford as owned by him in 1887 (98), and about the same as the amount held by Mr. Crocker's estate in 1889 (871), and about the same as the amount which Mr. Jackson says that each of them held in the spring of 1885 (645).

The Central Pacific Railroad Shareholding Co. (Ltd.) was a British corporation, all the shareholders in which, shown on such papers as it filed with the registrar of joint-stock companies, were residents of England. (P. Ex. 21, p. 1468, 1472.)

The Commercial and Financial Chronicle for February 25, 1899, introduced in evidence by the defendants, stated that the London shareholders' committee represented a majority of the outstanding shares of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. (D. Ex. 95, p. 2267.)

In 1899, in executing the plan for the Southern Pacific Company to acquire the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the shareholders deposited their stock, for exchange, with Speyer & Co. in New York, Speyer Bros. in London, and Texeira de Mattos Bros. in Holland. Subsequently the Central Trust Co. in New York issued shares in the Southern Pacific Company against the certificates of deposit which had been issued by these three depositaries. The records of the Central Trust Co. in New York show that the deposits in New York amounted to 370,154 shares (Coles, 265), and those in London to 219,941 shares (Coles, 266), and those in Holland to 79,910 shares (Coles, 266), a total of 670,005 shares.

The deposits were made in many instances by bankers or brokers, and not necessarily by the owners of the certificates. The certificates of deposit were many. Speyer & Co.'s record (P. Ex. 29, p. 1525) shows over 700 depositors, only a few of whom made a deposit of more than 1,000 shares. Of this few, only about five deposits exceeded 10,000 shares, and no one deposit exceeded 18,000 shares.

The strong probabilities are that there was always a substantial number of shareholders from the general public in the Central Pacific Railroad Company; that this number was greatly increased between 1877 and 1884 by sales which were made by Mr. Stanford, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Crocker, and the estate of Mr. Hopkins, so that by the beginning of 1885 these four interests held less than 35,000 shares each, making together less than 25 per cent of the shares then issued, and the remaining shares, 75 per cent were held by members of the public in this country and in England who had invested in the stock, and either had recorded their transfers or had left them registered in the names of the employees in the office of the company.

The reason for the different treatment of the stock of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and that of the Central Pacific Railroad Company when the Southern Pacific Company was organized was that substantially all of the stock in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was held by the promotors of the Southern Pacific Company, whereas there were these many independent stockholders in the Central Pacific Railroad Company. (Hopkins, 688.)

The majority opinion below makes no reference to all this evidence, although there is no conflict in it.

It is indisputable that in 1885 a majority of the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company was owned by persons having no interest in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company or in the Southern Pacific Company.

FIFTH ASSIGNMENT.

The Southern Pacific Company on February 20, 1899, had no contractual, or property, or vested interest, direct or indirect, in the Central Pacific Railroad, because (1) the purported lease of February 17, 1885, by the Central Pacific Railroad Company was void for lack of power in that company to make it, both under the laws of California and under the laws of the United States, the sovereignty from which it derived its franchises; (2) in 1893 this lease was canceled and the new purported lease then given was equally void for the same reason; and (3) the leasehold interest was subject to immediate destruction by the foreclosure of the underlying lien of the United States.

The combination of which the petition complains consists of the acquisition by the Southern Pacific

Company in 1899 of the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and its successor, the Central Pacific Railway Company. This was nine years after the enactment of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890. The defendants seek to defeat the petition by saying that, even if this combination was a restraint of trade, the defendant Southern Pacific Company had acquired a vested right to this restraint before the antitrust act was passed.

The only way, if at all, in which the Southern Pacific Company can have acquired any such vested right is through the lease made to it by the Central Pacific Railroad Company in 1885. If this lease was void, the Southern Pacific Company had no such vested right. It is of no consequence in this connection what was the cause of the invalidity of the lease; that is, whether it was lack of the proper votes of the stockholders in the lessor company, lack of corporate authority, lack of power under the State laws, or lack of power under the Federal laws.

With due respect it must be said that the majority opinion appears to overlook this entirely. In one place the majority say:

> We do not think the statute (the antitrust act of July 2, 1890) was intended to create competition by destroying a proprietary relation formed long before its passage (2331).

At another place they say:

> It is also argued that the leases mentioned were not authorized by the statutes of California. We need not consider that. We do not think the antitrust act picks up the laws of the States for original enforcement (2330).

It will be observed that the petitioner is not asking the court to pick up the laws of the State for original enforcement. The petitioner is not asking any enforcement of those laws. The petitioner says merely that the "proprietary relation," which the majority of the court below assumes, did not exist, because no property right, and indeed no contract right, had been granted by the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company before 1890 (313).

Therefore it is necessary to determine whether or not the Southern Pacific Company had any lease of the Central Pacific Railroad. It certainly had no other property or contract right in that railroad.

Incidentally it should be noted that the majority of the court below, although referring to the argument that the lease was not authorized by the statutes of California, has entirely ignored the argument that the lease was unauthorized under the acts of Congress and also apart from statute.

FIRST.

THE PURPORTED LEASE OF FEBRUARY 7, 1885, BY THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY WAS VOID FOR LACK OF POWER IN THAT COMPANY TO MAKE IT, BOTH UNDER THE LAWS OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA AND UNDER THE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE SOVEREIGNTY FROM WHICH IT DERIVED ITS FRANCHISES.

It is well settled that a railroad corporation in the absence of express authority from the legislative body which granted its franchise can not make a lease of its railroad for a period of 99 years.

This principle has received recognition in the constitution and in the statutes of most of the States of the United States, and particularly with reference to railroads.

This invalidity of railroad leases in restraint of trade did not come into existence through the Sherman Antitrust Act. That act merely made criminal and gave certain preventive remedies for the kinds of agreements for monopolies and restraints of trade which by the existing law were invalid.

Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1.

United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106.

It follows from the competitive character of these two railroads that even if the Central Pacific Railroad had authority to make a lease, it could not make a valid lease to the Southern Pacific Company. But it had no such power, either under the laws of California or under the laws of the United States, and authority from the United States was essential to the making of a lease.

The only purposes for which the Central Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated under the laws of California were to "purchase, construct, own, maintain, and operate" railroad lines. (P. Ex. 12, pp. 277, 280.) These powers were never increased.

The constitution of California, adopted May 7, 1879, and in force in 1885, provided in article 12:

> SEC. 9. No corporation shall engage in any business other than that expressly authorized in its charter, or the law under which it may have been or may hereafter be organized, nor shall it hold for a longer period than five years any real estate except such as may be necessary for carrying on its business.
> SEC. 10. The legislature shall not pass any laws permitting the leasing or alienation of any franchise, so as to relieve the franchise or property held thereunder from the liabilities of the lessor or grantor, lessee or grantee, contracted or incurred in the operation, use, or enjoyment of such franchise, or any of its privileges.

Not only was there no authority under the articles of this corporation to make a lease, but also there was no legislative authority to a railroad corporation to make a lease of this kind.

The general railroad act of May 20, 1861 (ch. 534, p. 609), under which this company was incorporated, gave no authority to a railroad corporation to make a lease. In 1863 section 4 of this act was so amended as to permit railroad corporations to lease to other corporations organized under the same act, but this amendment made no provision for leasing to corporations organized under the laws of another State. It provided that—

> Any railroad corporation organized under the act to which this is amendatory shall have the right to lease the whole or any portion of their road to any other corporation organized under this act, or to grant to any such corporation the right to use in common any portion of their road. (1 Hittell, art. 838.)

Evidently this provision is not applicable, because the lessee, the Southern Pacific Company, was organized not under this law, or indeed under any law of California. It was organized under the laws of the State of Kentucky.

On April 3, 1880, the California Legislature passed an act (ch. 65, p. 114) which provided:

> Railroad corporations doing business in this State and organized under any law of this State, or the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, have power to enter into contracts with one another whereby the one may lease of the other the whole or any part of its railroad, or may acquire of the other the right to use, in common with it, the whole or any part of its railroad.

This act has been urged by the Southern Pacific Company in several cases, to establish the validity of this agreement of lease, but in none of these cases has the court found it necessary to pass upon the question.

Lee v. Southern Pacific Railroad Company, 116 Calif. 97; 47 Pacific 932.

Johnson v. Southern Pacific Railroad Company, 154 Calif. 285; 97 Pacific 520.

Southern Pacific Company v. U. S., 28 Ct. of Claims 77.

Southern Pacific Company v. Railroad Commissioners, 78 Fed. 236, 249.

The only right to lease which was given by this act was to corporations "doing business in this State."

At the time of the lease in question (Feb. 17, 1885) the lessee, the Southern Pacific Company, was not doing business in California. (Breckenfeld, 459, 462; Englebright, 467; Pratt, 481, 491, 493, 523; Norton, 551; Railton, 572, 577; Klink, 601, 610.)

It began its first business in California in the spring of 1885, when it began to operate the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad. (Breckenfeld, 459, 462; Englebright, 467; Pratt, 482, 485, 492, 493; Norton, 551; Railton, 572, 577; Klink, 601, 610.)

Obviously the taking of a lease can not constitute doing business within the terms of this statute. Otherwise the words would never have any effect.

The apparent purpose of this section is to permit a railroad corporation operating its own railroad to acquire a lease of lines that may be useful in supplementing its operations. It was not intended to permit railroad corporations to turn over their entire properties and franchises for a period of 99 years as a means of accomplishing a virtual substitution of one corporation for the other in the operation of a railroad.

It has been argued for the defendants that the Southern Pacific Company was doing business in California on February 17, 1885, because it had obtained a lease from the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for a term immediately to begin on February 10, 1885, although no operations were undertaken under this lease until March 1, 1885. The defect in the argument is that it ignores the fact that the lease by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company was also an unauthorized lease under this statute. The only statute under which the Southern Pacific Railroad Company could make a lease was that which provided that it could lease to a corporation doing business in California. The Southern Pacific Company was not doing business in California on February 10, 1885. Under these circumstances the taking of a lease from the Southern Pacific Railroad Company no more constituted doing business than did taking a lease from the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Both leases were outside of the letter and the purpose of the statute.

It follows that, even apart from the requirements of the laws of the United States, this lease was not a lease.

But the most vital requirement of all to a valid lease was authority from the United States.

The several railroads either incorporated or aided by the United States by the Pacific Railroad acts are without authority to dispose of the franchises derived from those acts.

U. S. v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 160 U. S. 1, 28.

It has been affirmed repeatedly that the United States was the origin of the franchises of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

U. S. v. Stanford, 161 U. S. 412; 70 Fed. 346; 69 Fed. 25, 38.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company in the lease in question of February 17, 1885, describes itself as a corporation "under the laws of the State of California and the United States" (13).

In 1852, before this corporation was organized, the California Legislature had passed an act to grant to the United States a right of way through California for a railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean (ch. 77, p. 150), and had instructed its Senators and Representatives (ch. 852, p. 276) to vote for an act of Congress for a railway from the Missouri River and the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company did not begin construction until Congress had passed the Pacific Railroad laws of 1862, and when it began construction it was under these laws and with the subsidy provided by them.

On April 4, 1864, the legislature of California passed an act (ch. 417, p. 471) by which it confirmed the franchise which the United States had granted to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, and repealed all conflicting provisions.

This act, Mr. Justice Field, in Central Pacific Railroad Co. v. California, 162 U. S. 91, 133, said abrogated "the State franchises of those corporations and substituted by adoption in their place the Federal franchises which have remained in force ever since."

The Pacific Railroad laws of 1862 and 1864 required the Central Pacific Railroad Company "to operate and use its railroad." (P. Ex. 3, p. 1244.)

The railroad was constructed and operated not only in California, but also in Nevada and Utah. The only source of the franchise for such a railroad was the United States.

It is immaterial that corporate existence was derived from the laws of California. This corporation, as it existed before the Pacific Railroad acts of Congress were passed, had an authorized capital of $8,500,000, and under the California law it could not borrow in excess of an equal amount and must provide a sinking fund for the redemption in money of the bonds issued.

Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 727.

The bonds issued for the construction of the original Central Pacific Railroad amounted to more than $50,000,000, and the right to issue them or to get them came from the United States. The California act of 1864 amounted only to a recognition of the powers which had been granted by Congress.

Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 728.

The duty of the Central Pacific Railroad Company "to operate and use" its road ran to the sovereignty which granted the franchise. It could not part with that franchise or the right to use that franchise, or delegate the operation of that franchise, or the performance of the duties under it to any other corporation or individual without authority from Congress. The United States was the donor of the franchise, and the one to impose the conditions upon its exercise, and therefore the only one that could modify or dispense with the performance of those conditions. The Central Pacific Railroad Company could not take from the United States the right of way, the public lands, the bonds of the United States, and the other rights conferred by the United States, and then be excused from the performance of the duties imposed by the United States, or delegate the performance of those duties to any one else unless authority therefor was given by Congress.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company by this lease completely deprived itself of the power to operate its railroad as required by the Pacific Railroad acts. If the Southern Pacific Company chose to use this railroad to support the business of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and thereby to diminish the business of the Union Pacific Railroad, the Central Pacific Railroad Company was practically powerless to prevent this discrimination against the Union Pacific Railroad if the lease was enforceable.

Congress has never given any authority to make this lease. The only suggestion which the defendants have made to the contrary is that the approval of the agreement between the United States and the Central Pacific Railroad Company and Speyer & Co. of February 1, 1899, constituted a consent to the lease because the lease was to be subordinated to the new first refunding bond mortgage. There are at least two answers to this suggestion: (1) That consenting that a mortgage shall have priority to an existing lease does not amount to an agreement that the lease is valid or shall become valid, but it merely prefers the mortgage to the lease whether valid or not, and (2) that Congress, it would appear, never had any knowledge whatever of the agreement to subordinate the lease. The agreement between the United States and the Central Pacific Railroad Company and Speyer & Co. contained no reference whatever to any such subordinating agreement. It is not mentioned in the plan of readjustment. (D. Ex. 45(a); Ex. B of answer, p. 60.) It is not mentioned in the commission's report to Congress, or in the Attorney General's report.

Six months after the date of the agreement—namely, on August 1, 1899—the Southern Pacific Company executed agreements to subordinate the lease to the new mortgages, but there is nothing to show or to suggest that these agreements were known to any representatives of the Government. It is probable that no officer of the Government or any single member of Congress ever had the slightest knowledge of them. Considering the clarity required for grants of rights from Congress to private individuals, this is too slender a thread on which to hang congressional authority to the Central Pacific Railroad to lease to the Southern Pacific Company.

It follows that for lack of authority from the United States this lease in 1885 was not a lease.

Consequently, because the lease (1) was to a competing railroad; (2) was by a corporation having by its articles, under the constitution of California, no authority to lease; (3) was without authority from the California Legislature; and (4) was without authority from the United States, the Southern Pacific Company on July 2, 1890, when the antitrust act was passed, had no lease of the Central Pacific Railroad and no proprietary interest and no contractual interest, and no other right therein.

SECOND.

IN 1893 THIS LEASE WAS CANCELED AND THE NEW PURPORTED LEASE THEN GIVEN WAS EQUALLY VOID FOR THE SAME REASON.

Even assuming that the void lease of February 17, 1885, was a valid lease, all rights under that lease ended on January 1, 1894, except the adjustment of accounts in respect to prior operation.

On December 7, 1893, the Southern Pacific Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company purported to enter into a new agreement of lease, and section 5 of this agreement provided in terms that—

> Fifth. The agreements between the same parties, dated February 17, 1885, and January 1, 1888, respectively, are hereby canceled except so far as they relate to operation of said demised premises prior to January 1, 1894, and to adjustment of accounts in respect to such operation thereof.

This agreement provided for a different rental. The original lease provided for a rental of $1,200,000 a year in any event, and in addition the total net income from operation up to $2,400,000. The new lease provided for a fixed rental of $10,000 only, and the net income from operation, with the proviso that if that income exceeded 6 per cent on the outstanding capital stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, then only one-half of the excess should go to the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

In the court below defendants argued elaborately that the doctrine of implied surrender of an existing leasehold, by the acceptance of a new lease, applied only where the new lease was valid. In this discussion they made no reference whatever to a termination by express agreement. Assuming that this principle limiting the doctrine of implied surrender is sound, it has no application. The termination of the old lease in this case was not left to implication.

There was a clear, express agreement to terminate the old leasehold in the quoted fifth section of the new agreement. There was nothing invalid about this section. The parties agreed to terminate and the agreement was effective to terminate.

There was nothing unlawful or criminal about the agreement in that section, nor can the position of the defendants be bettered by saying that they should be relieved from this terminating agreement which they made, and relieved because they made it under the mistaken belief that they were getting a new valid lease. There is nothing to indicate that they made any mistake of fact or any mistake of law. The making of the new lease was of itself the commission of the crime denounced by the Sherman Antitrust Act. Evidently, if the defendant can not retain the fruits of that offense, the court should not help them out by giving back to them the old lease which they gave up in connection with the commission of that offense. The case differs radically from all those referred to in which the failure to get a new valid lease was due to some imperfection of power, or execution, or mistake of fact, and not to the fact that the transaction in which the intending lessee engaged was a crime.

Unquestionably the only lease under which the Southern Pacific Company was operating in 1899 was a lease made three years after the Sherman Antitrust Act became effective.

THIRD.

THE LEASEHOLD INTEREST WAS SUBJECT TO IMMEDIATE DESTRUCTION BY THE FORECLOSURE OF THE UNDERLYING LIEN OF THE UNITED STATES.

On this branch of the case the important consideration is whether in 1899, when the Sherman Antitrust Act was in effect, the Southern Pacific Company acquired a greater power to restrain competition than it possessed before 1890.

At best for it, in 1890 it had only a leasehold interest subject to an underlying lien for the security of the first-mortgage bondholders, and a second underlying lien for the security of the payment to the United States of the amount of the bonds which the United States had given, and for the interest thereon.

In 1898 this second lien had matured and the lease consequently was subject to immediate destruction by foreclosure of the lien in favor of the United States.

Under the act of July 7, 1898, Congress instructed the President to foreclose this lien if the debt was not settled within a year.

On February 1, 1899, before the new combination, the Southern Pacific Company was at the point of being deprived in this way of all control over the Central Pacific Railroad. Note the change wrought by the new combination if valid. On August 1, 1899, the Southern Pacific Company was the owner of all the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and in no danger of being deprived of control of the Central Pacific Railroad by a foreclosure or otherwise, if this scheme of February 20, 1899, was not subject to attack under the Sherman Antitrust Act, or under the Pacific Railroad laws.

It follows inevitably that after the enactment of the Sherman Antitrust Act the Southern Pacific Company has, by a combination formed by it, acquired a proprietary interest and a power over the commerce of the Central Pacific Railroad which it did not enjoy before.

SIXTH ASSIGNMENT.

Even if the Southern Pacific Company had had some control over the Central Pacific Railroad before the Sherman Antitrust Act was passed, this would not render lawful a combination for the increase and perpetuation of that control, formed after this act was passed.

It is not necessary to consider in this case whether or not the Sherman Antitrust Act prohibits a man from operating, after July 2, 1890, two separate, competitive railroads which become his property before 1890. No such case is presented. At best for the defendants the question is whether or not the combination imperfect before July 2, 1890, can thereafter, notwithstanding the antitrust act, be lawfully operated and be made more firm and indestructible.

The words of the act are enough to answer the question in the negative. It is not merely the making of the combination which is declared to be illegal. It is a misdemeanor to "engage in any such combination." To continue to operate pursuant to such a combination is to engage in that combination.

It is not clear from the language of the majority of the court below just what view they entertain concerning this particular question. After discussing the lease of 1885 and the new lease of 1893, the court says:

> The applicability of the antitrust act can not be made to rest on such considerations (2330).

This is the only approach to a decision below upon this particular question. On the other hand, Judge Carland says:

> The fact that prior to the passage of the antitrust act there had been a practical control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific by a leasing arrangement in no way validates the present arrangement if it be unlawful (2337).

It is common knowledge that the evils which Congress sought to remedy in 1890 were those already in existence and to some extent known and generally discussed.

Several of the more prominent combinations the continuance of which has been enjoined by the courts were in existence when the statute was passed.

bilities, avoided such contracts made before the act was passed, the court said:

> The power of Congress, in its regulation of interstate commerce, and of commerce in the District of Columbia and in the Territories, to impose this liability, was not fettered by the necessity of maintaining existing arrangements and stipulations which would conflict with the execution of its policy. To subordinate the exercise of the Federal authority to the continuing operation of previous contracts would be to place, to this extent, the regulation of interstate commerce in the hands of private individuals and to withdraw from the control of Congress so much of the field as they might choose by prophetic discernment to bring within the range of their agreements. The Constitution recognizes no such limitation. It is of the essence of the delegated power of regulation that, within its sphere, Congress should be able to establish uniform rules, immediately obligatory, which as to future action should transcend all inconsistent provisions. Prior arrangements were necessarily subject to this paramount authority.

In the absence of a grant from the sovereign no one had acquired a vested right on July 2, 1890, to restrain commerce or to monopolize it for the future. If the makers of a combination created before 1890 could not be punished for their acts done before 1890, it by no means follows that they could not be punished for continuing to engage in the combination after 1890.

To engage in a combination in restraint of trade after 1890 is not rendered lawful by the fact that the combination existed before 1890.

The Southern Pacific Company in the case at bar not only continued to operate under the combination existing before 1890, but also in 1893 canceled the agreement under which it was operating and made a new agreement of lease, and finally, in 1899, attempted to perfect its control by acquiring the stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company at a time when the Central Pacific Railroad was about to pass into the hands of the United States or of such purchaser as might acquire it on the foreclosure of the lien of the United States.

This acquisition was a new, unlawful combination, which was not made lawful by the prior relations between the two companies.

The additional defenses alleged by the defendants which were not discussed in the opinions in the district court.

There remain to be considered certain defenses alleged in the answers of the defendants or urged by them below and apparently not considered by the court below, namely:

(1) The decree in the case of the United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, as res adjudicata in favor of the defendants; (2) the estoppel of the United States by inconsistent position taken in the Union Pacific case; (3) the absence of complaint of this restraint of trade in the Union Pacific case; (4) laches; and (5) the statute of limitations.

FIRST.

IN THE CASE OF THE UNITED STATES AGAINST THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY THE COURT DID NOT ADJUDGE EXPRESSLY OR BY INFERENCE THAT IT WAS NOT UNLAWFUL FOR THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY TO HOLD THE STOCK OF THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

The defendants in their answer claim that the decree in the case of the United States against the Union Pacific Railroad Company carries in solution a judgment that it was lawful for the Southern Pacific Company to hold the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company. This is without foundation.

On February 1, 1908, the United States filed in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Utah a petition against the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, the Southern Pacific Company, the Northern Pacific Railway Company, the Great Northern Railway Company, and certain individual defendants, complaining of restraints of trade by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and others in the acquisition of stock by the Union Pacific Railroad Company (or its subsidiaries or associates) in (1) the Southern Pacific Company, (2) the Northern Pacific Railway Company, (3) the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, (4) the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company.

When the Supreme Court rendered its decision and entered its decree in this case, neither the Central Pacific Railroad Company nor the Central Pacific Railway Company was a party to this suit. No relief was asked as to the control of the Central Pacific Railroad by the Southern Pacific Company. The petition contained no allegation that the Central Pacific Railroad was in competition with the Southern Pacific Railroad.

There was no allegation in the answer putting in issue the fact of the control of the Central Pacific Railroad by the Southern Pacific Company or the propriety thereof.

The defense mainly relied upon in the case was that, inasmuch as the Union Pacific Railroad Company, in the movement of transcontinental freight, always had been dependent upon the Central Pacific Railroad, controlled by the Southern Pacific Company, the Union Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad never had been in a position to compete with each other substantially and practically.

The court below (188 Fed. Rep. 102), except Judge Hook dissenting, held that this defense was made out. The court below held unanimously that there was no ground for relief as to the stock held by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in the Northern Pacific Railway Company, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, and the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company.

On appeal the Supreme Court held (226 U. S. 61) that the decision below was correct with respect to the stock of these last three companies, but that there had been a substantial and practical competition between the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company which was unreasonably restrained by the acquisition of control of the stock of the Southern Pacific Company by the Union Pacific Railroad Company or by subsidiary companies controlled by it. The petitioner in the case at bar makes no contention at variance with this decision, but, on the contrary, relies on it.

Neither counsel for the parties in the briefs, nor the court in its opinion, expressly or by implication, urged or upheld as lawful the control of the Southern Pacific Company over the Central Pacific Railroad.

1. The court made no decision on this question.

The only restraint of commerce alleged in this case was that accomplished by the Union Pacific Railroad Company or its subsidiaries or associates. A straddling petition which sought at one time to obtain relief from a restraint of commerce composed of an acquisition of the stock of the Southern Pacific Company by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and a restraint of commerce composed of an acquisition of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company by the Southern Pacific Company, two wholly independent transactions, two years apart, if it was not multifarious, at least would not be conducive to simplicity and efficiency in trial. Whether or not permissible, it was not attempted.

No issue was raised as to the legal effect or as to the propriety of the control of the Central Pacific Railroad by the Southern Pacific Company. Evidence showing the competitive character of the Southern Pacific Railroad with the Central Pacific Railroad and the lack of competition between them, unless material for some other purpose, was inadmissible.

It would have caused surprise to the court and to the counsel for the respective parties to learn that they were trying the question of undue restraint of trade by the Southern Pacific Company in holding the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company. If that question was not on trial, the decision did not dispose of it.

The statement of the Supreme Court quoted in the answer in the case at bar, that "we find no reason to disturb the action of the court below," is taken from the context—

> so far as concerns the attempt to acquire the Northern Pacific stock and the stock of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, afterwards abandoned, and a certain interest in the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company and other features of the case which were dealt with and disposed of by the decree and opinion of the court below.

The court below did not deal with the lawfulness of the holding of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company by the Southern Pacific Company. The only subjects with which it dealt were: (1) The unreasonable restraint of the competition of the Southern Pacific Company by the Union Pacific Railroad Company; (2) the acquisition of the stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company (188 Fed. 117); (3) the acquisition of the stock of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company (117); (4) the acquisition of an interest in the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company (117); and (5) the transactions between the Southern Pacific Company, the Phoenix & Eastern, and the California & Northwestern Railroad Companies (118).

These last four matters were the ones as to which the Supreme Court found no reason to disturb the action of the court below.

2. Indispensable parties for such a decision were absent.

The unreasonable restraint of commerce by the Southern Pacific Company is composed in part of the agreement of lease of December 7, 1893, by the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company, and in part of the acquisition of the stock in the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Neither the Central Pacific Railroad Company nor its successor, the Central Pacific Railway Company, was a party to the suit against the Union Pacific Railroad Company when the Supreme Court rendered its decision and entered its decree.

On February 8, 1913, after the suit was remanded to the District Court, the Southern Pacific Company, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Pacific Railway Company, and the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company entered into a conditional agreement (P. Ex. 20, p. 1428) to transfer the control of the Central Pacific Railroad from the Southern Pacific Company to the Union Pacific Railroad Company. This possibility had been suggested to the Supreme Court and was not disapproved by it. (226 U. S. 97.) This agreement was approved by the Attorney General, and on February 12, 1913, it was presented to the District Court for its approval (2203). All the parties to the agreement were parties to the suit, except the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railway Company. The agreement and the action which the court might take on it would seriously affect these two companies. Consequently, they were made parties to the suit on that day. No allegations were made against either of them and no issue of fact or of law as to either of them was decided. The final decree followed the mandate of the Supreme Court (2202), issued before they were parties. The determinative act in the case was the decision of the Supreme Court rendered in December, 1912.

The Central Pacific Railway Company was directly interested in the validity of the lease of December 7, 1893. Even if permissible, it is improbable that the court would have passed upon the lawfulness of it in the absence of this company.

The absence of parties similarly interested in other transactions which the petitioner sought to question was pointed out by the court below as one of the reasons why the unlawfulness of those transactions should not be considered. (188 Fed. 118.)

The unlawfulness of a combination in restraint of commerce should not be adjudged in the absence of the parties directly interested.

> There is a difference between the effect of a judgment as a bar against the prosecution of a second action for the same claim or demand, and its effect as an estoppel in another action between the same parties upon another claim or demand. States, 168 U. S. 1; Gunter v. Atlantic Coast Line, 200 U. S. 273; Deposit Bank v. Frankfort, 191 U. S. 499.)

In Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351, it was held that the failure to recover on certain coupons, because of fraud in the original issue of the bonds to which they were attached, was not a bar to a recovery on other coupons on the same bonds because the plaintiff might show that he was a purchaser of the bonds for value without notice, although this same fact if shown in the first case would have enabled the plaintiff to prevail therein. The court said:

> There is a difference between the effect of a judgment as a bar or estoppel against the prosecution of a second action upon the same claim or demand, and its effect as an estoppel in another action between the same parties upon a different claim or cause of action. In the former case, the judgment, if rendered upon the merits, constitutes an absolute bar to a subsequent action. It is a finality as to the claim or demand in controversy, concluding parties and those in privity with them, not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim or demand, but as to any other admissible matter which might have been offered for that purpose. Thus, for example, a judgment rendered upon a promissory note is conclusive as to the validity of the instrument and the amount due upon it, although it be subsequently alleged that perfect defenses actually existed, of which no proof was offered, such as forgery, want of consideration, or payment. If such defenses were not presented in the action, and established by competent evidence, the subsequent allegation of their existence is of no legal consequence. The judgment is as conclusive, so far as future proceedings at law are concerned, as though the defenses never existed. The language, therefore, which is so often used, that a judgment estops not only as to every ground of recovery or defense actually presented in the action, but also as to every ground which might have been presented, is strictly accurate, when applied to the demand or claim in controversy. Such demand or claim, having passed into judgment, can not again be brought into litigation between the parties in proceedings at law upon any ground whatever (352).

But where the second action between the same parties is upon a different claim or demand, the judgment in the prior action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered. In all cases, therefore, where it is sought to apply the estoppel of a judgment rendered upon one cause of action to matters arising in a suit upon a different cause of action, the inquiry must always be as to the point or question actually litigated and determined in the original action, not what might have been thus litigated and determined. Only upon such matters is the judgment conclusive in another action (352).

It is not believed that there are any cases going to the extent that because in the prior action a different question from that actually determined might have arisen and been litigated, therefore such possible question is to be considered as excluded from consideration in a second action between the same parties on a different demand, although loose remarks looking in that direction may be found in some opinions. On principle, a point not in litigation in one action can not be received as conclusively settled in any subsequent action upon a different cause, because it might have been determined in the first action (356).

There is nothing in this language, applied to the facts of the case, which gives support to the doctrine that, whenever in one action a party might have brought forward a particular ground of recovery or defense, and neglected to do so, he is, in a subsequent suit between the same parties upon a different cause of action, precluded from availing himself of such ground (358).

This case has been cited with approval repeatedly.

SECOND.

THE UNITED STATES IS NOT ESTOPPED BY ANY INCONSISTENT POSITION TAKEN IN THE UNION PACIFIC CASE.

It is contended for the defendants that the United States is barred by estoppel from taking a position inconsistent with the position which it took in the Union Pacific case. For the reasons already stated (p. 34) there is no inconsistency in the positions taken in the two cases. If there was it would not be a bar. The cases in which the United States has been held to be subject to the rule of estoppel of inconsistent position are those in which the property rights or the contract rights of the United States were under consideration. There is no such thing as estoppel of the United States when the United States is acting as a sovereign to enforce the criminal laws. (See Estoppel, supra, pp. 192.)

THIRD.

THE UNITED STATES IS NOT BARRED BY ABSENCE OF COMPLAINT OF THIS RESTRAINT OF TRADE IN THE UNION PACIFIC CASE.

It is contended for the defendants that the failure of the United States to complain of the combination of the Central Pacific Railroad Company with the Southern Pacific Company in the Union Pacific case, precludes the United States from making such a complaint thereafter because of the rule that a litigant must include the whole subject matter of his complaint in one suit and can not afterwards assign other grounds for complaint of the "same transaction."

This principle has no application to the situation before the court. The only "transactions" complained of in the Union Pacific case were restraints of trade by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in 1901 and thereafter. No transaction by the Southern Pacific Company was complained of. No transaction occurring in 1899 was complained of. The control of the Central Pacific Railroad by the Southern Pacific Company was no part of the restraint of trade by the Union Pacific Railroad Company. It was the Southern Pacific Company's control of the Southern Pacific Railroad and not of the Central Pacific Railroad that made the acquisition of stock in the Southern Pacific Company by the Union Pacific Company a restraint of trade. It would have been just as much a restraint of trade, and perhaps even more so, if the Southern Pacific Company had not controlled the Central Pacific Railroad. The two transactions—the one the acquisition of control over the Central Pacific Railroad by the Southern Pacific Company and the other the acquisition of control over the Southern Pacific Railroad by the Union Pacific Railroad Company—were entirely distinct and neither one assisted the other. On the contrary, their tendency was to offset each other.

FOURTH.

THE PETITION IS NOT BARRED BY LACHES.

There has been no laches in bringing this suit, and also laches by the United States is not a defense to a petition to enforce a criminal law.

1. There has been no unreasonable delay or laches in bringing the suit at bar.

The combination complained of was perfected in 1899. Two years later the control of this combination was acquired by the Union Pacific Railroad Company. The orderly course for the United States to pursue in removing this compound restraint of commerce was to procure, first, the dissolution of the second combination, which controlled the earlier one and both of its elements. The petition for this purpose did not result in a final decree until June 30, 1913. The petition at bar was brought shortly thereafter. If the opinion of the court below in the suit against the Union Pacific Railroad Company that the suit was not well founded had prevailed above, it would have affected materially the question whether the petition now at bar should be filed. Until the contentions made by the defendants in that case had been settled the petition at bar would have served no useful purpose. It was filed promptly after the decision in that case.

In United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, the principal combination dissolved by decision in 1920 was formed in 1896. The latest acquisition referred to, in the opinion, was in 1901.

2. Laches by a sovereign is not a defense to a petition to enforce a criminal law.

It is well established that the United States is not barred by laches.

United States v. International Harvester Co., 214 Fed. 987 (D. C. Minn.).

De Koven v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 216 Fed. 955, 959 (D. C. S. D. N. Y.), dictum.

This principle is rested not on the extraordinary prerogative of the United States, but on public policy. The United States acts not for its personal benefit, but for all the people, whose sovereign it is. They should not be deprived of rights through the nonaction of the officials of the United States. Such nonaction is frequently due to a lack of knowledge of the facts upon which rights are based, a lack of knowledge which may be pardonable in view of the multiplicity of matters in which the rights of the United States are involved. The situation differs entirely from that of a private individual or corporation, whose business it is to look after his or its own rights in his or its own interest.

It is evident that there is much more reason why the United States should not be barred by laches when seeking to prevent a breach of the criminal laws than when seeking to enforce its property or contract rights. Even in the latter case laches is not a bar.

FIFTH.

THE LAPSE OF MORE THAN FIVE YEARS SINCE THE FORMATION OF THIS COMBINATION IS NOT A BAR.

The decree against the Union Pacific Railroad Company after able representation in defense is a strong indication that the statute of limitations is not a bar in this case. The combination in that case was completed in 1901, and the petition was filed on February 1, 1908, and the statute was pleaded (2108).

The situation was much the same in the petition against the Standard Oil Company.

Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1.

The United States is not barred by any statute of limitations, State or national, unless Congress expressly so provides.

United States v. Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Ry. Co., 118 U. S. 120.

The defendants' answer, alleging the lapse of three years and of five years, respectively, as a bar under the statutes of the United States, indicates an intention to rely on Revised Statutes, section 1044, as amended by the act of April 13, 1876 (19 Stat. L., p. 32, ch. 56), and on Revised Statutes, section 1047 (U. S. Compiled Statutes, 1916, secs. 1708, 1712, pp. 3577, 3588), which provide that—

> SECTION 1044, amended. No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense not capital, except as provided in section ten thousand and forty-six, unless the indictment is found, or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed.

> SECTION 1047. No suit or prosecution for any penalty or forfeiture, pecuniary or otherwise, accruing under the laws of the United States, shall be maintained, except in cases where it is otherwise specially provided, unless the same is commenced within five years from the time when the penalty or forfeiture accrued.

These sections furnish no defense, for two reasons: (1) Because this is not an indictment or information or suit or prosecution for a penalty or forfeiture, and (2) because the occurrence of an offense more than five years ago does not bar a proceeding to prevent the continuance of it hereafter.

1. This is not an indictment, information, suit, or prosecution for a penalty or forfeiture.

This is a petition for a remedial injunction.

Sections 1044 and 1047 and the context all relate to proceedings for punishment. None of them refer to remedial injunctions to restrain breaches in the future.

The two sections grew out of the act of April 30, 1790, chapter 9 (1 Stats., 112), relating to criminal prosecutions only. Section 32 of that act provided—

> That no person or persons shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for treason or other capital offence aforesaid, willful murder or forgery excepted, unless the indictment for the same shall be found by a grand jury within three years next after the treason or capital offence aforesaid shall be done or committed; nor shall any person be prose> cuted, tried, or punished for any offence, not capital, nor for any fine or forfeiture under any penal statute, unless the indictment or information for the same shall be found or instituted within two years from the time of committing the offence or incurring the fine or forfeiture aforesaid.

Excepting treason and capital offenses, this section made no distinction between punishments, penalties, and forfeitures, pecuniary or otherwise.

The act of March 2, 1799, chapter 22, "to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," provided for penalties for breaches of the act and that they should be sued for in the name of the United States. Section 89 (1 Stats. 696) provided that "no action or prosecution" under this act shall be brought under this act except within three years after the penalty or forfeiture is incurred.

In February, 1804, in Adams v. Woods, 2 Cranch, 336, the court held that section 32 of the act of April 30, 1790, was a bar to a qui tam action of debt for a penalty, because it was a prosecution in substance and a remedy civil in form only.

The act of March 22, 1804, chapter 40, section 3 (2 Stats. 290), provided against the recovery of any "fine or forfeiture" under the revenue laws unless the "indictment or information" was found within five years.

The act of April 20, 1818, chapter 91, section 9 (3 Stats. 452), limited the time for "any prosecution, information or action * * * for any offense under this act to five years." This was an act laying prohibitions upon the slave trade and providing for forfeitures for offenses against the act. The word "action" in this section adds nothing to the words "prosecution and information" as they had been construed in Adams v. Woods.

The act of February 28, 1839, chapter 36, section 4 (5 Stats. 322), was substantially in the language of the present section 1047.

From a comparison of these sections it is apparent that "suit" in section 1047 is used in the same sense as "action" in the act of 1818, and means a form of prosecution for a penalty or forfeiture.

It is the substantial result sought and not the form of action adopted which determines the applicability of these sections of the statute of limitations.

Gompers v. United States, 233 U. S. 604, 611.

A proceeding for a penalty is no less a criminal proceeding because the form of the action is civil. An action of debt for a penalty does not differ substantially from an information therefor.

Lees v. United States, 150 U. S. 476.

In this sense indictments, informations, and suits for penalties are recognized methods of criminal prosecution.

United States v. Stevenson, 215 U. S. 190, 198.

Mackin v. United States, 117 U. S. 348, 353.

Adams v. Woods, 2 Cranch, 336.

Williams v. Wells Fargo & Co., 177 Fed. 352 (C. C. A. 8th), 355.

These different methods of procedure are grouped in sections 1044 and 1047. The difference between the two sections is in the substance of the punishment sought. Section 1047 is limited to cases in which the punishment sought is a penalty or forfeiture.

The proceeding in the case at bar is not for a penalty or for a forfeiture. A forfeiture is property taken as a penalty from an offender and going to the sovereign or to an informer. A common method of obtaining it is by a proceeding in rem against the property itself.

> Dobbins Distillery v. United States, 96 U. S. 395.
> Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. 246, 310.

A penalty conveys the thought of punishment.

> Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 667.
> Brady v. Daly, 175 U. S. 148, 156.

The first, second, third, and sixth sections of the Sherman Antitrust Act provide all the penalties and forfeitures which may be exacted as a punishment for the breach of the provisions of the act. The seventh section provides for a remedy to persons injured, and the fourth section provides a remedy, not for breaches of the act, but to prevent them. This section is wholly preventive and not punitive.

The suit of a private individual for damages for a breach of the Sherman Antitrust Act is not for a penalty.

Chattanooga F. & P. Works v. Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390; 127 Fed. 23; 101 Fed. 900.

Such damages, although trebled by the statute, are not a penalty, not because they are not as great an infliction upon the defendant as a fine would be, but because they are imposed, not as a punishment but as a compensation to the person injured.

The purpose of an injunction against making or engaging in unreasonable restraints of commerce is to prevent just such an injury. It is not punitive. It is to prevent injuries to each member of the community of a kind for which they as private individuals could recover damages. These damages are the kind held in Chattanooga F. & P. Works v. Atlanta not to be a penalty.

The petition at bar seeks to have the Southern Pacific Company dispose of the stock which it holds in the Central Pacific Railway Company, but does not seek a forfeiture of that stock or of its proceeds or to impose any penalty upon the defendants.

2. The occurrence of an offense more than five years ago does not bar a proceeding to prevent the continuance of it hereafter.

The offense sought to be prevented and restrained is continuing to engage in 1921 and thereafter in a combination in restraint of commerce, and not the making of the combination in 1899.

It is immaterial that the combination came into existence in 1899, or when it came into existence, and it would be immaterial that it had never come into existence provided it could be shown that such a combination was imminent if not restrained. The danger that the defendants will be engaged henceforth in a combination in restraint of commerce is the ultimate fact upon which the application for relief is based. The existence of the combination and the present engagement therein is of value only as evidence of the danger. The danger is present, and therefore within three years.

Even a prosecution for a consipracy made and overtly acted upon more than three years ago is not barred by the statute of limitations if overt acts in pursuance thereof have been done also within three years.

Breese v. United States, 203 Fed. (C. C. A. 4th) 824, and cases cited at 830.

Lonabaugh v. United States, 179 Fed. (C. C. A. 8th) 476, 478.

Ware v. United States, 154 Fed. (C. C. A. 8th) 577, 579.

Hedderly v. United States, 193 Fed. (C. C. A. 9th) 561, 569.

Wilson v. United States, 190 Fed. (C. C. A. 2d) 427, 435.

Jones v. United States, 162 Fed. (C. C. A. 9th) 417, 426.

This is true where the prosecution is for a combination in unreasonable restraint of commerce, contrary to the terms of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

United States v. Kissel, 218 U. S. 601; 173 Fed. 823.

The offense defined is not only to "make" such a contract, but also to "engage" in any such combination. The combination is the device merely by which the restraint is accomplished. Therefore, when an injunction is sought, it is immaterial that the combination has passed its executory stage and has been completely formed.

Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 357.

It is immaterial that the combination was formed before the making thereof was made criminal, provided the engaging therein continues after so doing has become criminal. (Supra, p. 253.)

United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U. S. 290.

Equally, it is no answer to a prosecution for engaging now in a combination in unreasonable restraint of commerce that the combination was made more than three years ago, so that the prosecution for the original making is barred.

It would be a deplorable result if a right to restrain commerce or to monopolize it for the long future could be acquired by doing it for three years in defiance of law.

CONCLUSION.

This combination is unlawful, and its continuance should be prevented.

These two railroads, separately conceived, separately aided as competitors by the United States, separately owned, parallel in the common sense, transcontinental by their connections, competitive (theoretically and practically) in a huge volume of traffic, enjoying a monopoly of interstate freight transportation in large sections of south-central, central, and northern California, have been combined through the device of a holding company and thereby, and in consequence thereof, the competition between them has been unreasonably, directly, substantially, and wholly destroyed, and a monopoly has been created artificially, and this unreasonable restraint and monopoly are now going on and will continue unless prevented.

The evils of this unreasonable restraint, if it be not impertinent to address this legislative consideration to the court, have been those naturally incident to such a restraint—a destruction of the normal incentive to furnish good service at fair rates in order to attract business. There are no advantages to the public in the combination except such as may be urged in favor of permitting most of the artificial railroad monopolies—an alleged convenience to shippers, saving of expense, through tickets, through billings, joint through rates, and through trains. All of these may be provided and constantly are provided by agreement or by direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, over railroads independently controlled, as, for example, in the case of the Union Pacific Railroad and its independent connections east and west. Congress has not considered them a sufficient reason to exempt railroad corporations from the antitrust act.

This restraint is peculiarly unreasonable in that it has produced as an inevitable consequence a systematic and preconcerted discrimination by the Central Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad against the Union Pacific Railroad, contrary to the requirements of the Pacific Railroad Acts, under which the Central Pacific Railroad acquired the franchise by virtue of which it is now operating.

The prenatal combination of these two railroads alleged in the answer did not exist in fact, and is immaterial in law. The agreement of lease of February 17, 1885, in consequence of which the two railroads came under a common de facto control, was void and unlawful when made. The persistence in operating under it after 1890 was a violation of the antitrust act. This agreement of lease was canceled in 1893. Since this time the operation has been under a lease made since 1890, and in consequence of a control of stock first obtained in 1899.

The United States has never by its commissioners or otherwise given or attempted to give to the defendants an immunity for the subsequent infraction of the criminal laws of the United States, and the commission appointed July 7, 1898, had no authority and made no attempt to grant any such immunity.

The court in the case of the United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company did not adjudge, expressly or by inference, that it was not unlawful for the Southern Pacific Company to hold the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company.

The lapse of time during which this unreasonable restraint of trade and this monopoly have existed gives no right to the defendants to continue to violate the law, and does not deprive the United States of remedy.

The cases hereinbefore cited, conspicuously United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 226 U. S. 61, establish that the facts presented in the case at bar constitute an unreasonable restraint of commerce and a monopoly, and that the continuance thereof should be enjoined.

Respectfully submitted.

UNITED STATES v. SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY ET AL.

APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF UTAH.

No. 5. Argued April 18, 19, 20, 1921; restored to docket for reargument January 9, 1922; reargued April 11, 12, 13, 1922.—Decided May 29, 1922.

1. A combination whereby one railroad system, through stock purchases, acquires control of the whole or a vital part of another, with the effect of materially reducing free and normal competition in interstate trade between the two, violates the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. P. 229.
2. Inasmuch as the Central Pacific Railway System with its eastern connections, and the Southern Pacific Railway System, are normally competitors for railway traffic moving between California and the Atlantic seaboard and intermediate places, the acquisition in 1899 by the Southern Pacific Company, owning the Southern Pacific System, of a controlling part of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, owner of the Central Pacific lines, constituted a combination made unlawful by the Sherman Act. P. 229. United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61.

3. The principle of United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, and of the previous cases upon which it rested, does not depend upon the existence of competition when the combination is formed. P. 230.
4. The history of the two railroad systems here involved, considered and held not to justify the stock purchase in question upon the theory that there was a prior practical consolidation of them, antedating the Sherman Act, through their physical relations and community of stock-ownership and control. P. 232.
5. In view of the important rights and franchises conferred upon the Central Pacific Railroad Company by the United States, a ninety-nine year lease of its railroad made by it in 1885 to its competitor, the Southern Pacific Company, was beyond its corporate capacity, in the absence of any act of Congress authorizing or approving it. P. 233.
6. Approval of this lease is not to be inferred from the fact that Congress had opportunity to learn of it through reports of committees or otherwise. P. 234.
7. The fact that a combination or contract in restraint or monopoly of interstate trade was entered into before the date of the Sherman Act does not exempt it from the operation of that statute. P. 234.
8. Under the Act of July 7, 1898, c. 571, 30 Stat. 659, which constituted the Secretaries of the Treasury and Interior and the Attorney General a commission with full power to settle the debt of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States, subject to the approval of the President and to terms laid down in the act, a plan was approved and reported to Congress whereby the company's notes were to be delivered to the Government and be secured by bonds to be issued under a first mortgage on all its lines. Execution of the plan upon the part of the railroad (then under lease to the Southern Pacific Company) accompanied a reorganization involving creation of the Central Pacific Railway Company, its succession to the property of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, issuance by the new company of mortgage bonds secured by the property and guaranteed by the Southern Pacific Company, part of which were delivered to the Government as the collateral called for by the settlement agreement, and acquisition by the Southern Pacific Company of a controlling part of the new company's stock. The guaranty, not mentioned in the settlement agreement, was referred to in the Attorney General's report of the settlement to Congress, and Congress later passed acts authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of any notes in his possession touching the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and to settle claims of that road and of the Southern Pacific, for transportation services, by credits on the Central Pacific notes. The notes were paid primarily by checks of the Southern Pacific.

Held that the commission's acceptance of the guaranty was neither in intention nor in effect a condonation of the violation of the Sherman Act committed in the acquisition of the stock, and that the settlement did not estop the Government from prosecuting under that statute. P. 235.

9. The decree in United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, does not conclude the Government on the issues here involved, since the Central Pacific Railway Company was not a party in that suit up to the final decree in this court, and the subject-matter of that case and the questions decided in it differ from the subject-matter here and the questions here presented for decision. P. 240.

10. Delay of fourteen years in instituting this suit to set aside the control gained by the Southern Pacific through purchase of Central Pacific stock in 1899 was not laches, in view of the time consumed by the intervening prosecution to set aside the control gained by the Union Pacific Railroad Company through purchase of Southern Pacific stock in 1901. P. 240.

11. Whether the leases to the Southern Pacific Company and its acquisition of Central Pacific stock were in and of themselves violative of the Pacific Railroads Act of 1862 and supplemental legislation—not decided. P. 241.

12. The decree to be entered should sever the control by the Southern Pacific of the Central Pacific by stock-ownership or lease, protect, as far as compatible the mortgage of the Central Union Trust Company, and insure both railroads proper access to San Francisco Bay, over the several terminals, lines and cut-offs leading thereto, constructed or acquired during the unified control of the two systems; and similar provision should be made respecting lines extending from San Francisco Bay to Sacramento and Portland, Oregon. P. 241.

13. In framing the decree the District Court may bring in additional parties. P. 241.
239 Fed. 998, reversed.

APPEAL from a decree of the District Court dismissing, upon final hearing, a suit brought by the United States for relief against an alleged unlawful combination between the two railroad companies. The facts are stated in the opinion, post, 224.

The Pacific Railroad laws imposed on the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad and on the franchise of the Union Pacific Railroad the reciprocal duty of the one railroad not to discriminate against the other in favor of any other railroad, but to exert together in normal, voluntary coöperation all the natural forces of a single railroad naturally competing with the parallel Southern Pacific Railroad; and the systematic and preconcerted discrimination which the Southern Pacific Company, in operating the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad, has practiced against the Union Pacific Rail-

APPEAL from a decree of the District Court dismissing, upon final hearing, a suit brought by the United States for relief against an alleged unlawful combination between the two railroad companies. The facts are stated in the opinion, post, 224.

Mr. Edward F. McClennen, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, and Mr. Solicitor General Beck, with whom Mr. James W. Orr, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, was on the brief, for the United States.[1]

In February, 1899, when this combination was formed, the Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad were existing railroads naturally competitive for an enormous volume of interstate traffic, and the combination between them unreasonably, directly, substantially, and wholly prevented and destroyed competition between them, and continues to do so; and the combination artificially created a monopoly to the public injury.

The Pacific Railroad laws imposed on the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad and on the franchise of the Union Pacific Railroad the reciprocal duty of the one railroad not to discriminate against the other in favor of any other railroad, but to exert together in normal, voluntary coöperation all the natural forces of a single railroad naturally competing with the parallel Southern Pacific Railroad; and the systematic and preconcerted discrimination which the Southern Pacific Company, in operating the franchise of the Central Pacific Railroad, has practiced against the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad is a violation of those laws; and this combination between the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad, furnishing the incentive of self-interest to discriminate against the Central Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad in favor of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and so to violate those laws, imposed on the Central Pacific Railroad an unreasonable and unlawful restraint to the injury of the public and to the defeat of the purpose of those laws, which was to create and develop three separate, competitive systems of railroad to the Pacific Coast, with all the advantages that would come to the public from three railroads which were competitive.

[1] At the former hearing Mr. McClennen argued the case on behalf of the United States. Mr. Solicitor General Frierson and Mr. Orr also were on the brief.

The payment by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of its debt to the United States, and the transactions leading thereto, did not exempt the Southern Pacific Company from the provisions of the Sherman Act, or permit that company to make a combination which otherwise would be one in restraint of trade; because, (1) the settlement commission did not seek any guaranty by the Southern Pacific Company; (2) the contract of settlement did not require such a guaranty; (3) the United States received only payment of a debt already due and adequately secured; (4) neither the commission, nor the President, nor the Congress, purported to give this company a special indulgence to make a combination in restraint of trade, prohibited as a crime by general law to all other corporations; and, (5) such a special indulgence or advance pardon is beyond the constitutional power of the commission, the President, and the Congress.

The Central Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad were never, prior to February 20, 1899, a single railroad or system, but, on the contrary, were always two distinct railroads; (1) separately projected by separate and unrelated groups of men; (2) separately aided by gifts of public lands and loans of the public credit under acts of Congress to promote these two separate competitive systems of railroad between the Atlantic Ocean and the Central United States on the east, and the Pacific Ocean on the west, and enacted prior to 1867 and before any person interested in the one railroad was interested in the other; (3) separately owned by separate corporations organized by separate groups of men; (4) separately constructed at the expense of and for these separate corporations; (5) separately leased by these separate corporations under separate leases, making the amount of rent dependent on the net earnings of the separate railroads; (6) separately controlled by boards of directors, some of whom were always diverse, and a majority of whom were diverse in all but five years between 1885 and 1899; and (7) separately stock-owned, always to a substantial extent, and from 1883 to 1899 to the extent of more than a majority of the capital stock in each separate corporation, held by widely scattered stockholders in the United States and Europe.

The Southern Pacific Company on February 20, 1899, had no contractual, or property, or vested interest, direct or indirect, in the Central Pacific Railroad; because, (1) the purported lease of February 17, 1885, by the Central Pacific Railroad Company was void for lack of power in that company to make it, both under the laws of California and under the laws of the United States, the sovereignty from which it derived its franchises; (2) in 1893 this lease was canceled and the new purported lease then given was equally void for the same reason; and (3) the leasehold interest was subject to immediate destruction by the foreclosure of the underlying lien of the United States.

Even if the Southern Pacific Company had had some control over the Central Pacific Railroad before the Sherman Act was passed, this would not render lawful a combination for the increase and perpetuation of that control, formed after this act was passed.

In the case of United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, the court did not adjudge expressly or by inference that it was not unlawful for the Southern Pacific Company to hold the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company. The court made no decision on this question; indispensable parties for such a decision were absent; and the effect of a decision in such a case is limited to what was actually decided.

The United States is not estopped by any inconsistent position taken in the Union Pacific Case, nor barred by absence of complaint of this restraint of trade in the Union Pacific Case.

The petition is not barred by laches. There has been no unreasonable delay or laches in bringing the suit at bar. Laches by a sovereign is not a defense to a petition to enforce a criminal law.

The lapse of more than five years since the formation of this combination is not a bar. This is not an indictment, information, suit, or prosecution for penalty or forfeiture. The occurrence of an offense more than five years ago does not bar a proceeding to prevent the continuance of it hereafter.

Mr. Garrett W. McEnerney and Mr. Joseph P. Blair, with whom Mr. William F. Herrin was on the briefs, for appellees.

This case does not involve any combination of competitive units, or any combination at all; for the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific lines were projected and built and have been operated since their origin as one property.

At the time of the passage of the Sherman Act, the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific lines were owned by a single proprietor, although the Central Pacific lines were held under a ninety-nine year lease made February 17, 1885, instead of in fee; but "it is obvious that in principle the right of a lessee is the same as that of a purchaser in fee." Waskey v. Chambers, 224 U. S. 565.

The Act of July 7, 1898, 30 Stat. 652, 659, creating the commission for the settlement of the Central Pacific debt, contemplated as natural, if not inevitable, the agreement subsequently made, and it invested the commission with full authority to agree to the plan which was adopted for the payment of the indebtedness, including the provision by which the Southern Pacific Company acquired the stock of the Central Pacific Company.

In any event, the Government is estopped by its conduct to question the legality of the unified control of the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific lines.

The present status of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific lines was confirmed by the Acts of March 3, 1899, 30 Stat. 1245, and March 3, 1901, 31 Stat. 1023.

It is established by the opinion and decree in United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, that, up to the time of the Union Pacific merger in 1901, "sharp, well-defined and vigorous" competition existed between the Ogden and El Paso routes, notwithstanding the ownership of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific; and it is here in proof that the competitive conditions of 1901 and before were restored after the unmerger in 1913.

It is thus apparent that we may draw upon the three departments of the Government of the United States for support in our position that the Southern Pacific may and does lawfully control and operate the Central Pacific and that no violation of the Anti-Trust Act is involved in such control and operation.

Irrespective of the considerations already dealt with, and considering the matter as an open question, traffic conditions between the El Paso and Ogden routes are such that the control of the Central Pacific line by the Southern Pacific Company does not constitute an undue restraint of commerce.

The Government, by reason of the position taken and claims urged by it in the Union Pacific Case, is estopped from questioning the validity of the ownership and control of the Central Pacific Railway Company by the Southern Pacific Company.

The final decree in United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., is a bar to all relief sought by the Government in this case.

No violation of the Pacific Railroad Laws is presented in this case.

The construction which the Government attempts to put upon the Pacific Railroad Laws is inconsistent with the position which has always been taken by the three departments of the Government concerning the control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific.

Even though a violation of the Pacific Railroad Laws were proved in the case, the remedy would not be dismemberment, but would be injunction of restraint or command to comply with the provisions of the acts.

There is no evidence whatever of any attempts at monopoly or monopolistic practices.

It is impossible to dismember the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific System without substantial deterioration in the public service.

It is not necessary here to consider whether properties which had been operated together as one from their origin continuously down to July 2, 1890, under, say, tenures at will, could or could not thereafter be legally unified by purchase, lease, etc., because, at the time of the passage of the Anti-Trust Act, the properties here involved were owned by a single proprietor, although the tenure under which a part of the properties was owned was a ninety-nine year term and not a fee.

Considering that these lines were operated as one from their origin, and that, on July 2, 1890, the Central Pacific lines were held under a ninety-nine year term expiring

April 1, 1984, it is clear that the lease of December 7, 1893, which cut down the term three months, viz: to January 1, 1984, is entirely lawful.

If the lease of December 7, 1893, were invalid as one executed after the passage of the Anti-Trust Act, the Southern Pacific Company would nevertheless be treated at law and in equity as the holder of the ninety-nine year term which it acquired under the lease of February 17, 1885, notwithstanding the provision of cancelation contained in the lease of December 7, 1893.

The Anti-Trust Act did not make unlawful the operation by a single proprietor of lines owned by him at the date of the passage of the act which were not then competitive but which could be made competitive if divorced.

The argument for the Government in this case overlooks the value and importance to the Government of the guaranty of the bonds by the Southern Pacific Company in 1899.

Both sides seem to be agreed, although for different reasons, that the Government cannot be said to have been an accomplice in the violation of its own laws: the appellees contending that no laws were violated, and counsel for the Government asserting either that: the Government did not know the facts; or was unconscious of the law; or, in final analysis, had no power through its own officers to violate its own laws.

The argument that the ninety-nine year lease of the Central Pacific lines to the Southern Pacific Company, dated February 17, 1885, was or is invalid, is without merit.

This case does not come within any rule or supposed rule dealing with the prevention of competition coming into existence.

The purely theoretical nature of the present suit is shown by the complete absence of complaint on the part of shippers or the public generally.

In its last analysis, the relief here sought is experimental and not judicial in its nature. The Government does not seek the destruction of a new and unlawfully created condition which took the place of an old and natural one; it seeks the destruction of an old and natural condition in order that it may create by a new and untried experiment a condition which has no prototype.

The price paid in 1899 by the Southern Pacific Company for Central Pacific shares was not excessive.

Neither the Northern Division of the Southern Pacific Railroad nor its Coast Line opened in 1901 bears upon the issues here involved.

In considering the estoppels against the Government arising out of the settlement of 1899, it is of no consequence whether the provisions thereof which were designed to protect the Government were in the first instance suggested by Mr. Speyer or by the Government itself.

The powers of the Commission under the Act of July 7, 1898, were limited in those particulars only which are expressed in the act. In respect of matters not so limited the commission had what the act gave it, "full power" in the matter.

Because of the thirty years' de facto unification of the properties, this case is in a class apart.

Testimony contained in the report of the Pacific Railroad Commission is not competent evidence of facts therein narrated.

Mr. Perry D. Trafford and Mr. James Gore King filed a brief on behalf of the Union (now Central Union) Trust Company of New York, appellee.

MR. JUSTICE DAY delivered the opinion of the court.

The United States on February 11, 1914, filed its bill in the District Court of the United States for the District of Utah against the Southern Pacific Company, the Central Pacific Railway Company, the Union Trust Company of New York, and the directors and officials of the Southern Pacific Company. The charge of the petition is that the defendants restrain or attempt to monopolize, and do monopolize trade and commerce in violation of the Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, known as the Sherman Act, and have also violated the provisions of the Act of Congress of July 1, 1862, c. 120, 12 Stat. 489. The prayer of the petition is that the lines of the Southern Pacific Company and those of the Central Pacific Railway Company be decreed to constitute competitive systems, and that the ownership acquired by the Southern Pacific Company of all or a controlling interest in the capital stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, and its lease, control and operation of the lines thereof be declared violative of the Sherman Act; and that the Southern Pacific Company be required to dispose of such capital stock, and cancel and relinquish its lease, control, management and operation thereof; and that the control of the Central Pacific Railway Company by the Southern Pacific be decreed to be in violation of the Act of Congress of July 1, 1862, entitled "An Act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes;" and also violative of the act, supplemental to the Act of 1862, the Act of July 2, 1864, c. 216, 13 Stat. 356, and the Act of June 20, 1874, c. 331, 18 Stat. 111, the Government maintaining that the effect of such acts is to require the Central Pacific to maintain physical connection with the Union Pacific to make a through line to the coast, and to furnish equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation over such through line.

An answer was filed by the defendants, much testimony was taken, and a decree was entered dismissing the petition, one of the three Circuit Judges who heard the case dissenting. 239 Fed. 998.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company of California was incorporated under the laws of California in 1861 for the purposes of constructing a railroad from Sacramento to the eastern boundary of California. In 1862 and 1864 Congress by proper legislation incorporated the Union Pacific Railroad Company to build from the Missouri River westward, and authorized the Central Pacific to build eastwardly from the Pacific Coast, at or near San Francisco, to a common meeting-point with the Union Pacific. These acts of Congress authorized the issue of first mortgage bonds, and also second mortgage bonds, and made a land grant of public lands for each linear mile of railroad construction. These acts provided that these two railroads should be operated as one continuous line, and that neither should discriminate in favor of or against the other. Leland Stanford, Charles Crocker, C. P. Huntington and Mark Hopkins acquired a large part of the capital stock of the Central Pacific Company. The Central Pacific assigned to the Western Pacific a portion of the construction, namely, that from Sacramento to San Jose, this with the approval of Congress. C. 88, § 2, 13 Stat. 504.

The Pacific Railroads were constructed from 1864 to 1869 from the Missouri River to the Pacific Coast; from Omaha to Ogden by the Union Pacific; from Ogden to Sacramento by the Central Pacific; from Sacramento to San Jose by the Western Pacific, afterwards consolidated with the Central Pacific. These are denominated in the defendants' brief as the "bond-aided lines." What they call the non-bond-aided lines of the Central Pacific system are those from Niles to Oakland, from Lathrop to Goshen, and from Roseville to Redding, which were constructed in the State of California from the years 1869 to 1872. In 1870 the Central Pacific absorbed in consolidation the Western Pacific, which built from Sacramento to San Jose; the Alameda Company which built from Niles to Oakland; the San Joaquin, which built from Lathrop to Goshen; and the California and Oregon Company which built from Roseville north en route to the Oregon line.

The Southern Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated in 1865 under the laws of California for the purpose of constructing a railroad from San Francisco Bay by the way of San Diego to the eastern boundary of California. In 1866 Congress passed an act to incorporate the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company to construct a railroad near the 35th parallel of latitude from Springfield, Missouri, to the Pacific Ocean. This act authorized the Southern Pacific to connect with the Atlantic & Pacific near the eastern boundary of California, and both companies were granted public lands. In 1867 the Southern Pacific changed its route to the eastward so as not to go as far south as originally contemplated; this act was ratified by Congress and the legislature of California in 1870.

In 1871 Congress incorporated the Texas Pacific Railroad Company to build a line of railroad near the 32d parallel of latitude from Marshall, Texas, by the way of El Paso to the Pacific Ocean at San Diego, and to connect on the east with other railroads, and on the west with the Southern Pacific Railroad. The Southern Pacific was authorized to construct a railroad from Tehachapi Pass to a junction of the Texas Pacific Railroad at the eastern boundary of California. Land grants were made to both companies. In 1872 the Central Pacific had extended its lines to Goshen.

About 1870 the promoters of the Central Pacific obtained control of the Southern Pacific, and subsequently the latter was constructed from Goshen through Tehachapi Pass, with one fork to a junction with the Atlantic & Pacific at The Needles (near 35th parallel) on the Colorado River at the eastern boundary of the State, and the other fork to the southeastern corner of the State (near 32d parallel), thence across Arizona and New Mexico to a junction in Texas with the Texas & Pacific, thence to a connection at El Paso with the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railroad. The sections of the Southern line were leased for a series of years to the Central. In 1881 the Southern Pacific made a junction with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe at Demming, New Mexico. In 1882 the Southern made a junction with the Texas & Pacific at Sierra Blanca, Texas. In 1883 the direct line of the Southern connection with the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio and its eastern connections was completed through to New Orleans. The same year it made its junction with the Atlantic & Pacific at The Needles.

The section from Mojave to Needles was leased to the Santa Fe in 1883, and sold to it in 1911. From 1883 to 1885 the Central Pacific was the lessee owner of a system of leases, and the system was known as the "Central Pacific Railroad and Leased Lines." In February, 1885, after the formation of the Southern Pacific Company (of Kentucky) that road became the lessee. We shall have occasion to deal more particularly with that lease later.

Without familiarity with the geography of the region described and the location of the points named, this description means little. The outstanding facts, and those essential to be considered in the view which we take of this branch of the case, are: The Central Pacific Railroad extends from the Bay of San Francisco to Ogden, Utah, with a branch extending north from Roseville in central California to the northern boundary of California; and to Kirk in Oregon; and a branch extending south from Lathrop in central California to Goshen, California; and a branch extending south from Hazen in Nevada to Mojave in California; and a branch from Fernley in Nevada to Susanville, California; and a short line in Oregon from Oakridge to Natron. At Ogden, the Central Pacific connects with the Union Pacific, extending to Omaha, Nebraska, and to Kansas City, Missouri; connecting at Ogden with the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad, and with other connecting roads eastwardly to the Missouri River; and from the Missouri River to the central and eastern parts of the United States.

The Southern Pacific system extends from San Francisco Bay by way of El Paso to Galveston, Texas, and to New Orleans, there connecting with steamship lines to New York City controlled by the Southern Pacific. At El Paso it connects with the Rock Island which runs to Omaha and Chicago; at New Orleans, it connects with roads extending to points in the central and eastern parts of the United States. It owns branches in Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, Oregon and many in California.

The Central Pacific with its eastern connection at Ogden forms one great system of transportation between the east and the west, and the Southern Pacific with its roads and connections, and steamboat lines, forms another great transcontinental system for transportation from coast to coast. The Central Pacific constitutes some 800 miles of the transcontinental line of which it is a part. The Southern Pacific system has practically its own line of railroads and steamboat connections to New York via Galveston and New Orleans.

Under principles settled in the Union Pacific Case, 226 U. S. 61, 86, the acquisition by the Southern Pacific Company of the stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company in 1899, unless justified by the special circumstances relied upon, to be hereinafter considered, constituted a combination in restraint of trade because it fetters the free and normal flow of competition in interstate traffic and tends to monopolization. In the Union Pacific Case this court held that the acquisition by the Union Pacific, which constituted about 1,000 miles of the transcontinental system, to which we have referred, of enough stock in the Southern Pacific to dominate and control it, was violative of the Sherman Act. This case differs from that not at all in principle. These two great systems are normally competitive for the carrying trade in some parts from the east and middle west to the coast, and for the traffic moving to and from central and northern California, including a great volume of ocean-borne traffic which lands on the coast destined across the continent to the Atlantic Seaboard and intermediate western and eastern points, or is destined from the latter points to foreign ports via San Francisco or other Pacific Coast points.

Counsel for the defendants, evidently realizing this situation, make elaborate argument to distinguish the Union Pacific Case. The claim is made that the decision there rested only on the fact that a then existing competition was restrained through the purchase by the Union Pacific of the control of the Southern Pacific in 1901; but the principle of that decision and of the previous cases upon which it rested was broader than the mere effect upon existing competition between the two systems.

Such combinations, not the result of normal and natural growth and development, but springing from the formation of holding companies, or stock purchases, resulting in the unified control of different roads or systems, naturally competitive, constitute "a menace to, and a restraint upon, that freedom of commerce which Congress intended to recognize and protect, and which the public is entitled to have protected." Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 327. This principle was restated and applied in United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., supra; it was reiterated and approved by the court as recently as the October Term, 1919, United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 57, 58, 59.

These cases, collectively, establish that one system of railroad transportation cannot acquire another, nor a substantial and vital part thereof, when the effect of such acquisition is to suppress or materially reduce the free and normal flow of competition in the channels of interstate trade.

In the instant case we are not dealing with the principle in the abstract. The proof is ample that the policy of the Southern Pacific system has been to favor transportation on its line by securing for itself, whenever practicable, the carriage of freight which would normally move eastward or westward over the shorter line of the Central Pacific Railroad and its connections, for its own much longer and wholly owned southern route. This course was limited by an arbitrary rule during the time the Union Pacific dominated the Southern Pacific from the stock purchase in 1901 until the so-called "unmerger" in 1913, as a result of the decision of this court in the Union Pacific Case. The compelling motive of this course of conduct is obvious. The Southern Pacific owns and controls the southerly route, and receives 100% of the compensation for freight transported by its road and water lines. Over the Central Pacific route it receives but a fraction of the freight because the Union Pacific with its eastern connections takes up the carrying from Ogden to the east. Self-interest dictates the solicitation and procurement of freight for the longer haul by the Southern Pacific lines. While many practices, formerly in vogue, are eliminated by the legislation of Congress regulating interstate commerce, and through rates and transportation may be had under public supervision, there are elements of competition in the granting of special facilities, the prompt carrying and delivery of freight, the ready and agreeable adjustment and settlement of claims, and other elements which that legislation does not control.

It is conceded in the brief of counsel for the defendants that "it is true of all such systems that, other things being equal, freight is preferentially solicited for the 100% haul."

We reach the conclusion that the stock ownership in the Central Pacific acquired by the Southern Pacific is violative of the Sherman Act within the principles settled by this court, certainly since the decision in the Northern Securities Case, in 1904; and that such stock ownership must be divested from the Southern Pacific Company unless the special circumstances and defenses set up and relied upon by the defendants are to prevail.

In the opinion of the majority of the judges sitting in the District Court it was set forth that these companies, the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific, constituted practically a single system of railroads. This was held to be particularly true of so much of the systems as are in California and Oregon. It was said that the roads of the Central Pacific System appear on the map as natural links and parts of the Southern Pacific System, and that the spurs, branches and tributary feeders of the Central Pacific belong to the Southern Pacific. It was maintained that the construction and control of these systems had substantially united them before the acts complained of which are alleged to be violative of the Sherman Act. True, the Central Pacific was incorporated by, and for a portion of the time under consideration its stock was owned by, Messrs. Stanford, Hopkins, Huntington and Crocker. Perhaps as early as 1870 the same group gained control of and continued to dominate the policy of the Southern Pacific. The roads were always separate and distinct corporations; they were so recognized in the acts of Congress making land grants to them, authorizing their construction and operation from one State or Territory to another, and otherwise conferring rights on them which only Congress could confer. For a good part of the time the roads had boards of directors not consisting of the same persons. At times the majority of the stock was separately held. In the Central Pacific when the lease of 1885 to the Southern Pacific was made only one-fourth of the stock was held by the group to which we have referred. It had been sold and was widely owned in the United States and Europe. The dominating control was maintained from the fact that the stock had not been transferred by its true owners on the company's books, and much of it was held in the name of employees who were used in voting it by the original promoters, their successors and survivors.

We cannot accept the theory of prior practical consolidation as a justification for a violation of the Sherman Act resulting from the stock control acquired in 1899.

Much stress is placed on the lease in February, 1885, of the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific for a term of 99 years. In 1884 the Southern Pacific, a holding company, was organized as a corporation of the State of Kentucky. The organization of this company which acquired the stocks of the Southern Pacific System, and became the lessee of the Central Pacific, was the result of a meeting in New York of Messrs. Stanford, Huntington, Crocker, and Timothy Hopkins, the successor of Mark Hopkins. The plan was then discussed, and the necessary measures directed to carry it into execution.

The lease of 1885 is set up in the answer and relied upon as showing an existing legal acquisition before the transfer of the Central Pacific stock in 1899. This lease made February 17, 1885, was modified in January, 1888, and on December 7, 1893, a lease was entered into which recited that the agreements of lease between the same parties, the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific, dated February 17, 1885, and January 1, 1888, respectively, should be canceled except in so far as they relate to the operation of the demised premises prior to January 1, 1894, and to the adjustment of accounts in respect to such operation.

It is contended by the Government that this lease in itself constituted a combination in restraint of interstate commerce. However this may be, this court has repeatedly recognized the fact that the Central Pacific was a corporation receiving much of its authority and power from acts of Congress. California v. Central Pacific R. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1. In Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. California, 162 U. S. 91, it was held by this court that on the return for taxation by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of the value of its franchise and roadway, roadbed and rails within the State of California, the same might be taxed under the laws of that State. This conclusion was reached against the elaborately stated and strongly expressed dissents of Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Harlan. In the prevailing opinion, delivered by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, it was recognized (p. 123) that important franchises conferred upon the Central Pacific were of federal creation, including that of constructing a railroad from the Pacific Ocean to Ogden in the then Territory of Utah.

It is true, as is argued at length by counsel for the defendants, that Congress had opportunity by the reports of its committees, and otherwise, to learn of this lease; but we are referred to no legislation passed by Congress authorizing or approving of it. In our view the lease for 99 years by the Central Pacific to a rival and competitive company could not legally be made without authorization by federal legislation. In the absence of such action the Central Pacific had not the corporate capacity to make the lease. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute R. R. Co., 118 U. S. 290; Central Transportation Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 139 U. S. 24. Moreover, it is authoritatively settled by decisions of this court that no previous contracts or combinations can prevent the application of the Sherman Act to compel the discontinuation of illegal combinations. After Congress exercises its authority to regulate interstate commerce conduct becomes illegal which has the effect of contracts, conspiracies, or combinations to restrain the freedom of interstate trade, or to monopolize the same in whole or in part. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 228. The principle has often been declared and applied in this court. It is stated and the previous cases reviewed in Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington R. R. Co. v. Schubert, 224 U. S. 603, 613, 614.

We find nothing in these leases to the Southern Pacific Company which justifies the continued control of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific after the Sherman Act became effective.

We come now to the settlement of the Central Pacific debt, in 1899, which the court below held to be a practical construction of the Sherman Act, and to warrant the conclusion that the Southern Pacific control of the Central Pacific was not within its condemnation. After hearings and reports, and attempted legislation, Congress passed the act to create a commission to settle the indebtedness of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroads to the United States. This act was passed July 7, 1898, c. 571, 30 Stat. 659, and constituted the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney General a commission with full power to settle the indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds in aid of construction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific bond-aided roads, upon such terms and in such a manner as might be agreed upon between them and the owners of said roads. The act also provided that the settlement should not be binding until approved by the President of the United States; that the commission should not agree to accept a less sum than the full amount of principal and interest and all amounts necessary to reimburse the United States for moneys paid, for interest, or otherwise. It provided that the rate of interest upon instalments should be not less than 3% per annum, payable semi-annually, with such security as the commission might deem expedient; that the final discharge of the indebtedness should not be postponed beyond ten years; that the whole amount, principal and interest, should be paid in equal semi-annual instalments within that period; that any settlement made should provide that if a default were made in the payment of either principal or interest, the whole sum and all instalments should immediately become due and payable; and that unless the settlement authorized should be perfected within one year the President of the United States should at once proceed to foreclose all liens held by the United States against the railroad companies to collect the indebtedness sought to be settled under the act, and that nothing therein contained should be held to waive or release any right, lien or cause of action held by the United States.

Under this act a settlement was effected as of date February 1, 1899. The Central Pacific's debt to the United States for government aid in the construction of lines between Sacramento and Ogden, and Sacramento and San Jose, amounted to $58,812,715.48; one-half of this amount was accrued interest. It was secured by a statutory lien on the bond-aided lines, subject to prior first mortgages. The Central Pacific's bonded debt amounted to $57,471,000, largely secured by first mortgages on its various lines of railroad. The outstanding stock was $67,275,500.

Messrs. Speyer & Company, New York bankers, undertook to formulate the plan, and the agreement of settlement was signed by the commissioners in behalf of the United States, the Central Pacific Railroad Company and Messrs. Speyer & Company. It was approved by the President. By the agreement of settlement the Central Pacific was to execute to the United States twenty promissory notes dated February 1, 1899, payable respectively on or before each six months for ten years, each note for the sum of $2,940,635.78, being one-twentieth of the debt, bearing interest at 3%, payable semi-annually, all to mature on default in payment of any one of them. Under the agreement gold bonds not exceeding $100,000,000 were to be issued, secured by first mortgage on all the Central Pacific lines, bond-aided, or not, this mortgage to be prior in lien to any lease of the railroads of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The bonds were secured by the guaranty of the Southern Pacific. No such agreement of guaranty was embodied in the written settlement, but it was known to the commissioners that the plan contemplated such guaranty. Of these bonds $58,820,000 were to be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as security for the twenty instalment notes. Speyer & Company within one month after the execution and delivery of the notes were to purchase from the United States the four notes first maturing by paying the face thereof for the same, $11,762,543.12 and interest. A proportionate amount of the collateral mortgage bonds was to go with the notes.

On February 15, 1899, the commission reported the agreement to the House of Representatives. No reference to the guaranty of the Southern Pacific upon the bonds appeared in the report. In the annual report of the Attorney General to the Senate and House of November, 1899, the completion of the settlement, which had been made, was set out, and the guaranty of the Southern Pacific was stated, no doubt by inadvertence, to be upon the notes instead of upon the bonds. The notes, held in the Treasury of the United States, were paid primarily by the checks of the Southern Pacific, and charged by that road against the Central Pacific.

On March 3, 1899, c. 427, 30 Stat. 1245, Congress authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of any notes in his possession touching the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States. On March 3, 1901, c. 831, 31 Stat. 1023, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized and directed to settle claims for interest growing out of transportation services for the Government over non-bond-aided lines of the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific by crediting the amounts on the Central Pacific notes.

Neither the agreement between the commissioners, the Railroad Company and Speyer & Company, nor the report of the commission to Congress contained any reference to the proposed acquisition of the stock of the Central Pacific by the Southern Pacific. The Speyer plan for the adjustment of the affairs of the Central Pacific was dated February 8, 1899, was put out February 20th of the same year, was extensively published in American and European financial circles, and was given publicity in the Commercial and Financial Chronicle in the February, 1899, issues of that journal. Under the terms of the plan the Central Pacific Railway Company, successor to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, was organized as a corporation of the State of Utah on July 29, 1899. The Central Pacific Railroad Company (the old corporation of 1861), conveyed all of its property to the new company. On August 1, 1899, the Central Pacific Railway Company executed a refunding mortgage of $100,000,000 to the Central Trust Company of New York, trustee, and a mortgage of $25,000,000 to the Union Trust Company of New York. The Southern Pacific Company executed instruments subordinating its lease to the lien of these mortgages. Thereupon, carrying out the Speyer plan for the Southern Pacific to acquire the stock of the new Central Pacific Railway Company, $20,000,000 of the preferred shares of the latter company were issued, which were taken by the Southern Pacific at par. The outstanding stock of the old Central Pacific was taken by the Southern Pacific, share for share, plus 25% in the bonds of the Southern Pacific.

To consummate this transaction Southern Pacific mortgage bonds amounting to $36,819,000 were issued,—$20,000,000 thereof were used to acquire the new Central Pacific preferred stock, the balance to provide the 25% in bonds required to aid in the share-for-share exchange of the outstanding Central Pacific stock in the hands of private owners. Thus the Southern Pacific under the Speyer plan was to become the owner of the Central Pacific Railway Company stock.

In the opinion of the District Court it is said:

"We do not say that the commission was authorized to violate or to sanction the violation of the act of Congress, but the adjustment they effected necessarily involved the question of its pertinence to the business in hand. The acceptance of the guaranty of the Southern Pacific was a recognition that it had sufficient corporate interest in the Central Pacific to justify it. Without such interest its accommodation guaranty of $100,000,000 of bonds of another company would manifestly have been ultra vires—a gross, indefensible excess of its corporate powers. Again, the acceptance of the guaranty implied a recognition of its possible natural result; that is to say, the enforcement of the rights of a guarantor against the property of a debtor. The addition of the stock ownership by the Southern Pacific to its long leasehold interest did not so change the situation as to make unlawful what was not so before."

We are unable to accept this view. The commission with the approval of the President was authorized to settle the Central Pacific debt in accordance with the terms of the Act of 1898. It did not undertake to exercise authority not conferred upon it by giving immunity from the penalties of the Sherman Act. The Attorney General testified that the act was not mentioned in the course of the discussion. The Southern Pacific Company's guaranty of the new bonds was made, so far as that company was concerned, from motives of self-interest sufficient in the opinion of those who controlled it to warrant such action. The commissioners, acting for the Government, accepted such guaranty. They did not thereby condone, or intend to condone, any act which had the effect to violate the Sherman Act. Nor could this settlement estop the Government from prosecuting an action under the provisions of the act.

It is insisted that the decree in the Union Pacific Case is decisive of this controversy, and amounts to an adjudication against the Government of the issues involved. The conclusive answer to this contention is that the Central Pacific was not a party to that suit up to the final decree in this court. That suit and the present one do not relate to the same subject-matter. The issues and questions, therein decided, are not the ones presented for decision here. Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351; United Shoe Machinery Co. v. United States, 258 U. S. 451.

The defendants contend that the suit is barred by laches on the part of the Government in failing to institute it earlier. Without deciding that this defense is available when an action is brought under an act of Congress embodying, as does the Sherman Act, an expression of public policy enforceable by criminal prosecution and by civil suit instituted by the Attorney General, we are unable to discover that laches exists in the failure to more promptly prosecute the suit. The stock acquisition complained of was in 1899. In 1901 the Union Pacific acquired control of the Southern Pacific by purchase of sufficient stock to accomplish that purpose. The Union Pacific Case was begun in 1908, and a final decree reached in 1913, and in 1914 this suit was begun.

Other points are insisted upon in the oral argument and the elaborate briefs of the defendants. We have considered them, but they do not overcome the conclusions here-inbefore stated which in our view dispose of this cause, and require a reversal of the decree of the District Court.

We do not find it necessary to pass upon the Government's contention that the leases to the Southern Pacific and the acquisition by it of Central Pacific stock were in and of themselves violative of the Pacific Railroad Acts of Congress of 1862 and subsequent supplemental legislation.

We direct that a decree be entered severing the control by the Southern Pacific of the Central Pacific by stock ownership or by lease. But, in accomplishing this purpose, so far as compatible therewith, the mortgage lien asserted in the brief filed for the Central Union Trust Company shall be protected.

In addition, the several terminal lines and cut-offs leading to San Francisco Bay which have been constructed or acquired during the unified control of the two systems for the purpose of affording direct or convenient access to the Bay and to the principal terminal facilities about the Bay should be dealt with, either by way of apportionment or by provisions for joint or common use, in such manner as will secure to both companies such full, convenient and ready access to the Bay and to terminal facilities thereon that each company will be able freely to compete with the other, to serve the public efficiently, and to accomplish the purpose of the legislation under which it was constructed. And a like course should be pursued in dealing with the lines extending from San Francisco Bay to Sacramento and to Portland, Oregon.

To the end that an appropriate decree may be framed, the District Court may and should bring in additional parties whenever that may become advisable in executing our directions.

Reversed and remanded accordingly.

MR. JUSTICE MCREYNOLDS and MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

MR. JUSTICE McKENNA, dissenting.

I am unable to concur in the opinion and judgment of the court. To this I feel constrained because I think it is unjust for the Government to enforce a dissolution of the relation existing between the Central Pacific Railway Company and the Southern Pacific Company. I put my action on that ground alone though much can be said on the other grounds urged by the Government and contested by the appellee companies.

Prior to this relation another existed between the two companies or systems (they may be said to have had that pretension and extent) constituted by a lease for 99 years, executed in 1885 by the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific, giving to the latter the dominion of a proprietor. Waskey v. Chambers, 224 U. S. 564, 565.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company was a bond-aided road and on account of it was under obligation to repay the Government the aid it had received, and Congress by an Act passed July 7, 1898, 30 Stat. 659, created a commission with power to settle the indebtedness. An agreement of settlement was made in which the Southern Pacific was a participant and by it assured the payment of the securities provided for in the agreement of settlement between the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Government.

This participation was contemplated in the scheme submitted by Speyer & Company to the commission,[1] and

[1] James Speyer of the firm of Speyer & Company being on the witness stand, the following is part of his testimony:

"Q. Please state whether the Central Pacific could have complied with the conditions imposed by that act of Congress [Act of 1898] without a financial readjustment of their affairs of the kind contained in the readjustment which you arranged for?"

The question was objected to, but the witness answered.

"The Witness. Without some kind of readjustment they could not have complied. I am not prepared to say that the adjustment we the present relation of the company is the outcome of the settlement, and it may be said, is the substitute of the made was the only kind; but some kind of adjustment seemed absolutely necessary."

By Mr. Blair:

"Q. And you made a plan of readjustment?

A. We did.

Q. I put before you, for convenience of reference, the plan of readjustment which was used when Mr. Ruhlender was testifying. You recognize that as the plan of readjustment which was arranged for?

A. I do.

Q. Mr. Speyer, when you started to work upon that plan of readjustment did you expect and count upon the intervention and aid of the Southern Pacific Company?

A. I knew I could not carry it through without the help of the Southern Pacific; or some other railroad company, in case the Southern Pacific had not come to assist.

Q. Did you ever contemplate or work upon any plan which did not involve the intervention and aid of the Southern Pacific Company?

A. I did not.

Q. And that plan could not have been carried through without the intervention and aid of the Southern Pacific Company?"

The question was objected to.

"Q. Mr. Speyer, considering the terms required by the act of Congress, namely, the requirement that the entire debt of fifty-eight million eight hundred thousand dollars, in round numbers, would have to be paid in ten years, in twenty semiannual installments, would any one at all familiar with the Central Pacific affairs know that the Central Pacific, with its own resources and credit, could not comply with those conditions?

A. He would.

Q. It would be obvious to anyone at all familiar with the affairs of the Central Pacific that it could not with its own resources and credit comply with the terms of that act?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In making the agreement which you participated in with the United States, what did you count upon to enable you to carry out the agreement with the United States?

A. The cooperation of the security holders of the Central Pacific and of the Southern Pacific Company."

rights and control the Southern Pacific, as lessee, had of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Was it a justifiable substitute? The answer should be in the affirmative. When the Act of 1898 was passed the situation was serious, the problem complex, and because the problem was complex three Cabinet officers were selected to solve it. These were the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General. Their prominence in the Government, their official concern with the subject-matter assured fidelity in the execution of the trust and repel charge or intimation that they were, or could be, actuated by anything other than a strict consideration of duty and the exercise of their trust. And their ability assured judgment in the selection of means. The problem, it is to be remembered, was something more than to ascertain the amount of the debt. It involved, it might be, foreclosure of the Government's liens and, it might also be, government ownership and all that that meant.

The debt was known to be $58,812,715.48. It was secured by a mortgage on the lines of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, it is true, but the mortgage was subordinate to other mortgages for about the same amount. It was to be rescued from this subordination, and given independence and certain solvency. The power given to the commissioners was necessary to and commensurate with the purpose. The power was "to settle the indebtedness" "upon such terms and in such manner as" might "be agreed upon", and to take "such security as" might "seem expedient". The only limitation was that the payment was not to be extended more than ten years.

Necessarily, therefore, there was power to view the situation and judge of it, its legal and practical aspects, and what was possible in law and fact in the interest of all concerned to be done, and it may be presumed that the commission found that there was nothing exigent in the situation or that demanded the separation of the Southern Pacific from the Central Pacific, and that the guarantee of the former could be accepted, and all that would follow from it. And it is to be remembered that the action of the commission received the sanction of the President, and was reported to Congress. If either had objected, the settlement as planned could not have been accomplished, and both would have objected if they had discerned anything sinister or inimical to law in it or that would result from it.

It is said, however, that there was no affirmative approval by Congress, and that its approval cannot be assumed from nonaction.

The Government makes much of this, ignoring all else, and ventures, in a kind of desperation, against the circumstances, the incredible assertion that Congress was ignorant of the guarantee of the Southern Pacific and its contributing efficiency. And this against an irresistible presumption to the contrary and in defiance of the fact that the Attorney General reported to Congress the terms of settlement and that the notes taken in settlement were guaranteed by the Southern Pacific; and in defiance of the further fact that the bonds that it was provided were to be deposited as security for the notes with the Secretary of the Treasury, had endorsed upon them the guarantee of the Southern Pacific and that the financial and commercial journals of the country, addressing the business world—the world that was to accept the notes which Congress authorized the Secretary to sell—explained the settlement and the relation of the Southern Pacific to it, and the assurance of safety and value the guarantee of the Southern Pacific gave.

I need not dwell on the contention of the Government; the court has not been impressed by it. The court's view is, rejecting that of the District Court, that there was no acceptance by the commission of the Southern Pacific's guarantee which carried obligation, and that the guarantee was the prompting of interest on the part of the Southern Pacific. I concede the latter. The enterprise that is necessary, and is exhibited in the conduct of great railroad systems, whose traffic is concerned with a continent, is not induced by the altruistic—it is, and naturally must be, prompted by interest, but it, as other transactions of the business world, is entitled to legal sanction and remedy.

The court asserts an interest in the Southern Pacific that urged its guarantee but does not explain the interest. It is of pertinent concern to consider what it was. It manifestly was no other than the relation of the company to the Central Pacific Railway Company through stock ownership. The company would necessarily have no concern or interest in the Central Pacific (the new company) or the payment of the old company's debts to the Government, if it was to be separated from the Central Pacific and declared a competitor and a business antagonist; and this must have been apparent to everyone connected with the transactions if they gave any reflection to them—anything but a haphazard and reckless attention, inconsiderate of practical and legal consequences. This cannot be assumed and the contrary must be, that is, that the guarantee of the Southern Pacific was accepted as necessary to the settlement of the debt.

I repeat, and summarize, that the situation was of great concern to the Government. Its solution was the consummation desired, and through the aid of the Southern Pacific. The company's guarantee was assurance to the business world that behind the notes and bonds of the Central Pacific were the great properties of the Southern Pacific and the competency of its management. And the company made sacrifices in addition to the guarantee and they, and it, were accepted by the Government, and therefore, the benefit that the company expected cannot be denied it.

There was no thought in anyone's mind that the acquisition of stock by the Southern Pacific in the Central Pacific would be a restraint upon competition, or a detriment to the public interest. The attitude of those concerned in the transaction can be accurately realized by the reflection that the interest—control, if it may be so called—that the Southern Pacific acquired in or over the new company (the Railway Company) was not greater nor more offensive to law than it had in or over the old company (the Railroad Company). The latter control existed from the enactment of the law until it was superseded by the agreement, a period of eight years. And there was no revulsion against or condemnation of the control—not by the Government, whose duty it was to proceed against it if it violated the Anti-Trust Law; not by any business interest, though for such interest the law was enacted as a protection. This suit was not brought until 1914, fifteen years after the agreement, not, however, by the government of the agreement but by the government of a much later time.

I think, therefore, that the decree of the District Court should be affirmed.
